An Advertiſement to the Reader concerning this large and exact Table, much wanted and deſired in the firſt and ſecond, and now annexed to the third and fourth Impreſſion of this Book.

HOw well it is obſerved, That Humane Induſtry cannot begin and finiſh any thing at one and the ſame time, this famous Book may be an inſtance; whoſe firſt Edition was but the Monogram, and rude draught, to a more exact Compoſure; the ſecond adding much Matter and Method to the firſt; and the third and fourth adding Matter, Method, and a moſt Exact and full Table of both, to the ſecond; containing all the Provinces, Kingdoms, States, Principalities, Continents, Iſles, Promontories, Iſthmus's, Seas, Rivers, Havens, Mart-Towns, Cities, Strong-holds,, with their Longitudes, Latitudes, Scituations, Plantations, Inhabitants, Ancient and Modern Names; and the Book and Page where they are ſatisfactorily diſcourſed of.

A Table (that notwithſtanding every Methodical Book, ſuch as this is, is its own Index: Every Great Memory, like that of Cæſar, carrieth a Table of all Books, in his Brain; and every hopeful Student makes his own Table to all Claſſical Authors) that carrieth with it its own Commendation. 1. To thoſe that have not time to read Books, but Indexes. 2. To thoſe that have not patience to go through the whole Body, and yet curioſity to obſerve the Remarkable parts of Geography. 3. To thoſe that would recollect what they have forgotten of their reading, 4. To thoſe that upon any emergent occaſion, would ſee the Scituation, Rivers, Havens, Strong-holds, Garriſons, Longitudes, Latitudes, Commodities, Products, Curioſities, Inhabitants, Genius, Condition,and Hiſtory of any place in the World. 5. To thoſe that read any Ancient or Modern Hiſtories, or other Authors, and would be ſatisfied in the Scene of the Actions they read of, and the ſcituation of the places there mentioned. 6. To thoſe that aiming at exactneſs this way, would compare all the Ancient and Modern Geographers. And 7 to all the Peruſers of this Book that complained of the intolerable defects of former Tables and Indexes; of which number, the Learned Compiler, of this Table, who drew it up for his own ſatisfaction, and publiſheth it for the Publick, is one who wiſheth others as much benefit in the eaſie way of Peruſing it, as he had in the more toilſom way of Collecting it.

The Matter added to this Impreſſion, is much; and all under the Author's own hand, not long before he dyed; putting to it (as he ſaid truly to his Friend that was with him in the peruſal of it) his laſt hand.

To the READER,

The AUTHOR rendreth this Account of his Undertaking and Performance in the following Work.

IT is a great complaint with many, That they want time, either to undertake great matters, or to accompliſh thoſe they have undertaken: Whereas it is more truly affirmed by Seneca, that we do not ſo much want, as waſte it. Non parum temporis habemus, ſed multum perdimus, as that Author hath it. We trifle out too much of our precious time, as he well obſerveth, Aut malè agendo, aut nihil agendo, aut aliud agendo; either in doing ill, or nothing, or elſe things impertinent: and then cry out, that we want things convenient to perform thoſe duties which are expected from us in our ſeveral places. Nor have we only time enough to ſpend, but ſome time to ſpare; ſome privacies and retreats from buſineſs; ſome breathing fits from the affairs of our Vocations: and even of them (thoſe times of leiſure and receſs) we are to render an accompt, in Cato's judgment. Otii reddendam rationem judicabat Cato, as we read in Tullie. In which accompt, as all men generally are concerned, ſo am I intereſſed therein as much as any. For being, by the unhappineſs of my Deſtiny, or the infelicity of the Times, deprived of my Preferments, and diveſted of my Miniſterial Function, (as to the ordinary and publick exerciſe thereof) I cannot chuſe but ſay, I have leiſure enough; the opportunity of ſpending more idle hours (if I were ſo minded) than I ever expected or deſired. And though, perhaps, I could have ſpent thoſe times of leiſure, which the change of my affairs hath given me, with greater benefit to my ſelf, and more to the advantage of my private fortunes: yet that of Cato did ſo over-ballance me, that I was willing to do ſomewhat which might witneſs to enſuing-times, how I had paſſed away thoſe hours, and employed that leiſure. And when I was conſidering of ſome particulars within the compaſs of my power, and anſwerable to that ſmall ſtock of Books which I had recruited, (mine own being taken from me, and diſpoſed of, contrary unto publick Order) I was requeſted by ſome friends, of no common quality, to review my Geographie; to make it more compleat and uſeful to an Engliſh Reader: my vacancy from buſineſs, uſed by them as an Argument to induce me to it. A motion looked on, when firſt made, with neglect enough; my deſuetude from thoſe younger Studies, my great want of Books, the ſad complexion of the times, and the unhandſom entertainment which my Endeavours for the Publick had lately met with, ſeeming ſufficient to diſſwade me from the Undertaking. Little encouragement, God wot, to write Books for others, when I could not be permitted to enjoy my own; or to employ my ſelf in order to a publick ſervice, when not alone my private Fortunes, but the publick Patrimony of the Church, was deſtroyed and diſſipated. But afterwards, being preſſed unto it by ſome Members of Parliament, whom I found loth to be denyed, and by ſome others of great Rank, but ſuch different Intereſſes, that I wondred how they could all center upon the ſame Propoſal: I thought it, at the laſt, a more Chriſtian duty, to ſatisfie the honeſt deſires of ſo many men, than to ſacrifice any longer to my own privacy and retiredneſs, to which I had intended to devote my ſelf. So I reſolved to venture on it, though well I ſaw that my condition in ſo doing might be reſembled unto that of the Iſraelites in the Land of Egypt; of whom the Task-maſters did expect the full tale of Bricks, and yet denyed them their accuſtomed allowance of Straw and Stubble. My caſe, in this, not much unlike unto that of the Duke of Alva; Who being under the diſpleaſure of the King of Spain, in quality of a Priſoner, without the leaſt aſſurance of recovering the King's favour, or his own liberty; and yet employed, in that Conjecture, for the conqueſt of Portugal, was wont to ſay, That he was ſent to conquer Kingdoms with his Fetters on.

And here I cannot but remember a pretty accident which befel me in the Month of January, Anno 1640, at what time it had been my ill fortune to ſuffer under ſome miſapprehenſions which had been entertain'd againſt me, and to be before before the Committee for the Courts of Juſtice on the complaint of Mr. Prynne, then newly return'd from his confinement, and in great credit with the Vulgar. Heard by them, I confeſs, I was, with a great deal of ingenuous patience; but moſt deſpightfully reviled and perſecuted with exceſſive both noiſe and violence, by ſuch as thronged about the doors of that Committee, to expect the iſſue: it being as natural to many weak and inconſiderate men, as it is to Dogs, to bark at thoſe they do not know, and to accompany each other in thoſe kinds of clamours. And though I had the happineſs to come off clear, without any cenſure; and to recover by degrees, amongſt knowing-men, that eſtimation which before had been much endangered: yet ſuch as took up matters upon truſt and hear-ſay, look upon me as a perſon forfeited and marked out for ruine. Amongſt others, I was then encountred, in my paſſage from Weſtminſter to White-hall, by a tall big Gentleman, who thruſting me rudely from the Wall, and looking over his ſhoulder on me, in a ſcornful manner, ſaid, in an hoarſe voice, theſe words, Geography is better than Divinity; and ſo paſſed along. Whether his meaning were, That I was a better Geographer than Divine; or, that Geographie had been a Study of more credit and advantage to me in the eyes of men, than Divinity was like to prove, I am not able to determine. But ſure I am, I have ſince thought very often of it; and that the thought thereof had its influence on me, in drawing me to look back on thoſe younger Studies, in which I was reſolved to have dealt no more: and thereto, in the Preface to my Microcoſm, had obliged my ſelf.

And it is poſſible enough, that, in reſpect of that general promiſe, I may lie under the cenſure of inconſtancy, and breach of Covenant, in that I had ſolemnly declared in the aforeſaid Preface, that the Reader ſhould not fear any further enlargements, which might make him repent his (then) preſent Markets; that it had received my laſt hand; and that from thenceforth I would look upon it as a Stranger only. But it was meant withall, and expreſſed accordingly, unleſs it were for the amending of ſuch Errors, of which, by the ſtrength of mine own judgment, or any ingenuous information, I ſhould be convicted. And Errors, I muſt needs ſay, I have found ſo many on this laſt peruſal, and thoſe not only verbal, but material too, as did not only free me from that Obligation, but did oblige me to a further Review thereof. For being written in an Age, on which the pride of youth, and ſelf-opinion, might have ſome predominancies; I thought it freer from miſtakes, than I ſince have found it. And thoſe miſtakes, by running through eight Editions (ſix of them without my peruſal or ſuper-viſing) ſo encreaſed and multiplyed, that I could no longer call it mine, or look upon it with any tolerable degree of patience. So that, in caſe the importunity of friends had not enforced me, in a manner, upon this Employment, the neceſſity of conſulting my own fame, and leaving the Work fair behind me, to ſucceeding times, would have perſwaded me, in the end, to do ſomewhat in it. Which, though the laſt, was not the leaſt of thoſe enducements which enclined me to the undertaking of this preſent Work.

Having thus plainly and ingenuouſly laid down the reaſons which did induce, though not encourage me unto this performance; it is now fit I ſhould declare what I have done in it, and what the Reader may expect from ſo great Enlargements. And firſt, the Reader is to know, that my deſign originally, was only to look over the former Book, to give it a Review, to purge it of the Errors which it had contracted; and not ſo much to make a new Book, as correct the old. But when I had more ſeriouſly conſidered of it, I found ſufficient reaſon to change that purpoſe, to make it new both in Form and Matter; and to preſent it to the World with all thoſe advantages which a new Book might carry with it. The greater pains I took about it, the greater I conceived would be the benefit by which might from thence redound to thoſe who ſhould pleaſe to read it. And I would willingly ſo far comply with all expectations, that the ſhort Taper of my life ſhould give light to others, in the conſuming of it ſelf. Non nobis ſolùm nati ſumus, may well become a Chriſtian's mouth, though an Heathen ſpake it. But if all expectations be not ſatisfied in the compleatneſs of the Work, (as I fear they will not) I deſire it may not be aſcribed unto any neglect or fault of mine, but to the wants and difficulties which I was to ſtruggle with. Books I had few to help my ſelf with, of mine own; nor live I near ſo rich a Clergie, (moſt of the Benefices of theſe parts being poor and mean) as to ſupply my ſelf from them with ſuch Commodities. The greateſt helps I had, was from Oxford Library; which, though but nine or ten miles off from my preſent dwelling; yet the charge and trouble of the journey, with the loſs of time, made my viſits to that place leſs frequent; and conſequently, the Neighbourhood thereof leſs uſeful to me, than the generality of the Deſign might well comport with. So that when all things are conſidered as they ought to be, it rather may be wondred at, by an equal Reader, how I could come to write ſo much, with ſo little helps, upon a Subject of ſuch a large and diffuſed variety; than that in any part thereof, I have writ too little. And to ſay truth, the Work ſo proſpered in my hand, and ſwelled ſo much above my thought and expectation, that I hope I may, with modeſty enough, uſe thoſe words of Jacob, Voluntas Dei fuit, ut citò occurreret mihi quod volebam; The Lord God brought it to me, as the Engliſh reads it.

In the purſuance of this Work, as I have taken on my ſelf the parts of an Hiſtorian and Geographer; ſo have I not forgotten that I am an Engliſh-man; and, which is ſomewhat more, a Church-man. As an Engliſh-man, I have been mindful, upon all occaſions, to commit to memory the noble Actions of my Country, exploited both by Sea and Land, in moſt parts of the World; and repreſented on the ſame Theaters upon which they were acted. And herein I have followed the example of the great Annaliſt, Baronius, ronius; Who pretending, in that great and laborious Work, a ſincere Hiſtory of the Church, and no more than ſo; yet tells the Pope, in his Epiſtle, that he principally did intend the ſame, pro Sacrarum Traditionum Antiquitate, & Autoritate Romanæ Eccleſiæ; to manifeſt therein the Antiquity of ſuch Traditions, and for defence of that Authority and Power, which at this day are taught and exerciſed in the Church of Rome. And ſo much I may alſo ſay of my ſelf in this performance, though without any by-deſign to abuſe the Reader, That though the Hiſtory and Chorography of the World, be my principal buſineſs; yet I have apprehended every modeſt occaſion of recording the Heroick Acts of my native Soil, and filing on the Regiſters of perpetual Fame, the Gallantry and brave Atchievements of the People of England; Exemplified in their many Victories and ſignal Services in Italy, France, Spain, Scotland, Belgium; in Paleſtine, Cyprus, Africa, and America, and indeed, where not? Nor have I pretermitted their great zeal and piety, in converting to the Faith ſo many of the German and Northern Nations, Franconians, Thuringians, Haſſians, Saxons, Danes, Friſons; as alſo, amongſt the Scots and Picts; together with thoſe of Lituania, and the people of Norwey: by that means more enlarging Chriſt's Kingdom, than they did their own. And as I have been zealous to record the Actions, ſo have I been as careful to aſſert the Rights of the Engliſh Nation: inherent perſonally in their Kings, by way of publick intereſs in the Subject alſo; as the whole Body doth partake of that ſenſe and motion which is originally in the Head. And of this kind I reckon the true ſtating of the Title of the Kings of England to the Crown of France; demonſtrating the Vaſſalage of the Kingdom of Scotland to the Crown of England; vouching the legal Intereſs of the Engliſh Nation, in right of the firſt Diſcovery of Primier Seizure, to Eſtotiland, Terra Corterialis, New-found-Land, Novum Belgium, Guiana, the Countreys near the Cape of Good Hope, ſeveral of the Indian Iſlands, and ſome other places, againſt all Pretenders: inſinuating the precedency of the Engliſh Kings, before thoſe of Spain; their Soveraignty and Dominion in the Britiſh Ocean: with the great benefit which might from thence ariſe unto us, invaded and almoſt ingroſſed by the Hanſe and Hollanders. And yet there is another thing which ſpeaks me more an Engliſhman, than all theſe together; which I ſhall fall on ſoon enough, and indeed too ſoon, the ſadnes of the ſubject being well conſidered.

Next, as a Church-man, I have taken more eſpecial notice of the ancient and preſent face of Chriſtianity, in all parts of the World; the planting and Government of Churches, the Heterodoxies and opinions of thoſe ſeveral Sects into which it doth now ſtand diſmembred. By which it will appear moſt clearly, amongſt other things, that the Doctrine and Government of the Church, were of equal ſtanding; that this Government was no other than that of Biſhops; and that whereſoever Chriſtianity did find any admittance, Epiſcopacy was admitted alſo as a part thereof: the Goſpel being in moſt places firſt preached by Biſhops, or growing to eſteem and ſtrength under their Authority. And it is found on theſe Reſearches, that as Epiſcopacy was coæval with the Church it ſelf, ſo the Subordination of Biſhops to their ſeveral Primates, and the Co-ordination of thoſe Primates among themſelves in the common Government thereof, was of ſuch antiquity (as being ſetled and confirmed in St. Cyprian's time, who flouriſhed in the year 250) that it is hard to trace the beginnings of it. Debere Epiſcopos in commune Eccleſiam regere, is a noted Maxim, in St. Hierome; but practically true in the Communicatoriæ, and Formatæ, of the elder Ages: Which happy courſe, had it been preſerved, Epiſcopacy had been ſo far from being made a ſtirrup for Antichriſt to mount into his Throne, as the Smectymnuans falſly charge it; that it had ſerved rather as a Martingal to have kept him down from lifting up his head too high above the reſt of his Bretheren. And that this courſe was not preſerved, came not intentionally from the Popes, (for that by Antichriſt they mean the Popes of Rome, is a thing paſt queſtion) but from the Inundations of the barbarous Nations: though I confeſs the Popes were apt enough to make the beſt advantage of thoſe various Accidents, which the diſtreſſes of the Church did preſent unto them. For by the overflowing of the barbarous Nations, Chriſtianity was either quite extinguiſhed, or the Authority of the Primates trodden under foot; or that intelligence and commerce which had been anciently amongſt them, interdicted on good reaſons of State, by ſuch Heathen or Mahometan Princes, under whom they lived. And then, how eaſie was it for the Pope, in the new-planting of the Goſpel in theſe Weſtern parts, (done either by his Miniſters, or by his encouragement) to give unto the Biſhops, of his own appointing, ſuch a limited Power, as might make them more and more obnoxious unto his Commands, and afterwards to leſſen their Authority, as he ſaw occaſion, by granting large Exemptions to Monaſteries, Convents, and Cathedrals; with Juriſdiction over the Parochial Churches which belong'd unto them: So that it is moſt evident in the courſe of Story, that the Popes never came unto their height, nor could obtrude their Superſtitions and Novations on the Church of CHRIST; till they had weakned, by degrees, the Epiſcopal Power. Followed, in that deſign, though on different ends, by Wicliff, and ſome others in the Ages ſince; who have driven on their private projects under the colour and pretence of a Reformation. Epiſcopacy, as it was coæval with the Church of CHRIST, ſo was it the beſt and ſtrongeſt Buttreſs in that Sacred Building. The weakning or ſubverting of which Primitive Order, did either proſtitute the Church to the Luſt and Tyranny of that proud Uſurper, or expoſe the Patrimony thereof unto ſpoyl and rapine; or finally, ſubject it to the Anarchy and licentiouſneſs of Heterodoxies, and confuſed Opinions. But I fear I have digreſſed too far in this ſpeculation.

As a Geographer, I have been punctual and exact in giving unto every Province its peculiar bounds, in laying out their ſeveral Land-marks, tracing the courſe of moſt of the principal Rivers, and ſetting forth the ſituation and eſtate of the chiefeſt Towns; and did once think of beautifying the Work with as many Maps as the ſeveral States and Kingdoms which are here deſcribed. But upon further conſideration, how much it would encreaſe the Book both in bulk and price, and conſequently make it of leſs publick uſe than I did intend it; I laid by thoſe thoughts, and reſted ſatisfied with the adding of four Maps for the four parts of the World: by which the Reader may diſcern how each Countrey lies unto the other, though he find not each particular Province, and much leſs all the Towns and Cities which are here expreſſed: and, on the other ſide, may meet with many Towns of inferior note, which are here omitted. And herein I have took ſome pains in ſearching out the firſt Inhabitants of each ſeveral Countrey, as far as I could ſee by the light of Letters, or go by probable Conjectures, in finding out the place of ſuch ancient Cities as are now decayed, not eaſily viſible in their Ruins; and adding to ſuch Cities as are now in being (if of any Antiquity) their Original Names. A thing as neceſſary to the underſtanding of the Hiſtories of thoſe elder times, as the knowledg of the preſent names is to the more deligthful reading of our Modern Stories. And though I have not pretermitted any Town of note, fit to be ſpecified and inſiſted on in a Work of this nature; yet would I not have the Reader look for ſuch a punctual enumeration and deſcription of them, as he may meet withal in thoſe who have written the Chorography of ſome Countrey only; or think himſelf unſatisfied in his expectation, if he find not here the ſituation and affairs of each Town of War, or the Quartering-place of every Company or Troop of Soldiers, which are preſented to him in the Weekly News-books. In all Countreys there are many places which either by the advantage of their ſituation, or ſome preſent exigency of affairs, are fortified and made Towns of War; or otherwiſe remarkable for ſome ſignal Battel, in theſe late buſtles and commotions of the Chriſtian World; of which no notice hath been taken in former times, and conſequently not within the compaſs of this Diſcourſe: and yet perhaps may grow as famous and conſiderable in the times to come, as many of the mightier Cities now decayed and ruined. He that ſhall think the Work imperfect (though I confeſs it, to be nothing but imperfections) for ſome deficiencies in this kind, may be likened to the Countrey-fellow in Ariſtophanes, (if my memory fail not) who picked a great quarrel with the Map, becauſe he could not find where his own Farm ſtood. And ſuch a Countrey-cuſtomer I did meet with once, a ſervant of my elder Brother's, ſent by him with ſome Horſes to Oxon, to bring me and a friend of mine unto his Houſe. Who having loſt his way, as we paſſed through the Forreſt of Whitchwood, and not able to recover any beaten Track, did very earneſtly entreat me to lead the way, till I had brought him paſt the Woods, to the open Fields. Which when I had refuſed to do, as I had good reaſon; alledging, that I never had been there before, and therefore that I could not tell which way to lead him: That's ſtrange, ſaid he; I have heard my old Maſter, your Father, ſay, That you made a Book of all the World; and cannot you find your way out of the Wood? Which being ſpoken out of an honeſt ſimplicity, not out of any pretence to wit, or the leaſt thought of putting a blunt jeſt upon me, occaſioned a great deal of merriment for a long time after: but I hope to meet with no ſuch Readers. The greatneſs of the Bulk, and conſequently of the Price, makes me ſomewhat confident, that none but men of Judgment and Underſtanding will peruſe theſe Papers: and ſuch as they, will look for no more particulars, than the nature of a general Diſcourſe will fitly bear. Perfection and Exactneſs is to be expected in each kind of Science, as is obſerved by Ariſtotle in his ſecond Book of his Ethicks, ἐφ' ὅσον ἡ πράγματος φύσις ἐπιδέχεται, as far forth as the condition of the Argument may be capable of it. And ſo much if I have attained unto, it is all which can with reaſon be expected from me. To look for more, were as improper and abſurd, (in the words of Ariſtotle) as for an Artiſt to expect Tropes of Rhetorick from a Mathematician, or Demonſtrations from an Orator.

Laſtly, as an Hiſtorian, I have traced the affairs of each ſeveral Countrey, from the firſt Inhabitants thereof, (ſuch as the Latins call Aborigines, and the Greeks, Αὐτόχθονες) till theſe later times. Which that I might be ſure to do on a good foundation, I have took more than common care, to ſettle all the firſt Adventurers (after the proud attempt at Babel) in their right Plantations; and that too in the way of an Introduction, that I might the better know where I was to find them, and to go on with their Affairs with with the leſs diſturbance. The reſt of their Occurrences, I have ſummed into ſo ſhort an Abſtract, as may be uſeful to the Learned, in the way of a Remembrancer; to the leſs-knowing man, in the way of a Tutor: Brevity, in this kind, I have much endeavoured; but ſo as to avoid all obſcurity alſo. Nor have I only kept my ſelf to the ſtory of Kingdoms, or the greater Signeuries, Eſtates or Nations, which are or have been of the greateſt conſideration in the ſway of the World: but looked on the Eſtates of ſuch Dukes, Earls, and inferior Princes, as in their times have had the Government of thoſe parts which gave Title to them; whoſe Actions and Succeſſions are diſtinctly ſpecified, and all ſuch Alterations noted, as have hapned either in the ruin of ſuch Eſtates, or the tranſlating of them from one Houſe to another. The Catalogues and Succeſſions of which Royal and Illuſtrious Families, I have drawn down unto the year 1648; towards the expiring of which year, I began to ſet my ſelf upon this Employment. And there I fix, as on the top of ſome dreadful Precipice, which one can neither venture down without danger, nor look down without horror. Some things there are of ſuch a nature, that either to ſpeak of them, or to hold our peace, is alike unſafe. In ſuch a caſe it is beſt to keep at a diſtance. For though truth be the beſt Miſtreſs which a man can ſerve, (Magis amica veritas, ſaid the great Philoſopher) yet it is well obſerved withal, that if a man follow her too cloſe at the heels, ſhe may chance to kick out his teeth for his labour.

In this regard, as alſo out of that compaſſionate affection which a true Engliſh-man ought to bear his native Countrey, although in my approaches towards theſe preſent times, I have took notice, in ſome other places, of ſuch battels, ſieges, and ſucceſſes, in the chances of War, as have hapned in theſe later days: I have forborn to take the leaſt notice of thoſe Tragedies of Blood and Death which have been lately acted on the Stage of England. I cannot but with grief confeſs, that I might find variety of this kind enough, in the late Wars amongſt our ſelves: in which there have been more pitched-fields, more ſtrong pieces taken, more notable traverſes of State, and exploits of War, than all the World can parallel in an equal time. But I have too much Engliſh bowels to pleaſe my ſelf in the recital, or to look back on thoſe unfortunate Adventures, which I ſhould rather chuſe to cover with the Act of Oblivion, or bury in the grave of perpetual ſilence. How gladly I could have recorded theſe exploits of War, had they been exerciſed on a Subject more proper for them, my willingneſs to take notice, upon all occaſions, of the Actions and Atchievements of the Engliſh Nation, will bear witneſs for me. But the employing of that Valour againſt our ſelves, as if not to be conquered, but by one another, ſtrikes ſuch horror in me, that I cannot think thereof, without much affrightment; nor intimate thus much of it, without great reluctancies. I fear it may be ſaid too truly of our late embroilments, as the Hiſtorian of the Civil-Wars betwixt Cæſar and Pompey, Cauſa hujus Belli eadem quæ omnium, nimia felicitas; that they were principally occaſioned by a ſurfeit of too much felicity. But if we were grown weary of our own proſperities; and that prayer and paſſage in the publick Liturgy (Give Peace in our time, O Lord) did not reliſh with us: how happy had it been, if we had found ſome other Field to have tryed our Valour in? and made ſome Forrein Countrey that Aceldama, which ſo fatally was made at home? The diſhonour which we ſuffered in the Iſle of Rhee, when beat thence ingloriouſly by the French; the forcible and long detention of the Palatinate, by the Power of the Spaniard; the barbarous Butchery at Amboyna; and the beating up of the Spaniſh Fleet within the protection of our Caſtles, by thoſe of Holland; the Inſolencies of the Scots; and the Rebellions of the Iriſh, might well have ſtirred ſome indignation in an Engliſh breaſt. And had we fought upon thoſe ſcores, or on none but them, our Victories had deſerved the honour of a ſolemn Triumph, denyed by the old Roman Laws to a Civil-war: But our infelicity (as it ſeems) was like that of Rome, in following thoſe unnatural Wars with ſuch animoſities; when the unrevenged death of Craſſus, the blood of ſo many thouſand of their ſlaughtered Citizens, and the ſhameful loſs of ſo many of the Roman Enſigns, ſhould rather have invited them to the conqueſt of the Parthian Empire. Of which, thus feelingly the Poet:

Cúmque ſuperba foret Babylon ſpolianda Trophæis,
Bella geri placuit, nullos habitura Triumphos.

(conſtrain'd
And when proud Babylon ſhould have been
To give us back our Enſigns lately gain'd:
We rather choſe ſuch Quarrels to purſue,
For which no Triumph could be juſtly due.

But ſuch is the condition and viciſſitude of human affairs, that there is nothing permanent, and much leſs of certainty. The greateſt Monarchies of the World, the Babylonian, Perſian, Grecian, Roman, have all had their periods, nothing remaining of them now, but the name and memory. And what is now become of thoſe mighty Cities of the Eaſt, Ninive, Babylon, Ecbatana, Suſa, with the reſt mentioned in the Scriptures, and in Claſſical Authors? Are not their very Ruins now become inviſible? Where are the puiſſant Families of the Achæmenides of Perſia, the Seleucidæ of Syria, the Pharaohs and Ptolemies of Egypt, the Cæſars of Italy, the Merovingians and Carolovingians of the Realm of France, and the Plantagenets of England? Are they not all extinct and gone, not to be found but by the benefit of ſtory, and ſome ancient Monuments? And if it be ſo, as it is, with the greateſt monarchies, the moſt mighty Cities of the World, we muſt not think that ſmaller Kingdoms and Eſtates can either be ſo evenly ballanced, or ſo ſurely founded, as not to be obnoxious alſo to the ſame viciſſitudes. And, being that ſaying of Optatus is moſt undoubtedly true, Eccleſia eſt in Republica, that the Church is but a part of the Commonwealth, we muſt not hope to find it in a better poſture than the Civil-State in which it is, and under the protection whereof it ſubſiſts and flouriſheth. The Church muſt needs miſcarry in the ruin of the Civil-State; and may miſcarry, many times, although the Civil-State receive no ſuch alterations. Compared, for this reaſon, to the Moon, by the ancient Fathers who had obſerved her in her Prime, in her Encreaſes, and her Full; and finally, had not only ſeen her in the Wane alſo, but ſometimes too under ſome horrible Eclipſes. Which various condition of the Militant Church, the Scriptures and ſucceeding Stories have ſet forth ſo fully, that there need no better nor no clearer demonſtrations of it. The Ark of God taken by the Philiſtins, the Temple deſtroyed by the Chaldæans, and profaned by the Syrians, the Apoſtaſie of ten Tribes at once from the Law of their God, and the extermination of the other two in a ſhort time after, abundantly declare the frail condition and eſtate of the Jewiſh Church. And find we not the ſame for the Chriſtian alſo, in the removing of the Candleſtick from the Aſian Churches; and making them, together with thoſe of Greece and Egypt, and all the flouriſhing Churches in the Eaſt and South, to languiſh and decay remedileſly under the mercileſs encroachments of the Turks and Saracens? He muſt be more than blind that ſees not, more ſavage than thoſe mercileſs men, that grieves not at their ſad condition: but a dead Member, at the moſt, of Chriſt's Myſtical Body, who feels not in himſelf the ſuffrings of thoſe wretched Chriſtians.

If now we look into the cauſes of that deſolation which hath hapned in the Civil-State of thoſe mighty Empires; to what can we impute it, but their crying-ſins? the Pride of the Babylonians, the Effeminacy of the Perſians, the Luxury of the Greeks: and ſuch an aggregation of Vices amongſt the Romans (or Weſtern Chriſtians) before the breaking in of the barbarous Nations, that they were grown a ſcandal unto Chriſtianity. In nobis patitur Chriſtus opprobrium, in nobis patitur lex Chriſtiana maledictum, as the devout Salvian then complained. Thus alſo in reference to the Church, did not the Idolaters of the ten Tribes haſten in the Aſſyrians? The ſhedding of the Blood of ſo many Prophets by the other two, as much accelerate the coming in of the Chaldæans firſt, and the Romans afterwards? Do we not find the Arianiſm of the Eaſtern Churches to uſher in the inundation of the Saracens; the Donatiſm of the South, to have ſet open a wide Door to let in the Vandals? Did not the Saxons follow on the heels of Pelagianiſm, as ſoon almoſt as entertained amongſt the Britans? If ſo, as moſt undoubtedly it was in the days of old, why ſhould we think but that the Superſtitions and Corruptions of the Church of Rome, the Sacriledg and Faction of the Churches of the Reformation, ſhall at the laſt receive the like Retribution? Or, that the Divine Juſtice is ſo faſt aſleep, that our ſins muſt cry as loud as the Prieſts of Baal did unto their god, before it be awakened by us? Aſſuredly, we are no leſs ſinners than any of thoſe on whom the Tower of the Divine vengeance hath ſo heavily fallen; whoſe blood the Pilates of all Ages have mingled with their ſolemn and religious ſacrifices: and therefore have no cauſe to hope, but that unleſs we do repent, we ſhall likewiſe periſh.

The ſerious conſideration of all theſe particulars, hath made thoſe alterations both in Church and State, which have hapned here amongſt our ſelves, the leſs ſtrange unto me. For, is there any of theſe things, whereof it may be ſaid, Ecce hoc eſt novum, Behold this is new? Eccl. 1. 10. Have they not been already in the times before us? Do we not find it poſitively affirm'd by the wiſeſt man that ever was, That which hath been, is now; and that which is to be, hath already been: Nihil enim novum eſt ſub ſole, for there is no new thing under the Sun, Eccleſ. 3. 15. and 1. 11. And though I cannot tell what effect the reading of this following Book may produce in others, yet I can warrantably ſay thus much of my ſelf. That the obſervation of the fall of ſo many great and puiſſant Empires, the exſtirpation of ſo many mighty and renowned Families, the deſolation of ſo many flouriſhing Chriſtian Churches, as the compoſing of this Book did preſent me with, (though formerly no ſtrangers to me in the courſe of my Studies) did more conduce to the full humbling of my Soul under the mighty hand of God, than either the ſenſe of my own Misfortunes, or any other moral conſideration which had come before me. And I could wiſh, the Reader may receive ſo much benefit by it, (beſides the profit and delight which Books of this nature carry with them) that the Mighty man may learn hereby, not to glory in his greateſt Strength, nor the Wiſe to glory in his Wiſdom, or in the cunning carrying on of his great Deſigns. Let the great Leaders of theſe times, in the Art of War, conſider the ſad ends of Joab, the General of David's Forces; and of Beliſarius, the Commander of Juſtinian's Armies: whereof the one was ſlain ingloriouſly at the Horns of the Altar, after all his Services; the other forced to beg his bread at the Gates of the Temple. Let the great Maſters sters of Wit, and State-craft, have before their eyes the unsuccessful ends of Achitophel, the Oracle of the times he lived in; and of Cæsar Borgias, proposed, by Machiavel, for the Pattern of a Politick Prince: of which, the one laid violent hands upon himself, because his Counsel was not followed; the other, after the defailment of his Projects, and a long imprisonment to boot, forced to flye his Country, and slain obscurely in an Ambush. Let all men lay unto their hearts the ebbs and floods, those alternations and vicissitudes, to which all Humane Power is subject; the slippery Foundations of that Might and Greatness which is not laid upon the Principles of Justice, and regulated by the Maxims of Christian Piety; and, that even those which have dominion over others, have a God too, above themselves, to whom they are to render an accompt of all their Actions. Not such a God as that of Lewis the 11th of France; of whom it is reported, that he wore a Leaden Medal in his Bonnet, in the form of a Crucifix: which, when he had caused any man to be killed, whom he feared or hated, he would take into his hands, and kiss it, desiring it to pardon him that one Murther more, and it should be the last which he would commit. Such mockeries as these may be well put on a Leaden god; but the God of Heaven and Earth, will not be so mocked: who being totus oculus, and totum lumen, as the Father calleth him, can easily discern our intents and purposes, notwithstanding those disguises which are put upon them; and see the nakedness of sin in its ugliest shape, though apparelled with the Fig leaves of the best pretences, which the self-deceiving Wit of Man can patch up together. God is the same God now, as in former times, Primus ad extremum similis sibi, Yesterday, and to day; and the same for ever; and will not put up those affronts which the Impieties of men do afflict him with: though in regard of his great patience, and long-suffering, they may flatter their poor Souls, and say, Tush, God doth not see it.

Lastly, I am to tell the Reader, that I have now no other Patron than himself, to whom to dedicate this Work, and from whom to receive protection and encouragement in it. The time was when I might have said with Seneca, Unus mihi erat pro Populo, that one Man was to me instead of all men: the Powers of all the People being virtually united in him. But now, as the case stands, I must be fain to invert those words, Populus mihi est pro uno; the Body of the Nation is to me, in this respect as the Head before. Unto them therefore I present it, and that not improperly: A General survey of all the World, the Government, Affairs, and Successes of it, requiring a more general Patron than particular Tractates. But because all the People in the Body Collective have not abilities to read, and much less to judge; and that many of those who can do both, may neither have the list nor leisure to peruse these Papers: I look on the Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, as their Representatives in this kind; to whose favourable and ingenuous acceptance I submit the same. Which if I can attain unto, it is all I aim at. And it will be no small comfort to me in the midst of so many sorrows as are round about me, that I have been useful to the publick, or added any thing by my Studies unto the Honour and Content of the English Nation: whose peace and happiness is heartily commended to Almighty God, by

A GENERAL INTRODUCTION to the following WORK:

Containing the Creation of the World by Almighty God, and the Plantation of the ſame by the Sons of Men; the neceſſary uſe of Hiſtory and Geography, as well for underſtanding the Affairs of the Ages paſt, as for converſe and correſpondence with the Nations preſent; together with a brief view of ſome General Præcognita which neceſſarily are required unto the Knowledge of each.

WITH great both Piety & Prudence did the Apoſtles in their Summary of the Chriſtian Faith, join our Belief in God the Father Almighty, with that clauſe or Article of making or Creating the Heaven and Earth. For as the name of Father doth imply a making (Is not he thy Father which hath made thee? ſaith the Prophet Moſes, Deut. 32. 6) ſo, Who but an Almighty Father could by his meer Word, without any pre-exiſtent Matter, create that goodly Edifice of Heaven and Earth, which we behold with ſo much wonder and applauſe? A work ſo full of wonder to the ancient Gentiles, that ſome of them made the World a God. Vis illum (i.e. Deum) mundum Vocare? non falleris, as it is in Seneca: others more rationally conceiving God to be the Soul of the World, as giving animation or beginning to it. And though they erred, as well in making the World a God, as God to be the Soul of the World, yet might they very well have ſaid as one ſince hath done, That the World is nothing elſe but God unfolded and manifeſted in the Creature. Nil aliud mundus univerſus, quam Deus explicatus, as Cuſanus a late Cardinal hath it. For certainly the ſpecial motives which did induce God unto this great work, were a deſire and purpoſe to manifeſt his Power, to exerciſe his Providence, and declare his Goodneſs. Not that God needed to have made the World in regard of Himſelf; for the World we know was made in the beginning of Time, but God is Infinite and Eternal before all Times: but that it ſeemed good to Him to create it laſt, as a thing moſt conducible to his praiſe and glory; the Heavens declaring the glory of God, and the Earth ſhewing his handy-work, ſaith the Royal Pſalmiſt. Some, meaſuring the God of Heaven by their own affections, and finding nothing ſo agreeable to their own diſpoſitions as to be in company, conceive that God being at laſt weary of his own Solitude, did create the World, that he might have the company of the Angels in Heaven, and make a ſtart into the Earth (when he ſaw occaſion) to recreate himſelf with the Sons of Men. Quæ beata eſſe ſolitudo quæat? What happineſs (ſaid Hortenſius) can there be in Solitude? To which Lactantius, Lib. 1. Cap. 7. not being furniſhed with a better, doth return this Anſwer; That God cannot be ſaid to be alone; habet enim Miniſtros quos vocamus Nuncios, as having the ſociety of the Angels. But then Lactantius muſt ſuppoſe that the Angels were co-eternal with God himſelf, (which were to make all Gods, and no God at all; or elſe his Anſwer is no Anſwer, as to that Objection. How much more oppoſitely might he have thus replyed unto Hortenſius, That the ſupream contentment poſſible to Almighty God is by reflecting on Himſelf, and in Himſelf contemplating his own infinite glories: which being co-eternal with Himſelf, even from all Eternity, he needed no more company before the World was made, than he hath done ſince. Lactantius being himſelf a man of a very great reading, (though indeed a better Humanitian than Divine) could not but know thoſe ſweet delights which a man habited in Learning takes in Contemplation, and the good ſociety he hath of his own dear thoughts, when he is moſt retired from the ſight of men. And if the wiſe Gentile could affirm ſo ſadly, Nunquam minus ſolus quam cum ſolus eſſet, that he was never leſs alone than when he was by himſelf, what need can any rational man ſuppoſe in Almighty God, of having more company than Himſelf, to delight Himſelf in? If this ſuffice not for an Anſwer to that needleſs queſtion, What God did before he made the World; let him take that of Auguſtine on the like occaſion: who being troubled with the like curious and impertinent Caption, is ſaid to have returned this Anſwer; Fabricaſſe inferos curioſis, that he made Hell for all ſuch troubleſome and idle Queſtioniſts. Which reſolution of that Father is by Sabinus, a late Dutch Poet, moulded into this handſom Epigram.

Dum Chriſtum Libycis Pater Auguſtinus in oris
Aſſerit, & peragit munus in æde ſuum;
Dum miranda refert populo primordia mundi
Eſſe docens verbo cuncta creata Dei:
Impius aſſurgit, verbiſq; procacibus, Afer,
Ergo Opifex rerum quid faciebat? ait;
Aut, Quibus intentus fallebat tempora curis,
Mundus adhuc nondum cum fabricatus erat?

Præſul ad hæc Libycus, Fabricavit tartara, dixit,
His quos ſcrutari talia mente juvat.

Which may be Engliſhed in theſe words:

When Reverend Auſtin did in Africk preach,
And in Gods Houſe the ruder people teach,
As he the Worlds Creation prov'd and taught
That God made all things by his Word, of nought:
A ſawcy Swain upſtarting needs would know,
How God before that did his time beſtow:
And what to ſpend his thoughts upon, he had,
When neither Heaven, nor Earth, nor Seas were made:
To which the Father tartly thus; He then Made Hell for thee, and ſuch audacious men.

But not to ſpend more time in anſwering ſo vain a caption, ſuffice it us to know, that it pleaſed God at laſt when it ſeemed beſt unto his infinite and eternal Wiſdom, to create the World, and all things viſible and inviſible in the ſame contained. A time it had, in which it firſt began to be, which before was not; This Moſes calls Principium a beginning ſimply. In the beginning, God created the heaven and the earth, in the firſt words of the Book of Geneſis: which is all one as if he had ſaid, the Heaven and Earth had a beginning; or that this unformed Maſs or Chaos which he entituled there by the name of Heaven and Earth, was the beginning or firſt draught of thoſe ſeveral things which after were created in their proper times; that is to ſay, the firſt in order of time, becauſe made before them, not in order of cauſality, as the cauſes of them. Cœlum & terra, in principio, i. e. ante omnia facta ſunt, ſaith Simon Portius in his Scholies on St. John's Goſpel. So that whether we do expound thoſe words, that the Heaven and Earth had a beginning; or that Moſes by theſe words did mean, that out of that Matter which he calls Heaven and Earth, as out of the beginning, or firſt matter, all things were created, it comes all to one; becauſe it is thereby acknowledged that the firſt Matter was created by Almighty God, and therefore of neceſſity to have a beginning. And to this truth we have not only the authority and conſent of Scripture, but of the greateſt part of the old Philoſophers; guided thereto by this impoſſibility in nature, that any viſible work, whether it be natural or artificial, ſhould either give it ſelf a being, or have that being which it hath from no cauſe precedent. For from that Principle Tully argueth very rightly in his moſt excellent Book De Natura Deorum, that as a man coming into a goodly houſe, in which he found nothing but Rats and Mice, could not conceive that either the houſe had built it ſelf, or had no other maker but thoſe Rats and Mice which were neſted in it; ſo neither can it be imagined, that either this World ſhould be eternal, or a ſelf-exiſtency; or was compoſed by any natural Agent of what ſort ſoever. And this is that which is more briefly and expreſly ſaid by the Apoſtle, viz. That every houſe is built by ſome man, but he that built all things is God, Heb. 3. 4. It is true, that Ariſtotle being a very great enquirer into the works of Nature, conceiv'd the World to be eternal; and yet not always conſtant unto that opinion. But then it is as true withal that there was ſomething elſe that inclined him to it, than a meer admiration of the works of Nature. Democritus and ſome others had been of opinion, that the World was made in the beginning, fortuitis atomorum concurſionibus, by the accidental union or conjunction of thoſe ſeveral parcels, of which the Univerſe conſiſted; and that man himſelf was but voluntaria elementorum concretio, a voluntary mixture of all the Elements, as Minutius hath obſerved out of their Writings. To which abſurd opinion (as it was no better) though it found a general imbracement amongſt many of the old Philoſophers, when Ariſtotle knew not how to ſubmit his moſt exquiſite judgment; and yet was deſtitute of ſuch further light, as might more fully have inſtructed him in its true Original: he rather choſe to grant, the World to be eternal, than to be made of ſuch ridiculous, and unſound, though eternal Atoms. Et maluit hanc pulchram mundi faciem ab æterno eſſe, quam aliquando ex æterna deformitate emerſiſſe. Valeſius in his Book de Sacra Philoſophia ſo pleads the caſe in his behalf; and I thank him for it: who am (I muſt confeſs) a great friend of Ariſtotle's, whom ſome account for the Præcurſor of our Saviour Chriſt in rebus naturalibus, as John the Baptiſt was in divinis.

Nor doth the Scripture and the light of Reaſon tell us only this, that the whole World had a beginning; but, by the help of Scripture, and the works of ſome Learned men, we are able to point out the time when it did begin; or to compute how many years it is preciſely from the firſt beginning, without any notable difference in the calculation. For though it be moſt truly ſaid, Citius inter Horologias quam Chronologias; that Clocks may ſooner be agreed than Chronologers, yet moſt Chronologers in this point come ſo near one another, that the difference is ſcarce obſervable. From the beginning of the World to the Birth of Chriſt, in the accompt of Beroaldus, are 3928 years; 3945 in the computation of the Genevians; 3960 in the eſteem of Luther; and 3963 in the calculation of Melanchthon: between whom and Beroaldus (being the leaſt and the greateſt) there is but 35 years difference, which in ſo long a courſe of time can be no great matter. Now if unto the Calculation made by Beroaldus, which I conceive to be the trueſt, we add 1648 ſince the Birth of Chriſt, the total of the time ſince the Worlds Creation, will be 5576 years, neither more nor leſs. A thing which I the rather have inſiſted on, becauſe that from this Epocha or Æra of the Worlds Creation, we ſhall compute the times of ſuch Kings and Princes, as reigned and flouriſhed in the World before the Incarnation of our Lord and Saviour.

It being then reſolved as a thing undoubted, that God made the World, and that He made it in ſuch time as Himſelf pleaſed; let us next look upon the matter and the method which it pleaſed the Divine Majeſty to make uſe of in this wondrous work.

Firſt, for the matter, out of which all things were created, I take it, as before was ſaid, to be that which Moſes in the firſt words of Geneſis calls the Heaven and the Earth, becauſe they were ſo in potentia; but after telleth us more explicitely, that that which he calleth Earth, was inanis & vacua, without form and void; and that which he calleth Heaven was but an overcaſt of darkneſs, or tenebræ ſuperfaciem Abyſſi, as the vulgar reads it. Of which Chaos or confuſed Maſs we thus read in Ovid, who queſtionleſs had herein conſulted with the works of Moſes, being before his time communicated to the learned Gentiles:

Ante mare & terras & quod tegit omnia Cœlum,
Unus erat toto naturæ vultus in Orbe,
Quem dixere Chaos, rudis indigeſtaq; moles,
Nec quicquam niſi pondus iners, congeſtaq; eodem
Non bene junctarum diſcordia ſemina rerum, &c.

Which I ſhall Engliſh from G. S. with ſome little change.

Before the Earth, the Sea, and Heaven were framed,
One face had Nature which they Chaos named;
An indigeſted lump, a barren load,
Where jarring ſeeds of things ill-join'd abode.
No Sun as yet with light the World adorns,
Nor new Moon had repair'd her waining horns:
Nor hung the ſelf-poiz'd Earth in thin Air plac'd,
Nor had the Ocean the vaſt Shores embrac'd.

Earth

Earth, Sea, and Air, all mixt; the Earth unſtable,
The Air was dark, the Sea unnavigable.
No certain form to any one aſſign'd;
This, that reſiſts; for in one body joyn'd
The cold and heat, the dry and humid fight,
The ſoft and hard, the heavy with the light.

Out of this Chaos or firſt matter, did God raiſe the World according to thoſe ſeveral parts and lineaments which we ſee it in, not as out of any pre-exiſtent matter which was made before, and had not God for the Author or firſt Maker of it; but as the firſt preparatory matter which himſelf had made, including in the ſame potentially both the form and matter of the whole Creation, except the Soul of man only, which God breathed into him. And therefore it is truly ſaid, that God made all things out of nothing; not out of nothing as the matter out of which it was made, for then that nothing muſt be ſomething; but as the terminus à quo, in giving them a real and corporal being which before they had not, and did then firſt begin to have by the meer force and efficacy of his powerful Word. And though it be a Maxim in the Schools of Philoſophy, Ex nihilo nil fit, that nothing can be made of nothing; that every thing which hath a being doth require ſome matter which muſt be pre-exiſtent to it, yet this muſt either be condemned for erroneous Doctrine in the Chair of Divinity, or elſe be limited and reſtrained to Natural Agents which cannot go beyond the Sphere of their own activity. Inviſible and ſupernatural Agents are not tied to Rules, no not in the production of the works of Nature; though Nature, conſtituted and eſtabliſhed in a certain courſe, work every thing by line and meaſure as a certain Rule. And ſo it was with God in the Worlds Creation; he did not only make the World but he made it out of nothing, by his word alone: Dixit & facta ſunt, He ſpake the word and they were made ſaith the royal Pſalmiſt, *Pſal.*33. v. 9. There went no greater pains nor matter to the whole Creation, but a Dixit Deus: And this not only ſaid by Moſes, but by David too, Verbo Domini firmati ſunt Cœli, & ſpiritu oris ejus omnis virtus eorum, *v.*6. i.e. By the Word of the Lord were the Heavens made, and all the Hoſts thereof by the breath of his mouth. In which it is to be obſerved, that though the Creation of the World be generally aſcribed to God the Father, yet both the Son and the Holy Ghoſt had their parts therein; Verbo Domini, by the word of the Lord were the Heavens made, ſaith the Prophet David. In the beginning was the Word; all things were made by him, and without him was nothing made, ſaith S. John the Apoſtle. The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters, ſaith Moſes in the Book of the Law: Et ſpiritu oris ejus and by the breath (or Spirit) of his mouth were all the Hoſts of Heaven created, ſaith David in the Book of Pſalms, Made by his Word, and yet not made together in one inſtant of time. In the firſt day he laid the foundation and no more; in the five next, he raiſed the building: and this he did, to teach us men deliberation, in our words and actions; and to ſet forth withal unto us, both his Power and Wiſdom. His Power he manifeſted in the Method of the whole Creation, in that he did produce what effects he pleaſed, without the help of natural cauſes: as giving Light unto the World before he had created either Sun or Moon; making the Earth fruitful, and to bring forth Plants, without the influence or motion of the Heavenly bodies. And for his Wiſdom he expreſſed it in as high a degree, in that he did not create the very Beaſts of the field before he had provided them of fodder & ſufficient herbage; nor made man after his own Image, before he had finiſhed all the reſt of his works, fitted his Houſe, and furniſhed it with all things neceſſary both for life and pleaſures.

But all things being fitted and prepared for him, at laſt comes Man into the World: and he doth make his entrance with a greater pomp than any of the reſt of the Creatures which were before him. They came in with no other Ceremony, than a Dixit Deus; but in the Workmanſhip of Man, there was a Conſultation held by the bleſſed Trinity. It is there, Faciamus Hominem, Let us make man; each Perſon contributing ſomewhat (as it were) to his compoſition. For God the Father as the chief Workman, or principal Agent, gave him form and feature; in which he did imprint his own heavenly Image. The Son, who is the living and eternal Word, gave him voice or ſpeech, that ſo he might be able to ſet forth Gods praiſes. The Holy Ghoſt, the Lord and giver of Life, (as the Nicene Fathers truly call him) breathing into his noſtrils the breath of life, whereby he became a living Spirit. In this one Creature, was amaſſed whatever thing was excellent in the whole Creation; the quantity or ſubſtance of Inanimate Creatures, the life of Plants, the ſenſe of Beaſts, and the underſtanding of Angels. In this one Creature did God ſhew the excellency of his power and wiſdom, in printing on him his own Image, and giving him dominion over all the works of his hands, which Image of God they look for it in a very wrong place, who hope to find it in mans Body, though of a gallant compoſition, and erected ſtructure. The Heathen Oratour was able in this point to enform ſome erroneous Chriſtians. Ad Divinam imaginem proprius accedit humana virtus quam figura, Man doth approach more near to the Image of God, in the endowments of his Mind, than in the ſtructure of his Body, as divinely Cicero. And as for that dominion which God gave him over the works of his hands, the Patent is at large laid down in the firſt of Geneſis. For God no ſooner ſaid, Faciamus Hominem, Let us make man after our own Image, but preſently he adds this Charter of Supreme Authority, And let him have dominion over the Fiſh of the Sea, and over the Fowls of the Air, and over the Cattel, and over all the Earth. A more particular explication of thoſe ſeveral points, wherein that Image and this Power do conſiſt eſpecially, I ſhall not take upon me or endeavour now; as being not of this place and purpoſe: Which only is to ſhew, that as man in the very act of his Creation participated more of the Divine Image, than all other Creatures: ſo was he by Gods ſpecial grant enfeoffed with a larger power, than any of the reſt could pretend unto. Man, though made lower than the Angels, is in this above them; that all the Creatures of the World were made to be his ſervants, and to attend upon his pleaſure. And yet this great and mighty Prince, this general Lord of all the World, and the Creatures in it (ſetting aſide the dignity of his firſt Creation) doth come into the world in a worſe condition, than any of the Creatures which were made to ſerve him, naked, and impotent, and ſpeechleſs, without uſe of reaſon; neither of power to help himſelf, or ask help of others. Whereof Lactantius, in my mind, gives a very good reaſon, who telleth us, that God ſends man into the world, nudum & inermem, naked, and weak, and undefenced againſt all violences and dangers; whereas all Creatures elſe, munita indumentis naturalibus & armata ſunt, are naturally both armed and cloathed, and able to relieve themſelves. And this he doth unto this end, that man being naturally deſtitute of thoſe outward helps, might make uſe of his inward faculties of judgment, wit and underſtanding, in furniſhing himſelf with that which he wants by nature. For hereunto the firſt original of all Manufactures and mechanick Arts is to be referred, as is moſt plain and evident from the Book of God, in which we ſee, that preſently upon the procreation of Mankind, Abel betook himſelf to keeping ſheep, and Cain to husbandry; Jubal to handle the Harp, Organ, and ſuch Muſical Inſtruments; and Tubal Cain to work upon Braſs and Iron, two metals very neceſſary to moſt kind of Trades. The like may be ſuppoſed in all other Myſteries and Arts of living, though there be no expreſs mention of them in thoſe early days; except it be the Art of Building, or the Carpenter's Trade, which no queſtion is as old as any, as by the building of Cain's City, and Noah's Ark is moſt clearly evidenced. God made the World, and fitted it with all things neceſſary for the life of man, leaving man to provide himſelf of ſuch additions, as rather ſerve for comforts and conveniences in the way of his living, than the neceſſities of his life.

Here then we have the works of God, and the works of men to be conſidered, in purſuit of our preſent Argument. The works of God, in ſhadowing the Earth with Trees and Foreſts, interlacing it with Criſtal ſtreams, and capacious Rivers; inriching it with fruitful and delicious Vales, adorning it with lofty Mountains, and ſtocking both the Hills and Vales with all ſorts of Cattel. But nothing more ſets forth the Power and Wiſdom of Almighty God, as it relates to theſe particulars, than that moſt admirable intermixture of Want with Plenty, whereby he hath united all the parts of the World in a continual Traffick and Commerce with one another: ſome Countrys being deſtitute of thoſe Commodities, with which others abound; and being plentiful in thoſe, which the others want. Inſomuch, that as in the body of man, that Microcoſm, or little World, the Head cannot ſay, that it hath no need of the Foot, nor the Foot of the Hand, nor other members of the reſt: ſo neither in the Body of the World, can Europe ſay to Aſia, or Spain to England, I have no need of your Commodities; or am not wanting in thoſe things, whereof thou boaſteſt an abundance. Something there is in every Country which may be ſpared to ſupply the defect of others; and are accordingly vented in the way of Merchandiſe: Of which, thus Du-Bartas in his Colonies,

Hence come our Sugars from Canary Iſles;
From Candie, Currans, Muſcadels, and Oyls.
From the Moluccoes, Spices; Balſamum
From Egypt; Odours from Arabia come.
From India Gums, rich Drugs, and Ivory;
From Syria, Mummie; black, red Ebony
From burning Chus; from Peru, Pearls and Gold;
From Ruſſia Furrs to keep the rich from cold.
From Florence, Silks; from Spain, Fruit, Saffron, Sack;
From Denmark, Amber, Cordage, Firrs, and Flax,
From France and Flanders, Linen, Wood, and Wine;
From Holland, Hops; Horſe from the banks of Rhine.
From England, Wool. All lands, as God diſtributes,
To the Worlds treaſure pay their ſundry tributes.

This, as Du-Bartas ſpeaks of the preſent times, ſo queſtionleſs the ſame, or the like Commerce held good in the firſt Ages of the Worlds Creation; God furniſhing all Countrys from the firſt beginning with ſome Staple-Commodities, for the benefit of themſelves and others; for the maintaining of that intercouſe between Nation and Nation, which makes them link the cloſer in the bonds of Amity. And to this end alſo ſerve thoſe ſeveral Manufactures wherewith ſome Countrys do abound in reſpect of others; but looked on, in the preſent Book, as the works of men. And of this kind alſo are the ſeveral Polities and forms of Government. For, though all Magiſtracy in it ſelf be from God originally, and that the Monarchical-form comes neareſt to the Government uſed by God himſelf: yet being that ſome Polities are meerly but humane inventions, all Government or Magiſtracy is called an Ordinance of man in holy Scripture, 1 Pet. 2. v. 13. But thoſe particular works of men, which are the moſt conſiderable part of our preſent ſubject, are Caſtles, Towns, and Cities of moſt eminent note, which thrive and proſper in the World, according as they do partake of thoſe Conveniences, which conduce moſt to their Magnificence & Greatneſs. Of theſe Boterus gives us many (relation being had to the time he lived in) but of thoſe many we ſhall touch upon the principal only, paſſing by thoſe of leſſer note, as pleaſantneſs of Sight, fruitfulneſs of Soil, ſalubrity of Air, and ſuch like obvious Obſervations. Firſt then, there is required to the Magnificence and Splendour of Cities, a Navigable River, or ſome ſuch eaſie paſſage by Sea, which will bring thither a continual concourſe and trade of Merchants; as at Venice, London, Amſterdam. Secondly, ſome Staple-Manufactures or Commodities, which will draw the like reſort of Merchants, though the conveniency of Sea or Rivers invite them not; as in Nuremberg in Germany, a dry Town, but mightily Traded. Thirdly, the Palace of the Prince; For, ubi Imperator, ibi Roma, where the Court is, there will be a continual confluence of Nobles, Gentry, Merchants, and all ſorts of Trades: And by this means, Madrid, not long ſince a poor beggarly Village, is grown the moſt populous City in all Spain. Fourthly, the Reſidence of the Nobility, beautifieth a City with ſtately and magnificent Buildings; which makes the Cities of Italy ſo much excell ours in England; their Nobles dwelling in the Cities, and ours for the moſt part in their Country-houſes. Fifthly, the Seats, or Tribunals of juſtice, on which both Advocates and Clients are to give attendance; as in the Parliamentary Cities in France, and Spires in Germany. Sixthly, Univerſities and Schools of Learning, to which the Youth from all parts are to make reſort; which hath been long the chief cauſe of the flouriſhing of Oxford, Cambridge, Bononia in Italy, and other Cities of good note beyond the Seas. Seventhly, Immunity from Tolls & Taxes; moſt men being moſt deſirous to inhabit there, where their In-come will be greateſt, their Priviledges largeſt, and their Disburſements leaſt: So Naples, Florence, Venice, having been deſolated by Plagues, were again ſuddenly re-peopled, by granting large Immunities to all comers-in. And laſt of all, the opinion of Sanctity, either for the Reliques of Saints, or ſome noted Shrines, or the reſidence of ſome famous man, or the Seat of Religion, is not the leaſt Adamant which draws people to it, to the great enriching of ſome Cities. And of this, Rome it ſelf can give us two moſt pregnant evidences: The one in reference to the Popes, and theſe latter times; that famous Town not otherwiſe ſubſiſting now, than by the conſtant reſidence of the Popes and Cardinals; whoſe abſence while the Papal Sea was kept at Avignon, had made it over-grown with Briars and Brambles, and buried it almoſt in its own ſad ruines. The other, in the perſon of Titus Livius the Hiſtorian; to ſee which man there came ſo many from the Coaſts of France and Spain, that St. Hierom elegantly ſaith, Quos ad ſui contemplationem Roma non traxerat, unius hujus hominis fama perduxit; qui jam urbem tantam ingreſſi, aliud extra Urbem quærerent.

Such are the cauſes of the Greatneſs and Magnificence of Cities, when they are once built; none of all which might poſſibly be looked at by the firſt builders of Cities,

I mean by Cain before the Flood, and by Nimrod after; who aimed more at the love of Empire, and self preservation, than at the general good of Mankind, or the particular wealth of those amongst whom they lived. Of Cain it is affirmed expressly in the Book of God, That being possessed with this fear, that every one that found him would lay hands upon him and slay him, in revenge of the blood of Abel; He builded a City and called it by the name of his Son Enoch. *Gen.*4.17. Builded a City? For what reason? To fortifie and secure himself against all revenge, as the Text doth intimate; or thereby to oppress his Neighbours, as Josephus witnesseth. Neither was this the only City of the first Ages, though none but this be mentioned in the Book of God. That which the Scripture saith of Jubal, that he was the Father of such as dwell in Tents, and of such as have Cattel; that is to say, he was the first of those which lived upon Pasturage, and followed their Cattel up and down with their moveable Tents, not having any certain home or habitations, as the wild Arabes now, and the ancient Nomades; is proof sufficient, that the residue of all Mankind lived a more civil kind of life in their Towns and Villages. And if Pomponius Mela be of any credit (as in these things, I think he is) he will inform us, that the City of Joppa was built before the Flood; that the King thereof was named Cepha; and that his name, and the name of his brother Phineas, together with the Grounds and Principles of their Religion, were found graven upon certain Altars of stone. But whether this be so, or not, certain it is, that as well Canaan in the West, whereon Joppa stood, as the Land of Nod on the East side of Paradise, where Cain built his City, were peopled long before the Flood; and so were most of the other parts of the World besides: And if well peopled in all, or most parts thereof, no doubt but they had Villages and Towns, yea and Cities too, as well for necessary habitation, as for strength and safety. Now that the World was throughly peopled before the Flood, seems clear to me by that great and universal Deluge, which God was pleased to bring upon the Face of all the Earth: For what need all the Earth be buried in that Sea of waters, if all the Earth had not been peopled, and all the people of it guilty of oppression, in the sight of God? Besides, it is expressly said in the holy Scripture, that in the time of Abraham, who lived about 350 years after the Flood in the largest account, and not 300 in the shortest; there were Kings of Egypt, and of the Philistims, Kings of the Canaanites, of Shinaar, Ellasar, Ellan, and of the Nations who questionless had their Lands well peopled: that both Chaldea, and Mesopotamia, in the time of Abraham had their several Cities; as Ur in the one, and Haran, or Charan, in the other; and that Damascus the chief City of Syria was then founded also: Not to say any thing of the building of Babel, Erech, Accad, and Chalneh in the Land of Shinaar (or Babylonia) nor of the building of Ninive, Resen, Reboboth, and Chalah in the Land of Assyria, mention whereof is made in the 10 of Genesis. And it is found in good and credible Authors, that Ninus the third Assyrian Monarch (who lived before the birth of Abraham) having subdu'd the Kings of Media and Armenia, invaded Bactria with an Army of 1700000 Foot, and 200000 Horse, and 10600 armed Chariots; and was encountred by Zoroaster the King thereof with an Army of four hundred thousand. The credibility whereof, if it were disputed, might be affirmed by the like numerous Army brought by Xerxes against the Greeks, though in times long after following. And if we will give credit unto Diodorus Siculus, who voucheth Ctesias for his Author, Semiramis, the Wife of Ninus, invaded India with an Army of three Millions of men and upwards; and yet was over-matched, and slain by an Indian King. If then within the space of four hundred years, we find the Eastern parts to be so well planted, so many Kings possessed of their regal Thrones, and many of them able to impress such infinite Armies; why may we not conclude, that in the course of 1656 years (for so long it was from the Creation to the Flood) the whole World was inhabited and planted in all parts thereof; especially considering the long lives of men, amounting to eight hundred, or nine hundred years; and consequently the long time they had to apply themselves to the act of Generation. And though I have no certain ground for it in the Book of God, yet I am apt enough to be of Mercator's opinion; who placing the 16 Dynasty of the Kings of Egypt (where Eusebius begins to calculate the Egyptian times) at the first planting of that Country by the Sons of Noah; reckoneth the former fifteen to have been before the Flood, and to reach very near the times of the first Creation. That, Misraim the Son of Ham was possessed of Egypt within two hundred years after the Flood, is a truth undoubted. Nor see I any cause to doubt, but that in the like space of time from the first Creation, it might be planted also by the Sons of Adam: considering, as we ought to do, that in the Infancy of the World, when the bodies of men were most perfect, and of greatest vigour, they observed no degree of Kindred or Consanguinity, nor tied themselves so strictly to one woman, as they should have done. And for the names of all the Kings of those several Dynasties, either they might be left engraven upon Pillars, such as that of Seth; or upon Altars of stone, as in those of Joppa; or Misraim might have them by Tradition from the hands of Noah; and so deliver them by tale unto his posterity: the Egyptians being generally very good Heralds, and standing very much on their own Antiquity. And if this may be said of Egypt (as for my part I see no reason but it may) then may the like be said of all Countrys else, that they had their several Kings and Rulers, and set-Forms of Government: The Fathers of Families in those times, having the command and sovereignty over all that descended of them. Nor make I any question of it, but they had several Languages and forms of Speech, at least to the Dialect and pronunciation; although the Radicals of the Language might remain the same. But being there are no Remainders of this first Plantation, (unless we will give credit to some Jewish Fablers, who tell us of some Giants who saved themselves upon Mount Sion; or that of Nicholus Damascenus, who speaks of some that saved themselves on an high Hill called Baris, in some part of Armenia); I shall the less insist upon it. Nor had I stood so long upon these first Ages; which Moses passeth over with so short a Narrative; but that is affirmed by Pererius, a right learned Jesuite, that neither Egypt nor Assyria, nor the rest of the World was planted and inhabited before the Flood; and that upon no stronger reason, for ought I can find, but that it is affirmed in the last words of the tenth of Genesis, That, by these (that is to say, by the posterity of the Sons of Noah) were the Nations divided in the Earth after the Flood. Out of which words he thus concludeth, Quo significatur, talem divisionem non fuisse ante Diluvium; By which it doth appear (saith he) that in the times before the Flood was no such division.

'Tis true, that this division of the World by the Sons of Noah, hath the best evidence in Scripture, because there is expres Text for it, which is not for the first Plantations. But looking on the great encrease of mankind before the Flood, that Saying of Berosus will prove tantamont to a Text of Scripture, Ad comparandas

novas ſedes neceſſitatem compuliſſe, that they were driven by neceſſity to ſeek new dwellings, the neceſſity of providing victuals for themſelves and their Families, being as ſtrong a motive unto ſuch diſperſions, as the Confuſion of Tongues was afterwards. The difference is, that that which ſuch neceſſity would have done in long tract of time, the confuſion of Tongues did in an inſtant: not only making thoſe proud Builders to give over the finiſhing of the Tower which they had begun; but to unite themſelves with ſuch, whoſe language came moſt near to that which themſelves were Maſters of. It was high time, no queſtion, to deſiſt from this proud Attempt, when the Labourer underſtood not what the Workman called for, but brought him things quite contrary to his expectation. But becauſe ſome Plantations had no reference to the Confuſion of Tongues, but were made before it, or on the ſending out of ſuch Colonies as were neareſt to the place where the Ark did reſt, I think it not amiſs to reſolve that queſtion touching the reſting of the Ark, on which the Plantations of the Eaſt have ſo great dependence. All that the Scripture telleth us of it, is, that the Ark reſted on the Mountains of Ararat: but where thoſe Mountains are, that it telleth us not. I know Joſephus and ſome other of more eminent note, (but ſuch as ground themſelves upon his authority) affirm, thoſe Mountains of Ararat to be the hills of Armenia. Which they do chiefly on theſe Reaſons: Firſt, becauſe Armenia is called Ararat in the Book of God, as it is confeſſedly; and ſecondly, becauſe of an old Tradition, countenanced by Beroſus, and ſome others of the ancient Writers cited by Joſephus, affirming, that on the Gordiæan Mountains in Armenia major, ſome of the reliques of the Ark were remaining in their times and uſed as a preſervative againſt Inchantments. Which notwithſtanding, I incline rather to the opinion of Goropius Becanus, (who amongſt many ſtrange whimſeys broached ſome notable truths) by whom the Ark is ſaid to reſt on the top of Mount Caucaſus in the Confines of Tartary, Perſia, and India. His Arguments are many, but I look on two as of greateſt conſequence: the firſt whereof is grounded upon evident reaſon; the ſecond on plain Text of Scripture. That which is grounded upon reaſon, is, the exceeding populoſity of thoſe Eaſtern Countries, into which none of thoſe by whom the World was planted after the Confuſion of Languages, are yet reported to have travelled with their ſeveral Colonies, by any who have took moſt pains in this diſcovery. Thoſe infinite numbers which Staurobates, one (and but one of many) of the Kings of the Indians brought into the field againſt Semiramis; and the vaſt army of Zoroaſter the King of Bactria, conducted out of that one Province againſt Ninus; are proof enough, that thoſe Countries were of an elder Plantation, than to be a ſecond or third Caſtling of ſome other Swarm ſetled in Perſia, or Aſſyria after the Confuſion. For Ninus, who was the Husband of Semiramis, was but the Grandchild of Nimrod; and I muſt needs look upon it, as a thing impoſſible, that thoſe vaſt Armies which Semiramis was able to raiſe out of all her Dominions, ſhould be encountred by one King with an equal force, and that of his own Subjects only; if that one King, and thoſe his Subjects had been ſome late Colony of thoſe new Plantations, and not poſſeſſed of a Country peopled and inhabited before that Confuſion. Nor was it but upon ſome good ground, that the Scythians (who inhabited on the North of Mount Caucaſus) were generally eſteemed the moſt ancient Nation in the World; and carried it away from the Egyptians, Phrygians, and all other Competitours with this publick Verdict, Scytharum gens ſemper antiquiſſima: which ground could be no other, but the neighbourhood of the Ark unto them (though perhaps that ground long ſince forgotten, was not ſtood upon) and the dwelling of Noah and his children near the place of the Ark, till numbers, and neceſſity compelled them to enlarge their Border. And in the enlarging of their Borders, I ſhall make no queſtion, but that ſuch parts as lay neareſt, were peopled and poſſeſſed before thoſe which lay furtheſt off; according to the method of Plantations in all Ages ſince. This, though it be to me a convincing Argument, yet it falls ſhort of that which comes from the Text it ſelf, both in authority and weight; where it is ſaid of the heads of thoſe ſeveral Families which afterwards joyned together in the building of Babel, that, As they went from the Eaſt, they found a Plain in the Land of Shinaar, and there they abode, Gen. 11. v. 2. If then they came from the Eaſt to the Land of Shinaar, as the Text ſaith plainly that they did; it might well be, that they came from thoſe parts of Aſia, on the South of Caucaſus, which lye Eaſt of Shinaar, though ſomewhat bending to the North; impoſſible they ſhould come from the Gordiæan Mountains in the greater Armenia (ſuppoſed to be the Hills which the Ark did reſt on) which lye not only full North of Shinaar, but many degrees unto the Weſt. For Babylonia, or Shinaar, is ſituate in the Latitude of 35, and the Longitude of 79, and 80. The Latitude of the Gordiæan Mountains, in 41, and their Longitude in 75. By which accompt thoſe Mountains are 6 Degrees more Northwards, and 5 Degrees more Weſtwards than the Land of Shinaar: by no means to be reckoned on the Eaſt of that Valley, except we make Moſes (whoſe hand God guided in his Books) to ſpeak God knows what, or, in plain terms, to ſpeak plain non-ſenſe. And though the Scripture be ſo clear, that it needs no commentary, yet the perplexities I find amongſt thoſe of the other opinion, in ſifting out of the authority of ſo plain a Text, do add in my conceit ſome moment and weight unto it. For ſome will have the Mountains of Ararat to be indeed on the North of the Land of Shinaar, but with ſome bending towards the Eaſt; which were it true, as nothing is more truly falſe, Moſes had never told us that they came from the Eaſt; but from ſome Countries of the North, which lay towards the Eaſt. Others will have a double progreſs of the heads of thoſe ſeveral Families: Firſt, from the Mountains of Ararat, or the Plains of Armenia, to the Fields of Aſſyria, and Suſiana; And ſecondly, from thence to the Land of Shinaar. But of this firſt journey, there is ne gry quidem, not ſo much as any one ſyllable in all the Scripture; beſides the needleſneſs of making them go ſo far about, and to croſs over the great Rivers Euphrates and Tigris; whereas they had a ſhorter, and an eaſier paſſage. Capellus, ſingular by himſelf quarelleth with the Tranſlation (received without diſpute by all other Criticks) and will not have the Hebrew Kedem, to be rendred Eaſt, but to ſignifie that Region, whatſoever it was, which was inhabited by Kedem the ſon of Iſmael, of whom we find mention, Gen. 25. 15. But then, beſides his quarrel with all other Tranſlations, he ſuppoſeth a former progreſs from the Mountains of Ararat to that Land of Kedem; and conſequently falleth into a part of the Errour before refelled. Bochartus finding (if not fancying) that the Aſſyrians called all thoſe parts of their Empire beyond Tigris, the Eaſtern, and thoſe on this ſide of it, the Weſtern; would thence conclude, that theſe Heads may be ſaid by Moſes to have come from the Eaſt, becauſe they came from one of the Eaſtern Provinces of the Aſſyrian Empire.

Every

Every way faulty in this point: For, beſides that the greateſt part of Armenia lieth on the North of Tygris, and the leaſt part of it on the Weſt, and therefore not within the compaſs of the Eaſtern Provinces; and that Bochartus hath not proved (nor indeed can prove) that this diviſion was in uſe in the time of Moſes; we may as rationally conclude, and with leſs abſurdity, that the firſt Inhabitants of Britain, might have been ſaid by Ammianus Marcellinus, or any Writer of that time, to come out of the Weſt (though he well knew they came from Caul, which is plainly Eaſt of it) becauſe Gaul in his time was a Province of the Weſt parts of the Empire.

Having thus fortified our opinion both with Scripture and Reaſon, the Arguments produced againſt us will be eaſily anſwered. For though Armenia be granted to be the Country of Ararat; yet the Mountains of Ararat may extend beyond the Country. That mighty Ridge of Mountains which beginning in Aſia the leſs, run as far as India (by the Ancients commonly called Mount Taurus) might very well be called by Moſes the Mountains of Ararat, becauſe that was the firſt Country of the greater Aſia by which they paſſed; and where they were of greater note than they had been formerly. Juſt as the Adriatick Sea took that name from Adria, then the chief Port of it, though it waſhed many Shores beſides: Or as ſome Hills with us are called Malgern Hills, becauſe they are higheſt near that Village, though they extend themſelves into other Lordſhips. And as for the Authority of Tradition, and the Teſtimony of humane Writers, which (as before was ſaid) are brought in for an help, touching ſome Reliques of the Ark to be ſeen on the Gordiæan Mountains; I look upon it as an Argument of no weight at all. For firſt Beroſus (followed herein by all the reſt) reports it only on the ground of uncertain hear-ſay; which is a weak ſtaff for ſo heavy a cauſe to rely upon. Secondly, to balance the Authority of Beroſus (if of any credit in this caſe) we have the teſtimony and authority of Portius Cato, as ancient almoſt as he, affirming poſitively, In Scythia Saga renatum eſſe mortale genus, that Mankind was repaired in that part of Scythia, which after was poſſeſſed by the Sacans: and they, we know, dwelt in thoſe parts of Scythia which lay next to Bactria, a Province of the Perſian Empire, and not far from the branches of Mount Caucaſus. And Thirdly, unto one Tradition to oppoſe another; thoſe of Mount Caucaſus do aver, that a large Vineyard in Margiana, near the foot of that Mountain, was of Noah's Plantation: Of which we ſhall ſpeak more when we come to Tartary.

It is now time I ſhould go forwards with the Builders of Babel, and their wide diſperſions; for whom it was high time, to conſort themſelves with ſuch as they could underſtand; the neceſſity of diſcourſe and conference on that fatal Accident, making them lay aſide their old acquaintances, and joyn themſelves to others of their own new Language. I know that many Learned men according to the number of names laid down in the tenth of Gen. being 70, have made ſo many Languages to have been ſpoken upon that Confuſion: And that of thoſe, 26 being the Poſterity of Sem, diſperſed themſelves about Aſia the greater, 30 others of the loins of Cham, peopled Africk, Arabia, and Syria; and that the 14 which remain, being the iſſue of Japhet, withdrew themſelves towards Europe, and the leſſer Aſia. But this, as to the number of Languages, I take to be but a vain conceit; though many, more improbable, have paſſed for currant. It being plain, that Canaan and his Sons, eleven in all, had but one Language amongſt them, which was the Hebrew, or the Language of the Land of Canaan. And as for Joctan and his Sons, being 13 in number, conſidering that he was the younger brother of Phaleg, in whoſe time this Confuſion hapned; it is moſt probable, and avowed for a certain truth, that either none of them were born, or, if they were, yet they were all of them too young to have an hand in the deſign for the building of the Tower of Babel; and conſequently could not be within the curſe of confounded Languages. So, here is near a third part of the ſeventy to be taken off; as poſſibly might all the Sons of Miſraim be, if it were worth the while to inſiſt upon it. This then I take but for a fancy. And as for that, of the diſperſion into the ſaid three parts of the (then) known World, I take it to be true enough in long tract of time; but falſe enough, if underſtood of any preſent ſeparation of the Sons of Noah into parts ſo far remote and diſtant from one another. For what needed any ſuch remote Plantations be, as long as they had room enough to live one near another, and ſo enjoy that civil entercourſe, and mutual ſociety which the nature of Mankind doth moſt delight in? And therefore I conceive it to be far more probable, that they who met together for the building of Babel, joining themſelves to men of the ſame Language with them, did firſt ſet down upon the places near the Valley of Shinaar: and from thence propagated and diſperſed themſelves into further Countries, as either the neceſſity of providing of Victuals; or ſeeking better and more fruitful habitations for themſelves and theirs; or the deſire of being out of the reach of ſome potent Neighbours, whoſe yoak they found too heavy for their necks to bear, did enforce them to it. And being ſo ſetled to their minds, the addition of a few more years brought the like neceſſity of ſending Colonies further off, as they grew more or leſs populous in their generations: It being in Plantations of Men, as in that of Bees, amongſt whom one Swarm ſends out another, that begets a Caſtling, till the whole ground or Garden grow too ſmall to hold them. For thus (to ſeek no further for an inſtance of it) the Gauls firſt planted Britain, the Britains Ireland, the Iriſh Scotland, and the Iſles. Thus the Helvetians finding their old dwellings both too barren to ſuſtain, and too narrow to contain their multitudes, anguſtos ſe fines habere arbitrantes, as in Cæſar's Commentaries, intended to plant themſelves in Gaul. And thus the Syrians and Pœnicians flying the dreadful ſword of Joſhuah the Son of Nun, ſought them out dwellings further off from the preſent danger, whereof we ſhall ſpeak more in its proper place. On the like motives and inducements did the firſt people after the Flood, diſtribute and diſperſe themſelves into ſeveral parts, as their poſterities have done ſince, and will do to the end of the World, in all probability: Giving their own names, or ſome names of their own impoſing, upon the Countries planted or diſcovered by them. And though the length, and conſuming nature of time, hath either changed or worn out the names impoſed by the firſt Adventurers, I mean the firſt Planters after the Flood: yet all the Footſteps of Antiquity are not ſo defaced, but that ſome Nations and Cities have preſerved the memory of their firſt Founders and true Parents. In the diſcovery whereof, as Joſephus in his Book of Jewiſh Antiquities did firſt lead the way, and gave good light to thoſe who have travelled in it; ſo a more notable proficiency hath been made therein by Junius in his Notes on the tenth of Geneſis, Sir Walter Rawleigh in his excellent Hiſtory, and lately by Bochartus a French Writer in his Book called Geographia Sacra. Out of whoſe learned labours, and ſome Animadverſions of mine own, I ſhall here ſay ſomewhat concerning the Plantation of the World by the Sons of Noah; leaving the more exact and punctual deſcription deſcription of it unto the Hiſtory of thoſe ſeveral Lands and Countries which were planted by them.

Firſt therefore to begin with the poſterity of Sem, as thoſe who fixed themſelves in Aſia, without wandring further, we find Sem to have had five Sons, that is to ſay, Elam, Aſſur, Arphaxad, Lud, and Aram; of whom there is no iſſue on Record in holy Scripture, but only of Arphaxad and Aram; and of theſe two there are four Sons given to Aram, viz, Uz, Hull, Gether, and Meſech, and but one to Arphaxad, which was Selah. To Selah was born Heber; to Heber, Phaleg, the Anceſtor of Abraham, and Jocktan, the father of thoſe thirteen ſons, whoſe names we ſhall rehearſe hereafter, if occaſion be. From Elam who is firſt named, did deſcend the Elamites, a people bordering on the Medes, and therefore oft-times join'd together in the Sciptures, as, Go up, O Elam, Beſiege O Media, Eſ. 21,2. And all the Kings of Elam, all the Kings of the Medes, Jer. 25. 25. And in the ſecond of the Acts, Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, march in rank and file, as being Nations bordering upon one another. The principal City of this people was called Elymais, mention whereof is made in the ſecond of Macab. cap. 6. v. 2 ſufficiently famous for the rich and magnificent Temple which was there conſecrated to Diana. A City ſeated on the Banks of the River Euleus, and neighbouring cloſe to Suſiana, which therefore is ſometimes included in the name of Elam, as Dan. 8. 2. I was (ſaith he) in the Palace of Suſa, in the Province of Elam: where Elam is not taken for the Province of the Elamites only, but as it gave denomination unto all thoſe Nations whom they after maſtered. The ſecond Son of Sem is Aſſur, of whom there is no queſtion made amongſt the Learned, but that he was the Father of the Aſſyrians, called Aſſyres in ſome old Greek Writers: Not of the whole people of that great and unweildy Empire, who ſometimes generally paſs by the name of Aſſyrians; but of the people of Aſſyria ſtrictly and properly ſo called, as it denotes the Country about Ninive (the Regal City of that Empire) which after was called Adiabene. Juxta hunc circuitum Adiabene, Aſſyria priſcis temporibus vocata, as in Ammianus Marcellinus, Lib, 33. Arphaxad comes next after Aſſur, and him Joſephus makes to be the Father of the Chaldæans, called anciently Arphaxadæi, if he tell us true. But others tell us, and that more probably perhaps, that he planted in that part the Aſſyria which was firſt called Arphaxitis, afterwards Arrapachitis; by which name it occurreth in the Tables of Ptolomy. Lud the fourth ſon is generally ſaid to be the Father of the Lydians, a people of Aſia the leſs; the names of Lud, and Lydi (or Λύδοι as the Græcians call them) being much alike. And it is poſſible enough that ſome of the poſterity of this Lud might afterwards ſettle in thoſe parts, and call the Country by the name of Lud, their common Anceſtor; as the poſterity of Abraham took unto themſelves the name of Hebrews from Heber, one of the Progenitors of their Father Abraham. But that Lud ſhould in perſon go ſo far from the reſt of the Sons of Sem, I cannot eaſily imagine. For, Aram the fifth and laſt (as they ſtand in order of the Text) ſets himſelf down cloſe by his Brethren in the Land of Syria, which in the Hebrew is called Aram, and from thence the name of Aramites was given to the Inhabitants of it. Of which, and of the ſeveral Provinces which were hence denominated, we ſhall hereafter ſpeak more fully, when we come to Syria. Only take now this teſtimony & acknowledgment from the pen of Strabo. Quos nos Syros vocamus, ipſi Syri Aramenios & Arameos vocant. Thoſe (ſaith he) which we now call Syrians, do call themſelves Arameans. or Aramenians. In, and about the ſame parts, did the four ſons of Aram ſet themſelves and their Families; Uz in that part of Syria which is called Syria Damaſcena, or Aram Dammeſek: the building of the great City of Damaſcus being generally aſcribed unto him: and the Land of Uz, bordering South upon Damaſcus, taking denomination from him. The like did Hull, or Chull, the next ſon of Aram, whom both Joſephus and St. Hierom ſettle in Armenia, or Aramenia, as in Strabo: and that not improbably, conſidering that there is a Region in Armenia, which Stephanus calls Cholobetene; and divers Cities in that tract, which ſtill preſerve the Radicals of Hull, or Chull, as Cholus, Cholnata, Cholimna, Colſa, and Colana, whereof mention is made in the Tables of Ptolomy. For, Gether, the third ſon of Aram; it is not yet agreed on where to find his dwelling. Joſephus, contrary to all reaſon, placeth him in Bactria; and Mercer, with as little, in Caria, a Province of the leſſer Aſia, and Acarnania of Greece. Junius ſets him down in the Province of Caſſiotis, and Seleucis, near his Father Aram, where Ptolomy placeth Gindarus, and the Nations called by Pliny, Gindareni: Bochartus on the banks of the River Centrites, which divides Armenia from the Carduchi, as it is in Xenophon. Which River, if it were called originally Getri, as he conjectureth it might be, the controverſie were at an end. But being that we find in Ptolomy, a City of Albania, (which bordereth on Armenia) called Getara, and a River of the ſame Country called Getras; I ſee no cauſe why we ſhould ſeek further for the ſeat of Gether; though the Greek Copies (more ſubject to corruption in the times of ignorance, than the Latin were) inſtead of Getara read Gagara. But if this be too far to ſet him, we ſhall find Mas or Meſch, the laſt Son, planted nearer hand, even in the Northern parts of Syria, towards Meſopotamia, near the Hill called Maſius: at the foot whereof there is a people, which Stephanus called Maſieni; and thereabouts a River, which in Xenophon is named Maſca. Both which do evidently declare from what root they come.

Come we next to the ſecond branch of the houſe of Sem, derived from Arphaxad; whom we left ſetled in the Region of Arrapachitis, in, or near Aſſyria. Not far from which, in Suſiana, a Province of the Perſian Empire, there is a City of chief note called Sela; mention of which is made both in Ptolomy's Tables; and the 23 Book of Ammianus Marcellinus. Add unto this the authority of Euſtathius Antiochenus, who briefly thus, Σδλα ἀφ' ἧ Σουσιανοὶ, The People of Suſiana came from Sala. But this as I conceive, muſt be underſtood only of that part of this people, which lived in and about the City of Sala, and not of the whole Nation of the Suſians, or Suſiani, which borrowed their denomination from another root. To Sela was born Heber, from whom the people of the Hebræi, or Hebrews, do derive their name. And to him Phaleg his firſt born, who in all probability gave name to the Town called Phalga, ſituate on the River Euphrates, not far from Seleucia: Mention whereof is made by Stephanus in his Book de Urbibus, and by Ptolomy in his Geography; where it is placed right on the banks of Euphrates, where the River Chaboras mingles waters with it; but there corruptly called Pharga, inſtead of Phalga.

But the great increaſe of Sem's poſterity came by Jokctan, the ſecond Son of Eber, the Father of no fewer than thirteen Sons, whoſe names are on record in the tenth of Geneſis, where it is ſaid, that their dwelling was from Meſha, as thou goeſt to Sephar, a Mount in the Eaſt. And here I muſt crave leave to differ from Bochartus, who hath thronged Joktan and his Sons into a little corner of Arabia Fœlix, where I can find no room for them, and leſs reaſon to place them. For being that Chus the Son of Cham, and the Chiefs of his poſterity, eight in number, were planted in Arabia, as himſelf confeſſeth, it must needs be, that they had spread themselves over all the Country, before any of the sons of Joktan were of age sufficient to be the Fathers of Families, and lead Colonies thither. Joktan is credibly supposed not to have been born when such of Noahs posterity as are mentioned Gen. 10. dispersed themselves into new Plantations; but it is evident from the Text, that none of his children were then born, if their Father were. And this Bochartus doth acknowledge in two several places. First, granting that neither Phaleg, nor Joktan were present at the building of Babel, multo minus Joktanis filii post aliquot annos geniti; much less the sons of Joktan begot many years after; Lib. 1. cap. 16. And secondly, affirming that Joktan and his children came not within the curse of Confounded Languages, quia nondum erant geniti, because then unborn, Cap. 15. Hereupon I conclude it to be very improbable that Joktan & his children should find room in the best parts of Arabia Felix, which Chus and his posterity had inhabited so long before. And as it is improbable that the sons of Chus would plant themselves in the worst part of the Country for so many Ages, and leave the best and richest of it for some new adventurers: So it is impossible that the sons of Joktan should either be removed so far from the rest of the house of Arphaxad, who were all planted on the East of the River Tygris, as was before shewed: or that they should be able, had they been so minded, to break through the whole Countries of the Assyrians, Chusites, and other Nations, to come unto the utmost corners of Arabia Felix. He that believes they did, or could, must have a stronger Faith than mine; but it shall never conduce any thing to his justification. Nor am I moved at all at that which seems to me to be his weightiest Argument, namely, that the Arabians, particularly Joseph Ben Abdallatif, and Mahomet Ben Jacob, two of their chief Writers affirm, that Joktan was the Founder of their Tongue and Nation; no more than I am moved to think that the Saracens are derived from Sara the Wife, and not from Hagar the Concubine and servant of Abraham; because that people so report it for their greater glory.

And for the several Nations of Arabia Felix, whose original he ascribes to the sons of Joktan, I see so many transpositions of Syllables, alterations even of Radical Letters, such and so many wrested Originations, as by the like liberty of making quidlibet ex quolibet, it were no difficult matter to find place for them in any Country whatsoever. For how extorted and unnatural are the derivations of the Allnmæote from Almodad, of the Manitæ from Abimail, of the Jobarite from Jobab? How impossible is it that Jarech should give name to the Isle which Ptolomy calleth Νῆσος Ἰερέκων, Insula Jeracuma or Accipitrum, as the Latine hath it, that is to say, the Isle of Hawks, from the abundance of Hawks which were therein bred: There being another Island of the same name near unto Sardinia (so called for the self same reason) and a Town called Jerax in Hammoniaca a Region of Egypt, to which Jaraeh might as well lay claim (if that would carry it) as to this Jeracum, or Acciptrum, in the Gulf of Arabia? How improbable that Ophir should give name to Urphre, a poor Isle of the Red Sea, Obal to Sinus Avalites in Æthiopia, on the other side of that Gulf? Or that Dicla must be fixed in Arabia, for no other reason, but because the word signifieth a Palm-tree, of which that Country yields good plenty, as if some other Countries did not yield as much? These and some other reasons hereafter following have made me bold to differ from that learned man in this particular, whose industry and abilities I do otherwise honour; and rather to look for Joktan, and his sons in the East part of the World, where the Scriptures place them; than in the South (with reference to the Wilderness, or Land of Madian, in one of which the Book of Genesis was written) where Bochartus placeth them. Yet so far I must yield to that learned man, that some of the Descendants of Joktan in long tract of time, moved with the rarities of the place, might come from India, and plant themselves upon the Sea-Coasts of Arabia Felix; as the Arabians at this day, moved with the Wealth and Trade of India, have possessed themselves of many of the Ports and pieces on the Shores thereof.

Now the Text telleth us of the Sons of Joktan, that their dwelling was from Mesha, as thou goest to Sephar, a Mount of the East; so that by these two boundaries, Mesha and Sepher, their habitation must be found. I know, Bochartus would have Mesha to be Musa, a noted Port-Town on the South-west of Arabia Felix, and Sephar to be the City of Sephar in the South-east of that Country; that City giving name to some Mount adjoining. But being they both lye directly South of the place in which Moses wrote, I cannot see how this position can agree with the word of Scripture; and therefore we must look for both in some other place. And first to find out Mesha, we need go no further than Bochartus himself, who maketh Mesh; the last of the Sons of Aram, the Son of Sem (according to the general opinion of most writers else) to be planted in the Mountainous tracts of Mesopotamia, from him called Mons Masius, more of which before. And then for Sephar, which the Text calleth a Mount of the East; if it be the Southern part of Mount Imaus, by Ptolomy named Bitigo, by the Moderns Gates extending from Mount Caucasus to the Cape Comari in the hither India, as Postellus a right learned man doth conceive it to be; We have without more difficulty found out the dwellings of the sons of Joktan according to the bounds laid down in holy Scripture. But for fear this may not satisfie, for want of some Seconds to Postellus (if Truth needs a Second) we have Siphare a City of Aria, directly East from Mons Masius, or the dwellings of Mesh; both in the East parts of the World, with reference unto the place in which Moses writ: Mons Masius being placed by Ptolomy in the 74 degree of Longitude, and the 37 of Latitude; and Siphare 36 degrees more toward the East, but with no more than two degrees of Latitude super-added to it. And this agreeth to the position assigned to the sons of Joktan by Josephus, Eusebius, and St. Hierome; the emendation of Bochartus coming in to help. It is affirmed by Josephus that the Joktanites possessed all that Tract, ἀπὸ Κωφῆνος ποταμοῦ τῆς Ἰνδικῆς, καὶ τῆς πρὸς αὐτῷ Συρίας τινὰ, which lieth about Kophenus a River of India, together with such parts of Syria as did border near it. These words being borrowed from Josephus both by Eusebius & S. Hierome; the first instead of Syria reads Seria, and the other Jeria, but neither rightly: there being no such place in the world as Jeria; and Syria & Seria (or the Country of the Seres) lying too far off to border on Cophenus a River of India. Bochartus therefore helps them out, conceiving (I think right enough) that for Syria we should there read Aria, and withal granting, as he may, that Aria in the largest latitude and extent thereof, comprehending Parapomisus & Arachosia, extendeth as far Eastward as the River Cophenus. So that we have found out a dwelling for the sons of Joktan, betwixt Mons Masius & Siphare, a Town of Aria: which probably might give name to some Mount adjoining, as Saphar by Bochartus is supposed to do to some of the Arabian hills bordering near unto it. And as these situations do agree exactly with the meaning of those antient Writers, so is it also very sutable to the other Plantations of the sons of Arphaxad. For this I look on as a matter out of all dispute, that Phaleg and Joktan being both too young to go upon any new Adventures, when so many of the reſidue of Noah's poſterity removed toward Shinaar; kept themſelves under the tuition of their Grandfather Noah; or at leaſt wandred not from the Plantation of their Father Arphaxad: till Joktan's Sons, being grown to be Fathers of Families, were forced to caſt about for new habitations. And when neceſſity compelled them to ſeek new ſeats, I would fain know why they ſhould think of making to themſelves a way to Arabia Felix, through Countries peopled and poſſeſſed a long time before; when they had Elbow-room enough on the Eaſt of Tygris, and the unpeopled Countries of ſome parts of India lay ſo near at hand.

Nor want we as good evidence and as little forced for ſome of their Plantations in the Eaſtern parts, as Bochartus hath fancied for them in Arabia: For Almodad might probably be the Founder of Almodena, the Metropolis of Meſopotamia, not far from Meſia or Mons Maſius the Weſtern Boundary: and Jarad of the Nation of the Arachoſians inhabiting near Siphare the Eaſtern limit, aſſigned unto the Sons of Joktan. With what an eaſie change might Obal or Chobal be ſuppoſed to be the Father of the Cabolites of Paropamiſus? Hadoram of the Orites, an Indian people near unto the other? But theſe North-Eaſtern parts being peopled, or not very pleaſant, how many of the Sons of Joktan ſhall we find in the Southern parts of India? Bochartus himſelf confeſſeth that the Land of Ophir (another of the Sons of Jocktan) was a part of India, but whether Sumatra, Taprobane, or Aurea Cherſoneſus, I diſpute not here. Like evidence there is for Saba, remembrances of whoſe name are found in Sabalaſſa one of the mouths of the River Indus, Sabana, a City of the Golden Cherſoneſe, a River in the ſame Tract named Sabanus, and a City called Sabe: beſides the whole Nation of the Sabæi mentioned by Dionyſius in his Periegeſis. And though ſome late Criticks read it Siba inſtead of Sabæi, (as that there was an Indian Nation called Sibæ, is confeſſed on all ſides:) yet ſeeing Euſtathius finds the Sabæ in this Country alſo, I cannot ſee but that there ſhould be room enough in India for both people to dwell in. For Abimail another of the Sons of Joktan; we find more evident footſteps of him in the Mali or Malli an Indian people, in Maleta & Maliba two Towns of India, in Malæus an Indian Mountain, and finally in Malæi Colon a Promontory of Aurea Cherſoneſus, than in the Manitæ of Bochartus. For it Abimail ſignifie the Father of the Mali, as he ſaith it doth; he was more like to be the Father of the Mali, commonly and literally ſo called, whom we find in India; than that we ſhould be forced to look for them in the Manitæ, or look for the Manitæ in the houſe of Abimail. If Dicla muſt be planted in Arabia Felix for no better reaſon, than becauſe the word ſignifieth a Palm, whereof there is plenty in that Country; I doubt not but to find as many Palms to plant by amongſt the Indians, as Bochartus doth among the Arabians. And finally, if Chatramis, or Chatramatitis an Arabian Region, have ſuch reſemblance to the name of Chatſarmaveth, as to take that Appellation from him, as Bochartus telleth us it did: we may conclude with equal, if not better reaſon, that the Chadramatitæ an Indian people, ſeated upon the mouth of the River Indus, upon whoſe ſtreams ſome of the reſidue of his Brethren had their habitations, had their firſt Original from that Chatſarmaveth. For Havilah or Chavilah; the Ancients generally ſet him in the Indies alſo, not far from Saba and Ophir two of his Brethren: to whoſe authority I ſubmit, becauſe I find a Province in the Golden Cherſoneſe, called the Kingdom of Ava, and thought to be ſo called from this very man. And I conceive the like alſo of the reſt of the Joktanites whoſe habitations might be found in India, or near Meſh and Sepha, if one would take that liberty of Criticiſing, altering and tranſpoſing letters, as Bochartus doth, only to fix them in a place where they never were. Suffice it that this ſhort Eſſay may inform the Reader, that Bochartus was too confident a lover of his own opinion, where he affirms, Nec locum alium Sephar nomine, nec ulla poſterorum Joktan in Aria aut India veſtigia jam ſupereſſe; that is to ſay, that there is no ſuch place as Sephar, nor any track or footſtep of the Sons of Joktan to be found in Aria, or the Indies. The contrary whereof is ſo clearly evidenced.

Theſe were the Generations and diſperſions of the Sons of Sem, contracted in a narrower compaſs than either the poſterity of Cham or Japhet: of whom the firſt, beſides the great footing which he had in Aſia, did poſſeſs all Africk, and the other, beſides his ſhare in the greater Aſia, filled almoſt all the leſſer Aſia, and the whole Continent of Europe with the Iſles thereof, with his fruitful Progeny. And firſt beginning with Cham, we find him the Father of four Sons, that is to ſay, Cuſh, Miſraim, Phut, and Canaan; of which, only Phut the third Son hath no iſſue aſſigned him. To Cuſh the eldeſt Son were born Seba and Havilah, and Sabtah, Nimrod, Sabtecha, and Raamah, who was the Father of Sheba and Dedan. And unto Mizraim the ſecond Son were born Ludim, and Amamim, Læhabim, Napthuhim, Pathruſim, Caphthorim, and Caſluhim, who was the Father of Philiſtim. Of Canaan and his iſſue we ſhall ſpeak of hereafter. In the mean time we will diſpoſe of theſe firſt branches of the ſtock of Cham, beginning firſt with Chus the eldeſt, and ſo deſcending to the reſt of this firſt Line. And firſt for Chuſh, though it be generally ſaid both by the Greek and Jewiſh Writers, that he was the Father of the Æthiopians in the heart of Africa; yet upon better ſearch he is found to have gone no further than Arabia, poſſeſſing himſelf of a good part of that which is called Petræa, and ſome part of Arabia Felix. For whereas Zippora the wife of Moſes, was daughter unto Jethro the Prieſt or Prince of Madian, Exod.2.v.16, &c. and yet is called an Æthiopian woman, in the 12. of Num.v.1. It muſt needs be, that by Æthiopian in the laſt place, muſt be meant an Arabian: for Madian doubtleſs was a City of Arabia near unto the Red Sea, as is apparent by Joſephus for the Jews, Ptolomy for the Græcians, and S. Hierom for the Latine Writers. But we ſhall canvaſs this more throughly in its proper place: the ſtrength of reaſon ſerving for a ſupplement of that one defect, which is, that there is no remainder of the name of Chus in any of the Cities, Promontories, Hills or Rivers of all that Country, by which his planting there might be made more evident. Seba, the eldeſt Son of Chus, ſets himſelf down on the ſhores of the Red Sea, , as near his Father as he could; becoming the Original of the great and wealthy Nation of the Sabæans: the ſo much celebrated City of Saba, memorable for abundance of the beſt Frankincenſe, being their Metropolis or head City. A Nation ſeated in the moſt Southern part of this Peninſula, ſubject in Solomon's time to that famous Lady called in the old Teſtament from her Country, the Queen of Sheba; and in the new Teſtament from the ſituation of it, the Queen of the South: the holy Spirit in both places giving her an ample and remarkable teſtimony.

For Havilah or Chavilah the ſecond of the Sons of Chuſh moſt probable it is that he poſſeſſed himſelf of that part of Arabia, which lay neareſt unto Babylonia, and that he gave name to that Land of Havilah, which the River Piſon is ſaid to encompaſs, Gen.2.v.21. Some footſteps of his name remain in the Chaulotæi of Eratoſthenes, the Chaulaſii of Feſtus Avienus, but more plainly in the Chavelei of Pliny; being all three but one people, though thus diverſly named; and all of them planted towards the Perſian Gulf, and ſo to Babylon. On the ſame ſhore of the the Perſian Gulf, we are to look for Sabta the third Son of Chus, where Ptolomy informs us of a City called Saphta, and of an Iſland in the ſame Gulf called Sophta alſo. From whence in probabillity ſome of this people might paſs over into Perſia, on the other ſide of the Gulf, and there give names to the Sabtæi, which by the tranſpoſition of the letter T, are by Ptolomy called the Stabæi. That Nimrod the fourth Son of Chus did firſt plant himſelf in Babylonia, the Scripture is ſo plain and poſitive, that nothing need be added to it. Of Sabteca the fifth Son, I confeſs I can find no track in any of the ancient Authors. For why we ſhould admit of ſo great a change, as firſt, of B into M, and then of T into D, (which could not eaſily be done by very careleſs Tranſcribers) and ſo find Stabeca in Samidace, a City or Country of the Carmanians on the Perſian ſide of the Gulf, I can ſee no reaſon: And therefore rather chuſe to mingle him and his Poſterity with the Son of Sabta, and the children of his brother Regma, all planted on the ſame ſhore of the Perſian Gulf. For that Regma (our Engliſh Bibles call him Raama) was ſetled on the banks of the Bay of Perſia, hath ſo good authority, that there is no diſpute to be made of that: Ptolomy placing there the City of Regma (Regama it is called in the Latin Tranſlation) by which name it occurreth in Stephanus alſo in his Book De Urbibus, Καὶ ῥῆγμα πρὸς τῷ Περσικῷ κόλπῳ. And Regma, on the Perſian Gulf, as his words there are. And not far from thence we are to look for his Son Sheba; both being joyned together in the Book of God; and both there are ſaid to buſie and employ themſelves in the Trade of Merchandizing; The Merchants of Shebah and Raamah (ſaith the Text) they were thy Merchants; they occupied in thy Fairs with chief of all Spices, and with all precious Stones, and Gold, Ezek. 27. 22. So that the Nations of the Sabæans, though deſcended at the firſt from ſeveral Parents, inhabited the lower parts of Arabia Felix from one Sea to the other; as evidently appeareth by thoſe words of Pliny; where he informeth us moſt truly, that the Sabæans, an Arabian people, well known for their abundance of Frankincenſe, ad utraque maria porrectis gentibus habitare, had ſpread themſelves over all the Country, even from the Red Sea to the Gulf of Perſia. Finally, in the ſame track we find Dedan the other Son of Regma, and the laſt of all the Sons of Chus: there being on the mouth of the Perſian Gulf (but on the Arabian Coaſt thereof) not only a City, but a Province called by the name of Dedan, which both Ortelius, and ſome other late Geographers do take notice of. And more than ſo, the Prophet Ezekiel joyns him with his brother Sheba, and makes them both to follow the ſame trade of Merchandiſe; The men of Dedan were thy Merchants, Chap. 27. 15. Sheba and Dedan, and the Merchants of Tarſhiſh. Cap. 38. 13. They brought thee horns of Ivory, and Ebony, ſaith the Prophet in the former Text.

The head of the next houſe of the race of Cham, was Miſraim, the ſecond Son, of whom it is generally affirmed, that leaving his elder brother Chus and his poſterity, in the rich and delectable Countries of Arabia Felix, and the next parts to Babylonia, or the land of Shinaar, he went with his own Son and his brother Phut, into Africa, and there planted Egypt. Of this there is no queſtion amongſt the Learned, though all the tracks and footſteps of Miſraim be quite worn out: unleſs any thing of it were preſerved in the word Meſori, by which the Egyptians anciently called the firſt Month in the year; or in that of Meſre, by which name the Arabians call Egypt, to this day: But being Egypt is called Miſraim in the Hebrew Bibles, that only is ſufficient without further evidence. And therefore leaving him in Egypt, let us look after his Son Ludim, whom he ſent to people Æthiopia, the next Country to him. For that this Ludim, was the Father of thoſe Æthiopians, many good reaſons are alledged. Firſt, from the Texts of Eſaiah, Chap. 66. 19. and Jer. 46. 9. where Lud is ſaid to be very skilful in drawing the Bow; which agrees punctually with the Character given unto the Æthiopians by Strabo, Herodotus, Diodorus Siculus, and others of the ancient Writers. Secondly, from the joyning of the children or people of Ludim with thoſe of Phul, in the place of Eſaiah before cited: which Phul may very probably be the City which the Græcians call Phylæ, ſituate not far from Syene, on the very borders of Æthiopia, and antiently inhabited both by the Æthiopians, and Egyptians, as Strabo, and ſome others of the Antients witneſs. Thirdly, from the conjunction of the Children of Lud or Ludim, with thoſe of Chus, on the Gulf of Arabia, and thoſe of Phut, or Lybians, on the other ſide of Mount Atlas, both next neighbours to them; as in Ezek. 30. 5. and that of Jer. above mentioned; (where our Engliſh very ſtrangely rendereth Ludim by the name of Lydians) which dwell too far off both from Chuſh and Phut, to be joyned together in one action. But of this, more than enough already, the Arguments being ſo ſtrong, and ſo moſt demonſtrative. I go on therefore to the next; only obſerving by the way, that the Æthiopians mentioned in the Texts of our Engliſh Bibles, are not theſe of Africa, but the Chuſites of Arabia Fælix; our Tranſlators always rendring Chus by Æthiopia. The Anamim, who come next, I know not where to find, or in what place to look for them, unleſs they were the ſame with the Amantes of Solinus, and the Hammanientes of Pliny, a people ſeated on the Sea-ſide near the greater Syrtis, to which the neighbourhood of the Lehabim may give ſome countenance; who ſeem to be the ſame with the people of Lybia, a Province ſeated betwixt Egypt and Cyrenaica, and were called Lybiægyptii by the old Geographers, to difference them from the Inhabitants of the greater Lybia, whereof more hereafter. For the Napthuhim, I am alſo at a loſs, unleſs we find them ſomewhere in Cyrenaica; and that ſome remnant of the name be in Aptuchi fanum, which occurrs in Ptolomy. But for the Pathruſin, I think no queſtion need be made, but that they were the people of that Province of Egypt, which in divers places of the Scripture is called Pathros, as Eſai. 11. 11. Jer. 44. 1. Ezek. 29. 14. and ſeems to be that part of Egypt, which is called Thebais, where Ptolomy placeth Pathyris, an In-land Town not far from Thebe, (And Pathuris the Greek or Septuagint term that, which in the Hebrew is called Pathros.)

Hitherto we have found the Nations which deſcended from the Sons of Miſraim, in Egypt, and the Countries adjoyining to it. And there, or thereabouts, we are to look for Caphtorim, and Caſluhim, the two Sons remaining. I know there hath been great pains taken to find the Caſluhim in Colchis, and the Caphtorim in Cappadocia, or Pontus, not far from Trabezond, where notwithſtanding there is no track of the names remaining. But this being ſo far off from Egypt, in, and near which both Miſraim himſelf, and all the reſt of his Sons were planted, I can by no means yield to it, though to content ſuch learned men as would fain have it ſo, I think it poſſible enough that ſome of the Egyptians in ſucceeding times, moved with the Fame of that great wealth which Colchis was ſuppoſed to yield to ſome Adventurers; might leave their native ſoil to inhabit there. And therefore I think rather, with the learned Junius, that the Caſluhim were firſt planted in the Region of Caſſiotis (not far from Damiata, a chief Town of Egypt) which retains ſomewhat of the name; and ſo doth Coptus, an old City of Egypt, of the name of Cophtorim. Or if it did not, as it doth, why the name of Cophti, which at this day is given to the Chriſtians of Egypt, may not be thought to have its firſt riſe from Cophtorim, rather than that they are ſo called quaſi Ægophti, corruptly for Ægyptii, I muſt needs ſay I am not ſatisfied. Beſides, it being clear in Scripture, that the Caſluhim and Cophtorim dwelt near together, and that the Philiſtins are ſaid to deſcend from Caſluhim, if Caſluhim ſhould go for Colchis, and Cophtorim for Cappadocia, we muſt firſt carry them I know not how far off from the reſt of their Brethren, againſt the method of all Plantations; and then bring the Philiſtins back again from Colchis, to find a dwelling on the borders of the land of Egypt, from whence their Anceſtors and Allies were ſo far remote. Whereas by ſetling theſe two Nations amongſt the reſt of their Brethren, the journy of the Philiſtins unto Canaan, and ſetling themſelves in the poſſeſſions of the Avim (a Canaanitiſh people) whom they had ſubdued, Deut. 2. 25. is both eaſie and natural. But before we follow theſe Philiſtins further in their new Plantation amongſt the Canaanites, we will firſt ſee what became of Phut, the third ſon of Cham. And if we guide our ſelves in this Labyrinth by the clew of Antiquity, we ſhall find him ſetled Weſt of his Brother Miſraim, and ſo the Atlantick Ocean, the Lake of Tritonis parting their Dominions. Some Relicts of the name there were in the time of Joſephus, who telleth us of a River of Mauritania, which in his time retained the name of Phut: Pliny makes mention of it, alſo Ptolomy takes notice of a River in thoſe parts called Pthuth, which comes very near it. And ſo doth Iſidore Origin l. 2. But St. Hierome in my mind puts it out of doubt, whoſe words I ſhall put down, and ſo leave Africa; Phut Lybiæ, a quo & Mauritaniæ fluvius uſque ad præſens Phut dicitur, omniſque circa eum Regio Phytenſis; cujus rei multi Scriptores tam Græci quam Latini teſtes ſunt. Where we have not only a River, but a Province of the name of Phut, and many ancient Writers both Greek and Latine called to witneſs to it.

And now we ſhould proceed to Canaan and his Sons (eleven in all) being the fourth and laſt branch of the houſe of Cham. But being they all kept together in or near the land of Canaan, we ſhall find him there; or meet with them in ſuch Plantations and Colonies as they ſent abroad, under the title of Phœnicians. And therefore go we next to Japhet, whoſe Tents God promiſed to enlarge, as indeed he did; ſpreading his branches over Europe, the leſſer Aſia, and a great part of the geater alſo. To him were born ſeven Sons in all; that is to ſay, Gomer and Magog, Madai and Javan, Tubal Meſech, and Thyrus: Of which the iſſue of two only are upon record, viz. Aſchenaz, Riphath, and Togarma, the Sons of Gomer; Eliſha, Tarſhiſh, Kittim, and Dodanim, the Sons of Javan. And firſt for Gomer and his Sons, the firſt poſſeſſed themſelves of convenient dwellings in the greater and the leſſer Aſia: Gomer himſelf firſt planting in the mountanous places of Albania, where the Mountains called Cimmerini long retained his name; and after changing that unpleaſant and unfruitful dwelling for the Plains of Phrygia, in which the City Cimmeris, in the days of Pliny, did preſerve his memory. For that the poſterity and people of Gomer, called at firſt Gomerians, came to take the name of Cimmerians, as of Cimbri afterwards, is generally agreed upon amongſt the Learned. Now then, as Gomer fixt himſelf in the Greater Phrygia, ſo did his eldeſt ſon Aſchenaz in Phrygia minor, and the Country of Troas, ſpreading himſelf along upon the Helleſpont, and thoſe Greekiſh Seas, as far as Bythinia. In all which places there were left ſome memory of this Plantation. For in Bithinia there is a Bay called Sinus Aſcanius, together with a River and a Lake of the ſame name alſo. And in the Leſſer Phrygia, and the Country of Troas, there was both a City and a Province adjoyning, anciently known by the name of Aſcania; and the Aſcaniæ Inſulæ alſo on the coaſt thereof. Nor is it any thing unlikely, but that in honour of this Aſchenaz, the Kings and great men of thoſe parts, took the name of Aſcanius. Of which name, beſides Aſcanius the ſon of Æneas, we find a King mentioned in the ſecond of Homers Iliads, which came unto the aid of Priamus at the ſiege of Troy. In the ſame quarters of the World we find Ripath alſo, the founder of the Riphei, a people dwelling in the Eaſt parts of Bithynia, and ſpreading alſo over Paphlagonia: In both which Provinces there are ſome remnants of his name to be found amongſt the Antients. For, beſides that Joſephus ſaith expreſly, that the Paphlagonians antiently were called Rephei, there is mention in Appollonius's Argonauticks of the River Rhebæus, which riſing in Bithynia, emptieth it ſelf into the Pontus Euxinus, near to Paphlagonia; of which River Pliny alſo doth inform us: and Stephanus doth not only acquaint us with the River it ſelf, but tells us alſo of a Region on the ſame name, and of a people thereabouts, which are called Rhebæi. Nor need we look much further to find out the ſeat of Togarma the third ſon of Gomer, whom the Prophet Ezekiel not only joyneth with his Father as two neighbouring Nations, but makes both of them to lie Northwards of Judæa; Gomer and all his bands, the houſe of Togarma in the North quarters, and all his bands, cap. 38. 6. So that they do not gueſs amiſs, who place Togarma and his Progeny in Cappadocia: a Country not only bordering near to the Plantations of Gomer, and lying on the North of the land of Canaan, but very well ſtocked with an excellent breed of Mules and Horſes, as Strabo teſtifieth in the eleventh Book of his Geography; with which commodities they traded at the Fairs of Tyre, as the ſame Prophet tells us of them, Chap. 27. 14. But for a more evident proof of this, that Togarma's dwelling muſt be found in Cappadocia; we muſt firſt know that the Greek Tranſlators call him generally by the name of Togarma; and then, that antiently there was a people in Cappadocia and Galatia, whom Strabo calleth Trocmi, and Tully Trogmi; by Stephanus they are named Trocmeni, and Trogmades in the Council of Chalcedon, in which Cyriacus Biſhop of the Trogmades (Κυριακὸς Ἐπίσκοπος Τογμάδων) is often mentioned.

Having thus done with Gomer, and the ſons of Gomer, we will next purſue the reſt of the ſons of Japhet, except Javan only, whom with his four ſons we will keep together. And the next ſon of Japhet is Magog, concerning whom there hath been much diſpute and difference amongſt our Antiquaries, ſome making him the Father of the Scythians, and ſome of the Goths, and others finally of the Tartars; all of them thinking that ſuch terrible names as Gog and Magog, could not belong to any but ſuch terrible Nations. And poſſible enough it is, that ſome of his poſterity in ſucceeding times, finding their own ſeats too narrow for them, might remove further Northwards, and be the founders of ſome Scythian and Tartarian Nation; but that Magog himſelf in his firſt Plantation, ſhould wander ſo far out of the way from the reſt of his Brethren, when he had elbow-room enough amongſt them, I cannot eaſily imagine. When therefore I find a Region in Stephanus called Gogarens, betwixt Iberia and Cholchis; and read in Pliny, that the City of Cœlo-Syria, which the Græcians call Hierapolis, was by the Syrians themſelves called Magog; I ſhall not trouble my ſelf to look for Magog any where elſe, than in thoſe Countries where they have left ſuch evident

Land-

Land-marks to diſcern themſelves by. But this we ſhall the better ſee by looking out the dwellings of his two brethren, Meſech and Tubal, who being joined together with Gog and Magog, Ezek. 38. 2. and 39. 1. are very unlike to have their dwellings far aſunder: or that they could concur in any publick Action againſt the Jews, according to the ſcope and purpoſe of the holy Prophet. Now it is probable (if not more) that Meſech, whom the Antients named Moſoch, ſeated himſelf on the North and North-Eaſt of Syria, in the confines of Colchis and Armenia, and ſo unto the Caſpian or Hyrcanian Sea. For all along that Tract runs a ridge of Hills, which Pliny, Ptolomy, and Pomponius Mela call Montes Moſchici, diſterminating Colchis from Armenia, and both from Iberia; and moſt like to be the dwelling of Meſech or Moſoch, and to take denomination from him. And this I am the rather induced to think, becauſe Tubal, whom the Scriptures generally join together with Meſech, is by moſt Writers ſaid to have ſetled himſelf in Iberia, the next Province to it. Joſephus alſo telling us, that antiently the Iberi were called Theobeli, though called Iberians afterwards on ſome new occaſion. And hereunto the conſtant tradition of the Spaniards gives ſome good authority, who boaſt of their deſcent from Tubal; which can no otherwiſe be granted, than as they were a Colony of theſe Iberians, from whence the Continent of Spain was once called Iberia; and where one of the principal Rivers is ſtil called Iberus. For Madai, the third Son of Japhet, it is moſt plain by the authority of Scripture (were there no proof elſe) that he was the Father of the Medes; who in the book of Daniel, and that of Heſter, are repreſented to us by no other name than that of Madai.

Thus having took a view of thoſe who fixt themſelves in either, or in both the Aſia's; let us look on Thyrus, Javan, and the Sons of Javan, who not contented with their dwellings in the leſſer Aſia, filled all Europe by degrees with their numerous progenies. And firſt beginning with Javan as the Elder Brother, moſt Authors make him the Original of thoſe Greek Nations which paſs under the general names of Iones; and there is very good ground for the aſſertion, conſidering that the Greek Tranſlators of the Bible inſtead of Javan, read Jovan, and that all thoſe who elſewhere ordinarily are called Iones, are by Homer, one of the ancienteſt of the Greeks, named Ivones. Now Javan and Jaon ſound ſo like each other, that one may very well conclude, that they were the ſame. A name not only proper to the Athenians, and their Colonies, (though probable enough firſt belonging to them of Attica) but comprehending the Bœotians and Achæans alſo; yea, and extending alſo into Macedonia, as appears Dan. 8. 21. where Alexander the Great, in the Hebrew is called King of Javan, which we Engliſh Græcia. Nor do we much diſ-joyn Javan from the reſt of that ſtock, by carrying him croſs the Seas into another part of the World; for he might go along with Gomer in his ſecond Plantation; and, leaving him well ſetled in the greater Phrygia, and his Son Askenaz in the leſſer; might then with very little trouble (and no improbability at all) paſs over the Helleſpont, and plant himſelf in Attica, called at firſt Ionia, ſaith Plutarch in the life of Theſeus. Or if any one notwithſtanding conceive this for too great a leap, and will rather think with Hecatæus, that the Iones came out of Aſia into Greece (as Strabo cites him to that purpoſe) I ſhall not much contend againſt that opinion; ſo it be alſo granted on the other ſide, that Javan, not having room enough on the ſhores of Aſia, paſſed over into Greece, as a Land unoccupied. With Javan went Eliſha his eldeſt Son, the Father of the Æoles, or Æolians, on the Aſian ſide, as Joſephus hath it; and the Founder of Elis in Peloponneſus, and Planter of the Græcian Iſles, which by the Prophet Ezekiel 27. 7. are called the Iſles of Eliſha. And it agrees exceeding well with the Iſles of Græce, what by the Prophet is affirmed of the Iſles of Eliſha; namely, that the Inhabitants thereof did trade to Tyre with Blew and Purple in which ſome of the Græcian Iſles were ſuch excellent Artiſans, that Carpathus had the name of Porthyrie, and Cithera was called Πορφυρέα; only from the abundance of Purple, which they had amongſt them. Not to ſay any thing of Coos, Niſyrus, and Gyarus, and ſome other of the Cyclades, renowned in good Authors, for that Commodity.

A ſhorter Journey, but withal a far ſhorter Territory, fell to the lot of Tarſhiſh the ſecond Son; whom Javan, when he travelled further upon new diſcoveries, left ſetled in Cilicia, a Province of the leſſer Aſia; where either he, or ſome of his Poſterity, in honour of him, built the City of Tarſus, the principal City of that Province. For that Tarſhiſh in thoſe early days ſhould go into Spain, and there build Tarteſſus, I take to be a ſtrange (if not idle) Romance; that Town being built by the Phœnicians, many Ages after, without relation unto Tarſhiſh, or his memory either. What Voyages or Plantations thoſe of Cilicia or Tarſus made in times ſucceeding, as I no where find, ſo it is not material to my preſent purpoſe; which principally is to ſettle the Sons of Noah in their firſt habitations. On therefore unto Cittim, the third Son of Javan, whom Joſephus ſetleth firſt in the Iſle of Cyprus, where he finds a City called Citium, the birth-place of Zeno the Stoick, thence ſurnamed Κιτιεὺς. Joſephus is herein followed by St. Hierom in his Notes on Geneſis, in whoſe time (as Pintus telleth us in his Comment on Ezekiel) the Town of Citium was ſtill ſtanding; ſo do Euſtathius in his Hexameron, and divers others. The Author of the Book of Maccabees ſets him further off, giving the name of Cittim unto Macedonia. After that (ſaith the Author) Alexander the Son of Philip, went forth of the land of Chethim, and ſhew Darius King of the Perſians and Medes, Cap. 1. 1. And after in the 8. Chapter of the ſame Book, verſ. 5. Perſeus King of Macedon is called King of the Cittims. But this doth no way contradict that of his firſt planting in Cyprus, where it is very probable that he made his dwelling for a time, by reaſon of the neighbourhood of his Brother Tarſhiſh (Cilicia and the City of Tarſus lying near unto it;) But finding in time that Iſland to be either too barren, or too ſmall for his people; and that the other parts both of Græce and Aſia were taken up already by the firſt Adventurers, he might finally fix himſelf, or ſome of his poſterity, in Macedonia, as a ſpare place which no body could lay claim unto. That either he or any of his Sons did plant firſt in Italy, which I ſee Bochartus would fain have, were againſt the method of Plantations; and he muſt give them wings to fly that conveyeth them thither, when as yet Mankind was not taught the uſe of ſhipping, or not accuſtomed at leaſt to make long voyages. But that in courſe of time, as the World grew fuller, and that Greece was not able to contain its multitudes, ſome of the race of Cittim might paſs over into Italy, the paſſage thither from ſome of the Ports of Greece being ſhort and eaſie, I am apt enough to believe, and in its proper place ſhall declare my ſelf for it. Nor can I otherwiſe agree with him, as concerning Dodanim, whom againſt all right and reaſon he hath placed in Gaul; making the River Rhodanus, one of the principal of that Country, to be named of him; whom the Greeks, miſtaking the letter Daleth for that of Reſh (as indeed the letters are ſo like, that one may may very eaſily be miſtook for the other) moſt commonly preſent unto us by the name of Rhodanim. Admitting which, it is more proper, in my mind, to ſettle Rhodanim for a while in the Iſle of Rhodes, lying ſo near the dwellings of his other brethren; till wanting room for the increaſe of his poſterity in ſo ſmall an Iſland, he might coaſt along the ſhores of Peloponneſus, and fix himſelf finally in Epirus by his brother Eliſha; where in the Province of the Moloſſians, we ſhall find a City called Dodona, without any ſuch miſtake or change of letters, as before is mentioned. For that the three furtheſt parts of Europe in reſpect of Aſia, ſhould be planted all at once by theſe ſons of Javan, is ſo incredible an imagination, that he muſt have a very ſtrong fancy or be of very light belief, which can entertain it. Finally as for Thyras the laſt ſon of Japhet. having accompanied his brother Javan to the ſhores of Aſia, and ſeeing him paſſed over the Seas to Greece, he took the opportunity of the next Strait or Fretum (ſince called Thracius Boſphorus) and fixed himſelf in Thrace, which Country he gave name unto, as moſt Writers teſtifie. Nor want there ſuch apparent footſteps of the name of Thyras, beſides the name of Thracia (as ſome ſpell the word) which may add good authority to this general teſtimony; there being both a River and an Haven-town not far from Bizantium, which Pliny, Ptolomy and Mela call Athyras; a River and Town called Tyras in the Province of Moeſia, bordering next to Thrace, whereof moſt of all the old Geographers have taken notice; and finally the Thracians calling their God, Mars, by the name of Thyras. Not to ſay any thing of Tereus, Therops, and ſome others of the Kings of Thrace, whoſe names come very near unto that of Thyras, as the firſt founder of their Nation.

Thus have we ſeen the ſeveral Generations and Diſperſions of the Sons of Noah, ſo far forth as their names are regiſtred in holy Scripture: theſe being the Heads and Leaders of thoſe ſeveral Tribes which joyned together in the project of the building of Babel, and afterwards diſperſed themſelves, as before was ſhewn. But that no more than theſe (I mean heads of Families) deſcended in ſo long a time from the loyns of Noah; that they ſhould have towards the new peopling of the world, in an hundred years (for ſo long it muſt be at leaſt from the Flood to the building of Babel) no more than ſixteen Sons in all; and ten of thoſe ſixteen go childleſs alſo to the grave, is not a thing to be imagined. Nor is it to be thought, that all the people which were born ſince the Flood till then, could meet together at one place as by inſpiration; or being met, would joyn together in a work of ſo little profit; or, that if Noah or Sem had been there amongſt them, they would not have diſſwaded them from that fooliſh enterpriſe. And therefore I ſhould rather be of their opinion, which think that Noah fixed himſelf in thoſe parts, which lay neareſt to the place where the Ark took land: and having planted as far Eaſtward as he thought convenient, ſent out the ſurpluſage of his people under the Conduct of one or more of theſe Undertakers; directing them perhaps to the land of Shinaar, where himſelf had dwelt before the Flood. Where being come, and deſtitute of graver and more ſober counſels, they fell upon that vain attempt, which became their ruin; and made them ſcatter and diſperſe themſelves into ſo many Companies. For in my mind Sir Walter Rawleigh pleads the point exceeding ſtrongly, that it muſt needs be that Noah was ſetled in the Eaſt, and had well peopled all thoſe parts which lay neareſt to him, before he ſent his Troop abroad upon new diſcoveries. For being it is expreſly ſaid in holy Scripture, that as they went from the Eaſt, They found a plain in the Land of Shinaar; it muſt needs follow without controverſie, that they came from the Eaſt Countries into Shinaar or Babylonia, and not from any part of Armenia (as the vulgar opinion is) which lay North thereof. Now that the Countries whence they came were not left utterly deſolate upon this remove, but very ſufficiently provided both of men and Cities, appeareth by thoſe huge Armies which Zoroaſter the King of Bactria, and Staurobates a King of the Indians, were able to bring into the field. Of whom the firſt being invaded by Ninus the Aſſyrian Monarch, encountred him with an Army of 400000 fighting men; the other on the like occaſion out-vied Semiramis for numbers: and yet her Army did conſiſt, as we read in Diodorus Siculus, of three millions and a half of men, beſides 10000 armed Waggons; whereof if we believe but the third part, it may ſerve to prove that the Eaſt muſt needs be planted before this Expedition towards Babylonia. For conſidering that Ninus the husband of Semiramis was but the third in deſcent from Nimrod, (that is to ſay, the ſon of Belus, the ſon of Nimrod) it had been a moſt impoſſible thing that ſuch a vaſt increaſe ſhould be made only out of Colonies in ſo ſhort a time, as needs muſt be between the planting of the Countries before ſpecified, and theſe two great actions; unleſs God raiſed them out of ſtones, or by ſome ſuch miracle, to abate the pride of theſe Uſurpers over other Nations. Without a miracle of this nature (which I conceive no wiſe man would expect to find) it is, I ſay, a thing impoſſible that Staurobates ſhould exceed Semiramis in number of men, as Diodorus ſaith he did; he being but a Caſtling of a ſecond Swarm, and ſhe the great Commandreſs of that part of the world from whence he came upon a ſecond or a third Plantation. Add unto this, that thoſe who have recorded the Acts of Alexander the Great, aſſure us that he found more Cities, and ſumptuoſities in that little Kingdom of Porus, which lay ſide by ſide to the Eaſt of the River Indus, than in all his other travels and undertakings: And this may ſerve inſtead of a further evidence, that the Eaſt Countries were not planted after this diſperſion, but built, and peopled, and reduced under forms of Government, as ſoon as any in the World. Nor know I elſewhere to find either Noah himſelf, or Sem and Japhet, unleſs they ſtaid behind with their Father Noah, or were diſpoſed of by themſelves in their ſeveral quarters: there being none of thoſe, though moſt diligent men, who have writ of the Plantations of the World upon this diſperſion, that either ſpeak of any Nations planted by them, or of their ſetling in the Colonies of any one of their deſcendants. Which is to me a very ſtrong Argument that they came not with the reſt to the Plains of Shinaar, but tarried ſtill in thoſe Habitations wherein God had placed them.

Againſt this I can ſee but two Objections of any moment; one from the Text, the other from an old Tradition amongſt the Jews. That from the Text is gathered from thoſe words of Moſes, where having made his Catalogue of the Families of the Sons of Noah, he adds, And by theſe were the Nations divided in the Earth, after the Flood, Gen. 10. v. ult. But theſe words, as I take it, do relate only unto that diviſion which was made upon occaſion of the Confuſion of Languages, when they were forced to give over their work, and ſort themſelves into ſeveral Companies: and not to ſuch Plantations as were made before: who being all of one tongue, though in divers dwellings, could not be looked upon as ſeveral and divided Nations. For the Tradition of the Jews, 'tis this, that from the beginning of the World to the building of Babel, that language which in after-times was called the Hebrew, was the the common language of Mankind; and that it did continue uncorrupt in the houſe of Eber; (whence it had the name) becauſe he joined not with the reſt in that proud and ungodly undertaking. Hence it may poſſibly be objected, that if there were any others of the off-ſpring of Noah, which came not with the reſt to the Plains of Shinaar, and conſequently had no hand in that vain attempt, they could not come within the curſe of Confounded Languages, but muſt needs ſpeak the Hebrew Tongue, as well as thoſe deſcended of the Loins of Heber. But againſt this Tradition, and the conſequents of it, there are ſome things to be objected. For firſt it is but a Tradition, and therefore of no ſure foundation to build upon. And ſecondly, it is ſuch a Tradition as holds no good co-herence with the truth or ſtory; it being a moſt clear and demonſtrative truth, that the Hebrew Tongue was not the Language which Abraham brought with him out of Chaldea and Meſopotamia, but that which he found ſpoken in the Land of Canaan at his coming thither, to which both he and his Poſterity did conform themſelves. Or had it been the Language of Heber, as they ſay it was, (but moſt undoubtedly was not) yet, thirdly, had this been a priviledge conferred on Heber, that he and his Poſterity ſhould ſpeak the Original Language without alteration or corruption, it muſt have been extended to all thoſe of the houſe of Jocktan, which deſcended from him; as alſo to the houſe Laban in Padan-Aram, and to the Moabites and the Ammonites as the ſeed of Lot; and finally to the Iſhmaelites & Idumeans, deſcended of Abraham and Eſau; and not be limited and confined only to the houſe of Jacob. Either all theſe muſt be partakers of ſo great a priviledge, becauſe their Father Heber had obtained it for himſelf and his; or elſe it was not ſuch a priviledge, or given ſo univerſally and incommunicably to the houſe of Heber, as they ſay it was. So the Tradition falls to ground, as to this particular. And then admitting it for true, that thoſe who ſtaid behind with Noah ſpake the ſame Language which was common to the Fathers before the Flood, (be it the Hebrew, or what elſe ſoever it was) I ſee no reaſon to the contrary, but that it might in time be branched into ſeveral Languages or Dialects of the ſame one Language, by the commerce and intercourſe which they had with Nations of a different ſpeech; as well as thoſe of Judah, in ſo ſhort a time as the Captivity of Babylon, had loſt the purity of that Language which they ſo much brag of; and could not underſtand their own Bibles at their coming home, but by an Interpreter. Of which ſee *Neh.*8.7,8.

But to proceed: On this diſperſion of the Families of the Sons of Noah, it came to paſs, that though they all deſcended from one common Root, yet by the ſituations of their ſeveral dwellings, they came to be of ſeveral tempers and affections; in which they were ſo different from one another, that it might ſeem they had been made at firſt out of ſeveral Principles, and not at all derived from one common Parent. Of which thus Du Bartas.

O ſee how full of Wonders ſtrange, is Nature!
Sith in each Climate, not alone in ſtature,
Strength, colour, hair; but that men differ do,
Both in their humours, and their manners too.
The Northern man is fair, the Southern foul;
That's white, this black; that ſmiles, and this doth ſcoul.
Th'one's blith and frolick, th'other dull and froward;
Th'one's full of courage, th'other a fearful coward, &c.

The ground or reaſon of which difference is to be attributed to the different tempers of thoſe Countries in which they live, and to the different influences of the Heavenly Bodies on thoſe ſeveral Countries which do continue ſtill the ſame, though many times the Countries do ſhift and change their old Inhabitants. Hinc illa ab antiquo vitia, & patria ſorte durantia, quæ totas in hiſtoriis gentes aut commendant aut notant, ſaith a Modern but judicious Author. Two or three evidences of this truth will make it clear and evident to a practical judgment, which otherwiſe might appear obſcure in the ſearch of cauſes. Florus hath told us of the Gauls, Primum eorum impetum eſſe majorem quam virorum; ſecundum minorem quam fœminarum. Which is the ſame which Rob. Dallington hath told us of the Modern French, That he begins an action like Thunder, and ends it in a ſmoke. Ut ſunt Gallorum ſubita ingenia, ſaith Cæſar of the ancient Gauls: and I believe the preſent French are altogether as raſh and hair-brain'd, as the other were. Gallia fœcunda Cauſidicorum, was part of the Character of the Gauls in the time of Juvenal; and it is told us of the French by ſome late Obſervers, that there are commonly more Law-trials amongſt them in one year, than have been in England ſince the Conqueſt. And yet the old Gauls in a manner are wholly rooted out of the Country, the ſeveral Nations of Franks, Burgundians, Britans, Normans, and Goths, being in poſſeſſion of their ſeveral dwellings. Thus alſo it is ſaid by Tacitus of the ancient Germans, Diem noctemque continuare potando, nulli opprobrium; that it was no diſgrace to any, to ſpend the whole day and night in drinking; and more than ſo, De jungendis affinitatibus, de bello denique & pace, in conviviis conſultare; that they conſulted over their Cups of their weighty buſineſs. Since which time though all Germany hath ſhifted almoſt all her old Inhabitants, and taken in new Colonies of Swedes, Avarers, Thuringians, Danes, Sclaves, Hunns, Saxons, and other Nations; yet ſtill thoſe ill cuſtoms are as much in uſe amongſt them, as ever formerly. To go a little further off; The old Philoſopher Anacharſis tells us of the ancient Græcians, that at the beginning of their Feaſts they uſed little Goblets, πλείονες δὲ ἐν μεγάλοις πίνωσι, and greater towards the end, when they were almoſt drunken: which cuſtom ſtill remains amongſt them, as G. Sandys obſerveth, notwithſtanding the great length of time, and all the other changes of ſtate and people, which have hapned ſince. I ſhall not ſpeak here of the effeminateneſs of the Aſiatick, or the cruelty or implacableneſs of the African Nations, being as great now as in any of the former times, notwithſtanding the great and numerous Plantations of the Greeks, Romans, Vandals, Sarazens, Turks, and Tartars, ſucceſſively, and reſpectively in theſe ſeveral Countries. And therefore I conclude this point in theſe words of Barclay, Hæret itaque in omni gente vis quædam inconcuſſa, quæ hominibus pro conditione terrarum in quibus naſci contigerit, ſua fata diviſerit.

Nor is this all the conſequent of this diſperſion of the Families of the Sons of Noah; the ſeparation of their perſons producing, firſt, an alteration of affections, and that engendring natural Animoſities: which ſeconded by their ſeveral intereſſes and Reaſons of State, hath left almoſt no people without ſome ſuch enemy which doth particularly & perverſly croſs them in all their Counſels. Concerning which, take here the Obſervation of that notable Stateſman and Hiſtorian, Philip de Comines: which though it be with reference to the Meridian of his own time only, yet it may be accommodated generally to all States and Ages, "In rebus humanis ita comparatum eſt, "ut nullus fere ſit populus quem non æmulus aliquis exer-"ceat, &c. It is (ſaith he) ſo ordered in the ſtate of "humane affairs, that there is almoſt no Nation without "a more particular Enemy. The Engliſh are enemies

"to the French, the Scots to the Engliſh; the Portugueze "have the like inveterate hatred againſt the Spaniards. "The Princes of Italy enjoy great poſſeſſions without "any good title; but are continually oppoſed by the "more potent Cities of Venice, Florence, Genoa, and Luca. "The Aragonian Kings of Naples, have found perpetu-"al Enemies of the Dukes of Anjou; as have the Dukes "of Millain, of the houſe of Orleans. The Princes of "Italy, and the Florentines, have a ſtitch at Venice; as "the States of Genoa, and Sienna, have againſt the "Florentines. In Germany the animoſities have been "great and of long continuance, between the Houſes "of Auſtria, and Bavaria; the hatred grown beyond "all hopes of reconciliation which is between the Swit-"zers, and the Auſtrian Family. The Dukes of Cleve, "and Gulick, are always upon ill terms with their "Neighbours of Gelderland: and in the North, the "Cities on the Baltick Seas have their continual quarrels "with the Kings of Denmark. Nor are the enmities "any thing leſs, if they be not greater, which are "diſcernable amongſt the people of Aſia and Africk, "than thoſe that are above remembred. So far and to "this purpoſe ſaith that notable and judicious "Writer.

The conſideration of which points, if there were no other, were of it ſelf ſufficient to ſhew the neceſſary uſe of Hiſtory and Geography, as well for the underſtanding the affairs of the Ages paſt, as for commerce and correſpondency with the Nations preſent. For had no Hiſtories been written in the former times, in what dull ignorance had we lived of all thoſe occurrences which do ſo much concern the whole ſtate of Mankind, and are our principal directors in Life and Action? in which reſpect the Orator moſt truly calleth it, Magiſtram vitæ. For upon the credit of this Hiſtory, the examples of our Anceſtors, the grounds of civil prudence, and the fames of men do moſt eſpecially depend. And certainly to draw back the mind to the contemplation of Matters long ago paſſed; to ſearch out with diligence, and to deliver with faith, freedom, and the life of expreſſion, ſuch things as are found out on a diligent ſearch; to repreſent unto our eyes the changes of Times, the Characters of Perſons, the uncertainties of Counſels, and the Conveyances of Actions, the ſubtilties of Pretenſions, and the Secrets of State; muſt of neceſſity be a work of as publick uſe, as it is of great both pains and judgement. Beſides, it gives a kind of eternity to all ſuch men, who by their Counſels or Atchievements have deſerved nobly of thoſe Kingdoms, and Commonwealths, wherein they lived. And thereupon the Orator doth not only call it, Magiſtram vitæ, but Lucem veritatis, Teſtem temporis, Nuntiam vetuſtatis, & Vitæ memoriam. According to which Character I find theſe Verſes ſet before a Chronicle of ſome Kings of England (more worth than all the Book beſides;)

For though in theſe days Miracles be fled,
Yet this ſhall of good Hiſtories be ſaid,
They call back time that's paſt, and give life to the dead.

Nor want there other motives to endear unto us the uſe of Hiſtory, beſides the light it gives unto all the remarkable Actions of preceding times; and the eternity (if I may ſay ſo) which it conferreth on the Actors themſelves, by the preſervation of their names from the ruins of time, and the pit of Oblivion. For firſt, it ſtirreth men to Virtue, and deters them from Vice, by ſhewing forth the glorious memories of vertuous men and the ill ſavour which is left behind men of ungodly life; and eſpecially keeps perſons of moſt eminent place from letting looſe the reins unto all licentiouſneſs, by repreſenting this to their conſideration, That all their Actions ſhall be laid open one day to the view of the Vulgar. Secondly, it hath been a principal Conſerver of moſt Arts and Sciences, by keeping on Record the Dictates and Opinions of ſo many of the old Philoſophers; out of which, a perfect body of Philoſophy, and others of the Liberal Arts hath been collected and digeſted. Thirdly, it is the beſt School-maſter in the Art of War, and teacher of Stratagems; and in that can practically afford more punctual directions, than can be otherwiſe obtained; and is withal the beſt Aſſiſtant to the Stateſman or Politician, who from hence draw their Obſervations and Concluſions; and become thereby ſerviceable to their Prince and Country, though never travelled more than amongſt their Books. So Archimedes in his ſtudy, and Demoſthenes in his Orators Gown, endangered more the enemies of their ſeveral Countries, than the Athenians, or Syracuſans, did by dint of Sword. And laſt of all, beſides theſe civil benefits and conſiderations, and the great help which it affords in the way of diſcourſe; there is no particular branch of knowledge more uſeful for the true and perfect underſtanding of holy Scripture, than that of Eccleſiaſtical and Profane Hiſtory; or which gives clearer light to many dark paſſages thereof, eſpecially in the Prophetical Writings of either Teſtament.

This, as it ſhews the neceſſary uſe and benefit which redounds from Hiſtory, ſo doth it ſerve to uſher in that commendation which belongs to the ſtudy of Geography alſo; without ſome knowledge wherein, the ſtudy of Hiſtory is neither ſo pleaſant, nor ſo profitable, as a judicious Reader would deſire to have it. 'Tis true, Geography without Hiſtory hath life and motion, but very unſtable, and at random; but Hiſtory without Geography, like a dead carkaſs, hath neither life, nor motion at all, or moves at leaſt but ſlowly on the underſtanding. For what delight or ſatisfaction can any man receive from the reading of Story, without he know ſomewhat of the places, and the conditions of the people, which are therein mentioned? In which regard Ammianus Marcellinus the Hiſtorian, hath deſerved very well of all his Readers; premiſing to the Actions of every Country ſome brief Deſcription of the place and chief Towns therein. For though the greatneſs of the Action doth ennoble and adorn the place; yet it is the knowledge of the place, which adds delight and ſatisfaction unto the reading of the Story, which conveighs it to us. Hiſtory therefore and Geography, like the two Fires or Meteors, which Philoſophers call Caſtor and Pollux, if joined together, crown our reading with delight and profit; if parted, threaten both with a certain ſhipwrack; and are like two Siſters dearly loving, not without pity (I had almoſt ſaid impiety) to be kept aſunder. So as that which Sir Philip Sidney ſaid of Argalus and Parthenia,

Her being was in him alone,
And ſhe not being, he was none;

may be as juſtly ſaid of Hiſtory and Geography, as of thoſe two Lovers. And yet this is not all the benefit which redounds from the ſtudy of Geography, which is exceeding uſeful to the reading of the holy Scriptures, as in diſcovering the ſituation of Paradiſe, the bounds and borders of thoſe Countries which are therein mentioned; eſpecially with relation to the travels of the Patriarchs, Prophets, Evangeliſts and Apoſtles, yea of Chriſt himſelf; not otherwiſe to be comprehended and underſtood, but by

by the help of Geographical Tables and deſcriptions. Beſides this, it is uſeful to moſt ſorts of men, as to Aſtronomers, who are hereby informed of the different appearances of Stars in ſeveral Countries; their ſeveral influences and aſpects, their riſing and ſetting, according to different Horizons. Secondly, to Phyſitians, who are hereby acquainted with the different temper of mens bodies, according to the Climes they live in; the nature and growth of many Simples, and Medicinal Drugs, whereof every Country under Heaven hath ſome more natural and proper to it ſelf, than to any others. Thirdly, to States-men, who from hence draw their knowledge of the nature and diſpoſition of thoſe people with whom they are to negotiate; the bounds and borders both of their own Kingdoms, and the Neighbouring Countries, with the extent of their reſpective Dominions by Sea and Land; without the exact knowledge of which, there would be a perpetual Seminary of Wars and diſcord. Fourthly, to Merchants, Mariners, and Souldiers; the ſeveral Profeſſors of which kinds of life, find nothing more neceſſary for them in their ſeveral callings, than a competent knowledge in Geography; which preſents to them many notable advantages, both for their profit and contentment. Finally, by the ſtudy of Geography, a man that hath not opportunity nor means of travelling, may with as much benefit, but far leſs danger and expence, acquaint himſelf with the particular deſcriptions of Kingdoms, Provinces, Cities, Towns and Caſtles, with all things conſiderable in the ſame, together with the cuſtoms, manners, and diſpoſitions of all Foreign Nations: and that too in as full a manner, as if he had ſurvey'd the one, and obſerved the other, by a perſonal viſit of the places repreſented to him.

Such is the neceſſary uſe which men of ingenuous ſtudies, and profeſſions, do, and may make of Hiſtory and Geography, in the courſe of their callings and imployments. And there are ſome things alſo neceſſary to the knowledge of each, that we may ſtudy them with the greater benefit and contentation. To Hiſtory, it is only requiſite that it be defined, diſtinguiſhed from ſuch writings as do ſeem to challenge the name of Hiſtories; and that ſomewhat be premiſed of thoſe ſeveral Epoches, from which all people do begin their computations. But to Geography it is needful not only that we do define it, but that we explicate thoſe Terms, or ſecond Notions, which are not obvious to the underſtanding of every Reader. Firſt then for Hiſtory, if we conſult the name or Quid nominis of it, it is derived ἀπὸ τῦ ἱςορεῖν, i. e. videre; and therefore properly doth ſignifie a relation of ſuch remarkable actions at which the Author was an Eye-witneſs, if not an Agent, Apud veteres enim (ſaith Iſidore) nemo ſcribebat Hiſtoriam, niſi is qui interfuiſſet, & ea quæ ſcribēda eſſent vidiſſet. But now the cuſtomary uſe of the word hath taught it a more ample ſignification. Hiſtory being defined to be A Perfect Relation of all Occurents obſervable, hapning in the State whereof it is written, deſcribed by the Motives, Pretexts, Conſultations, Speeches and Events; a ſpecial care being had both of Time and Place.

As for the writings which do challenge the name of Hiſtory, but indeed are really diſtinguiſhed from it, they are Commentaries, Annals, Diaries, or Journals, and Chronologies. Firſt, Commentaries ſet down only a naked continuance of Events & Actions, without the Motives and deſigns, the Counſels, Speeches, Occaſions and Pretexts of buſineſſes. So that Cæſar with more modeſty than true propriety of ſpeech, applyed the name of Commentaries to the beſt Hiſtory in the World, A Hiſtory commended by King James to his Son Prince Henry, above all other prophane Authors, both for the ſweet flowing of the ſtyle, and the worthineſs of the matter it ſelf. For I have ever (ſaith he) been of this opinion, that, Of all Ethnick Emperors or great Captains, he hath farthеſt exceeded both in his practice and in his precepts, for Martial affairs. Which makes me the more wonder at the ſtrange and unjuſt cenſure of Juſtus Lipſius who calls them Nudam & ſimplicem narrationem, for being intituled Commentaries, they do (ſaith he) nil polliceri præter nomen; with pride and arrogance enough. 2. For Annals next; they are a bare recital only of the Actions happening every year, without regard had to the cauſes and pretexts, or any of the chief Ingredients required in Hiſtory. So that Tacitus had no other Reaſon to give the name of Annals to his excellent Work, than that it is diſtinguiſhed by the years of the Conſuls. Otherwiſe there is no great difference as unto the matter betwixt an Hiſtory and an Annal, the ſubject of them both, being matter of State; and not ſuch trival things as Triumphs, Pageants, and ſuch like, which ſtand not with the gravity and authority of Hiſtorical Annals: betwixt which and a Diary, the ſame Tacitus (ſpeaking of ſome magnificent ſtructures which were built that year) doth make this difference, Res illuſtres Annalibus, talia diurnis Urbis actis mandari, that matters of the greater moment were committed to Annals, and unto Diaries the Acts & Accidents of a meaner nature. 3. But Diaries, beſides this difference in point of matter are diſtinguiſhed from Annals alſo in point of time; a Diary or Journal, as the name imports, containing the Actions of each day; of which kind was the Chronicle called for by Abaſuerus, in which the Actions of his Court were referred to Journals, and in the which he found the relation of the treaſon intended againſt him by his Eunuchs. And of this kind was that of King Edward the ſixth, mentioned in the Hiſtory of his life, by Sir John Hayward. 4. Laſt of all for Chronologies; they are only bare ſupputations of times, with ſome brief touch upon the Actions therein hapning, ſuch as are thoſe of Euſebius, Funcius, Calviſius, and Helvicus; of which laſt I dare give that teſtimony which Paterculus affords to Ovid, viz. that he is perfectiſſimus in forma operis ſui; though he and all the reſt are debtors to Euſebius for the incredible pains taken by him in his excellent Chronicon. Out of theſe four, as out of the four Elements, the Quinteſſence of Hiſtory is extracted: borrowing from Annals time, from Diaries and Commentaries matter, from Chronologies conſent of time and co-etanity of Princes; and thereto adding of her own all ſuch other Ornaments in which theſe four are found defective.

That which remains is to premiſe ſomewhat of theſe ſeveral Epoches, from whence particular States, Nations and People, make their computations. Theſe have been very different in former times, according to the ſeveral occaſions took in ſeveral Countries. The Jews had ſeveral Epoches peculiar to themſelves alone, and one in common with their Neighbours. Thoſe which they had amongſt themſelves were firſt from the Creation of the World, or the beginning of time; Secondly from the univerſal Deluge, which hapned, A.M. 1656. Thirdly, from the Confuſion of Tongues, A.M. 1786. Fourthly, from Abrahams journy out of Chaldæa into Canaan, A.M. 2021. Fifthly, from their deliverance out of Egypt, A.M. 2453. Sixthly, from the firſt year of Jubilee, A.M. 2499. Seventhly, from the building of Solomons Temple, An. 2932. And laſtly, from the Captivity of Babylon, An. 3368. That which they had common with other Nations, was the Æra or Epoche of the victory of the Greeks, which took beginning on the firſt Victory which Seleucus had againſt Antigonus, which was in A. M. 3637. an Accompt much uſed by the Jews, Chaldeans, Syrians, and other Nations of the Eaſt.

But the Chaldæans alſo had their own Epoche or Accompt apart, reckoning their time from the firſt year of Nabonaſſer (Salmonaſſer he is called in Scripture) which being 438 years before this of Seleucus, muſt fall in A.M. 3201. Next for the Græciani, they reckon'd a long while by Olympiades, the firſt of which is placed in the year of the World, 3174 (of which more hereafter.) But this Accompt periſhing under the Conſtantinopolitans, they reckoned after by Indictions (an accompt diviſed by Juſtinian:) every Indiction containing 15. years, the firſt beginning A. Chr. 513. which amongſt Chronologers is ſtill uſed. The Romans reckoned firſt from the foundation of their City, which was A.M. 3213. and afterwards from the ſixteenth year of Auguſtus his Empire, (being that which is properly called the Roman Æra) A.M. 3936. An accompt uſed by the Spaniards (where it firſt began) till the reign of Pedro the fourth of Aragon, who abrogated it in his Dominions, A. Chr. 1350. followed therein by John the firſt of Caſtile, An. 1383. and then at laſt by the King of Portugal alſo, 1415. The Chriſtians generally do reckon from the birth of CHRIST, but this they did not uſe till the year 600. following in the mean time the Accompt of the Empire. And finally the Mahometans begin their Hegira (for ſo they call the time of their Computation) from the flight of their Prophet Mahomet from Mecca, when he was driven thence by the Phylarchæ, which hapned A.Chr. 617. Of theſe we ſhall make uſe generally but of two alone, thoſe namely of the Worlds Creation, and our Saviours Birth; and of the building of Rome, and the flight of Mahomet, in things that do relate to thoſe ſeveral States.

Next for Geography we will firſt define it, and after explicate ſuch terms or ſecond notions, as are not obvious to the underſtanding of every Reader. Firſt for the definition of it, it is ſaid by Ptolomy to be a deſcription of the whole Earth, or the whole Earth imitated by writing and delineation, with all other things generally annexed unto it. Ἡ γεωγραφία μίμησις ἐστι διὰ γραφῆς (and not διαγραφῆς, as it is commonly but corruptly read) τῆ κατειλημμένη τῆς ὑγῆς μέρους ὅλη μετὰ τῶν ὡς ἐπίπαν αὐτῷ συνημμένων, as his own words are. In which we look not on the Earth ſimply as it is an Element, for ſo it belongeth to Philoſophy; but as it is a Sphærical body proportionably compoſed of Earth and Water, and ſo it is the ſubject of Geography.

Firſt for the Earth, which is the firſt part of this body, it is affirmed by the beſt Writers to be 21600 miles in compaſs; which is demonſtrable enough. For being there are in every of the greater Circles 360 degrees, every degree being reckon'd at 60 miles: let 360 be multiplied by 60 and the Product will be 21600 as before is ſaid. So that if it were poſſible to make a path round about the Earth, an able Footman going conſtantly 24 miles a day, would compaſs it in 900 days.

The Earth is divided, In reſpect of men, into the right hand and the left; In reſpect of it ſelf, into parts Real and Imaginary.

To Poets which turn their faces towards the Fortunate Iſlands (ſo memorized and chanted by them) which are ſituated in the Weſt; the North is the right hand, and the South the left.

To the Augures of old, and in our days to Prieſts and men in holy Orders, who uſually in their Sacrifices and divine Oblations, convert themſelves unto the Eaſt; the South is the right hand, and the North the left.

To Aſtronomers, who turn their faces towards the South, becauſe that way the motions of the Planets may be beſt obſerved, the Weſt is the right hand, and the Eaſt the left.

Finally, to Geographers, who, by reaſon they have ſo much to do with the Elevation of the Pole, do turn their faces towards the North; the Eaſt is the right hand, and the Weſt the left.

The Real parts of the Earth are divided commonly into Continents, Iſlands.

A Continent is a great quantity of Land, not ſeperated by any Sea from the reſt of the World, as the whole Continent of Europe, Aſia, Africa; or the Continents of France, Spain, Germany.

An Iſland is a part of Earth invironed round about with ſome Sea or other; as the Iſle of Britain, with the Ocean; the Iſle of Sicily, with the Mediterranean: and therefore in Latine it is called Inſula, becauſe it is ſituate in ſalo, as ſome derive it.

Touching the Continent I have nothing in general to inlarge, till we come to the particular Chorography and deſcription of them. But for Iſlands (leaving the diſquiſition of their being, or not being before the Flood) there are four caſes to which they may be thought to owe their Original. 1. an Earthquake, which works two ways towards their production: Firſt, when by it one part of a Country is forcibly torn away from the other; and ſo Eubœa was divided from the reſt of Attica: and ſecondly when ſome vehement wind or vapour being ſhut up in ſuch parts of the Earth as be under the Sea, raiſeth the Earth above the Water; whereunto the Original of moſt of thoſe Iſlands, which are far remote from any part of the Continent, is probably to be referred. 2. Great Rivers at their entry into the Sea carry with them abundance of gravel, dirt, and weeds; which, if the Sea be not the more working, will in time ſettle to an Iſland. So the Corn which Tarquinius ſowed in the Campus Martius, being Cut down by the people and caſt into Tiber, ſetled together, and made the Holy Iſland. So the River Achelous cauſed the Echinades, as we ſhall more at large declare; and ſo the Iſland of Loanda in the Kingdom of Congo, is ſaid to have been made out of the Sands of the Ocean, and the Mire of the great River Laanza, caſt into an heap, and at laſt formed into an Iſland. 3. The Sea violently beating on ſome ſmall Iſthmus, weareth it through, and turneth the Peninſula into a compleat Iſle. Thus was Sicily divided from Italy, Cyprus from Syria, England from France, and Wight from the reſt of England. And 4. ſometimes as it eateth and worketh on ſome places, ſo it voluntarily leaveth and abandoneth others, which in ſome time grow to be Iſlands, and firm land under foot. So it is thought the Iſles of Zealand have been once part of the main Sea: and Verſtegan proveth it, becauſe that the Husbandmen in tilling and manuring the ground, find ſometimes Anchors here and there fixt, but very often the bones of huge and great fiſhes, which could by no accident come hither. To theſe kind of Iſlands, Pythagoras in Ovid alluding, ſaith,

——Vidi factas exæquare terras,
Et procul a pelago conchæ jacuere marinæ,
Et vetus inventa eſt in montibus anchora ſummis.

Oft have I ſeen that earth, which once I knew
Part of the Sea; ſo that a man might view
Huge ſhels of Fiſhes in the upland ground;
And on the Mountain-tops old Anchors found.

As concerning the ſituation of Iſlands, whether commodious or not, this is my judgment. I find in Machiavel, that for a City whoſe people covet no Empire but their own Towns, a barren place is better than a fruitful; becauſe in ſuch ſeats they are compelled to work work and labour, by which they are freed from idleneſs, and by conſequence from riotouſneſs: but for a City whoſe Inhabitants deſire to enlarge their Confines, a fertile place was rather to be choſen than a ſteril, as being more able to nouriſh multitudes of people. The like I ſay of Iſlands. If a Prince deſire rather to keep than augment his Dominions, no place fitter for his abode than an Iſland; as being by it ſelf and nature ſufficiently defenſible. but if a King be minded to add continually to his Empire, an Iſland is no fit ſeat for him; becauſe partly by the uncertainty of Winds and Seas, partly by the longſomneſs of the ways, he is not ſo well able to ſupply and keep ſuch forces as he hath on the Continent. An example hereof is England, which hath even to admiration repelled the moſt puiſſant Monarch of Europe; but for the cauſes above mentioned, cannot ſhew any of her winnings on the firm land, though ſhe hath attempted and atchiev'd as many glorious exploits, as any Country in the World.

The Continent and Iſland are ſub-divided into Peninſula, Iſthmus, Promontorium.

Peninſula, quaſi pene Inſula, is a tract of land, which being almoſt encompaſſed round by water, is joined to the firm land by ſome little Iſthmus; as Peloponneſus, Taurica, and Peruana.

Iſthmus, is that narrow neck of land, which joineth the Peninſula to the Continent; as the Straights of Dariene in America, and of Corinth in Greece.

Promontorium, is a high Mountain which ſhooteth it ſelf into the Sea, the utmoſt end of which is called a Foreland, or Cape; as the Cape of Good Hope in Africk, Cape Comari in India, &c.

The Imaginary parts of the Earth are ſuch which not being at all in the Earth, muſt yet be ſuppoſed to be ſo, for the better teaching and learning this Science; and are certain Circles going about the Earth, anſwerable to them in Heaven, in name.

Theſe Circles are either the Greater, or Leſſer: in both which, there are 360 Degrees, which in the greater Circles are greater than thoſe in the leſſer; and every Degree in the greater is 60 miles.

The greater Circles are either Immutable, as the Æquator. Mutable as, as the Horizon, Meridian.

The Æquator is a great Circle going round about the Terreſtrial Globe from Eaſt to Weſt. It paſſeth through Habaſſia, Sumatra, Guiana, &c. The uſe of it is to ſhew the Latitude of any Town, Promontory, &c. Now the Latitude is the diſtance of a place South or North from the Æquator, or middle of the World; and muſt be meaſured on the Globe by the Degrees in the Meridian.

The Meridian is a great Circle rounding the Earth from Pole to Pole. There are many Meridians, according to the divers places in which a man liveth; but the chief and firſt Meridian paſſeth through the Iſland St. Michael, one of the Azores. The uſe of it is to ſhew the Longitude of any place. Now the Longitude of a City, Cape, &c. is the diſtance of it Eaſt and Weſt from the firſt Meridian, and is uſually meaſured on the Globe by the Degrees of the Æquator.

The Horizon is a great Circle, deſigning ſo great a ſpace of the earth, as a quick ſight can ken in an open field. The uſe of it is to diſcern the divers riſings and ſettings of the Stars.

The leſſer Circles either are noted with ſome name, as Tropical of Cancer, Capricorn; Polar, either Artick, Antartick; Noted with no diſtinct name, and are the Parallels.

The Tropick of Cancer (ſo called of the Cœleſtial Sign Cancer) is diſtant from the Æquinoctial 23 Degrees Northward, and paſſeth through Barbary, India, China, and Nova Hiſpania.

The Tropick of Capricorn, equally diſtant from the Æquator Southward, paſſeth through Æthiopia inferior, and the midſt of Peruana. And this is to be obſerved in theſe Tropicks, that when the Sun is in the Tropick of Cancer, our days are at the longeſt; and when he is gone back to the Tropick of Capricorn, the days are at the ſhorteſt. The firſt they call the Summer, the laſt they call the Winter Solſtice; the firſt happening on, or about St. Barnabies day in June; the laſt on, or about St. Lucies day in December.

The Artick Circle (ſo called for that it is correſpondent to the Conſtellation in Heaven called the Bear, in Greek, Arctos) is diſtant from the Tropick of Cancer 45 Degrees, and paſſeth through Norway, Muſcovy, Tartary, &c.

The Antartick (ſo called becauſe oppoſite to the other) is as much diſtant from the Tropick of Capricorn, and paſſeth through Terra Auſtralis Incognita. The uſe of theſe four Circles is to deſcribe the Zones.

The Zones are ſpaces of Earth included betwixt two of the leſſer nominated Circles. They are in number five; one over-hot, two over-cold, and two temperate.

The over-hot, or Torrid Zone, is betwixt the two Tropicks, continually ſcorched with the preſence of the Sun.

The two over-cold, or Frigid Zones, are ſituate between the two Polar Circles, and the very Poles; continually wanting the neighbourhood of the Sun.

The two Temperate Zones, are betwixt the Tropicks of Cancer, and the Artick; and twixt the Tropick of Capricorn, and the Antartick Circles; enjoying an indifferency between heat and cold; ſo that the parts next the Torrid Zone are the hotter, and the parts next the Frigid Zone are the colder.

Theſe five Zones are diſpoſed according to the order of the Zones in Heaven; of which thus Ovid Metamorph. 1.

Utque duæ dextra cœlum, totidemq; ſiniſtra
Parte ſecant Zonæ, quinta eſt ardentior illis;
Sic onus incluſum numero diſtinxit eodem
Cura Dei, totidemq; plagæ tellure premuntur.
Quarum quæ media eſt, non eſt habitabilis æſtu;
Nix tegit alta duas: totidem inter utramq; locavit, Temperiemq; dedit, miſta cum Frigore Flamma.

And as two Zones do cut the Heavens right-ſide,
And likewiſe other two the left divide,
The midſt in heat excelling all the reſt;
Even ſo it ſeem'd to the Creator beſt,
That this our World ſhould ſo divided be,
That with the Heavens in Zones it might agree.
The midſt in heat; the outward moſt excell
In Snow and Ice, ſcarce fit for men to dwell.
Betwixt theſe two Extreams, two more are fixt,
Where heat with cold indifferently is mixt.

Parallels, called alſo Æquidiſtants, circle the Earth from Eaſt to Weſt, and are commonly ten Degrees aſunder: Such are the Parallels which are ſet down in our Maps and Globes. But there are another ſort of Parallels, two of which go to a Clime. Theſe are called Artificial Parallels, becauſe they ſhew the difference of the Artificial days; and are of an unequal breadth, as we ſhall ſee in the Table following. The uſe of theſe leſſer Parallels is to ſhew the Climates.

Now a Clime, or Climate, is a ſpace of the Earth contained betwixt three Parallels, the middlemoſt whereof divideth it into two equal parts; ſerving for ſetting out the length and ſhortneſs of the days in every Country. For under the Æquator the days are of the juſt length of 12 hours; but afterwards they encreaſe the length of half an hour for every Clime, till they come to the length of 24 hours, without night at all; which length attained, they encreaſe no more by hours, but by weeks and months, till they come to the length of half a year. So that we are to reckon 24 Climes Northward, and as many Southward: Thoſe Northward known by the proper name of the place or City over which the middle Parallel of the Clime doth paſs, as Dia Meroes, Dia Sienes, &c. Thoſe on the South by the ſame names, with the condition of Anti-Dia-Sienes, Anti-Dia-Meroes, &c. 'Tis true, the ancient Coſmographers made but ſeven Climes in all; at the moſt but nine. Nor needed they to add more, as the cauſe ſtood with them; the extent of the habitable World towards each of the Poles, not being ſo fully known to them, as it is to us.

And here, becauſe thoſe Climes are not of equal breadth or extent of Latitude, but grow narrower and narrower towards each Pole; in which regard, it is impoſſible to deſcribe them under any Rule: I have thought fit to add this enſuing Table, partly framed out of the Commentaries of Clavius on the works of John de Sacro Boſco and partly out of Hues his Book, Of the uſe of the Globes. The whole divided into 7 Columes. In the firſt whereof is ſhewed what Climes are inhabited by the Amphiſcii, Periſcii, and Heteroſcii, which terms we ſhall anon expound; in the ſecond, is ſet down the number of the Climes themſelves; In the third the number of the Parallels; In the fourth, the length of the days in Summer; In the fifth, the diſtance of every Clime and Parallels from the Æquator; In the ſeventh, the name of the Town or place, through which the middlemoſt of the three Parallels doth paſs in this manner following.

Here followeth the Table of the Climes.

A ſecond uſe of theſe Parallels and other Circles; is for diſtinction of men in their ſeveral dwellings, who are (according as they are treated of in Geography) divided in reſpect of their ſhadows into Amphiſcii, Periſcii, Heteroſcii; and in reſpect of their ſite and poſition, into Antœci, Periœci, and Antipodes. 1. Amphiſcii are ſuch as dwell between the two Tropicks; ſo called, becauſe their ſhadows are both ways: ſometimes (when the Sun is North) to the South; ſometimes (when the Sun is South) to the North.

2. Periſcii are ſuch as dwell beyond the Polar Circles ſo called, becauſe their ſhadows are on all ſides of them.

3. Heteroſcii are ſuch as dwell in either of the two temperate Zones; ſo called, becauſe their ſhadows reach but one way; viz. in our Zone, to the North only; as in the other, to the South only.

4. Antœci are ſuch as dwell under the ſame Meridian, and the ſame Latitude or Parallel equally diſtant from the Æquator; the one Northward, the other Southward: the days in both places being of a length? but the Summer of the one, being the others Winter.

5. Periœci are ſuch as dwell in the ſame Parallel, on the ſame ſide of the Æquator, how diſtant ſoever they be Eaſt and Weſt: the ſeaſon of the year, and the length of days being to both alike; but the ones midnight, being the others noon.

6. Antipodes are ſuch as dwell feet to feet, ſo as a right line drawn from the one unto the other, paſſeth from North to South, through the Center of the World. Theſe are diſtant 180 degrees, which is half the compaſs of the Earth. They differ in all things, as ſeaſons of the year, length of days, riſing and ſetting of the Sun, with the like. A matter reckoned ſo ridiculous, and impoſſible (if not ſomewhat worſe) in the former times, that Boniface Archbiſhop of Mentz hapning to ſee a Tractate written by Virgilius Biſhop of Saltzburg, touching the Antipodes; and not knowing what damnable Doctrine might be couched under that ſtrange name, made complaint firſt to the Duke of Bohemia, and after to Pope Zachary, An. 745. By whom the poor Biſhop (unfortunate only in being learned in ſuch a time of ignorance) was condemned of Hereſie. But Boniface might the rather be excuſed, in regard that many of his betters fell alſo on the ſelf-ſame error. For venerable Bede, a man whoſe Books Arch. Boniface was not worthy to carry, eſteemeth the opinion touching the Antipodes, to be no better than a Fable; neq; enim Antipodarum ullatenus eſt fabulis accommodandus aſſenſus, in his Book de Ratione temporum, cap. 32. And yet the marvel is the leſs, conſidering that he lived in the darker times of the Church, when the ſtate of learning was in its declination; when S. Auguſtine and Lactantius, and ſome others of the Ancient Writers, who lived when learning was at the very height, condemns this point of the Antipodes, for an incredible ridiculous Fable: whoſe words I could put down at large, did I think it neceſſary. So that we of theſe Ages have very good cauſe (to uſe the words of the late L. Verulam) to congratulate the preſent times, in that the World in theſe our days, have through-lights made in it, after a wonderful manner; whereby we clearly ſee thoſe things, which either were unknown, or but blindly gueſſed at by the Ancients.

But to proceed, the ſecond part of the Terreſtrial Globe is the Water, which making but one Globe with the Earth, is yet higher than it. This appears, firſt, becauſe it is a body not ſo heavy; Secondly, it is obſerved by Saylors that their Ships move faſter to the ſhore than from it; whereof no reaſon can be given but the height of the water above the land. Thirdly, to ſuch as ſtand on the ſhore, the Sea ſeems to ſwell into the form of a round hill, till it puts a bound upon our ſight. Now that the Sea hovering thus over and above the Earth, doth not over-whelm it, muſt be aſcribed only to his Power and Providence, who, hath made the waters to ſtand on a heap, who hath ſet them a bound that they ſhould not paſs, nor turn again to cover the Earth. The other affections and properties of the Sea, as motion, ſaltneſs, and the like, I willingly omit, as belonging rather to Philoſophers, than this preſent Argument.

The Sea or Water is divided into 1. Oceanus. 2. Mare. 3. Fretum. 4. Sinus. 5. Lacus. 6. Flumina.

Of which and other Waters thus ſaid Ovid in his Metamorphoſis.

Tum Freta diffudit, rapidiſq; tumeſcere ventis
Juſſit, & ambitæ circundare littora terræ.
Addidit & Fontes, & Stagna immenſa, Lacuſq;
Fluminaq; obliquis cinxit declivia ripis, &c.

Which may be Engliſhed to this purpoſe.

He ſpread the Seas, which then he did command
To ſwell with winds, and compaſs round the Land:
To thoſe he adds Springs, Ponds, and Lakes immenſe,
And Rivers, which their winding Borders ſenſe.
Of theſe not few Earths thirſty jaws devour,
The reſt their ſtreams into the Ocean pour;
When in that liquid Plain with freer Wave,
The foamy Cliffs inſtead of Banks they lave.

And

And first Oceanus, the Ocean, is that general Collection of all waters, which encompasseth the Earth on every side. A point which Ovid hath determined right enough, but laught at by Herodotus in the former times; who counted it a gross absurdity for any man to relate or write, that the Earth was round, or encompassed about with the main Ocean. But Modern Navigations have found that to be true, which he held ridiculous; and which the most learned in those times knew rather by conjecture than by demonstration. Nor were those Ages so acquainted with those ebbs and flowings of the Ocean, and all those other Seas and Rivers which have intercourse with it, as the meanest Sailor at the present. The natural causes of the which seeming so full of difficulty to the best of the Ancients, Experience hath taught us to ascribe wholly to the Moon; at whose Full and Prime the Tides are ever highest, and the Sea most furious. For as soon as the Moon cometh forth from under our Horizon, the Sea beginneth to swell, and floweth towards the East, (as it were to wait upon her, or bear her company) till she come unto the height of our Meridian: after which till her setting or Western fall, the Sea abateth or decreaseth; which we call the Ebb. And when she passeth out of our Horizon towards the Antipodes; the Ocean begins to swell till the height of Midnight, and coming towards our Hemisphere doth again abate. In brief, from the New Moon till the first quarter the Sea decreaseth; from the first quarter to the full it is said to spring: from the full to the last quarter it is said to nepe; and from the last quarter to the prime it springs again. As for the uncertainty of the Tides, varying every day, it is not so perplexed and intricate, but that they which live on the Banks or Shores thereof know well when to look for it; the next days Tide coming for the most part, one hour ten minutes after the time it hapned on the day fore-going.

2. Mare, the Sea, is a part of the main Ocean, to which we cannot come but through some Fretum or Straight; as Mare Mediterraneum. And it takes name, First, either from the adjacent shore, as Mare Adriaticum, from the City of Adria; Mare Terrhenum, from the Coast of Tuscany: Or, Secondly, from the first Discoverer, as Mare Magellanicum, from Magellanus, who first found it; Or, Thirdly, from some remarkable Accident, as Mare Icarium, from the drowning of Icarus, the son of Dædalus.

3. Fretum, a Straight is a part of the Ocean, penned within narrow bounds, and opening a way into some Sea, or out of some Sea into the Ocean, as the Straight of Hellespont, Gibralter, Fretum Davies, &c.

4. Sinus, a Creek or Bay, is a Sea contained within a crooked or circling shore, wherewith it is almost environed; as Sinus Persicus, Corinthiacus, &c. and this is sometimes called a Gulf, as the Gulf of Lepanto.

5. Lacus, a Lake, is a great body or collection of waters, which hath no visible intercourse with the Sea, or influx into it; as the Lake of Thrasymene in Italy; the Lacus Asphaltites, or the Dead Sea, in the Land of Canaan, And of this kind properly is the Mare Caspium, though by reason of the greatness of it, it is called a Sea.

6. Flumina, or Fluvius, is a Watercourse continually running, whereby it differeth from Stagnum, or a standing Pool, issuing from some Spring or Lake, and emptying it self into some part of the Sea or some other great River; the mouth or out-let of which is called Ostium: Tiberinaque longe Ostia, as the Poet hath it. These are conceived in the Earth, and derive both their birth and continual sustenance from the Air; which piercing the open chinks or Chasma's of the Earth, and congealed by the extream cold of that Element, dissolves into water (as we see the Air in winter-nights to be melted into a pearly dew, sticking on our glass windows): and being grown to some quantity, will (like Hannibal in the Alps) either find a way, or make a way to vent its superfluity. Which beginning is seconded by the Ocean, which running through the hidden passages of the Earth, joineth it self with this aerial vapour, and continueth the begun current. This Sea-water (though in it self of a salt and brackish savour, yet) passing through divers windings and turnings of the Earth, is deprived of all unpleasantness; and by how much the spring-heads of Rivers are remote from the Sea, by so much usually are their waters affected with a delightful relish. Rivers having thus entred themselves into a good course, are never without the assistance of neighbouring springs and waters; by whose addition they augment their streams, till they dischanel themselves into the Sea. Now there is of Rivers a treble use: First, that out of them Drink may be afforded to man and beast; Secondly, that running through the Earth, as blood through the body, by interlacing it, and sometimes overwhelming it, it might make the Earth able to produce those fruits which are necessary for the life of man. The last use of Rivers, is, easiness and speediness of conduct; and hereto are required four conditions: First the depth, because deep waters sustain the bigger burdens, and on them navigation is more safe. Secondly, pleasantness, whereby the passage is easie both with the stream and against it: whereas in Rivers of a violent current or such as fall down by great Locks or Cataracts, the sailing or rowing up the water is as dangerous as laborious. Thirdly, the thickness of the water; for by how much the more slimy and gross a water is, by so much can it carry the heavier burdens. So Tiber, a River of more fame than depth, or breadth, is better for navigation, by reason of its fatness, than the pure and thin waters of the large and excellent River Nilus. Fourthly, the broadness of the Chanel, that Ships and other Vessels may conveniently winde and turn, and give way to each other. Some of the old Philosophers reputed this conduct so dangerous, that one of them being asked whether he thought the living or the dead were the greater number, would not declare himself, because he knew not in which rank to place such as were at Sea. And Cato Major thought that men never committed greater folly in their lives than in venturing to go by water, when they might have gone by land. I am none of that Sect, yet I cannot but hold with him that said, Dulcissima est ambulatio prope aquas, navigatio juxta terram.

The chief Rivers of Europe, are Danubius, and the Rhene; of Affrica, Nilus, and Niger; of Asia, Ganges, and Euphrates; of America, Orenoque, and Maragnan. Of which and others, more in its proper place.

Thus have we gone over these particulars both of Earth and Water, which are considerable in Geography, and come within the compass of those Annexaries of each which Ptolomy calleth τὰ συνημμένα: And having so done, may discover where the difference lieth between Geography and Chorography; which to some men, not rightly looking into the nature of both, seem to be the same. For howsoever a Chorographer doth describe a Country by the bounds, Rivers, Hils, and most notable Cities; yet it is still but the description of some place or Country, and not of the whole Earth universally, which is the proper work of a Geographer. So that Chorography differeth from Geography as a part from the whole: that being as Ptolomy doth very handsomly expres it, like the painting of an eye or an ear, or some other member; this, as the picturing of the head, or whole body of Man. But Geography in its full latitude comprehendeth not Chorography only, but Topography & Hydrography also.

Of

Of these the last is the delineation of the Sea by its several Names, Ports, Promontories, Creeks, and other affections; as also of great Lakes and Rivers: which is most necessary for the use of Mariners, and is best done by Petrus de Medina, Peter Nonnius in his Regula Artis Navigandi, and Johannes Aurigarius in his Speculum Nauticum; the chief Writers in the Art of Pilotism.

2. Topography is the description of some particular place or City; of which kind was the Book of Stephanus, περὶ πόλεων, or de Urbibus, among the Antients; and the Theatrum Urbium written by Bruinus in these later times; Stows Book of the Survey of London, the French Antiquities de Paris, and such as these. And of this kind is the description of the Vale of Tempe, in the greater Ortelius; and those of the Elysian fields, the gardens of Alcinous, and the Hesperides in the antient Poets.

3. Chorography (as before was said) is the exact description of some Kingdom, Country, or particular Province of the same; unless this last may fall more properly under the notion of Topography. Of this kind the description of the several estates of Greece written by Pausanias, is of most use & reputation of all the Ancients: as that of Cambden Clarenceux, for the Isle of Britain; of Lewis Guicciardine, for the Low-Countries; Leander for Italy, &c. are amongst the Modern.

4. Geography, finally is an aggregate of all these together, borrowing from Hydrography the description of Seas and Waters; From Topography, that of Towns, Cities, and particular places; and from Chorography, the delineations of Regions, Provinces, and Kingdoms, which brought into body, make up that Portraicture or Picture of the whole Earth, and every considerable part thereof, in writing; which, according to Ptolom's definition before mentioned, is properly and truly called Geography. In the advancement of which studies, those which have took most pains, with the greatest benefit to Posterity, are the said Ptolomy, Pliny, and Strabo for the elder times; Mercator, Maginus, and Ortelius, for the later Ages. Of which the two first lived in the times of Antonius Pius, the Roman Emperor, An. Chr. 141: or thereabouts; the other in the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, the unworthy Successor of Augustus: the three last flourishing in the days of our Fathers, about some 80 years ago.

Thus have I briefly summed up those general Præcognita, which I conceive are necessary to the knowledge and understanding as well of History as of Geography. Out of which two compounded and intermixt, ariseth that universal Comprehension of Natural and Civil story, which by a proper and distinct name may be termed Cosmography. And this may well be reckoned amongst mixed stories; for it hath from Natural History or Geography, the Regions themselves, together with their Sites, and several Commodities; from Civil History, Habitations, Governments, and Manners; and from the Mathematicks, the Climates and Configurations of the Heavens, under which the Coasts and Quarters of the World do lie. Of the Utility and Excellency of which study I need say no more, than what hath been already spoken of the several parts, whereof this is only the Result, desiring pardon of the Reader, that I have Christened these imperfect and unworthy Papers by so noble a name; which I desire they may deserve, though I fear they will not. However I will give the venture, and make as speedy and as profitable a discovery, as the times enable me, of the whole World, and the most observable things therein; according to the best light which the reading of Histories and Geographical discourses hath supplied me with; beseeching him who made the World, and ordereth all the Governments and Affairs thereof as to him seems best, to bless me in the undertaking; and furnish me with fit Abilities both of strength and judgment to go through with it. Ipse enim est qui operatur in nobis & velle & perficere; as the Scripture hath it: And so on in God's name.

WORLD:

EUROPE.

OF the Creation of the World by Almighty God, and the Plantation of the same by the Sons of Men, sufficient hath been spoken already. We are to look upon it now, as perfected and peopled in all parts thereof, but all those parts united into one Compositum; called therefore by the Græcians, Τὸ Πᾶν, and Τὸ Ὅλον, because the Summa Totalis, and general comprehension of all things existent. In which respect 'tis called by the Latins, Universum, a name of multitude, but of a multitude united (Universi qui in uno loco versi, say the old Grammarians.) The great body of the World, like the body of Man, though it have many parts and members, is but one body only. A body of so perfect & exact a form, of so compleat a Symmetry in respect of the particular parts, and all those parts so beautified and adorned by the God of Nature; that from the elegancy and beauties of it, it was called Κόσμος by the Græcians, and Mundus by the Latins; both names declaring the Composure of it to be full of Ornament; and all those Ornaments conducting Mankind to the knowledge of God. For (as the Christian Advocate reasoneth very strongly), As he which comes into an house, and seeth all things in it ordered in a beautiful and comely order; utrisus præesse crederet Dominum, &c. must needs conceive, both that the house had some wise Lord and Master who had so contrived it, and that such Lord and Master of it was of more worth and excellency than the house and furniture: So (saith he) whosoever doth observe the most eminent beauties of the Heaven and Earth, must needs conceive there is some great and more glorious power who did first create it; disposing of all things therein in such excellent manner.

This Contemplation, together with the notions of a Deity, which naturally are ingrafted in the soul of man; hath trained up all men in the practice of some Religion, though few (comparatively) so happy as to be practised in the true. For though the knowledge and worship of the true God, by reason of some accessions in America, and the Indies, be more generally diffused than in former times; yet is the least part of the World possessed by them who make profession of that Worship. For dividing the whole World into thirty parts, it hath been found by such as have laboured in this search, that nineteen of them are inhabited by Idolaters, who either know no God at all, or worship stocks and stones for gods, even the work of mens hands. Of the 11 parts which are remaining, six are possessed by Jews, Turks, and Sarazens; who though they have the knowledge of the God that made them, yet abnegating, or not worshipping the Lord that bought them, they have no part or portion in the true Religion. Then for the five which are behind, two are conceived to be of the Greek Communion; the other three being divided betwixt those of the Church of Rome, and such as otherwise differing in some opinions, pass generally by the name of Protestant or Reformed Churches, Which as it sheweth how small a portion of the World is possessed by Christians, who only (though not all of them) have reason to pretend to the true Religion: So doth it shew (I note this only by the way) how falsly those of Rome make multitude of Professors to be a sign of the True Church; and then conceive themselves to be such a multitude, as corresponds unto that sign. Faulty, alike both in the Position and the Application. For if the multitude of Professors be a sign of the Church, the true Church should be found rather amongst the Heathens or Mahumetans, than amongst the Christians: or if they do restrain their meaning (as I hope they do) to those who make profession of the Christian faith: those of the Greek Communion, possessing two whole parts of five, will be found more numerous than the members of the Church of Rome, though possibly of less esteem in the eye of the World. So infinitely vain was that brag of Bellarmine (though otherwise more modest than the rest of the Jesuits) affirming positively and expressly, Romanam Ecclesiam universum plane orbem possidere, i. e. That the Church of Rome is fully of as large a latitude as the World it self. This I have noted by the way, intending to take a more special notice of the state of Religion in the several Provinces of the World, to which now I hasten; premising first this scheme of those several parts, into which it doth now stand divided.

The World is divided into two parts; Unknown, or not fully discovered; and is divided commonly into Borealis and Australis: the last taking up the whole Southern Continent; the other lying on the North of Europe and America; whereof we shall say somewhat at the end of this Work.

Known, either { Anciently, as { Europe. Asia. Africa. } Lately, as America.

Europe is joined to Asia, by that space of Earth which is between the heads of Tanais and Duina; Asia is joyned to Africk, by the Egyptian Isthmus; America is divided (as most conjecture) from all of them. Europe is separated from Asia, by a line drawn from the Bay of St. Nicolas, to the head of Tanais, from thence by that River it self all the length of his course; then by Palus Meotis, the Euxine Sea, the Thracian Bosphorus, the Propontis, the Hellespont, and the Ægæan. Asia is parted from Africk by the Red-Sea, or Gulf of Arabia: and Africa from Europe by the Mediterranean. Africa is greater than Europe, Asia than Africk, America than Asia.

They which have entertained a fancy of resembling every Country to things more obvious to the sight and understanding, have likened Europe to a Dragon; the head of which they make to be Spain; the two wings Italy, and Denmark. In like manner they have been curiously impertinent, in resembling France, to a Lozenge or Rhomboides; Belgium to a Lion; Britain to an Ax; Ireland to an Egg; Peloponnesus to a Plantane leaf; Spain to an Ox-hide spread on the ground; Italy (which indeed holdeth best proportion) to a mans Leg; with divers the like Phantasms of a capricious brain; these Countries no more resembling them, than pictures made when painting was in her infancy, under which they were fain to write, This is a Lion, and this is a Whale, for fear the spectators might have taken one for a Cock, and the other for a Cat.

EUROPE, though the least (as being in length but 2800, in breadth but 1200 miles) is yet of most renown amongst us. First, because of the temperature of the Air, and fertility of the soyl; Secondly, from the study of Arts, both ingenious and mechanical; Thirdly, because of the Roman and Greek Monarchies; Fourthly, from the purity and sincerity of the Christian Faith; Fifthly, because we dwell in it, and so first place it.

EUROPE is generally said to be so called from Europa, the daughter of Agenor, King of the Phœnicians, brought thence by Jupiter (as the Poets feign) in the shape of a Bull; or as some Histories say, by a Cretan Captain named Taurus: as others in a ship whose beak had the portraiture of a Bull upon it. But why the bringing of that Lady into the Isle of Crete, should give denomination to the whole Continent of Europe, whereof that Island is so inconsiderable, and so small a part, I must confess I see no reason. Goropius Becanus, who holds the high Dutch to be the primitive language, which was spoke in Paradise, and loves to fetch all names from thence; not thinking it convenient, that Europe being first inhabited by Gomerians or Cimbrians, should be beholding to the Græcians for its name; will have it called Europe, quasi Ver-hop, by the transposition of the two last letters; Ver, signifying excellent, and hop a multitude (whence we use to say, as thick as Hops) because Europe contains a multitude of excellent people. And on the other side, Bochartus, a French Writer, loving as much to bring all names from the Phœnician or Punick tongue, will have it called Europe from Ur-appa, which signifieth in that language, a beautiful Countenance, because the Europæans much excelled the Africans in whiteness of skin, and clearness of complexion. But in my mind Herodotus hath best determined of the controversie, who telleth us plainly, Ὁκόθεν τὸ ὄνομα τοῦτο, ἔτε ὅστις ἦν ὁ δόμενος, &c. That it is utterly unknown, both whence it had the name of Europe, and who first called it so. And yet considering there is a Province in Thrace called Europe, (whereof more hereafter) why might not the Asiaticks give the name of Europe to this part of the World, according to the name of that Province which lay neerest to them? as the Romans did the name of Africk to the other part of the World, after the name of that particular Province or part thereof, which they first brought under their obedience? Or as the Europæans gave the name of Asia, to the greatest of the three known parts of the World; which properly and originally belonged unto Asia Minor (as it since was called); or rather to those parts thereof which lay next to Greece; as shall be shewn hereafter in convenient place.

The first inhabitants of Europe, as hath been shewn in part already, and shall be shewn more fully in its proper place, were the Sons of Japhet; amongst whom, as the Scripture telleth us, The Isles of the Gentiles were divided, Gen. 10. 5. which includes all the Continent of Europe, and the Isles adjoining. For besides, that it is compassed about with the Cyclades and other Isles in the Seas of Greece, together with the Isles of Candy, Sicily, Sardinia, Corsica, the Isles of Britain and Zealand, with their young ones adjacent; Europe it self was formerly taken for an Island; as being invironed round with water, saving where it is joined on the North-East to Asia the great, which very few of the Antients were acquainted with. And what are the great Countries of Anatolia, Greece, Spain, and Italy, all which did fall to the posterity of Japhet, but so many Peninsula's, or Demi-Islands, invironed almost round with one Sea or other? Nor was the name and memory of Japhet so much forgotten by the Children which descended of him; but that the Greeks, who were the first of their Europæan Plantations, retained it a long time in their Japetus, whom they make to be the son of Cœlum and Terra, and the father of the wise Prometheus, whom Ovid therefore calleth satus Japeto, in the first Book of his Metamorphosis. So that we see how punctually the first part of Gods blessing was fulfilled upon him; which was, that he would inlarge the borders of Japhet, Gen. 9. 27. The second part thereof, that he should dwell in the Tents of Sem, though it was long before it came to the accomplishment, yet it came at last; and that both in the literal and mystical sense. First, in the literal, when the posterity of Japhet, both Greek and Romans, made themselves Masters of Judæa, or the Land of Canaan, and the Eastern parts, promised to, and possessed by, the seed of Sem: Next in the mystical, when God was pleased to break down the partition-wall, and to incorporate the Gentiles of the house of Japhet, into the body of the Church: which for a long time was restrained to the Line of Sem, Europe may be considered as it stands divided into the Continent, and the Islands: the Continent lying all together; the Islands as they are dispersed in the Greek, Ægæan, Cretan and Ionian Seas, the Adriatick and the Mediterranean, and in the British & Northern Ocean. But in this work we shall discover them, and discourse of them in this following order, dividing Europe into 1 Italy, 2 the Alps, 3 France, 4 Spain, 5 Britain, 6 Belgium, 7 Germany, 8 Denmark, 9 Swethland, 10 Russia, 11 Poland, 12 Hungary.

gary, 13 Sclavonia, 14 Dacia, and 15 Greece; and ſpeak of the ſeveral Iſlands, as they relate to ſome or other of theſe greater Countries.

In all which Countries and Iſlands belonging to them, beſides the Latine Tongue which is now rather Scholaſtical, than National; and beſides the Italian, French, and Spaniſh, being but as ſo many corruptions of the Latine: and beſides the Engliſh which is a Compound of Dutch, Latine, and French; there are in all fourteen Mother-Tongues, which owe nothing at all to the Roman; that is to ſay, 1 Iriſh, ſpoken in Ireland, and the Weſt of Scotland; 2 Britiſh, or Welch, in Wales, and ſome parts of Cornwal; 3 Cantabrian, or Baſquiſh, in Biſcay, about the Pyrenæan Hills, and near to the Cantabrian Ocean; 4 Arabick, in the Mountains of Granada, called Alpuxarras; 5 Finnick, in Finland and Lapland, Provinces of the Crown of Sweden; 6 Dutch, (though with different Dialects) in Germany, Belgium, Denmark, Norway, Swethland; 7 Cauchian, which the Eaſt-Friezlanders (or Cauchi) ſpeak amongſt themſelves, though to ſtrangers they ſpeak the Common Dutch, 8 Sclavoniſh, in Sclavonia, Poland, Hungary, and almoſt all the parts of the Turkiſh Empire; 9 Illyrian, on the Eaſt ſide of Iſtria, and the Iſle of Veggia; 10 Greek, in moſt Provinces and Iſles of Greece, by the Greeks themſelves; 11 Hungarian, and 12 Epirotique, in the mountanous places of thoſe Countries; 13 Jazygian, on the North-ſide of Hungary, betwixt Danubius and Tibiſcus, and 14 Tartarian, in the Taurca Cherſoneſus, and other Europæan parts of that barbarous people. And this ſhall ſerve for Europe in the general notion. Deſcend we now to the particular Kingdoms, Regions, and Iſlands of it; beginning firſt of all with Italy, contrary to the uſage of moſt Geographers; who commonly begin with Spain, or Ireland, as being the furtheſt Countries Weſtward, and conſequently neareſt to the firſt Meridian, from whence the Longitude was reckoned. Which we ſhall do by reaſon of that great influence which the Romans had in moſt parts of Europe, and many parts of the World beſides, in matters as well Civil and Eccleſiaſtical, which much depended on the power of that Empire, formerly, and on the uſurpations of that Church in the later days.

ITALY.

ITALY once the Empreſs of the greateſt part of the (then known) World, is compaſſed with the Adriatick, Ionian, and Tyrrhenian Seas, except it be towards France and Germany, from which it is parted by the Alps; ſo that it is in a manner a Peninſula or Demi-Iſland. But more particularly it hath on the Eaſt, the lower part of the Adriatick, and the Ionian Sea, by which it is divided from Greece; on the Weſt the River Varus, and ſome part of the Alps, by which it is parted from France; on the North, in ſome part the Alps which divide it from Germany; and on the other parts the Adriatick, which divides it from Dalmatia; and on the South the Tyrrhenian or Tuſcan Seas, by which it is ſeparated from the main land of Africa.

It containeth in length from Auguſta Prætoria (now called Aoſt) at the foot of the Alps, unto Otranto in the moſt Eaſtern point of the Kingdom of Naples, 1020. miles: in breadth from the River Varo, which parts it from Provence, to the mouth of the River Arſia in Friuli, where it is broadeſt, 410 miles; about Otranto where it is narroweſt, not above 25 miles; and in the middle parts from the mouth of Peſcara in the Adriatick or upper Sea, to the mouth of Tiber in the Tuſcan or Lower Sea, 126 miles. The whole compaſs by Sea, reckoning in the windings and turnings of the ſhore, comes to 3038 miles; which added to the 410 miles which it hath by Land, make up in all 3448 miles. But if the Coaſt on each ſide be reckoned by a ſtraight Line, then it falls very ſhort of this proportion, amounting in the total, as Caſtaldo computes it, to no more than 2550 miles. The whole Country lyeth under the fifth and ſixth Climates of the Northern temperate Zone, which it wholly taketh up: ſo that the longeſt day in the moſt Northern parts is fifteen hours, and three fifth parts of an hour; the longeſt in the Southern parts, falling ſhort a full hour and no more of that length.

But theſe dimenſions muſt be underſtood of Italy in the preſent latitude, and extent thereof, and not as it was called and counted in the times of the Romans, neither in the growth nor flouriſhing fortunes of that State; the bounds of Italy on the Weſt, and North-weſtern parts being then the River Rubicon, which runneth into the Adriatick, not far from Ravenna, and the River Arno, which runneth into the Tyrrhenian Seas, by the Port of Ligorn. All that lay Weſt-wards towards the Alps, as it was poſſeſſed by the Gauls, ſo it had alſo the name of Gallia, and, for diſtinctions ſake, of Gallia Ciſ-Alpina, and Togata, whereof we ſhall ſpeak more when we come to Lombardy. And it continued, (though a Province of the Roman Empire) diſtinct from Italy, until the Empire of Auguſtus; who dividing Italy for the better Government thereof into eleven Provinces or Regions, divided Gallia Ciſ-Alpina into ſeveral parts, (whereof more anon) and reckoned them as Provinces or Members of the body of Italy.

The names hereof ſo bounded as before, are ſaid to have been very many, according to their ſeveral Nations which were anciently of moſt power and authority in it; or to the ſeveral fancies of the Name giver: whereof ſome being the names only of particular Provinces, were by a Metonymy, taken for, and applyed to the whole. Of this laſt ſort, to omit others of leſs note, were Latium, and Auſonia; the Auſones being a people dwelling about Cales a Town of Campania; and Latium, that particular Province which lyeth on the Eaſt of Tiber, ſo called, as moſt Writers are of opinion, a latendo, from hiding; becauſe Saturn being driven from Crete by Jupiter, hic latebat abditus, did here live concealed;

Maluit, his quoniam latuiſſet tutus in oris, as the Poet hath it

Nor was this Virgils fancy only, but a Tradition generally followed and allowed of by the greateſt Writers, as by Eutropius, and Herodian and by Minucius Felix alſo, though Varro pretending to more than ordinary knowledge in Antiquity, would have it called Latium, quod lateat inter præcipitia Alpium & Apennini, as Servius in his notes on Virgil, becauſe it lyeth hidden (as it were) under the Præcipices of the Alps and Apennine hills; which cannot poſſibly be ſaid of Italy properly and antiently ſo called, no part whereof came near the Alps. The more generall names of the whole Country, were, 1. Heſperia, from Heſperus the ſon of Atlas, as the Poets ſay, or rather, as Macrobius is of opinion, from Heſperus the Evening Star, as being ſeated Weſtward in regard of Greece. 2. Oenotria, either from the abundance and excellency of the Wines, Wine being called οἶνος by the Grecians; or, as moſt think, from Oenotrius an Arcadian King, one of the firſt Planters of the Country: And 3. Italia, the name at firſt of that part of this Continent which was afterward called Calabria; ſhut up firſt between Golfo de Chilaci (called antiently Sinus Scylleticus) on the South; and Sinus Lameticus, part of the Bay or Golf Golf of Tarentum, on the south side of it, For so saith Aristotle in the seventh Book of his Politicks, Cap. 10. Τὴν ἀκτὴν ταύτην τῆς Εὐρώπης Ἰταλίαν τῷ ὀνόματι λαβεῖν, &c. That is to say, That part of Europe which lieth between the Bay Scylleticus and the Bay Lameticus, took the name of Italie, the Golfs being distant from each other about half a days journey. And this Tradition he received (as he there affirmeth) from the best Antiquaries of that Country. The like occurs in Dionysius Halicarnassæus, out of Antiochus Syracusanus, a more antient Author; the like in Strabo, lib. 6. So named from Italus, a chief Commander of some Nations; who first setled here, and by degrees communicated to the rest of this Continent. Of these three last, thus the Poet Virgil.

Est locus, Hesperiam Graii cognomine dicunt,
Terra antiqua, potens armis, atq; ubere gleba,
Oenotrii coluere viri; nunc Fama, minores
Italiam dixisse, ducis de nomine, Gentem.

Which may be Englished in these words;

That which the Greeks Hesperia call'd, a place Great both in Arms and Wealth, first planted was
By the Oenotrians: since, if Fame not lie,
Was from their Chieftain's name call'd Italie.

Who and from whence this Italus was, we shall see ere long. Mean time we will take notice of the concent or harmony, which is betwixt Aristotle and this Poet: it being said by Aristotle in the seventh of his Politicks, cap. 10. that Italus having taught the Oenotrians the Arts of Husbandry, who before were wandring Shepherds only, he caused them by his own name to be called Italians. Let us next take a view of those honourary Attributes which have been given unto this Country, so denominated from him; by Æthicus, called Regina Mundi, the Queen or Empress of the World; by Mamertinus one of the old Panegyrists, Gentium Domina, the Mistress of the Nations; by others, Paradisus Mundi, the terrestrial Paradise. But what need more be said than is spoken by Pliny, who hath adorned Italy with this following Panegyrick? Italia terrarum omnium alumna, eadem & parens, numine Deum electa quæ Cœlum ipsum clarius faceret; sparsa congregaret imperia, ritus molliret, tot populorum discordes linguas sermonis commercio ad colloquia distraheret, & humanitati hominem daret. Italy (saith he) the Parent, and withal the Foster-child of all other Nations, was elected by the Providence of the Gods, to make (if possible) the very Heavens themselves more famous; to gather the scattered Empires of the World into one body, to temper the barbarous Rites of uncivilized people, to unite the disagreeing languages of so many men by the benefit of one common tongue; and in a word, to restore man to his humanity. A very high Encomion doubtless; and yet not much more than the place deserves, with reference to the times when the Author lived.

The People antiently, (and to this day they still partake somewhat of those qualities) were wary of behaviour, sparing of expence, and most greedy of glory, according unto that of Tully, Semper appetentes gloriæ præter cæteras nationes sunt Romani; by which he doth not mean those only who lived within the walls of the City of Rome, but also their Italian neighbours and associates, Romans by priviledge and freedom, though not by birth. They have twice given the Law to the fairest, and most puissant parts of the World; once by their Valour, when the greatest part of the (then known) World was brought under the obedience of the State of Rome, the standing body of whose Armies was principally compounded of Italian bands: And secondly by their Wit, by which they have subdued a great part of Christendom, to the obedience of the Pope and Court of Rome, the standing body of whose Council (though he have Ministers of all tempers and Nations) do specially consist of Italian Heads. In former times here lived the renowned Captains, Camillus the Sword, and Fabius Maximus the Buckler of Rome; the two Scipioes, one of which subdued Africk, and the other Asia; Pompey the great, who extended the Roman Empire Eastwards to the banks of Euphrates; Cæsar, the greater of the two, enlarging it Westward to the British, and the Belgick Ocean; besides infinite others of less note in respect of these, though most deserving in themselves. Here flourished also the famous Orators, Cicero, Hortensius, and Antonius; the renowned Historians, Livy, Tacitus, and Salustius; the memorable Poets Virgil, Ovid, Catullus, Tibulus, and Propertius; Plautus, and Terence the Comedians; the Satyrists, Horace, Juvenal, and Persius. So equally were they favoured both by Mars and the Muses, that it is not easie to determine whether they were most eminent in Arts or Arms. What men of special eminence it hath since produced, we shall see hereafter, when we are come to take a view of Italy as it stands at present; and to that place we shall defer our Observations of the Air, and disposition of the Soil, with such other particulars as have received little or no alteration in the change of times.

Italy was antiently divided, as most Countries else, into Tribes and Nations, as the Latines, Sabines, Tuscans, Samnites, Campani, Picentini, Piceni, Ligures, Tarentini, Lucani, and others of inferior note; whom we shall meet with in the description of those several States into which it doth now stand divided. But all those Nations being severally vanquished by the Roman puissance, and made up into one body, whereof Rome was the head; it pleased Augustus to divide it into eleven Regions, as before was said, that is to say, Liguria, Hetruria, Latium, Campania, Umbria, Samnium, the Picenum, Gallia, Italia, Transpadana, Venetia, and Histria. In the time of the Emperour Antoninus, the Provinces of Italy were encreased to sixteen, the bounds of the former Regions being somewhat altered; and the three Isles of Sicily, Corsica, and Sardinia, with the two Rhetia's, first and second, added to the number. But this distribution also received some change in the time of Constantine the Great who altering both the names and bounds of the former Provinces, and adding one more to them, made seventeen in all, that is to say, 1. Tuscia and Umbria, 2. Picenum Suburbicarium, 3. Campania, 4. Apulia and Calabria, 5. Valeria, 6. Samnium, 7. Lucania and the Brutii, 8. Sicily, 9. Corsica, and 10. Sardinia, which made up the præfecture of the City of Rome; 11. Flaminia and Picenum Annonarium, 12, Venetiæ, 13. Æmylia 14. Liguria, 15. Alpes Cottiæ, 16. Rhætia prima, and 17. Rhætia secunda, which made up the Diocese of Italy, properly and especially so called, whereof Millain was first the Metropolitan City, Aquileia afterwards.

The Language heretofore was divers, according to the several Provinces and people of it. In Apulia, they used the Messapian tongue, in that which is now called Calabria, they spake the Greek; in Hetruria, they used the Tuscan; and the Latin in Latium: which last so altered in short time, by reason of the commerce they had with the conquered Nations, that the Articles of the Peace made between the Romans and Carthaginians, at the expulsion of the Tarquins, could not be understood (as Polybius saith) by the best Antiquaries of his time. And yet the time between the making of those Articles, and the time of Polybius, who was contemporary porary with Scipio Africanus, paſſed not above 300 years. That the Latin tongue was afterwards at any time ſpoke generally in all parts of the Roman Empire, or of Italy it ſelf, as I ſee ſome hold, I can by no means be perſwaded; it being by ſpecial favour granted to the Cumans, dwelling but an hundred miles from the Walls of Rome, that they ſhould uſe the Roman Language: which had been a meer mockery, and no mark of favour at all, if the Italian people dwelling out of Latium had uſed it formerly. And yet this hapned not above 140 years before the times of the Emperors, at what time the Romans were Lords of Italy, Sicily, Sardinia, Corſica, and a great part of Spain. It's true, the Latin tongue in ſucceeding times came to be underſtood in moſt parts of Italy, by reaſon of the Roman Colonies which were planted among them (being in all no fewer than 150) and their continual reſort to Rome on their ſeveral buſineſſes: it being a great point of the Roman State, not only to have their Laws written, and judgment pronounced by the Prætors for the ſeveral Provinces, in the Latin only; but to give audience in the open Senate to none who came thither from the ſubject Nations, ſave only in the Latin tongue, their own proper language. Yet for all this, it never grew to ſuch extent as to be the Language of the whole Empire, no nor of Italy it ſelf, no more than the Engliſh tongue is natural or national to the Welch, or Iriſh, though it be generally underſtood (for the very ſame reaſons) by all of the better ſort both in Wales and Ireland. In which regard I am not of their opinion, who think that the Italian (as the French and Spaniſh) are nothing but corruptions of the Latin tongues, occaſioned by the inundations of the barbarous Nations: But rather that the Latin words which occur therein, proceeded from that weak impreſſion which the Latin tongue had made amongſt them, whilſt they were under the obedience of that puiſſant Empire; and that the Italian tongue, as it is now ſpoken, could not receive ſo great a change from the Barbarous Nations, none of which tarried long amongſt them, but the Goths, and Lombards; nor they ſo long (the Lombards not at all in the Eaſtern parts) as to be either the occaſions or authors of the alteration. So that the preſent language of Italy is a decompound, made up epecially of Latin and the old Italian: ſome notions of the Lombard being mixt with it in the North, and Weſt, ſome of the Gothiſh, in the middeſt, about Rome it ſelf, and not a little of the Greek, in the Eaſt of Naples.

And as the Language ſo the Religion of the Country, hath received ſome change. The Chriſtian Faith was firſt preached in Rome it ſelf, and in Rome firſt preached by Saint Peter, who came thither in or about the beginning of the Empire of Claudius. The two Apoſtles Peter and Paul, are generally ſaid by the antient Writers, to be the firſt who preached the Goſpel in that City. A duobus Apoſtolis Petro & Paulo, Romæ fundata & conſtituta eſt Eccleſia, ſaith the old Father Irenæus, Lib. 4. Cap. 3. To one of theſe, the firſt preaching of the Goſpel there is to be referred; both being Biſhops of that City: That is to ſay, St. Peter of the Churches of the Circumciſion; St. Paul of thoſe which conſiſted ſpecially of the Gentiles. Now that the Goſpel was preached there before Paul's coming, is evident by his Epiſtle written to the Romans, at Cenchrea the Port-Town of Corinth, ſix years at leaſt before his being brought to Rome; in which he teſtified that their Faith was famous over all the World; and therefore could not count him who had never been there, for the planter of it: And as St. Peter was the firſt Preacher of the Goſpel at Rome, ſo ſent he his Diſciples to promulgate it in moſt parts of Italy. The Roman Martyrologies reckon up eight Biſhops of St. Peter's making, for ſo many of the principal Cities of this Country: that is to ſay, Epaphroditus (not he whom St. Paul ſpeaks of in his Epiſtle to the Philippians) for Terracina, of old called Anxur, Hirmageras for Aquileia, Paulinus for Luca, Apollinaris for Ravenna, Marcus for Atina, Proſdocimus for Padua, Marcianus for Syracuſe, and Pancratius for Tauromenium in the Iſle of Sicily. But whether St. Peter planted it, or St. Paul watered it, certain I am that GOD only gave it the increaſe. It could not elſe have proſpered under ſuch a Tyranny, as many, if not moſt of the Roman Emperors did earneſtly endeavour to ſuppreſs it with. But Sanguis Martyrum ſemen Eccleſiæ; the watering of it with the blood of ſo many Martyrs, made it grow the faſter. And this ſmall grain of Muſtard-ſeed waxed ſo great a Tree, as over-ſhadowed all the Provinces of that mighty Empire; and did not only ſtand it out againſt all Tempeſts, but in concluſion did ſuppreſs that Superſtition and Idolatry, for whoſe ſake all thoſe Princes, till the time of Conſtantine, did more or leſs, labour to deſtroy it. How much it had receded ſince thoſe times from its primitive purity, and how it did degenerate into Worldy pomp, and Secular policy, by the deſign and arts of thoſe who boaſt themſelves to be Succeſſors to that great Apoſtle, ſhall be a little touched at, in the ſtory of the Roman Papacy. Suffice it in this place to ſay, that all the people of this Country, partly in reference to the Pope, partly for fear of the Inquiſition, and partly by being kept in ignorance of the Proteſtant Doctrine (of which they are taught to believe many monſtrous things) are all of the Religion of the Church of Rome.

But though the Fountains of the waters of Eternal life, have either been ſtopped, or elſe corrupted by the Popes of Rome; the Rivers which do water this moſt flouriſhing Garden, ſtill preſerve their beds, and run unmixed and uncorrupted in the ſame Chanels, as before they did. And of theſe Italy hath as many as any one Country, but none of any long courſe, by reaſon that all parts of it are ſo near ſome Sea; moſt of which riſing from the Alpes, or the Apennine Hills, by melting of the Snows in Winter and caſualty of Land-floods at other times of the year, do often overflow the Country, and for the moſt part leave an ill Air behind them. Thoſe of chief note are, 1 The River Po or Padus (the Greeks call it Eridanus) into which Phaeton is ſaid to have been drenched when he fell from Heaven. It ariſeth in the Alpes, runneth through Lombardy, which it divideth into Ciſpadanam and Tranſpadanam; and having taken in thirty leſſer ſtreams, falls with ſeven mouths into the Adriatick Sea not far from Venice. 2 Rubicon, now called Piſſatello, anciently the North-bound of Italy; Hic fluvius quandam Italiæ finis, as it is in Pliny. It runneth into the Adriatick Sea not far from Rimini, or Ariminum, now the Port-town to Ravenna, the Haven of Ravenna being long ſince choked; but of this River more in another place. 3 Arnus, which riſing in the Apennine falleth in to the Tuſcan Sea, and anciently divided Italy on that ſide from the Ciſalpine Galls: on the banks hereof ſtandeth the fair City of Florence. 4 Ticinus, which gave name to the City of Pavy called of old Ticinum; it riſeth in the Alpes, and emptieth it ſelf into the Lake called Lacus Verbanus. 5 Liris now called Gariglia, ſtained with the blood of French and Spaniards, in their quarrels for the Realm of Naples, and no leſs unfortunatly memorable for the drowning of Peter de Medices. 6 Cuique fuit rerum promiſſa potentia, Tibris.

And Tiber, unto which was given
The power of all things under Heaven.

It

It riſeth from the Apennine Hills, not far from Aretium (now Arezzo) a Town of Tuſcany (which it parted from the Roman Latium, and the Land of the Sabines) and gliding gently near Cita de Caſtello, Perugia, and the old Ocriculum, paſſeth by Rome, and falleth into the Tuſcan or lower Sea, at Oſtia. Here is alſo, 7. The Lake of Thraſymene, near which Annibal defeated Flaminius the Conſul and his whole Army, opening thereby his paſſage to the gates of Rome; and 8. The famous River of Metaurus, where the Romans overcame Aſdrubal the Brother of Annibal, and thereby made a way to the ruin of Carthage. Others of leſs note ſhall be mentioned in their proper places.

As for the Mountains of this Country, thoſe of moſt note are the Alps, and the Apennine, of which the reſidue in a manner are but ſpurs and branches. Of theſe the Alps being alſo appertaining to France and Germany, or rather containing many large and entire Provinces which belong to neither, deſerves a Tractate by it ſelf. The Apennine, being proper only to this Country, but ſo that it relates to many and particular Provinces of it, ſhall be ſpoken of here. A ledge of Hills which take beginning near Savona, a Town of the Commonwealth and Country of Genoa, ſituate on the Mediterranean, and fetching a little compaſs Northwards, extend to the furtheſt part of Italy, dividing it almoſt in the very midſt: that part thereof which lyeth towards the Tyrrhenian, or Tuſcan Sea, being called Ciſapennina; Tranſapennina, that which lies towards the Adriatick. Paſſing in one entire body as far as Aſcoli, a Town of Marca Anconitana (a Province belonging to the Pope) where they are at the higheſt; it is there parted into two horns or branches, whereof one runs out to the mount of Gargano, and ſo unto the Land of Otranto; the other ſpreadeth it ſelf as far as Calabria, thoſe being the moſt Eaſtern Provinces of this noble Continent. Called the Apennine as ſome ſay, a Penna, by which word the Latins uſed to ſignifie the top or ſummit of an Hill; by reaſon of the height and ſharp points thereof; as others ſay, quaſi Alpes Pœninæ, becauſe firſt overcome by Annibal and his Carthaginians, whom the Roman Writers call by the name of Pœni. The Inhabitants hereof by Virgil named Apennicolæ. But otherwiſe reducible to ſome of the neighbouring Provinces. Of this large Mountain moſt of the Hills of Italy from Savona Eaſtwards, are but the excurſions; which being of leſs note, ſhall be ſpoken of as they lie before us in the way.

To proceed now to ſo much of the Hiſtory of Italy, as concerns the general; we are to know that the firſt Inhabitants of it (not to ſay any thing of the fictions of Frier Annius under the name of Beroſus, who will needs have Noah himſelf come hither ſhortly after the Flood) were doubtleſs of the race of Cittim or Kittim the fourth ſon of Javani, one of the ſons of Japhet. Who being planted by their Father in that part of Greece, which was ſince called Macedon, and after ſpreading themſelves further as their numbers increaſed, peopled Ætolia and the Countries adjoining to it: From whence, deſirous of a warmer and more fertile ſoil, they came in tract of time to the Coaſts of Dalmatia, and thence to this Country ſince called Italy. That they did ſpring originally from the ſeed of Cittim (or Kittim, as the Greek pronounce it) wants not very good Authors. For thus Euſebius, Κίτιοι ἐξ ὧν Λατῖνοι καὶ οἱ Ῥωμαῖοι, that is to ſay, from the Kitians, or children of Kittim, deſcended the Latins and the Romans. The ſame occurs alſo in the Chronicon of Alexandria. So alſo ſaith Cedrenus in his Annals, but with more punctuality. Telephus (ſaith he) the ſon of Hercules, raigned in Italy, and after him his ſon Latinus, ἀφ᾽ οὗ τοὺς Κιτταίους ἐπωνύμασε Λατίνους, from whom the Keteans were named Latins. The ſame in other words ſaith Suidas. Nor want there ſome remainders of this name in approved Writers, beſides theſe authorities; there being a Town in Latium called Ketea, metioned in Dionyſius Halycarnaſſeus, and a River named Ketus not far from Cumæ, whereof Ariſtotle ſpeaketh in his book de Mirabilibus. And that they came immediately from the Ætolians, beſides the other Arguments which Reinecceus uſeth in this point, the nearneſs, or identity rather of the names doth ſeem to intimate. For Ætolia being written in the Greek, Aitolia, and the letter O being changed into A according to the Æolick Dialect, which was that uſed by the Ætolians; the alteration of the name from Aitolia and Aitolians, to Italia and Italians, will be thought very eaſie, if not natural; the rather in regard there is an Iſland near Italy, in the Tuſcan Sea, peopled originally by theſe very Ætolians, which in ancient times was called Æthalia. And if by ſuch an eaſie alteration of one Letter only, Italy may derive its firſt plantation from the Ætolians, as no doubt it may; then may that Italus, the Chieftain of whom Virgil ſpeaks, be no other than Aitolus, ſome man of principal mark and eminency, amongſt that People, who had the Conduct of this Colony, when they came for Italy. And this I ſhould believe much rather, than that this Italus was the name of a King of Sicily: It being more probable that Sicily ſhould borrow its firſt Planters out of Italy, than Italy ſhould borrow either Name or People from ſo ſmall a Kingdom; eſpecially conſidering that the name of Aitolus was famous in thoſe parts of Greece, ever ſince Aitolus the ſon of a King of Elis, was Founder of the Ætolian Kingdom. The way thus ſhewn, and the paſſages into Italy laid open, it was not long before the Pelaſgi, another Greek Nation, found the way into it: after whom Saturn out of Crete, and Evander out of Arcadia, with their ſeveral followers, came and ſetled there. Not to ſay any thing of thoſe ſeveral Colonies, which coming out of Peloponneſus, and the parts of Achaia, planted themſelves ſo thick in the Eaſt of Italy, now called Calabria, that of long time it had the name of Magna Græcia. So that the Græcians made the main groſs or body of the Italian people: to which the coming of ſome Tuſcans under the conduct of Tyrrhenus, a Prince of Lydia, in Aſia minor, ſerved but as an Acceſſary, and altered nothing of the Principal. The laſt that ſetled here, were ſome of the Relicts of Troy, under the conduct of Æneas: who flying from their Native Country, and enraged Enemies, were firſt caſt upon the Coaſts of Africk; where having ſtaid a while to refreſh his Companies (we ſhall hereafter take an occaſion to conſider of the Fable of his loves with Dido) he ſet ſail for Italy, being the place aſſigned him by the Gods for his Seat and Empire, whither he came with fifteen Ships, which might contain, according to the rate which Thucydides alloweth to the Veſſels then uſed, to the number of 1200 men. And there he landed, as it proved in an happy hour: For he was no ſooner arrived, but he was lovingly cheriſhed and entertained by Latinus King of the Latins, or of Latium; whoſe chief City or Seat-Royal was then called Laurentum; who much eſteeming of this Stranger, as a man whoſe fame had been his Harbinger, thought he could neither manifeſt his love ſufficiently, nor bind him faſt enough unto him, but by betrothing him unto Lavinia, his only daughter. Hence grew the Wars betwixt Æneas, and Turnus King of the Rutuli, a former Suiter, which being ended in the death of the Rutulian Rival, confirmed Æneas and his Trojans in a ſure poſſeſſion. For now growing with the Latins, or Laurentini, into a more conſtant bond of Friendſhip, by many inter-marriages, and mutual kindneſſes, they built the Town of Lavinium, called so in honour of their Queen, intending it for the Seat-Royal of the Princes of the Trojan line. But long it did not hold that state. For Ascanius the son of Æneas by his former Wife, to avoid all occasions of contention with his Mother-in-Law, left her (Æneas being dead) in possession of Lavinium, and built Longa Alba; which being surrendred by Julus the son of Ascanius to his half brother Silvius, became the constant habitation of the Silvian Kings, till the building of Rome, and final ending of the race of the Latine Kings. The names of whom (for there occurs little of their actions) we are next to shew; taking along with us those few Kings which reigned in those parts of Italy, before the coming of Æneas.

A. M. The Kings of Italy of the Aborigines.

2637. 1 Janus, the first King of the Aborigenes, who lived in the same time with Boaz and Ruth; He received Saturn flying out of Crete from Jupiter, and left him his Kingdom at his death. He is said to be the Founder of the City of Genoa, and to have given name to the Hill in Rome called Janiculus, on which it was supposed that he had his dwelling.

2 Saturn, who taught the people the use of dunging of their Lands, and for that cause was honoured by them as a God, under the name of Stercutius, as St. Austine hath it. He reigned first together with Janus, and afterwards by himself alone: the whole time of both their reigns was 33 years.

2670. 3 Picus, well skilled in divination by the flight and chattering of Birds, and therefore feigned by the Poets to be turned into a Pye. He entertained Evander and his Arcadians, giving them the Hill (called after Aventine) to build upon, 37.

2707. 4 Faunus, the son of Picus, and the Husband of Fatua, in whose time Hercules came into Italy, vanquished the Giants of Cremona, and killed the Giant Cacus, who had fled from him out of Spain, 44.

2751. 5 Latinus, the son of Faunus, who entertained Æneas coming from the Wars and destruction of Troy, and gave him his daughter Lavinia to wife; with his Kingdom after him in Dower, 36.

2787. 6 Lavinia, daughter to Latinus, and Queen of the Latins married to Æneas whom she outlived, he being slain in his Wars against Mezentius, the King of Tuscany; the son or successor of that Mezentius (an ungodly Tyrant) whom Æneas had before slain in his War with Turnus and the Latins, 7.

A. M. Kings of the Latins of the Trojan or Silvian Race.

2787. 1 Æneas the son of Anchises, and Husband of Lavinia, slain in his Wars against Mezentius King of the Tuscans or Hetrurians, as before is said, 3.

2790. 2 Ascanius, the son of Æneas by Creusa his former wife: for fear of whom, Lavinia being great with child, fled into a Wood, and was there delivered of a son called Silvius. He removed the Seat Royal from Lavinium to Longa Alba, a City of his own building, 38.

2828. 3 Silvius Posthumius, the son of Æneas by Lavinia, preferred to the Kingdom by the love of the people, before Julus the son of Ascanius (the Founder of the Julian Family) from whom all the Kings of this race had the name of Silvii; Julus being honoured with the chief Priesthood (an Office next in dignity to that of the King) which he translated afterwards unto his Posterity, 29.

2857. 4 Æneas Silvius, 31.

2888. 5 Latinus Silvius, 50.

2938. 6 Alba Silvius, so called because of his beautifying and repairing the City Alba, then in some decay: or probably, because there he had his birth, 39.

2977. 7 Capetus Silvius, 24.

3001. 8 Capys Silvius, said to be the Founder of the City of Capua; which shews that he extended his dominion farther than the Province of Latium, 28.

3029. 9 Capetus Silvius, 13.

3402. 10 Tiberinus Silvius, from whom the River Tiber derives that name, being formerly called Albula, 8.

3050. 11 Agrippa Silvius, 40.

3090. 12 Alladius Silvius, who to make himself the more terrible to his Subjects, studied a way to imitate the Thunder; but was killed at last by a real Thunder-clap from Heaven, 19.

3109. 13 Aventinus Silvius, who gave the name to the Hill Aventine, 37.

3146. 14 Procas Silvius, 23.

3169. 15 Amulius Silvius, the younger son of Procas, setting aside his Brother Numitor, obtained the Kingdom for himself; slain at last by Romulus, and Numitor setled in the Throne, 42.

3211. 16 Numitor, the 21 King from Janus, and the last King of the Latins, restored by Romulus to the Throne; and after the short raign of one year only, deprived by him both of life and Kingdom. After whose death the Latins, or Albans, had no more Kings, but kept themselves as a Free Estate till subdued to Rome, 1.

Concerning this it is to be understood, that Amulius having chased his eldest Brother Numitor out of the Country, and possessed himself of the Throne, caused his Brothers daughter Rhea (for preventing an issue by her) to be shut up in the Temple of Vesta. Where she proving the mother of two sons, was according to the Law buried quick, and her children by the cruel Tyrant cast out to be devoured of Wild beasts. They were found by Faustulus the Kings Shepherd, nurst by his Wife, for her infamous life called Lupa (whence came the Fable, that they were suckled by a Wolf) and being grown to mens estate, slew the Tyrant Amulius, placing their Grandfather Numitor in the Royal Throne; whom not long after they deprived both of life and Kingdom. Of these the eldest was named Romulus, and the younger Rhemus, who leaving Alba to the short possession of their Grandfather Numitor, laid the foundation of the most famous City of Rome; which Romulus first hanselled with the blood of his Brother Rhemus, who had disdainfully leapt over the Walls of his new City. This City he made an Asylum or place of Refuge for all comers, of what desperate estate soever, and having ranked them into order, made himself their King. A people of so base a nature, that their neighbours refused to give them any of their daughters in marriage: So they were destitute of wives, and consequently not like to continue a people long; till on a Proclamation made of some Plays and Pastims, many of the Sabine women flocked thither to behold the sports, whom the Romans seized on, and forced an unwilling consent from them, to become their Wives. From such a base and low beginning did this City rise to be the Empress of the World.

The

The Kings of Rome.

A. M.

3213. 1 Romulus, the Founder of Rome; he made peace with Tatius King of the Sabines, coming against him to revenge the raviſhment of their Women; incorporating him and his into his new City, and by that means adding thereto a fair and goodly Territory, 37.

3251. 2 Numa, the firſt Author of the Roman Ceremonies, 43.

3294. 3 Tullus Hoſtilius, who enlarged the borders of Rome by the Conqueſt of Alba, the mother City of the Latins, and vanquiſhed the Fidenates, 32.

3326. 4 Ancus Martius, who built Oſtia on the mouth of Tiber, to be an Haven to the City, 24.

3350. 5 Tarquinius Priſcus, who ſubdued many of the Tuſcan Nations, encreaſed the number of the Tribes and Senators, and added the triumphal Ornaments, 38.

3388. 6 Servius Tullus, who firſt cauſed the people to be inrolled, and brought into cenſe 44.

3432. 7 Tarquinius Superbus, ſon to the former Tarquinius. He vanquiſhed the Gabii, and took the Towns of Ardea, Ocriculum, and Sueſſa Pometia: but for his own inſolent behaviour, and a Rape committed on Lucretia the Wife of Collatin by his ſon Sextus, he and his whole Race were driven out of the Town, Anno Mund. 3457. V. C. 268.

After this, the Romans loathing the name of King, cauſed two Officers to be choſen out of the Patricii, or chief Citizens, to whom they gave the name of Conſuls, a conſulendo, from counſelling of, and conſulting the good of the Commonwealth, ut conſulere ſe ſuis civibus meminerint, ſaith the Hiſtorian, their name being a Memento of their charge or duty. And in this Office they reſolved to have always two, and thoſe but only for a year, Ne vel ſolitudine vel mora poteſtas corrumperetur. And though ſome had the fortune to be Conſuls two or three years together, yet every new year they were anew choſen, and ſo their Offices reckoned as ſeveral; neither do we find any to have been elected for leſs than a year, unleſs upon the death or depoſition of a former, until the Civil Wars. But then, cum belli civilis præmia feſtinari cæperunt, when the ſervices done in the Civil Wars required a quicker turn in requital, the Conſulſhip was given only for ſome part of the year, and ordinarily for two Months: the firſt Conſuls being named Ordinarii, in whoſe names the writtings made for the whole year were dated; the other Minores, or Honorarii, which only ſerved to make up a number. For ſo ambitious were the Romans of this honour, that when Maximus died in the laſt day of his Conſulſhip, Caninius Rebilus petitioned Cæſar, for that part of the day that remained: whence that ſo memorated Jeſt of Tully, O vigilantem Conſulem, qui toto conſulatus ſui tempore ſomnum oculis non vidit! And when Cecina was by the Senate degraded from this honour on the day in which he was to have reſigned it, one Roſcius Regulus obtained the Office from Vitellius for the day remaining: but as the Hiſtorian noteth, magno cum irriſu accipientis, tribuentiſque. Now as the Romans did thus exceed the firſt number of Conſuls, ſo ſometimes fell they ſhort of it. The firſt that was ſole Conſul was Pompey in the beginning of the Civil Wars, viz. A. V. C. 403. The next, one Vitranes, V. C. 410. This Office, from the firſt Inſtitution to the final period of it, continued at the leaſt in name (for the Emperors had of long time aſſumed the Power and Prerogatives appertaining to it) the ſpace of 1084 years though not without many intermiſſions of the name and Title, by the ſeveral interpoſings of the Decemviri, the Dictators, and the Conſular Tribunes; of which more anon. The laſt Conſul was one Baſilius, in the time of Juſtinian, A. Chr. 542. The two firſt, Collatinus the husband of Lucretia, and Junius Brutus, by whoſe inſtigation the people had took Arms againſt the houſe of the Tarquins. A man ſo zealous in defence of the common liberty, ſo reſoutely bent to make good what he had begun, and ſo extreamly oppoſite to the Royal Race, that he not only cauſed Collatine to reſign his Office within the year, becauſe he was of the blood of the Tarquins, but executed his own ſons for holding correſpondence and intelligence with them. But though the Government were changed, the old deſign was followed, which the Kings had laid for the enlarging of their Empire; but followed with ſo ſlow a pace, by reaſon of their factions and diviſions, that it was full 500 years before they could be Maſters of Italy. A matter not unworthy of our conſideration, that the Italians ſhould hold out ſo long a time againſt the puiſſance of the Romans; when in leſs then half that time enſuing, they did poſſeſs themſelves of almoſt all Europe, and many goodly Kingdoms and Provinces both in Aſia and Africk. So difficult a thing it was (as is ſaid by Florus) dare caput Italiæ, to contract the many limbs of Italy into one body, and unite them under one head.

But to proceed, after Italy was fully conquered by them, they fell upon the Carthaginians, as their neareſt neighbours; whoſe overthrow in the end of the firſt Punick War, A. V. C. 512. gave them the full poſſeſſion of Sicily, (except the State of Syracuſa) and the Iſle of Sardinia. After that being moleſted in their Trade by the Illyrian Pirates; and finding them countenanced therein by the Queen of that Nation, they made a fortunate War againſt her, and brought that puiſſant people to become their Tributaries, A. V. C. 525. The ſecond Carthaginian War, managed by Annibal in the bowels of Italy, had almoſt put a period to the glories of their Commonwealth. But that being alſo ended to their advantage by the conqueſt of Spain, they quarrelled Philip King of Macedon, who had aided Annibal, compelled him to accept of peace on their own terms, and after outed his ſon Perſeus of all his Dominions, making Macedon a Province of Rome, and all the reſt of Greece but their Tenants at will. Nor was it long before they picked a quarrel with Antiochus the great King of Syria, made him abandon his poſſeſſion of the Leſſer Aſia; and finally prevailed ſo ſucceſsfully in all their actions, that there was neither King nor Commonwealth that could ſtand in their way, until the State being burthened with its too much greatneſs, began to totter of it ſelf.

Two things there were, which much conduced to the advancement of the Romans to their power and greatneſs, beſides the Providence of God which had ſo diſpoſed it: which were the great encouragements which they gave their Souldiers, and the Triumphant manner of reception which they uſed to beſtow upon their Generals when they returned home with honour and victory. For when any of their Generals did ſo return, he was permitted to enter ſitting on a glorious Chariot, the ſpoils which he had got in War being carried before, the Priſoners he had taken following bound at the heels of his Chariot; his Souldiers compaſſing him about with their ſeveral Crowns according to the quality of their well-deſervings; and all the Fathers of the City, attended by the Prieſts and principal Ladies going out to meet him. The firſt begining of which cuſtom is aſcribed to Romulus, who in the War with Acron King of the Ceninenſes made againſt him in revenge of the rape committed by the Romans on the Sabine women, ſeeing his people give ground, called for help to Jupiter, and vowed if he overcame King Acron, to offer up his Armour to him. Acron being vanquiſhed, the Conqueror cutteth down a fair young Oak and hangeth on it all the Armour of the vanquiſhed King: then girding his Gown cloſe unto him, and putting on his head a Garland of Lawrel, he laid the Oak upon his ſhoulders and marched towards the City, his Army following, and ſinging an Epinicion, or ſong of victory. To this we muſt refer the original and beginning of Triumphs. But, Nihil eſt inventum & perfectum eodem tempore, as the ſaying is. Tarquinius Priſcus long after Romulus, added hereunto the purple Robe, and the triumphant Chariot drawn with four horſes. The other pomps came afterwards, as they grew both in power and pride. Now of theſe Triumphs there were two ſorts; the Greater, which was properly called a Triumph; and the Leſſer, vulgarly called the Ovation, which differed from one another in many circumſtances. For, 1. The Triumpher made his entrance in a Royal Chariot, and was met only by the Senators in their Robes; but the Ovator made his entrance on foot, and was met only by the Knights and Gentlemen of Rome. 2. The Triumpher had a Laurel Crown, and entred with a noiſe of Drums and Trumpets; but the Ovator had only a Garland of Firr, with Flutes and Haultboys playing before him. 3. The Triumpher was attired in a Garment of State, which they called Veſtis Trabeata; but the Ovator in a plain purple Gown only. 4. In a Triumph, the Souldiers cried out, Io Triumphe; but in an Ovation they ingeminated only O,O,O, from the often doubling of which word, it had (as ſome think) the name of an Ovation. 5. And laſtly the Triumpher uſed to ſacrifice a certain number of Oxen; but the Ovator a Sheep only, from whence the name is properly to be derived.

Now there was three caſes in which the Conqueror was to be content with this leſſer Triumph. 1. If the number of the enemies whom the ſlew in battel exceeded not 5000 men; or that he had not ſo much overcome them by force, as by perſwaſion or ſubtilty. 2. If the War had been ſlight, curſory, or not lawfully managed. And 3. If it were againſt an Ignoble Enemy. And of this laſt we have a fair inſtance in P. Rupilius, who having got the victory in the Servile war, (a victory of great importance to the State of Rome) was yet content with an Ovation, ne Triumphi dignitatem Servili inſcriptione violaret, as it is in Florus. As for the greater Triumphs, they were indeed very full of magnificence; the pomp whereof, who liſt to ſee, may find it in the Triumph of Paulus Æmilius deſcribed by Plutarch; though by that which hath before been ſaid, we may conjecture ſomewhat at the glories of it.

And yet this Honour was not always vouchſafed to thoſe who had beſt deſerved it, there being many ways whereby it might be forfeited or denied in a factious State, and jealous of the over-greatneſs of the men of War. For, 1. Sometimes it was denied a victorious General, by the ſtrength of a contrary Faction; and ſo Pompey denied Metellus the honour of a Triumph for the conqueſt of Crete: 2. Sometimes the Conquerer himſelf is willing to decline it, for fear of envy: And ſo Marcellus in Plutarch, after his conqueſt of Sicily, having triumphed twice before, refuſed that honour: his reaſon was, ἡ φθόνον ἄχρι τρίτου θριάμβου, for fear his Third Triumph might become a matter of envy, 3. Sometimes the Souldiers, having been ill paid, or otherwiſe not well treated by their Commanders, oppoſed them in their ſuit for it: and this was the caſe of Paulus Æmilius, who queſtionleſs had miſſed this honour for not dividing amongſt them the ſpoils of Greece, as he once had promiſed if Servilius and others of the Senate, making it their own caſe, had not ſtickled hard for him with the Souldiers. 4. It was ſometimes denied, becauſe the General had born no publick Office in the Commonwealth: for ſo, in Livy, when Lentulus coming Proconſul out of Spain required a Triumph, the Fathers anſwered, that he had indeed done things worthy of that honour, but that they had no precedent for it, ut qui neque Conſul, neque Dictator, neque Prætor Res geſſiſſet, Triumpharet. 5. Sometimes the Generals themſelves omitted it for the furtherance of ſome of their other purpoſes: And ſo Cæſar coming towards Rome a Victor, at the ſame time the Conſuls were to be choſen, laid aſide his demand of the Triumph to ſue for the Conſulſhip; it being the cuſtom that ſuch as demanded the Triumph ſhould abide without the City, and ſuch as ſued for the Conſulſhip muſt of neceſſity be within. 6. Sometimes it was denied, when the War had been undertaken without the Command of the Senate: in which reſpect the Triumph was denied unto Manlius on the conqueſt of Galatia by him, to the great enlargment of their Empire, quia cauſam Belli Senatus non approbavit, becauſe he had no Commiſſion from the Senate for it. 7. There was no Triumph granted if the War had been Civil, becauſe in all ſuch Wars whoſoever was Conqueror, the Commonwealth was a loſer by it. And therefore Pompey and Metellus having vanquiſhed Sertorius and his party in Spain, would have it called a Foreign, nor a Civil War, becauſe they would not loſe their Triumph. Externum magis id bellum quam Civile videri voluerunt, ut triumpharent. 8. If the Victory had not been obtained without great loſs on the Romans ſide; in which regard Valerius after his conqueſt of the Galls was denied this honour, quia magis dolor civibus amiſſis, quàm gaudium fuſis hoſtibus prævaluit, ſaith Alexander ab Alexandro. 9. And laſtly, the Triumph was denied a General, if the ſervice had not been performed in his own Province: And ſo we find that when Livius and Nero, being Conſuls, had vanquiſhed Aſdrubal, Livius only had the Triumph, though Nero was the man that had won the day, becauſe the field was fought in the Province of Livius, to which Nero came but as an Acceſſary, or aſſiſtant to him.

And theſe are all, or at the leaſt the principal cauſes of hindering or omitting this great Honour, indeed the greateſt that the Free-State could be capable of. But after when the Commonwealth was changed into a Monarchy, it began to be laid aſide for altogether, as too great for ſubjects; and was firſt purpoſely neglected by Veſpanius Agrippa, the Eſtabliſher of Auguſtus in the Roman Empire, who when he had a Triumph decreed unto him, for quenching certain Rebellions in Aſia, and his quiet ſetling of that Country; to give Poſterity an example, refuſed to accept it. And this example being (as it were) a rule to others, occaſioned that this cuſtom was in ſhort time quite laid aſide; and that no man under the degree of an Emperor triumphed ſolemnly; all others from thenceforth, being content with the Triumphal Ornaments, μόναις ταῖς ἐπινικίοις τιμαῖς, in the words of Dion. And though Beliſarius having ſubdued the Kingdom of the Vandals in Africk, is ſaid (600 years after the death of Agrippa) to have had the honour of a Triumph; yet in propriety of ſpeech, it was nothing but an honourable preſenting of himſelf and his priſoners before the Emperor; and was ſo far from the magnificence of a Roman Triumph, that it wanted many of the ſolemnities uſed in an Ovation. Nor did the Emperors themſelves much affect this honour, either becauſe too popular, or too chargeable, or that they they thought it was beneath the Imperial Majeſty; the laſt (as I remember) that made uſe thereof to ſet forth his glories, being Valerius Probus, after his victories over the Germans, and the Blemyæ, a people of Africk, in or about the year 284 of our Saviour's birth.

In the next place look we on the incouragements and rewards of the Common Souldiers: For, besides the setting out of Lands and dwellings for the poorer sort, in which they might rest themselves when they were past service; and besides the large donatives which the General in his Triumph did bestow upon them; they had their mural Crown for him that first scaled the Walls, a naval Crown for him that first boarded the Enemies ships, a Camp Crown, or Corona Castrensis, for him that had forced a way into the Tents or Camp of the Enemy; a City Crown, or Corona Civica, for him that had preserved the life of a Roman Citizen. Not to say any thing of those Chains and Bracelets which Souldiers of inferiour merit were adorned withal. By which encouragements, and the good conduct of their Counsels in the Senate, the Roman affairs succeeded so prosperously, and their Dominions were enlarged so immensly, that never any Common-wealth had so large a growth.

And yet the greatness of this State is neither totally, nor only to be attributed to the Consular Government. For though the Walls of this great building were raised by the Consuls, yet the foundation of the same was laid by the Kings, and the roof thereof laid on by the Emperours. Nay, be it spoken to the honour of Monarchical Government, whensoever any great and imminent danger did seem to threaten them, they were fain to lay aside their confidence in the rule of their Consuls, and betake themselves to the Command of one Soveraign Officer, whom they called Dictator. Of which, and other the changes hapning in the State of Rome, take this short abstract from Corn. Tacitus. "Urbem Romam "a principio Reges habuere, &c. "The City of Rome was "in the beginning governed by Kings. Liberty and the "Consulship L. Brutus brought in. The Dictators were "chose but for a time: The Decemviri passed not two "years, neither had the Consular authority of the Tri"bunes of the Souldiers any long continuance, nor Cin"na's nor Sylla's dominion. Pompey and Crassus quickly "yielded to Cæsars forces; Lepidus and Antony to Au"gustus. So Tacitus in brief of these publick changes: Of which, as to the Decemviri, which were instituted only on a particular occasion for the reforming of the Laws by those of Athens; and the Military Tribunes of Consular Authority ordained to divert common people from seeking after the Consulship; I shall here say nothing. But as for the Dictators, being Officers of a Supreme power, and such as made way for the Emperors in the close of all; I shall enlarge a little further. They were called Dictators a dictando, because they prescribed what they pleased unto the people; which they were bound to execute and not dispute. Hence that memorable jest of Julius Cæsar, who being told that Sylla had resigned his Dictatorship though by the decree of Senate made perpetual to him; returned this Answer, that Sylla was an unlearned man, dictare nescivit, and therefore knew not how to dictate; or to play the Dictator. They were also called Populi Magistri, or the peoples Masters, because from them lay no appeal unto the people (as did from all the rest of the Roman Magistrates) during the whole time of their Command, which ordinarily continued for six months; yet so, that if they did in the mean time settle the affairs of the Common-wealth, they resigned it sooner; if the necessities of the State required a longer continuence in it, they were chosen again. The names of as many of them as I have met withal, I have here subjoyned together with the services they did the Publick, in the time of their Office.

The Dictators of Rome.

A. V. C.
253.	1	Titus Largius, chosen upon occasion of a general War made by the Latins upon Rome; the first that ever had this Office.
257.	2	Aulus Posthumius, chosen to pursue that War, Which he ended with the slaughter of 30000 of the Latins.
295.	3	L. Quintius Cincinnatus, chosen to this Office from the Plough, overcame the Volsci, chosen again An. V. C. 314. to supress the sedition raised by Sp. Melius.
318.	4	Æmilius Mamercus, overcame the Veientes and the Fidenates, and was thrice in eleven years called unto this Office.
338.	5	Pub. Servilius, who finally vanquished the Fidenates and the Lavicani.
354.	6	Furius Camillus, who finally destroyed the City of the Veii, and being chosen a second time, A. V. C. 362. preserved his Country from the Galls: thrice chosen after this upon new occasions.
375.	7	Tit. Quinctius Cincinnatus, chosen in the War against the Latins.
385.	8	L. Manlius, elected in the time of a grievous pestilence, to find a way for the appeasing of the gods.
396.	9	C. Sulpitius.
418.	10	Martius Rutilius, the first Dictator chosen out of the Commons.
	11	L. Papyrius, subdued the Samnites.
438.	12	Cossus, by whom the Samnites were again vanquished.
	13.	Æmilius, who also overcame the Samnites.
	14	Lentulus, who triumphed also over the Samnites.
451.	15	L. Bubulcus, who finally subdued the Æqui and the Volsci.
	16	Corn. Rufinus.
467.	17	Q. Hortensius, chosen for appeasing a difference betwixt the Senate and the Commons, who had fortified himself in Janiculus, one of the Hills whereon Rome stood.
505.	18	Cl. Glizias, forced to resign his Office to
	19	Atilius Colatinus, the first that exercised his Office out of Italy: he was chosen in the first Punick War.
536.	20	Fabius Maximus, chosen in the War against Annibal.
537.	21	M. Junius, chosen upon the great defeat which the Roman Forces had at the battel of Cannæ.
545.	22	L. Manlius Torquatus, chosen upon the death of Marcellus Consul slain by Annibal.
672.	23	L. Sylla, (descended from that Corn. Rufinus, who had been formerly in this Office) having by force of Arms suppressed the Faction of Marius and Cinna, made himself Master of the City, and caused himself to be chosen Perpetual Dictator, after the Office had been intermitted, for the space of 127 years: which Office having exercised with a great deal of cruelty, he resigned with as great a confidence.
707.	24	C. Julius Cæsar descended from Julus the son of Ascanius, who was the second King of the Trojan Trojan race, having conquered Britain, and added all Gaul Tranſalpine to the Roman Empire; and finding himſelf unworthily requited by the Faction of Pompey, paſſed with his Army after him into Greece: and having vanquiſhed him in the fields of Pharſalia, and made himſelf abſolutely Maſter of the Roman Empire; took to himſelf the ſupreme Government thereof, under the Title of Dictator; which having managed for the ſpace of five years, he was murthered in the Senate-houſe by Brutus and Caſſius.

Before the time of theſe perpetual Dictators, the Romans having ſome enemies or other that oppoſed the progreſs of their fortunes, had not the leiſure to contend with one another in a publick way; or if they did, their differences and ſeditions were ſoon compoſed. But being grown ſo great as to fear no Enemy; and the Eſtate ſo vaſt, that it was grown too mighty for a popular Government; then they began to practiſe on the peoples patience, and to project the ſharing of the Empire amongſt the great Ones. Concerning which, take here this ſhort Epitome, which I find in Tacitus. "Rebus modicis æqualitas facile habebatur, &c. While (ſaith he) "our Dominions were but ſmall, Equality was eaſily "maintained among us. But after we had ſubdued "the World, and deſtroyed all Kings and Cities that "ſtood in our way, or might work our annoyance; "when we had leiſure to ſeek after Wealth without "peril, there aroſe hot contentions betwixt the Nobility and Commons. Sometimes the factious Tribunes carried it away, ſometimes the Conſuls had the better: "and in the City and common Forum, ſome little skirmiſhes (the beginning of our Civil Wars) were "ſometimes ſeen. Afterwards, C. Marius one of the "meaneſt of the Commonalty, and L. Sylla the moſt "cruel of all the Nobility, by force of Arms over-"throwing the Free-State reduced all to an abſolute Go-"vernment. To them ſucceeded Cn. Pompeius, a little "cloſer in his projects, but nothing better minded to "the Common-wealth: Et nunquam poſtea niſi de Principatu quæſitum; and never after that was any other "point debated, than who ſhould get the Soveraignty "unto himſelf. So Tacitus: and he ſtateth it rightly. For after Pompey had revived the controverſie, and had found Cæſar a better Diſputant than himſelf; Auguſtus, Antonius, and Lepidus (on the death of Cæſar) made good the Argument, attracting all power unto themſelves by the name of Triumviri: till Auguſtus having out-witted Lepidus, and vanquiſhed M. Antony at the battel of Actium, became ſole Soveraign of the State, by the name of Prince; Et cuncta bellis civilibus feſſa, nomine Principis ſub imperium accepit, as that Author hath it.

But touching thoſe great alterations in the State of Rome, the contentions for the chief command, and the Reduction of it to a Monarchy by Auguſtus Cæſar, I publiſhed a Diſcourſe in the year 1631. (but written many years before) under the title of AUGUSTUS, or an Eſſay of thoſe Means and Counſels whereby the Commonwealth of Rome was altered, and reduced to a Monarchy. Which being but ſhort, ſo pertinent to the Preſent buſineſs, and ſo well entertained when it came abroad; I hope it will not be improper or unprofitable to ſubjoyn it here. The Reader may either peruſe it, or pretermit it, as his phanſie guides him. And here it followeth in theſe words.

THey which have heretofore written of Commonwealths, have divided them into three Species: 1. The Government of the King, ſecondly, of the Nobles, and thirdly, of the People. Either of theſe is again ſubdivided into good and evil: The evil from being only the good corrupted; the good nothing elſe but the bad refined. So is the Government of a King divided into a Monarchy, and a Tyrany: Of the Nobles, into Ariſtocracy, and Oligarchy: Of the People, into a Republick, and Democraty. All theſe, as well in general, as in the ſeveral couplets, have a ſecret inclination to change the one into the other; and to make a Pythagorical tranſmigration (as it were) into each others Being. I need not ſtand on many inſtances. The Common-wealth of Rome (into whoſe ſtories whoſoever looketh, will judge them rather to contain the acts of the whole World, than a particular Nation) will ſerve for all. Romulus at the foundation of his City, reſerved unto himſelf the chief Soveraignty, leaving it entire to his ſucceſſors. Numa, Ancus, Tullus, Tarquin the Elder, and Servius, governed themſelves ſo moderatly, and the People ſo juſtly, that they affected not Tyranny, nor the Commons Liberty. They appeared more deſirous to fill the Coffers of their Subjects than their own Treaſuries: And when neceſſity compelled them to a Tax, they rather ſeemed to ſheer their ſheep than fleece them. But Tarquin the ſecond, commonly called Superbus, a man of inſupportable Vices, having by violence enthronized himſelf in that Chair of State, which (had not his ambitious ſpirit been impatient of delay) would have been his rightful Inheritance, made his government anſwerable to his entrance, cruel and bloody. How many men, eminent as well by their own Vertue, as their Parents Nobility, did he cut off? How many did he for no cauſe promote to make their fall the more remarkable? What part of the Senate was free from ſlaughter? What corner of the City from lamentations? Yet this was not all. The miſerable Romans were viſited with three Plagues at once; Pride in the Father, Cruelty in the Mother, and Luſt exorbitant in their ſon Sextus, a true Copy of the old Originals. Either of theſe had been more than enough to exerciſe the peoples patience. But meeting all at one time, it ſeemed that nothing could now be added to the wretchedneſs of the one, and the wickedneſs of the other. Brutus (a name fatal to Tyrants) did eaſily perſwade the Commons to ſhake off this yoke. For they, as well deſirous of Novelties as ſenſible of Oppreſions, had long ſince murmured at the preſent State; and wanted nothing but a Head to break out into actual Rebellion. So the People got the Freedom, and the Kings loſt the Soveraignty of the City.

2. Brutus, although he wanted no fair title to the Crown, yet either perceiving how odious the name of King was grown; or perhaps willing to be rather the firſt Conſul than the laſt Prince, inſtituted a new form of Government: Wherein the ſway of all was referred to the Fathers of the City; out of whom two were annually choſen as chief of the reſt. And herein certainly he dealt very adviſedly. For had he ſought to confirm himſelf in the Kingdom, what could men judge, but that not love to his Country was the cauſe that ſtirred him to take Arms, but deſire of Rule? Again beſides that ſecure Privacy is to be preferred before hazardous Royalty; What hope had he to keep the ſeat long, having by his own example taught the people both the Theory and Practice of Rebellion? Under this new Ariſtocracy the Roman affairs ſucceeded ſo proſperouſly, their dominions were inlarged so immensly, that it may well be questioned whether the Roman Fortune caused their greatness, or their valour commanded their fortune. For the Governours not seeking wealth but honour, or not their own wealth, but the publick, did so demean themselves both in Peace and War, that there was between all a vertuous emulation who should most benefit his Country. An happiness which was too great to continue long. The people had as yet no written Laws: Custom bearing most sway, the rest of the Law locked up in the brest of the Judges. To avoid such inconveniencies as might hence ensue, there were some men, conceived to be as sound in judgment, as honest in their actions, deputed by a general Commission, to take an abstract of the Grecian Laws: according to the tenour whereof, the people were to frame their lives, the Judges their sentences. Here followed the Oligarchy or Decemvirate State of Rome, but long it lasted not. For these new Lords joining forces together, made themselves rich with the spoil of the people, not caring by what unlawful means they could purchase either profit or pleasure. Appius Claudius, one of the Decemviri, was the break-neck of this Government. He, unmindful of Lucretia and the Tarquins, lusted after Virginia, a woman though of low condition, yet such a woman in whom Beauty and Vertue strove for the preheminence. The issue was, that she (to save her honour) was slain by her own Father in an open Assembly of the People; Appius forced to make away himself in Prison; and the rest of that Magistracy abdicating their Offices, the Consuls were for a time restored.

3. The People fleshed with this victory, and calling to mind how their Ancestors had in like manner banished the Kings, began to know their own strength, and stomached it exceedingly, that they on whose shoulders the frame of the State was supported, should be so much under the command of others; that they who were Lords abroad, should be below the condition of Slaves at home. Hereupon they raise a tumult under the Conduct of their Tribune, Canuleius. Nor could they by any perswasions be induced to lay down Arms till they had obtained a Decree, That from thenceforth the Nobles and the Commons might promiscuously be married. And this was the first step to the Republick. The gaining this new priviledge, put them in possibility of obtaining greater. They now sue to be capable of the Consulship. The Fathers consulting of this demand, wisely foresaw, that to grant their Petition, or to deny it, was alike dangerous. For were it utterly dashed, it was to be feared the people would again forsake the City; and yet make their stay more insolent & insupportable, if it were granted. C. Claudius, one who by his honourable behaviour, was by both parties had in an equal degree of reverence, quickly proposed a middle course, whereby the fury of the multitude might be appeased, without blemish to the Consular dignity. He constituted six Annual Officers, equally chosen out of the People and the Nobles, calling them Tribuni Militum Consularis potestatis. This Office continued, but not without many Interstitiums, the space of 78 years. Which time expired, and some experience being had of the Peoples Government, the Lords of the Senate did decree, That one of the Consuls should from thenceforth be chosen by, and out of the Commons; that they should be capable of all Magistracies, yea, even of the Dictatorship. So that now Vertue was as speedy a Ladder to climb unto Honours, as Nobility of Birth; and a Good man as much respected as a Great. A rare felicity of the times.

4. The People being thus mixt with the Nobles, as well in Marriages as Honours; one would have thought that this Common-wealth, being thus equally poised, had been immortal. But as in the Natural Body there can be no exact and Arithmetical proportion of the humours and elements, without some predominancy; so in the Body Politick can there be no equal mixture of Plebeians and Patricians, without the supremacy of the one or the other. The People had, presently after the institution of the Consuls, raised a Commotion, and withdrew themselves into Mount Aventine. Nor could they be intreated to return into the City, till there were granted unto them peculiar Officers called Tribuni Plebis, or Protectors of the Commons. These being not long after by the Common-Council pronounced to be Sacrosancti, and inviolable, began to heave the Popular State too high, and thrust the Aristocratical too low; not regarding to lose the love of the one, so they might get the applause of the other. Insomuch, that matters of judgment were devolved from the Fathers to the Commons; and the authority of the Senate trod under foot by the People. Nay, they proceeded so far, that Marius being Tribune, threatned to send Cotta the Consul unto prison. And Sulpitius in the same Office, made the Consuls forsake the Senate-house, and slew one of their sons, whose heels were not nimble enough to flie away. And now were the Romans governed by that form of rule, than which there is no lower. So that as well by an inevitable necessity in Nature, as the ordinary course of Policies, there must be a reverting to the first, and Monarchical Authority. For questionless it fareth many times with a Common-wealth as with the Sun, which runneth through all the signs of the Zodiack, till it return to the place where its motion first began. And the Platonick year of reducing all things to the same beginning, continuance, and period, how false soever in the Books of Nature, is in some sort true in the change of Government.

5. The way down hill is easie and ordinary, but to ascend unto the top requireth both wit to frame the steps, and courage to give the attempt. So was it here also with the Romans: They had naturally, and almost insensibly faln from a Monarchy to a Populacy, or Democracy: But to ascend from a Populacy to a Monarchy, required many steps and degrees in many, much industry in all. Marius and Sylla, well skilled in feeding the humours of the People, were the first that attempted, and severally mounted to such a height of command, as never durst any promise to them, nor they hope for themselves. Marius was of an harsh and stern nature, equally cruel to the Enemies in War, and the People in Peace; one whose birth the Romans might have had just cause to curse, had he not saved them from the Cimbri. Sylla was one whose carriage none could enough commend before, or sufficiently condemn after his prosperity. A man whose Peace was far more bloody than his Wars; a better Subject than a Prince.

These two gave way each to other, and both to death. Next these, as well in factions and designs, as blood and alliance, succeeded Cæsar and Pompey: Two men never truly parallel'd since their own times. Cæsar had a wit to invent so pregnant, a heart to execute so stout, and to both a Fortune so favourable, that he durst undertake what no man dared; and his performances commonly were answerable to his undertakings. Pompey, a man greater than his own or his friends wishes, had triumphed over all the parts of the known World; and could he but have brooked an Equal, he had never met Superiour. Had these two lived in divers Ages, or exercised their valour on the common Enemy, the World had been too little to yield them employment. But turning their forces one against the other, Pompey overthrown in the Field, was basely murthered in Egypt: and Cæsar, victoriously conqueror in Thessaly, was barbarously massacred in the Capitol. And though none of these four Worthies could settle the Monarchy in himself, yet this shall be to their eternal memory recorded, that they first opened a passage to others, and first moved the stone, which rowling along, tumbled the People out of the Government.

6. After the overthrow of Pompey, and death of Cæsar, the Common-wealth might have recovered Liberty, if either Cæsar had left no heir, and Pompey no children: or rather, if Antonius, a man of an unquiet and turbulent spirit, had not begun new troubles. For he knowing the affection of the common people unto young Octavius, Cæsar's heir; and hearing the continual report of his approach to Rome for his inheritance, did by Decree of the Senate restore Sextus the son of Pompey to his blood and honours; Hoping that they two, inheriting their Fathers hatreds, would like Pellets in a Boys Pot-gun drive out each other; and so he might remain Lord of the whole. But young Octavius was too old to be so fetcht over, and had moreover more desire to revenge his Fathers death on Brutus and Cassius, than turn himself upon an Enemy that neither had done, nor could do him any hurt. At his first entrance into Rome he declared himself Cæsars heir, though some regarding more his welfare than honour, disswaded him from it. His retinue at his entrance was but small, his behaviour gentle and courteous, so that all had cause to love him, none to fear him. His first business was to Antonius, then possessed of all Cæsar's estate. His words as modest as his Petition just. Antonies answer somewhat churlish, forbidding him to meddle in matters of State, adding that he was too young to take upon him the name of Cæsar, and so dismissed him unsatisfied, and with discontentments. AUGUSTUS (for by that name we mean to call him, though he was not yet so called) perceiving that Antonies answer, though in shew but a delay, was in effect a denial, insinuated into the acquaintance of Cicero, then potent among the Senators, and a capital Enemy of Antony; by whose means the Lords of the Senate began to cast great affection towards him. Next in a solemn Oration to the People, he let them know, how he intended to have distributed his Fathers wealth among them; and how Antonius did unjustly detain it from them both. Certainly, there is not any thing prevaileth sooner with the ignoble Man than hope of gain. No sooner had he finished his speech, and given away that to them, which he thought impossible to get for himself, but all was in a tumult. None was so sparing of his words, but he had some curse in store for Antonius: every one vowing the destruction of that man, whom they supposed to deprive them of AUGUSTUS donative.

7. In this hurly burly Antony quits the Town, and is by the general voice of the Houses declared an Enemy to the State. An Army is given to Hircius & Pansa, then Consuls: AUGUSTUS, aged but 18 years, being proclaimed Imperator, and made head of the League against the common Foe. AUGUSTUS, as he loved not to absent from a necessary war, so he always used to reserve himself from the dangers of it; and therefore he committed the whole enterprise unto the Consuls: well knowing that though the Officers & Souldiers took most pains to get the Victory, yet would the honour of it be referred to him, as Imperator; Whereas if any thing fell out to the Army not well, his being a Non-agent in the business, would bring his honour off without stain. The Consuls therefore proceeded in the War against Antony: who seeing little possibility of prevailing, resolved to sell the loss of his own liberty and his Souldiers lives at a dear rate. And indeed the fortune of the day was so equally shared, that as the Consuls might boast of the vanquishment of Antony, so Antony might triumph in the death of the Consuls.

AUGUSTUS had now as much as he could desire, more than he expected; a victorious Army at his service. He therefore applies himself so to them, that giving that among them which he had in present; and promising them greater favours, according as his fortune and their valour should advance him; he bound them unto him in an eternal bond of allegiance, and made them the first step by which he ascended the Royalty. The Lords of the Senate hearing of the young mans fortune, thought it best to strangle these hopes even in their Cradles, and to that end, decree the honour of overcoming Antony, not to belong to AUGUSTUS, but to Decius Brutus; for whose defence (being besieged by Antony in Mutina) their Army had been levied. Nor did they think this frost of unexpected unkindness, sufficient to nip the blossom of his hopes; but they denied him the Consulship. These harsh proceedings compelled AUGUSTUS (his honour now lying at stake) to enter Rome as Conqueror, and force the Fathers to grant him his desires. Having thus gotten what for the time he aimed at; he generally shewed himself grateful to all, and particularly to some of the Souldiers, paying them what was behind by promise, and openly protesting that without their aid he durst not have adventured into the Capitol. So by keeping his day with the Military men, and shewing his noble and generous nature in a thankful commemoration of their service; he added stronger bonds to such as were already his own, and won many daily to his side, which before were either neutral, or adversaries.

8. Antony in the mean time was not idle, but knowing that Lepidus was beyond the Mountains with a puissant Army, he posted thither, and so far prevailed with the Souldiers, that he was admitted into the Camp; where the General entertained him with all expressions of love and welcome. Antony perceiving the facile nature of Lepidus, soon perswaded him to lead his forces into Italy; promising him no less than the Lordship of the World; if he durst but shew his face to the Romans. AUGUSTUS having continual news of this combination, and fearing much the prowess of Antony, now strengthened; conceived no course so fitting and convenient to his ends, as to join friendship, and to enter into confederacy with them. And this he did, not for any good will to either, but because being destitute of means to resist them, and also to revenge the death of his Father Julius, which he much laboured; he might with their forces oppress Cassius and M. Brutus, and, as occasion fell out, deal with them being severed. This League was solemnly confirmed by a bloody Proscription immediately following. Wherein, to be revenged on their Enemies they betrayed their Friends. A lamentable and ruthful time; good and bad, rich and poor, being alike subject to the slaughter. Now was the time of Julius Cæsars Government thought to be the Golden Age; and every one began to curse Brutus and Cassius as the Authors of these present miseries; whom they but lately honoured as the Restorers of the Common liberty. Nay the very Kings were deemed tolerable, and such as lived in their days, happy. The poor Romans had not changed the Tyranny, but the Tyrants: Yea, they had three for one into the bargain. Such is the condition of us men, that we know not our own happineſs in the fruition, but the want. Two of theſe Triumviri glutted themſelves with blood, taking pride in hearing the lamentable cries and groans of the People. Auguſtus on the contrary, ſhewed himſelf much grieved at this barbarous cruelty; ſo that his conſent ſeemed rather forced than voluntary. But this Proſcription, though in it ſelf cruel and tyrannical, produced ſome good and profitable effects in the Republick. For when by this Proſcription and the enſuing Civil War, the ſtouteſt of the Nobles and Commons were made away, few being left which durſt endeavour to recover the old Liberty; Auguſtus did the more eaſily eſtabliſh his Monarchy, and reſtore peace to the City. Moreover the proſecution of this cruelty ſo incenſed the people againſt Antony and Lepidus, that Auguſtus, whom moſt held excuſable, found them always his faſt friends, if not for love to him, yet in ſpight to them.

Tyranny,

9. But to proceed; Antony and Auguſtus leaving the guard of the City to Lepidus, with joint-forces march againſt Brutus and Caſſius, both overthrown by Antony; whom AVGVSTVS did therefore put upon that ſervice, as well to diminiſh Antonies forces, as to keep his own entire. As for himſelf, either he in policy ſuffered himſelf to be driven out of the field by Brutus, to make Antony more work; or elſe indeed durſt not abide the Battel. Such end had Brutus and Caſſius, two men whom fortune ſeemed to be in love with on the ſudden, and did as ſuddenly forſake them. Brutus the more accompliſhed man; Caſſius the more expert Souldier. I paſs over AVGVSTVS Wars in Italy, Antonies in Aſia, the diſcontents between them, and their reconciliation by the means of Octavia, ſiſter to the one, and wife to the other Emperour. As alſo how joining forces together to oppreſs Sextus, then Lording it over the Sea, and proud with the conqueſt of Sicilia; they received him into the Confederacy, and joined the Iſland of Sardinia to his other conqueſts. To recompence which kindneſs, Sextus invited the two Generals aboard his Admiral-Gally: and after a bountiful entertainment, returned them ſafe to their Camps. I ſcarce have ever heard of ſo great an over-ſight among ſo many able Politicians. And much I marvel with my ſelf, upon what confidence AVGVSTVS and Antony durſt ſo far truſt their perſons to a reconciled Enemy: or on what reaſon Sextus having both of them in his power, would let ſlip ſo ſlightly that advantage, greater than which was never offered to a diſcontented and ambitious perſon. This I am ſure of, that he afterwards repented it, and could have wiſhed that he had hearkned to the voice of Menas his old ſervant, who had perſwaded him to make his beſt of that opportunity. The Kings of France and Aragon, of old Enemies made new Friends, had the like enterview at Savonæ: which that notable Hiſtoriographer and States-man Guicciardine deſcribeth with much wonder and commendation. Yet, in the like caſe, have many, and, as I think, worthily condemned Lewis the 11. of France, and Charles of Burgundy, the Arch-politicians of thoſe days, in that Lewis at Peronne put himſelf into the hands of Charles his Enemy, who alſo after a ſhort reſtraint, diſmiſſed him.

10. Theſe ſolemn expreſſions of amity between the three Generals being thus ended, and Antony gone for Egypt, AVGVSTVS then began to contrive his eſtabliſhment in the State, though with the ruin of his Colleagues. He beginneth firſt with Sextus, having by gifts and promiſes drawn Menas unto his ſide; who by reaſon of his inwardneſs with his Maſter, knew moſt of his deſigns. By the directions of this Menas, and the aſſiſtance of Lepidus, he quickly overthrew Sextus; who flying death in Europe by the hand of AVGVSTVS, found it in Aſia, by the command of Antony. After this victory, AVGVSTVS, either having, or pretending a quarrel againſt Lepidus, entreth into his Camp, ſeizeth his perſon, and depriving him of all honours, confineth him to Rome. A man that half againſt his will, ſtumbling upon the Government, had beyond any deſert of his, enjoyed ten years continuance of Empire and proſperity. An action of a very high nature, and ſuch as AVGVSTVS durſt not have ventured on, if Antony had been in Italy. He therefore adviſedly removed him out of his way, before he would attempt the ſame. It hath been ever a chief Maxim in Court-policy, to remove that man out of the way, under pretence of ſome honourable charge, whom we intend either to caſt from his preſent honours, or elſe to make leſs potent with Prince and People. For which cauſe alſo AVGVSTVS perſwaded Antony's abſence from the City, to bring him at the laſt into diſcredit and contempt. For well he knew that his dotage on Cleopatra, could not but draw him into many inconveniencies: neither could his neglecting the State, to riot with his Lemman, be other than diſtaſtful to the Lords and People. Next, he commanded his ſiſter Octavia to leave her huſband Antony's houſe; yet privately he perſwaded her to live there ſtill, and bring up his children; that ſo the Romans ſeeing her noble demeanor and love to her huſband, might the more heartily deteſt him, who ſo ignobly and unkindly had rejected her. To add more fuel to this flame of hatred, he readeth Antony's Will unto the people, in which many of the Roman Provinces were bequeathed to Cleopatra's children, and other things ordained to the common prejudice. Antony likewiſe preferred many Bills againſt AVGVSTVS, as that he had depoſed Lepidus from the Triumvirate; that he had divided Italy among his own Souldiers only, that he had not reſtored the Ships borrowed to make War againſt Sextus.

11. Theſe diſcontents ſeconded with an ambitious hope of prevailing, made them both reſolute to refer all to the deciſion of a Battel. Antony had a Fleet conſiſting of 500 Ships, high built, and trimmed up rather for a Triumph than a Fight. His Land Forces conſiſted of 100000 Foot, and 12000 Horſe. AVGVSTVS had the like number of Horſemen, 80000 Foot, and 250 good Men of War, ſnug and cloſe, built more for uſe than oſtentation. The Rendezvouz is Actium, a place ſeeming to be marked out for notable deſigns: here being fought alſo in our Fathers days, that famous battel, wherein the Venetians gave the World to underſtand, that the Turks Forces by Sea were not invincible. Antony was on the Offenſive ſide, and therefore much doubted whether it were better to give the Onſet by Sea or by Land. Cleopatra, whoſe words were Oracles, perſwaded him to the Sea-fight; not that ſhe thought it more ſafe, but that, if Antony loſt the day, ſhe might with more facility eſcape. To this reſolution, when moſt of the Captains had for fear agreed; one of the old Souldiers thus bluntly gain-ſaid it. "What a miſerable ſecurity art thou poſſeſſed "with, moſt noble Emperor? Where is that ancient force- "fight wherewith thou haſt formerly prevented all diſa- "ſters, & turned the Enemies devices on their own heads? "Conſider with thy ſelf, moſt noble General, what un- "certain friends the Wind & Sea are? To how fickle an "Element thou doſt truſt thy fortunes? Let the Egypti- "ans and Phœnicians, old Mermaids, born and nurſt up in "the Sea, follow this kind of Warfare. But let us thy true "Roman ſpirits trie our valour on the firm Land, and "there fight for thy Empire, and our own Lives. Per"haps thou doſt miſtruſt our faith; Look here, Anthony, "(with that he opened his boſom) and thou ſhalt ſee "many an honourable ſcar got in thy ſervice. We are "now too old to learn new Treaſons: Alter therefore thy "reſolution, and, to pleaſe a woman, caſt not away ſo "many of thy faithful Followers. Certainly the unreſiſtable powers of Heaven when they decree a mans deſtruction, overthrow thoſe Counſels by which he ſhould eſcape it. Antony turns his deaf ear to this Souldier's wholeſome advice, and borrowing from Cleopatra two or three kiſſes (as if from the Fountain of her lips he had derived all his courage) without any more ceremony prepareth himſelf unto the battel.

12. AUGUSTUS on the other ſide, ſeeing a neceſſity of a Sea-fight, was yet in this comforted, that his Veſſels were more uſeful and better manned, though fewer than his Enemies: that his men to him were faithful, and, by reaſon of their many Victories, in good heart: From Antony were daily revolted ſome Kings and Captains of note, to the great encouragement of the one ſide, and diſheartning of the other. The whole charge of the War he committed to M. Veſpanius Agrippa; who failing in no duty of a good Captain, took from his Gallies whatſoever might be impediments to the valiant, or ſhelter for the cowardly; all that was cumberſom to his own men, or advantagious to the Enemy. Things thus ordered, and the battels ready to join, Auguſtus Cæſar ſtanding where he might ſee and be ſeen of all, is ſaid to make this or the like Oration. "Fellows & Companions in Arms, I ſup- "poſe it needleſs to hearten you, which never were ac- "quainted with fear; or bid you overcome, which never "yet knew what it was, not to vanquiſh. Conqueſt hath "always ſat upon the edges of your ſwords, and victo- "ry been written in your foreheads. Be not now back- "ward to add this one to your other Triumphs. When "after the death of my Father Julius of famous memo- "ry, I firſt dealt in matters of War, I rather found than "made you good Souldiers. And during this twelve "years ſervice under me, neither have you been wanting "in the duty of faithful followers; nor I (I hope) of a vi- "gilant and grateful Leader. Sure I am, I expreſſed my "ſelf as far as I could, and more I would, had I been able. "Let not the number, nor the greatneſs of the adverſe "Gallies any ways affright you. The hugeneſs of their "Bulks maketh them unapt for employment; and the "multitude, one clogging and hindring the others, may "as much further our Victory as theirs. They exceed us "in multitudes of Men, we them in number of Souldiers. "The meaning of the word Pilot is unknown among "them. And for their Mariners, the beſt of them are but "Carters, Reapers, and Harveſt-men, raked out of the field; "the reſt, the excrement of common Priſons, wherewith "their Veſſels are loaded, not manned. The General is in- "deed a fit Captain for ſuch a ſelected Company. It is "the ſame Antony, whom you once drave out of the field, "before Mutina. I verily perſwade my ſelf, that neither "he dares think of recovering, or you of loſing your "former glories. It is the ſame Antony, who being ſhame- "fully chaſed out of Parthia; only in that he was not "vanquiſhed, proclaimed himſelf Victor. It is the ſame "Antony, who intended to make Rome ſubject to the E- "gyptians; and to diſtribute the Provinces purchaſed with "the blood and vertue of our Anceſtors, amongſt Iras "and her fellow Chamber-maids. Nay indeed, it is not "Antony at all, but the ſhadow only of that ſubſtance, "which now is hid in Cleopatra's Cabbin. Courage then "brave men of Arms; be, as you have ſtill been, Conque- "rours. To ſpeak more, were to detain you from victo- "ry. Only this, Call to mind your ancient valour. Re- "member that I am Cæſar, you Romans.

13. This ſpeech animated the new Souldiers, and confirmed the old; ſo that with a general acclamation they gave the aſſault. Death, wounds, and blows, diſhed in divers faſhions, and ſerved in by ſeveral men, were the beſt delicates prepared for theſe unwelcome viſitants. Cleopatra beholding the Battel, and doubting the ſucceſs, through the thickeſt of Antonies Fleet, made away with the 60 Gallies appointed for her Guard. This diſorder made the breach, at which the Victory entred. Antony ſeeing her flight, left his Squadron alſo; and being taken into her Gally, hoyſed ſail for Egypt: Herein playing the part of a cowardly Souldier, whilſt each of his Souldiers executed the office of a couragious General. For they ſo abſolutely perſiſted in the fight, that AUGUSTUS was fain to offer them mercy ſooner than they would demand it, and divers times before they would accept it. At laſt they all ſware allegiance unto him. The Victory being thus gotten, AUGUSTUS (no loſer of advantages) ſpeedeth into Egypt, which he reduceth into the form of a Province; making the people pay, for fine, twenty millions of Gold. By receiving this mony, he ſo weakned them that they had no ability to raiſe an after-war; and by diſtributing part of it among his Souldiers, he confirmed them in obedience. As for Antony, he ſeeing his fortunes deſperate, redeemed the honour loſt in his life, by a noble and heroick death. And Cleopatra ended her life not long after alſo. A woman more well-favoured, than fair; well-ſpoken, rather than either. Antonies Courtiers had ſeen many Ladies more lovely, none more prevailing; men being chained to her by the ears, rather than by the eyes.

14. I willingly omit AUGUSTUS entry into Rome, as alſo the ſtate and magnificence of his Triumph. His Victory he uſed ſo juſtly, that none felt the fury of the War, but ſuch as were ſlain in the Battel. To aſſure himſelf of Antonies adherents, was his firſt care: to which end he burnt in the Common Forum, the Coffers of Antony, unopened; wherein all his Letters from his friends in Rome had been incloſed: well-knowing that as long as any thought themſelves ſuſpected Adverſaries; they would never ſhew themſelves true Friends. To the Senators and Magiſtrates he made ſumptuous feaſts; to the Common People he exhibited magnificent and pleaſing Stage-Plays; and, with all variety of pleaſure, baniſhed from both, as well ſorrow for the old Proſcription, as fear of a new. But this was only as a preparation to his main deſign. There were two men moſt dear unto him, and privy to his Counſel, Mecænas & Agrippa; which in the object of their love, differed only in this; Mecænas was a lover of AUGUSTUS, Agrippa of the Emperour. Mecænas was of the rank of Knights, a man of good and bad parts equally compounded; when his buſineſs required care, vigilant and circumſpect; at leiſure time, exceſſively riotous. Agrippa was the firſt of his houſe; a man alike fit for Camp and Counſel; one neither careleſs of a good name, nor covetous of a great. For although he only was the man which vanquiſhed Sextus, and Antony; yet well skilled in the humours of Princes, he gave AUGUSTUS the honour of all his Conqueſts; making the vertue not the reward, the end of his actions. So by doing nobly, and ſpeaking modeſtly of it, he was without envy, but not without glory. With theſe two, AUGUSTUS withdrew into a private Cloſet, and then ſpake unto them in this ſort. He made firſt unto them a long diſcourſe of the Civil Wars; then added, "That "having by his fortune, and the valour of his Souldiers, "put an end to the troubles; he was unreſolved what "to do; Whether to reſign the Empire to the People, or "retain it ſtill in his own hands: That in a buſineſs of "ſuch

'such importance, he durst not relie altogether on his 'own wisdom; That he had made them his Judges, as 'men that could speak soundly, and durst speak freely: 'That he knew them to have more care of his honour, 'than profit; but of the Common-wealth, more than 'both: That his Counsels, which course soever he took, 'would not be by them eliminated. He therefore in- 'treated them to consider what was to be done, and to 'give up their opinions in it.

15. Agrippa after a short silence thus began. 'I know, 'thou canst not but marvel, O Cæsar, that I who under 'thine Empire, am sure to be beyond president exalted, 'should perswade thee to live private. But I esteem 'more thy honour, than my profit; the publick good, 'than my particular preferment. And yet perhaps my 'Counsel shall be as profitable, if not as plausible as the 'contrary. I know thee to be no way delighted with 'lies and flattery, and will therefore deal with thee 'freely and plainly. Thou hast indeed put a period to 'the Civil Wars, but to what end, unless thou dost re- 'store unto the Common-wealth that Liberty for which 'the Wars were raised? What benefit can the people 'reap from thy Victory, if thou dost use it only as an 'instrument, for their greater bondage? Dost thou think 'that the Romans having so many hundred years main- 'tained their Liberty, will now be willing to forgo it? 'No, Cæsar, no, Flatter not thy self with these hopes. 'Marius the younger, and Sertorius, were quickly cut 'off, when their ends were once known; and Julius 'thy Father of happy memory, did not long live, after 'his actions seemed to bring the Common liberty in 'hazard. And shall we think that there is no true Ro- 'man spirit surviving? no Brutus, living to attempt the 'like against thee? Believe me, Cæsar, believe me, it 'is far better not to medle with the Empire at all, than 'to be forced to abandon it. But say, Divine Providence 'will so protect thee, that thou mayest out-live such 'pactices; shalt thou also not out-live thy glories? 'This present age perchance will not censure thine 'actions, because it dares not: But Posterity, free from 'all respects of love or hatred, cannot but call them 'into question, and brand thy enterprise with Ambi- 'tion, and perhaps Tyranny. If thy designs prosper they 'will judge thee to have risen unjustly; if otherwise, to 'have fallen deservedly. How much better then were 'it, now when thine honour is without blemish, and 'thy reputation unstained, to resign thy authority? In- 'deed when Sextus lorded it over the Sea, and Antony 'over Egypt, it might have been thought want of spirit, 'to have deposed thy self from the Government. But 'now to do it, when thou art without Rival in the 'Empire; now when thou art sole Commander of the 'Worlds Forces; now when the People and Senate lie 'prostrate at the feet of thy mercy; were to strike dumb 'detraction, and to make future Ages admire thy Tem- 'per. Thou art at this present the joy and comfort of 'the World; there is wanting to thee neither Wealth nor 'Fame. Here then fix thy foot. For go but one step be- 'yond this Non ultra, and thou wilt run into a boundless 'Ocean of perils, which have no end, but the end of thy 'life and reputation.

16. 'Not so excellent Agrippa, replyed Mecenas. I ne- 'ver heard good Pilot find fault with Sea-room, or of 'more vessels cast away in the Ocean, than in the 'Straights, and narrow passages. Our Republick is a Ship 'fraught with divers Nations. She hath been long tossed 'on the waves of Civil dissensions, long driven up and 'down with the Wind of ambition; and there is now no 'place so fit for her safety, as the unlimited Ocean of one 'mans power. This Empire at first-riling, seemed not to 'require a Monarch; but it is now grown too unwieldy, 'to be without one. Take then upon thee, O Cæsar, this 'Empire; or, to say better, do not forsake it. I should ne- 'ver thus advise thee, did I conceive any possible incon- 'veniencies. The Senate doth allow thee a competent 'guard of valiant and faithful Soudiers; whom then 'shouldst thou fear? Nay, ill may I prosper, If I see any 'cause of fear, were thy Guard cashiered. Enemies thou 'hast none. For such as were, are either already slain by 'thy valour, or made thy fast friends, by thy bounty and 'clemency. To omit Marius and Sertorius, I will a little 'touch at thy Father Julius. He, too good a Souldier to 'be a Statist, was too heady and violent in establishing 'his government. Nor could he cunningly temporize, 'and suffer the people insensibly, and by degrees, to drop 'into bondage; but oppress them all at once. Again, he 'committed a great Solœcism in State, when discharging 'his Guard, he sought to retain that Empire by fair means, 'which he had gotten by violence. I know thee, O Ce- 'sar, to be of a more wary and cunning behaviour. Learn 'also to work out their own safety, by Pompey's misfor- 'tunes. He after the finishing of the Pontick War, at 'Brundusium, disbanded his Army; and thereby merited 'to be accounted an honest and moderate man. Certain- 'ly, he showed himself in the course of this action, ra- 'ther vertuous than fortunate or politick. For presently 'he began to be contemned, and by his improvident 'weakning of himself, made an open passage to his own 'ruine. I commended his modesty, more than his brain; 'neither did he himself, on better considerations, ap- 'prove his own doings: and therefore he resolved, had 'he been Victor in Pharsalia, never to have committed 'the like oversight. So it is, and so it will fall out with 'thee, O Cæsar, if in this action thou propose him to be 'thy pattern. It is not safe, Agrippa saith, to take the 'Empire; less safe it is, to refuse it. A setled and inna- 'tive vice it is in man, Never to endure that any not 'above our own rank should over-top us. Romes second 'founder Camillus; Scipio, that scourge of Carthage, were 'disgraced; and M. Coriolanus banished by our Ancestors: 'only because their worth had lifted them above the 'ordinary pitch of Subjects. Do not thou hope to fare 'better than thy Predecessors. Heretofore, perchance, 'thou mightest have sought the Empire, to satisfie thy 'ambition: The Empire must now be thy refuge and 'Asylum. Credit me, The Lords of the Senate, after so 'many years of Obedience, know not how to Govern; 'neither canst thou, having so long been a Governour, 'learn Obedience. True it is, that in matters of domesti- 'cal business, a man may stop and desist where he will: 'But in the getting of an Empire, there is no mean be- 'tween the death of an Enemy and the life of a Prince. 'Thou hast already gone too far to retire. Now thou 'must resolve to be Cæsar or Nothing. To say more 'were superfluous. Thine own discretion will suggest 'unto thee better Arguments. Only this I know, 'that thou hast in thee too much Julius, not to be an 'Emperor.

17. AUGUSTUS seemed to incline to this latter o- pinion, whether moved with Mecenas Oration, especially his instance in Pompey, or that he was before resolved to follow that course, is uncertain. Howsoever, seeming with great attention to observe their speeches, and ga- thering their several reasons and motives together; he made this reply. 'A most hard thing it is, for a divided 'mind to make a well-joyn'd Answer. Divided I am, 'and troubled between your two opinions; loth to 'follow either, sithence in so doing I must offend 'one. Yet sithence there is a necessity of Resolution, 'I intend, though I like well of thy advice, Agrippa, to " follow thine, Mecenas. In doing which, I am but an " inſtrument of the Deſtinies, to put their wills in exe- " cution. Often have I heard my Father Octavius re- " port, how Nigidius, famous for his skill in Judiciary " Aſtrology, told him once in open Senate, That he had " begotten an Emperor for the Romans. As alſo, how " M. Cicero, ſo renowned for Wit and Eloquence, drea- " med, that he ſaw Jupiter place me on the top of the " Capital, with a Whip in mine hand. Certainly, if the " Powers of Heaven promiſe me ſo great an Empire, I " will not be wanting to my ſelf; but will add by my " induſtry, to their influence. To further my deſigns, I " do deſire you, nay I conjure you both, that as you " have been ever ready in your Counſels; ſo you would " not now be backward in any neceſſary Aſſiſtance. This ſaid, they preſently enter into a new conference, how to manage a buſineſs of this weight; what Senators to acquaint with their intent; how to diſpoſe of the Army, not yet caſhiered: with what Plummet it were beſt to ſound the minds of the common people, and to oblige all ſorts unto him. This Conſultation ended; AUGUSTUS continued his affability to the People, and reſpect to the Nobles. An opportunity he had to expreſs himſelf to both. There was at that time a Famine, which ſhrewdly raged among the Commons. To the poorer ſort, he diſtributed Corn, gratis; to others, at a mean price. Riches and honours he communicated to both ſorts; the better to wipe out of their memories, the antient freedom. Such parts of the City as were deſtroyed by caſualty of fire, ruined by length of time, or defaced during the Civil Wars, he re-edified. Houſes of Common-aſſemblies he repaired, Temples, conſecrated to the gods, he ſpared no coſt to adorn and beautifie. And finally, ſo freely, diffuſed his bounty, that there was no part or member of the City which had not ſome taſte of it. Next, he diſmiſſed his Souldiers, aſſigning them Lands and habitations in divers parts of Italy: That ſo the People might conceive his Reſignation to be real; and yet, if need were, his forces might be quickly re-aſſembled. Nor were Agrippa and Mecenas wanting for their parts, to promote the cauſe; but carefully acquainted ſome of the Senate with it, who ſtood well affected to them; and cunningly prepared others, who had ſtood indifferent.

18. The foundation thus laid, and the Senate ſate; AUGUSTUS roſe from his ſeat, and ſpake to this, or the like effect. " When I conſider with my " ſelf the infinite extent of the Roman Empire; I " proteſt I ſtand at a maze: marvelling how ſuch, as " heretofore have raiſed combuſtions in the State, durſt " undertake the ſole adminiſtration of it. What Nation " in the World hath not either begged their Peace at " our Gates; or felt the fury of our Wars at their own? " What Countries have we not harried with Fire and " Sword; making the riſing and ſetting of the Sun " the bounds of our Dominions? It muſt queſtionleſs " proceed from an over-weaning conceit in them, of " their own abilities; who thought themſelves ſo fit to " undergo that burthen, which none but the immortal " gods can carry. Of my ſelf I will not ſay much: On- " ly, I hope I may ſay with modeſty, that I am not infe- " rior to Cinna, nor it may be to Sylla: Yet have I found " in my ſelf, by late experience, how unable I was to " manage the affairs of State, even then when I had " two Co-adjutors. There is no Atlas of ſtrength ſuffi- " cient to bear up this Heaven; No Star of influence " ſufficient, to animate this Sphere; Nor one form of " vertue ſufficient, to actuate this matter. Neither in- " deed is it fit, that the Republick, which ought to be " immortal, ſhould depend only on the life and welfare " of one man. There never was, ſince the beginning of " time, a City repleniſhed with greater ſtore of worthy " and able men, either to conſult or execute. Never " was there ſeen ſo grave and diſcreet a Conſiſtory; Ne- " ver ſo many of both ſorts, ſo fit to govern. I have " by your Directions, and the Valour of your Souldiers, " put an end to all home-bread quarrels. I have been " your inſtrument to reduce Peace internal and exter- " nal, to your City; and deſire now no other Guerdon " or recompence, for any former ſervices, than a quiet " and a private life; free from all ſuch dangers and in- " conveniences, as are inſeperably annexed to the Sove- " raignty. Now therefore, (and may my action be au- " ſpicious and fortunate to my Country) do I reſign my " authority; committing my ſelf, and the Common- " wealth into the hands of the Senate and People of Rome.

19. This Oration ended, there followed a ſoft and ſilent buzzing in the houſe. Some ſuppoſed this ſpeech not to have ſo much truth, as art and cunning; yet ſmothered their conceits for fear of after-claps. Others were creatures of his own making; and they hoping to riſe in the fall of their Country, would not hear of a Reſignation. Some few of the wiſer ſort thought it not expedient, to put the Reins again into the hands of the Multitude. The reſt out of a ſluggiſh and Phlegmatick Conſtitution, choſe rather the preſent eſtate with ſecurity, than to ſtrive to recover the old with danger. All therefore with a joint-conſent proclaim him ſole Emperor; and ſolemnly entreat him to ſave the Common-wealth, otherwiſe running to inevitable ruin. He for a while, as vainly denied to accept the Government, as they vainly perſiſted to deſire him. At laſt, wearied with the clamours of all in general, and importunity of ſome in particular; he by little and little yielded to their requeſts, taking upon him the Empire for ten years: with this Proviſo, That if before that time expired, he could fully ſettle and order the preſent State, he would give up his charge. This he gave out, not with a purpoſe of performance, (for at the end of every Decenni-um he renewed his Leaſe of the Government); But that the people ſeeing ſo nigh a poſſiblity of regaining their Liberties, might not practiſe againſt him. Whereas, had he for term of life received the ſupream Authority, he had no doubt haſtned his own overthrow. For well he knew, that not the Title of Dictator, but the Epithete Perpetual, was the deſtruction of CÆSAR: And yet a great reſpect was had alſo in the choice of the Title. The name of King he refuſed, as being odious unto the Citizens. Neither would he be called Romulus, though he much deſired it; leſt they ſhould ſuppoſe that he did affect the Tyranny. When the people called him Dictator, he rent his Garments; deſiring them to diſcharge him of a name ſo hated: and being once called Lord, (Domi-nus) he forbad all that Title by publick Edict. Princeps Senatus was the only Title he admitted: well knowing, that the like glorious attributes were heaped on his Fa-ther Julius by them which leaſt loved him, only to this end, that growing more and more into hatred, he might the ſooner be diſpatched. Nor was he ignorant, that the Common People, led more by appearances than truth, diſcerned names more plainly than execution: and that the only courſe to make greatneſs ſtand firmly, was to receive extraordinary power under a Title not offen-ſive. The name alſo of AUGUSTUS conferred upon him by the Senate, (as if there had been ſomething in him more than mortal) he refuſed not; as a Title ex-preſſing more dignity and reverence than authority. And having pleaſed himſelf in the choice of his Title, he next proceeded to the eſtabliſhment of his power, which he thus purſued.

20. When

20. When first at the hands of the Lords of the Senate, he had for ten years received the Government; there was appointed unto him two Cohorts of Prætorian Souldiers for the guard of his person; to whom the Senate allowed the double wages of a Legionary Souldier, to make them move vigilant and heedful in their charge. Over these he appointed two Prefects or Governors, (Captains of the Guard we may best term them.) To commit the charge to one only, might breed danger; to more, confusion. Agrippina, to settle Nero in the Empire, prevailed with Claudius, to make Burrus, whom she had at her devotion, the sole Captain: and Nimphidius, fallen from his hopes of setting Galba besides the quishon; desired the command of the Guard, as the next step to Soveraignty. In choice of these Captains, he observed two Rules: First, he ever chose them, ex ordine Equestri, not Senatorio; lest that, so high a dignity joyned to so high a birth, might startle their resolutions to some designs against his quiet. Secondly, he made choice of two such, as were of contrary humours, and somewhat at odds; that so the ill intents of the one (if they should harbour any) might be thwarted and revealed by the other; and both, in a noble emulation, should contend to be most forward in his service. The next course which he took for his own security, was a law he made to curb the wills and attempts of the great ones. For whereas it hath been formerly unlawful to question a Bondman, in matters concerning the life and death of his Lord; AUGUSTUS passed an Act, that all such Bondmen should be first sold to him, or the Commonwealth. By means whereof he kept the Lords, before presuming on the secresie of their slaves, from all close and private Conspiracies against him. Having thus strengthened his person, he assumed to himself the Imperial, Censorial, and Tribunitian authority, together with the Sacerdotal dignity. As Emperor and General of the Men of War, he could press Souldiers, raise Taxes, proclaim Wars, make Peace; yea, and put to death the very best and stoutest of the Senators. As Censor, it was in his power to reform corrupt manners, enquire after mens carriages, to take in and put out of the Senate whom he listed; to place and displace the people from a more honourable Tribe, to a less honourable. Yet would he not be called Censor as a name too inferiour; but accepted the Prerogatives of it, after the surrendry of Manutius, and his Associate; two men so unfit for that Magistracy, that they could object no crime to old or young, of which themselves were not guilty. The Tribunitian authority enabled him to hinder any thing attempted against his liking. It preserved his person from all contumely and injury; giving him power to punish, as an execrable person, (yea, and without any formality of the Law) whosoever had offended him either in word or deed. As for the Pontifical Dignity, it made him a little more reverenced, not more potent. Only it added to his title the stile of Pontifex Maximus, or Chief Bishop; and made him of authority amongst the Priests, and in sacred matters, things that concerned Religion. The light of Reason taught him, that it was convenient for him, being a Prince, to have command on all his people; He had been else but half a Monarch, such as some Princes are with us; who quit their Clergy to be governed by a Foreign Head.

21. These several Prerogatives annexed together, seem not yet sufficient: and therefore he so cunningly dealt with the Senators, that they gave him a general Exemption from the Co-active power of the Law. Which once obtained, he seriously bends his thoughts to settle the Common-wealth; and so to settle it, that by uniting all parties, and giving satisfaction to all Interesses, it might not be obnoxious to such frequent and tumultuous alterations, as it had been formerly. But herein when he had consulted the ancient Platforms, he found no small difficulty. The form described by Plato, shewed rather how a City ought to be governed, than how it may be. Aristotle, though bred in the Free States of Greece, was a friend to Monarchy; but his discourses dark, and speculative, and not easily reduced to practice. Solon afforded the People too much Authority the Nobles too little, the King none. The old Carthaginian Legislators attributed too much to Riches, too little to Vertue. The Persian Law-makers indulged to the King too much, to the Subject nothing. And on the other side, Lycurgus in his modelling of the State of Sparta, ascribed too little to the King, and too much to the Senate. Zaleucus was rather the Author of some particular Laws, than the Framer of a Commonwealth. Phaleas, and Hippodamus, as unimitable altogether as Plato. Seeing therefore that none of the old Patterns did come home to his purpose; and withal considering with himself, that the unmixt Forms of Rule were not equally ballanced, and by consequence subject unto change: he resolved to frame his Common-wealth out of the perfections of the three good Forms, their imperfection being rejected; reserving to himself the Supreme Majesty, to the Senate eminent Authority, to the People convenient Liberty, all in a just and fit proportion. And to say truth, he did so mix the Soveraignty of one, with the Liberty of all; that both the Lords and People, without fear of bondage or sedition, enjoyed their accustomed Freedoms. The Consuls and Nobles of the City assembled as formerly they used; matters of State they handled by themselves; Ambassadors of foreign Nations they heard, and dispatched. The Commons did assemble in the Comitia, to enact Laws and elect Magistrates, as in the free Common-wealth; Yet so that nothing was done without the consent and privity of the Prince, who for the most part nominated the successive Magistrate, leaving the confirmation of him to the people. So that the change, as he contrived it, was not violent and at once, but by degrees, and by the silent approbation of both Estates, as seeming to consist more in the alteration of the Magistrate, than of the Laws.

22. But (to proceed more particularly) the first care he took, was to confirm Religion in the same state in which he found it. I mean Religion, as the Romans used the word, for those particular, though Idolatrous Forms of Worship, which to their several gods had been used among them. This, though he might have changed, as the Pontifex Maximus, or chief Bishop of the City; yet very wisely he forbare it. It is not safe for Princes that are setled in a long descent of Government, to be too active in such changes: But it is dangerous to attempt it in a green State, and in an Empire not well quieted, and inured to bondage. Men are more sensible of the smallest alterations in the Church, than greater changes in the State, and raise more frequent broils about it. The Romans specially were exceeding tender in this point. The ancient Ædiles formerly received it into their charge, that they permitted no external either Gods or Ceremonies, to be introduced into the City. And by Æmilius it was enacted for a Law, That none should offer Sacrifice in any publick place, after a new and Foreign fashion. Excellent therefore was the counsel which Mecenas gave him when he first undertook the Empire, viz. 'That he should follow constantly the Religion 'which he found established, and compell others also 'to do the like. For, Foreign and strange Rites (saith 'he) will offend the people, work many inconvenient

" alterations in the Civil State; yea and most likely " will occasion many both seditions and conspiracies. Words which he spake not to the air, but to a Prince exceeding apprehensive of the best advice. Nor did AVGVSTVS ever shew himself more careful in any one Art of Empire, than he did in this. That which Mecænas noted, we find true in these later Ages; in times more skilful of obedience, than the most quiet hour of AVGVSTVS Government. No one thing more hath caused so frequent and so general Rebellions in the States of Christendom, than alterations of this nature. I cannot therefore but commend it, as a pious resolution in a late mighty Monarch: Better some few corruptions should be suffered in a Church than still a Change.

23. Religion thus established, in the next place the welfare of the whole Empire consisted chiefly in reforming of the City; from which, as from the heart, life was conveyed to all the Provinces abroad. And in the City the corruption was most apparent in the Senate it self. With them therefore he beginneth, well knowing that crimes in men of eminent place end not in themselves; but by degrees become diffused among their Clients and Followers. Now in the Senate were many and desertless men, who had been taken into it during the Civil Wars; as they could court the People, and humour such as were most potent. Of these he expelled none by his own power; but making a speech to them in the Senate, of the ancient order and present confusion of the house, he first exhorted them to look back on their former lives, and to judge of their own abilities and merits, for so honourable a room. Then he desired some of them to pick out such among them, as were in disposition factious, and in life faulty, but loth to conceive so ill of their own actions; which they did accordingly. Yet as it often happeneth, that the great Thief leadeth the less to the Gallows; and as Commines observeth, that after the Battel of Montliberry, Offices were taken from many for flying away, and conferred on such as ran ten miles beyond them: So remained many in the Senate, neither less vicious, nor less violent; only more potent to maintain their doings, than some others whom they had removed. AVGVSTVS therefore joyning to him Agrippa, proceedeth to a new review: And certainly it much concerned him in the setling of his affairs, that none should have a voice in that famous Council, but such as were of able judgments, honest repute, and well affected to his Service and the Common-wealth. An enterprise which he esteemed so dangerous, that he permitted entrance to no Senator till he were searched: himself wearing a Brigandine under his Gown; and being invironed with ten of the most couragious and best beloved of the whole company. Such as he found in either kind inexcusable, he discharged from their attendance; electing such in their places, which were either ennobled for their wisdom, or noted moderation, or otherwise strong in their dependants. Yet so that greatness of Revenue was esteemed neither a fit Patronage for any, if they were offensive; nor a just cause to challenge interest in the house. Such of them as were rich rather in the gifts of the mind, than those of fortune, he relieved with honourable Pensions; and finally he bestirred himself so resolutely, that all confessed that they had need of such a wise Physician, to cure that dull Consumption, whereinto the Common-wealth was fallen.

24. In other things he seldom did proceed against them, as of himself; but when that any of them had conspired his ruin, he referred them to the judgment of their fellows. And this he did partly to reserve unto the Court the ancient Prerogative; partly not to be Judge and Party in his own cause: but principally following the example of his Father Julius, who counterfeiting a wretchless contempt of his adversaries, used, when he was least suspected, under hand, and by publick Officers, to work their destruction. Many also of them whom the Senate had condemned he would freely pardon: Conceiving truly, that the questioning of men of high calling, would produce as much terror, though it argued not so much rigor as the punishment. Yet if extremity of law was used towards some few, it was to settle quietness in the whole; and as it were a particular blood-letting for the general health. Those who had followed the Factions of Brutus and Antony, he forgave freely. And not so only, but by manifesting his works by his deeds, and adding trusts and honours to his pardons; he made his Chair of State more setled, and immoveable. So Cæsar, by erecting the faln and broken Images of Pompey, made his own statues stand more firmly. But the chief Act by which he bridled the Nobles, was an Edict by him promulgated, forbidding any of them, his leave not granted, to travel out of Italy. For well he knew, that an Empire unsetled, and Provinces not quieted; the presence and authority of men of that rank, might raise greater troubles, than could be easily suppressed. Examples he wanted not, that especially of Cato; who after the overthrow of Pompey, stirred such a War against Cæsar in Africk, that he never bought Victory at a dearer rate. Yet not altogether to imprison them, he licensed them at their pleasure, to visit Sicilia, and Gaul Narbonoyse, Provinces close to the Continent of Italy, altogether unfurnished for Wars; and indeed such, as by reason of the variety of pleasures in them used, were more likely to weaken their minds, than to arm their bodies.

25. Now to give the Senate some sweet meat to their sowre sawce; he as much honoured and reverenced that Order, as ever it was in the Free-state: submitting himself to their Judgments and appearing of his own accord, at most of their days of Session. Out of those he chose fifteen alterable every half year, to be of his Privy Council; but then changing them for others: that so all of them might participate of that honour; and yet none of them be acquainted with too many of his Secrets. At his entrance into the Senate, he used courteously to salute the Lords; and so likewise at his departure. He knew full well that it was noted for great pride in his Father Julius, so much to sleight the Lords of that House, as he always did: never making to them any obeisance; no not then, when they came to tell him what honours were decreed unto him. This Reformation of the great Ones, soon made the lower sort more careful; both to observe good order, and to learn obedience. Yet did not AVGVSTVS refer all to President, but somewhat to Precept. The Roman Knights he enforced to yield an account of their lives; a course full of health and wisdom: Idleness being the root of all private vices, and publick disorders. To the Commons in their Comitia and other meetings, he prescribeth Laws and Orders as himself listed. The old authority of the Tribunes, dashed in the Dictatorship of Sylla, he would not restore. He suffered them to intercede for the People, but not to prefer or hinder any Bill, to the advancement or the prejudice of their Estate. Without this Curb, the Common sort would never have suffered him to sit fast in the Saddle. For had the people had their Tribunes and had the Tribunes, had their ancient dignity and power, which they had usurped; there had been little or no hope of altering the form of Government. So different are the ends of the Common-people, especially if nuzled in a factious Liberty, from the designs of Soveraign Princes.

26. The

26. The City thus reformed in the principal errors and defects of it; he again exhibiteth unto them divers pleasures; as shews of Fencers, Stage-plays, Combats of Wild beasts, publick Dancing, with variety of other delightful Spectacles. And this as well to breed in them a good conceit of the change; as fearing lest their cogitations, for want of other objects, would fix themselves upon his actions, and the old freedom. And therefore when some of his more severe and rigid Counsellors advised him to interdict all such publick pastimes, alledging, that the meetings of the people at those sports, and in so great numbers might at last end in some great tumult and sedition to the endangering of his person, and destruction of his whole Estate; it was thus over-ruled by Mecænas (his most trusty Favourite) Expedit tibi, O Cæsar, plebem sic occupatam esse, That it best agreed with his affairs, to have the minds of the people taken up with these sports and pastimes, by which being sweetned and appeased, they were the less sensible of the yoke he had put upon them. But as for Horse-races, Tilts, and Turnaments, as he gladly cherished them, so he permitted them only to the Inhabitants of Rome: That so that City being the Seat-Town of his Empire, might be stored with good Horses, and expert Riders. Such of the Commons as were behind hand, he relieved: and when that many of them had made him Heir to their goods, he well knowing that no good Father did appoint to his Heir any Prince but a Tyrant, presently restored to the Children of the deceased the whole Patrimony. An action truly worthy of AVGVSTVS; as true a Guardian of Orphans, as a Father of his Country. Such Princes as gape covetously after other mens possessions, seldom enjoy the benefit of their own. The Treasures of Kings are then greatest, not when their own Coffers are full only, but their Subjects rich. Yet one thing more he seemed to leave unto the people, which they thought most pleasing, Liberty of Speech: Wherein sometimes they were so licentious, that they spared not Agrippa himself, so potent with the Emperor. But he, good man, never using the Prince's favour to the prejudice of any, seemed not to mark their taunts and slanders; whether with greater moderation or wisdom, I cannot tell. Neither did AVGVSTVS scape their foolish Pasquils and infamous Libels. All which he winked at, knowing that contumelies of that nature slighted and contemned, soon vanish of themselves; but if repined and stormed at, seem to be acknowledged. A temper which he learnt of his Father Julius, who was perfect at it. And certainly it was a notable point of Wisdom in both of them. It is the misery of the best Princes, even when they do well to be ill spoken of. And therefore many times such follies are with more policy dissembled than observed, by the greatest Kings.

27. As for this lavishness of the tongue, it is a humour that springeth for the most part, rather from a delight in pratling, than any malice of the heart: and they which use it are more troublesom than dangerous. Julius feared not the fat men, but the lean and spare. And so AVGVSTVS thought, that not men liberal of speech, but silent, close and sparing of their words, were most likely to raise tumults. Moreover, as long as the Common People retained this Liberty of Speech, they were the less sensible of the loss of Liberty in State. Whereas in the days of Domitian, when not only they were prohibited to commune together, but even their secret sighs and tears were registred, then began they to look back with a serious eye on the old & common Liberty. Neglect is the best remedy for this Talking vein. When the humour is spent, the People will cease on their own accords: till then, no forces can compell them. Tacitus taxeth Vitellius of great folly, for hoping, by force to hinder the continual reports of Vespasians revolt; that being the only way to increase, not diminish the rumour. And as much he extolleth (I will not say how fitly) the Reign of Prince Nerva; wherein it was lawful for the Subject to think what he would, and speak what he thought.

28. These courses though he took to rectifie the Senate, and content the people, yet he stayed not here. There were too many of both sorts, dangerous and unquiet spirits, who stomached his proceedings; and under pretence of the ancient Liberty, were apt to any bold attempt, and sudden alteration. These as he winked at for the present, so he imployed them (as occasion served) in his foreign Wars. Wherein he followed the example of his Father Julius, who when his Souldiers had displeased him, in their Mutinies and Tumults, would lead them presently unto some desperate and dangerous service: So weakning both his Foes which lay next unto him, and punishing those Souldiers which had disobeyed him. For, though AVGVSTVS had thrice shut the Temple of Janus, and cherished Peace, no Emperor more, of so large a Territory; yet when he saw his times, and that mens minds were active, and their thoughts disquieted; he could find presently occasion for some new imployment. In this a Body Politick may be compared most fitly to the Body Natural. When we are full of blood, and our spirits boyling, there is not any Physick better than Phlebotomy. But if a vein be broken in us, and we bleed inwardly, our estate commonly is dangerous, and almost incurable. So Princes, when their people are tumultuous and apt to mischief; or that their thoughts are working, and hearkning after action: do commonly imploy them in some service far from home; that there they may both vent their Anger, and imploy their Courage. For let them stay at home to confirm their practices, and grow at last into a Faction; the State will suffer in it, if it be not ruined. We cannot have a fairer instance of this truth, than the proceeding of our fifth Henry, and the times next following: Whose foreign Wars kept us all quiet here at home, wasted those humours, and consumed those fiery spirits, which afterwards, the Wars being ended, inflamed the Kingdom.

29. But his main work was to content the Souldiers, and to make them sure. Some of which he dispersed as before I said, all about Italy, in thirty-two Colonies; as well for the defence of the Country, as for their more speedy re-assembly, if need should require. Abroad amongst the Provinces were maintained upon the common charge twenty-three Legions with their aids; besides 10000 of his Guard, and those which were appointed for the bridling and safety of the City. As to all of them he shewed an excellent thankfulness for their faithful services: so in particular to Agrippa, and to one other, whose name the Histories of that Age have not remembred. This latter had valiantly behaved himself at the battel of Actium: and being summoned to appear before the Lords of the Senate, in a matter which concerned his life, cried to AVGVSTVS for succour; who assigned him an Advocate. The poor fellow not contented with this favour, baring his breast, and shewing him the marks of many wounds; These (quoth he) have I received, AUGUSTUS, in thy service never supplying my place by a Deputy. Which said, the Emperor descending to the Bar, pleaded the Souldiers cause, and won it. Never did Soveraign Prince, or any that command in Chief, lose any thing by being bountiful of favours to their men of War. For this act quickly

ſpreading it ſelf over all the Provinces, did ſo indear him to the Military men, that they all thought their ſervices well recompenſed, in his graciouſneſs to that one man. And now were they ſo far given over to him, that the Honours conferred on Agrippa, could not increaſe their love; well it might their admiration. Agrippa was of a mean and common Parentage. But ſupplying the defects of his Birth with the perfections of his Mind, he became very potent with AUGUSTUS; who not only made him Conſul, but his companion in the Tribunitian Authority, and Provoſt of the City. So many titles were now heaped on him, that Mecænas perſwaded the Prince, to give him his Daughter Julia to Wife: affirming it impoſſible for Agrippa to live ſafe, conſidering how open new Creatures lie to the attempts of malicious men, unleſs he were ingraffed into the Royal Stem of the Cæſars. On which cauſe queſtionleſs, for the ſtronger eſtabliſhment of his new Honours; Sejanus afterward attempted, but not with the like ſucceſs, the like match with Livia, Tiberius Daughter-in-Law.

30. The Senate, People, and Men of War, thus ſeverally reduced to a Mediocrity of power and content, the next labour is to alter the old, and eſtabliſh a new Government of the City it ſelf. To effect which, he daſhed all former Laws, by which the Allies and Confederates of the State were made free Denizens of the Town. That he conceived to be a way to draw the whole Empire into one City; and by the monſtrous growth and encreaſe of that, to make poor the reſt. Therefore this priviledge he communicated unto a few only: partly that in the times of dearth, the City might not ſo much feel the want of ſuſtenance; and partly that ſo ancient an honour might not be diſ-eſteemed; but principally leſt Rome repleniſhed with ſo huge a multitude of ſtirring and unruly ſpirits, ſhould grow too headſtrong to be governed in due order. The greateſt and moſt populous Cities, as they are proneſt unto faction and ſedition; ſo is the danger greateſt, both in it ſelf, and the example, if they ſhould revolt. This provident courſe notwithſtanding there were in Rome men more than enough; and among them not a few male-contents, and murmurers at the preſent ſtate, ſuch as contemned the Conſuls, and hated the Prince. To keep theſe in compaſs, AUGUSTUS (it being impoſſible for him to be ſtill reſident at Rome, and dangerous to be abſent) conſtituted a Provoſt of the City for the moſt part choſen out of the Senators: aſſigning him a ſtrength of 6000 men, called Milites Urbani, or the City-Souldiers. To him he gave abſolute and Royal authority, both in the Town and Territory near adjoining, during his own abſence. To him were appeals brought from the other Magiſtrates; and finally to his Tribunal were referred all cauſes of importance, not in Rome only, but the greateſt part of Italy. Meſſalla was the firſt Provoſt; but proof being had of his inſufficiency, the charge was committed to Agrippa: who did not only ſettle and confirm the City, but did the beſt he could to free the adjoining parts of Italy from Thieves & Robbers; and ſtopped the courſes of many other troublers of the preſent State. And yet he could not with that power either ſo ſpeedily, or ſo throughly reform all thoſe miſchiefs; which in the late unſetled times were become predominant, as he did deſire.

31. It is recorded that in the Civil Wars of Marius and Sylla, one Pontius Teleſinus of the Marian Faction, told his General, That he did well to ſcour the Country, but Italy would never want Wolves as long as Rome was ſo fit a Foreſt, and ſo near to retire unto. The like might have been ſpoken to Agrippa; That he did well to clear the common Rodes and Paſſages, but Italy would never want Thieves, whilſt Rome was ſo good a place of Refuge. For though he did, as far as humane induſtry could extend, endeavour a general Reformation both within the City and without; yet neither could he remedy, nor foreſee all miſchiefs. Still were they many, and thoſe great diſorders committed in the night ſeaſon; when as no eye, but that to which no darkneſs is an obſtacle, could diſcern the Malefactors. For in the firſt Proſcription, many men uſed to walk the Streets well weaponed; pretending only their own ſafety, but indeed it was to make their beſt advantage of ſuch men, as they met either in unfrequented Lanes and Paſſages, or travelling as their occaſions did direct them, in the Night. To repreſs therefore the ſoul inſolencies of theſe Sword-men, AUGUSTUS did ordain a Watch, conſiſting of 7000 Free-men, their Captain being a Gentleman of Rome. In the day time, the Guard of the Town was committed to the Provoſt, and his City Souldiers; Theſe Vigils reſting in their ſtanding Camps. In the night ſeaſon, one part took their ſtations in the moſt ſuſpicious places of the City; another, in perpetual motion traverſed the ſtreets; the reſt lying in the Corps du Guarde, to relieve their Companions. By which means he not only remedied the preſent diſorders, but preſerved the City from danger of Fire alſo: Yea, and ſecured himſelf from all Night-tumults, which carry with them (though but ſmall) more terror and affrightment, than greater Commotions in the day. Never till now were the common people Maſters of their own, both Lives & Subſtance. And now was travel in the Night, as ſafe, though not ſo pleaſant, as at Noon.

32. The People and City thus ſetled, his next ſtudy is to keep the Provinces in a liking of the Change. But little Rhetorick needed to win their liking, who had long deſired the preſent form of Government: miſtruſting the Peoples Regiment, by reaſon of Noblemens factions, covetouſneſs of Magiſtrates, the Laws affording no ſecurity, being ſwayed hither and thither by ambition and corruption. Theſe Provinces when he firſt took the Government, he thus divided. Aſia, Africa, Numidia, Betica, Narbonenſis, Sicilia, Corſica, Sardinia, all Greece, Crete, Cyprus, Pontus, and Bithynia, being quiet and peaceable Provinces, of known and faithful obedience, he aſſigned unto the Senate. But the new conquered Regions, ſuch as had not digeſted their loſs of liberty, with whom any Rebellion or War was to be feared; he retained under his own command. Such were Tarraconenſis, Luſitanica, Lugdunenſis, Germany, Belgica, Aquitanica, Syria, Silicia, Egypt, Dalmatia, Myſia, Pannonia, &c. And this he did, as he gave out, to ſuſtain the danger himſelf alone, leaving unto the Senate all the ſweets of eaſe: but the truth was, to keep them without Arms, himſelf always ſtrong, and in a readineſs. The notable effects of which Counſel did not diſcover themſelves only by the eſtabliſhment of the Empire in his own perſon during life, and the continuance of it in the houſe of the Cæſars (though men of moſt prodigious Vices) after his deceaſe: but in ſome of the Ages following alſo. For when the Family of the Cæſars was extinct in Nero, the Imperial Provinces being ſo ſtrong, and perceiving the Conſular ſo weak; aſſumed to themſelves the creating, and eſtabliſhing of the following Princes. Thus Galba was made Emperor by the Spaniſh and French Legions, Vitellius by the Germans, Veſpaſian by the Syrian and Pannonian: The Conſular Provinces never ſtirring, either to prevent their attempts, or to revenge them. And when they adventured once to advance Gordian to the Throne, all they could do, was but to betray the poor old man and all his Family to a tragick end. And yet he did not ſo appropriate thoſe Provinces to the Senate, but but that they also (as well as those which he reserved unto himself) were specified particularly in his private Register. In which (the better to manage the affairs of the Empire) he had set down what Tributes every of them paid, what Presents they sent in, what Customs in them were levyed. That Book also comprehended the wealth of the publick Treasury, and necessary charge issuing out of it: What number of Citizens and Allies there were in Arms; what strength there was by Sea: with all other circumstances, the extent, strength, riches, and particulars of his estate. William of Normandy did the like at his first entrance into England, when he composed that Censual Roll of all this Kingdom, which we call Doomsday Book, or the Roll of Winton; according unto which, Taxations were imposed, and Aids exacted. The greatest Princes have not thought it a disparagement to be good Husbands; to know the riches of their Crowns, and have an eye to their Intrado.

33. Britain was left out of this Bead-Roll, either because from thence there neither was much hope of profit, nor much fear of hurt; or else because being more desirous to keep than inlarge the Monarchy, he thought it most expedient to confine it within the bounds appointed by Nature. Danubius on the North, Mount Atlas on the South, Euphrates on the East, and the main Ocean on the West, did both bound his Empire and defend it. Some Kingdoms have their limits laid out by Nature, and those which have adventured to extend them further have found it fatal. The Persians seldom did attempt to stretch their Territory beyond Oxus, but they miscarried in the action. And what was that poor River, if compared unto the Ocean? Many who loved action, or expected preferment by the Wars, incited him unto the conquest and Plantation of these Countries. Affirming, "That the barbarous people were naturally "bad Neighbours; and though for the present not ve-"ry strong, nor well skilled in Arms, yet might a weak "Enemy in time gather great strength: that he ought "to pursue the War for his Father Julius sake, who "first shewed that Island to the Romans: that it yielded "both refuge and supply to Malecontents of Gaul, and "Enemies in Germany: that he would lose the benefit "of a wealthy Country, stored with all manner of pro-"vision; and the command of a valiant Nation, born "(as it were) unto the Wars. That it was an apostasie "from honour, to lie still, and add nothing to the con-"quest of his Ancestors: That he was in all equity "bound, as far as in him was, to reduce to Civility from "Barbarism, so many proper and able men. But to these motives he replyed, "That he had already refused "to wage War with the Parthian, a more dangerous "Neighbour, and far worse Enemy than the Britains: "That he had waste & desert ground enough in his own "Dominions, for many a large Plantation, when he saw "it needful: That he had constantly refused, though "with great facility he might, to conquer any more of "the Barbarous Nations: That, as in the Natural body, a "surfeit is more dangerous than fasting; so in the Body "Politick, too much is more troublesom than too little: "That the Roman Monarchy had already exceeded the "Persian, and Macedonian; and to extend it further, was "the next way to make it totter and fall by its own "weight. That he had learned in the Fable not to lose "the substance by catching at the shadow. And finally, that "many puissant Nations lay in and about Britany, against "whom Garrisons must be kept, and he feared the Reve-"nues would not quit the cost. And so the enterprise of "Britain was quite laid aside.

34. For the assurance of the Provinces already conquered, he dispersed into them 23 Legions, with their Aids; whose pay only, besides provision of Corn, and Officers wages, amounting to five Millions and an half of our English pounds, and somewhat more, were so duly paid unto the Armies, that we read seldom in the Histories of that Empire, of any Mutiny amongst the Souldiers, for want of pay. An happiness, whereof these ages have been little guilty. For the amassing of this treasure, and defraying of this Charge, AUGUSTUS made not use only of his own Revenue. Wars which are undertaken, and Souldiers that are levyed for the common safety, ought in all reason to be maintained on the Common purse. The Grandeur and security of an Empire, concerns in all respects, as much the People as the Prince. For which cause he erected an Exchequer in the City, which was called Ærarium militare, or the Souldiers Treasury; whereto the twentieth part of every mans Estate was brought, according to the true and perfect valuation. This was esteemed an heavy burden at the first; and indeed it was, but that the people felt the sweetness and effects of it in the Common safety. In that respect, the Interest was greater than the Principal. Subjects that have a care either of the common peace or honour, will not repine at payments and taxations, though more than ordinary. It is a poor conceit to think that Princes either are able or obliged, to maintain the Wars without assistance from their people: or that the treasures which in these respects they give the King, they do not give unto themselves. I may perhaps repute him for a cunning Sophister, but never for a faithful Subject which coyns distinctions betwixt the welfare of the King, and the weal of the Kingdom. These Legions he employed as occasion was, either to curb the Natives, or secure the Borders. The Roman Empire seldom had such perfect peace, but that there were employments always for the Souldiers. If that they had in any place a short cessation from the Wars, yet they were not idle. Idleness doubtless is the greatest enemy to Martial Discipline. Therefore he kept them at such times perpetually busied, either in paving Bogs, or in draining Marishes. By means whereof, he made not only many of the Barbarous Countries, both fruitful in themselves, and profitable to the Chequer: but thereby also he secured his own affairs, and disarmed his enemies. For many times the Barbarous people trusting to such advantages, were apt too often to rebell; and having got themselves within those Myres and Fastnesses, stood on their Guard, as in some fashionable or defensible Fortress. The surest means to keep a conquered people from all occasion of revolting, is to lay waste their Wood-lands, and make all parts passable. The opportunity of a safe retreat, makes not more Thieves than Rebels.

35. Those whom he placed over his Provinces and Armies, he neither would remove under three years Government, nor yet continue after five. A longer stay might teach them too much cunning in practising on the dispositions of the people, and perhaps prompt them to work into the favour of the Natives, and the Men of War: and so at last establish in themselves a Soveraignty. Cæsar's long stay in Gaul, (a second five years being added unto that which was first allowed him) made him so potent with the People, and gracious with the Souldiers, that in the end he brought the Roman Empire under his subjection. And on the other side, to take them from their charges under three years continuance were to have called them home, before they were well learned in the Customs and the nature of the Provinces; so making them unable to instruct their Successors: As for the men whom he employed in those commands, he culled them always out of the most valiant and upright in the Camp and Senate. A Prince more willing and desirous not to imploy men likely to offend, than after the offence to punish and chastise them for it.

36. Besides his Forces by Land, he also maintained at Sea two invincible Armadoes. The one lay at Anchor near Ravenna, in the upper Sea, to awe and defend Dalmatia, Crete, Greece, Cyprus, Asia, &c. The other at Misenum in the lower Sea, to protect and keep under Gaul, Spain, Africa, Egypt, Syria, &c. Neither was this the only use of two such puissant Fleets, but in all probability they were to cleanse the Sea of Pirates; to have a care to the conducting of the Tributes and Customs into the Exchequer; and served also for transporting Corn, and other necessary provisions, for the sustenance and relief of the City. In the ensuing Civil Wars, these two Navies proved to be of great importance: The revolt of them giving as great a blow to the one side, as a comfort to the other. The principal assurance of Otho in his Wars, was the immoveable fidelity of the Misenian Fleet; and the siding of the other with Vespasian, brake the hearts of Vitellius's best followers.

37. Now as he thus strengthened the Provinces in general, so he did cast an especial eye on three particulars, viz. Italy, Gaul, and Egypt. Italy founded Rome the Metropolis of the Empire; and therefore he ought to be well assured of its good faith and allegiance to him. Nor was he ignorant, that the Bellum sociale raised by the people of that Country, in the Free State, more shook and endangered the Empire, than the Invasions of Pyrrhus or Annibal. Therefore as formerly he planted in it two and thirty Colonies, of old and trusty Souldiers, to keep it sure unto himself; so now he did divide it into eleven Regions, each having peculiar Magistrates and Under-Officers. This not so much to ease the City-Prætor, although he had imployment enough at Rome; but because it was thick-set, and as it were overlaid with People, whose rising might endanger the Common-wealth. So by his Colonies he kept a Garrison upon them, as it were, that they could not revolt: and by his Officers and Justiciers (as I may call them) he set so strait a Watch about them, that they durst not practise.

38. Gaul, now called France, was both a large and fertile Country, stored with a people valiant in all attempts, and in many desperate. A people with which the old Romans fought rather to maintain their own liberty, than to increase their Dominions; a Tribe or Colony of which had sacked the City of Rome, and endangered the Capitol. A people finally, with whom the Romans durst not make War, till they had almost all the residue of the World in subjection. The remembrance of their ancient Reputation, and store of money, might occasion many desperate practices against the quiet of the Empire. The readiest way to keep them in obedience, was to keep them poor: for without wealth high stomachs may well feed on the hope of Liberty, but digest it never. Licinius, his freed man, was the fittest fellow for such an Office, who is presently made the Task-master of the Province. The Gauls used to pay a Monthly Tribute, which he much enhaunched (besides private and petty means of proling) by making fourteen Months in a year. The Solicitors of that people at Rome make complaint to AUGUSTUS. He sometimes yielded unto them, sometimes excused his Freed-man; some things he would not know, many he would not believe, others he dissembled. Licinius, to make up his peace, sent to the Emperour all his Treasure, and that huge Mass of Gold and Silver by those unlawful means heaped up together: which he not only willingly received, but his turn being served, and the Gauls not a little impoverished; he recalled Licinius, and sent Tiberius to settle the Province. So old and common a thing it is with great Princes, to suffer their Vice-Roys, and Under-Officers, to such like Spunges, the Wealth of the Subject, till they are quite full; and then to squeeze them into their own Coffers.

39. But the Province whose tuition and defence he principally regarded, was Egypt; not so much for the valour and courage of the Inhabitants, as the natural strength and situation of the place. Alexander of Macedon having annexed it to his Empire, never committed the entire Government and Jurisdiction thereof, to one man; fearing lest he presuming on the wealth of the People, and site of the Country, would settle the possession in himself. And so AUGUSTUS calling to mind as well the multitude, as the levity and inconstancy of the Natives; that it was very rich in coyn, and the Roman Granary (as serving the City four Months yearly with Corn) not only trusted not the rule thereof into the hands of any of the Senators, but expretly forbad any of that Order (without his special permission) to sojourn there. It is a principle in State, never to license men of great houses, and credit among the People, to have free access into that Country, whose revolt may endanger the whole Empire. Wherefore it was a weakness doubtless in the Council of King Henry the sixth, to suffer Richard Duke of York, to pass at leisure into Ireland; where he had harbour and relief, and whence he brought supply both of Men and Money. But to return to Egypt, Germanicus entring once into Alexandria, only to see the Antiquities of it, and return; stirred such suspicions, and distractions in the jealous head of Tiberius, that he spared not sharply to rebuke him for it. Vespasian also being by the Syrian Legions chosen Emperour, first assured himself of Egypt, as the Key of the Sea and Land; with a small power, against a strong host easily defended. This place he resolved to make his Sanctuary, if his designs succeeded not luckily. And to this place he hastened, after the defeat of the Vitellian Army, that so detaining the ordinary provision of Victuals, he might by Famine compel the City of Rome to stand at his devotion. The Government of this Province was by AUGUSTUS always committed to some one of the Roman Gentry, as less able, by reason of his low condition, to work gainst the Princes safety. Neither would he allow his Deputy the glorious attributes of Lieutenant, Legatus, Proconsul, or Prætor: Captain or President of Egypt was their highest Title; there being even in Titles no small motives to Ambition.

40. AUGUSTUS having by these means reduced both the City and Provinces under his absolute command, and being now declining in strength, by reason of a sudden and violent sickness; began to call his wits to Counsel, how to dispose of the Estate after his decease. Male-child he never had any. His Daughter Julia, a woman of immodest carriage, never made further use of her fathers greatness, than that she satisfied her Lusts with the greater insolence. Marcellus, his Sisters son, and Julia's husband, was a young man of an ingenious disposition, and seemingly capable of the fortunes which attended for him. Him, being yet young, AUGUSTUS preferred to the Pontificial dignity, and Ædileship: Yet once upon his sickness, he privately determined to choose another Successor in the Common-wealth, rather than his own Family; and not to leave the Empire to Marcellus, whom he held unable to undergo it, but to his companion in Arms, Agrippa, a man daunted neither with adverse, nor altered with prosperous fortunes. This, Marcellus afterwards so stomached, that he began to grutch at Agrippa's greatness, and to bear a vigilant eye on his plots and actions. Contrarily, Agrippa unwilling to offend him, under whose future Government he was in all likelyhood to end the reſt of his days, with much ado obtained leave to retire unto Lesbos: that ſo his abſence either might allay, or remove the diſpleaſure, conceived againſt him by the young Prince. An action full of wiſdom, and magnanimity. For though AUGUSTUS's chief end was, to diſcountenance the popular dependencies of his Son, by the favours heaped on his ſervant: yet did Agrippa know, that a Favourite ought to have ſo much in him of the Perſian Religion, as to worſhip the Riſing Sun alſo; and that he ſhould reſemble old Janus with two faces, with th'one looking on the King regnant, with th'other on the Prince ſucceſſive.

41. Marcellus being dead, Agrippa returning, marryed his Widow, and on her begat two Sons, Caius and Lucius; whoſe actions afterward afforded ſuch variety for cenſure, that there was wanting neither much reaſon to commend, nor little to condemn them. On theſe two, or at leaſt one of them, AUGUSTUS now grown aged, reſolves to ſettle the Eſtate; and, if they failed, upon ſuch others, as by the liberty of the Laws, he might adopt: Adoption, in the eſtimation of the Roman Laws, being indeed another Nature. Poſterity, whether it be natural, or only legal, is the beſt ſupport of the Arms Imperial: Such as both fortifies the Prince, and aſſures the Subject. Yet this he did, not without much reluctancy, and a greater conflict in his mind. 'Sometimes 'his thoughts ſuggeſted to him, that the deſigned Succeſſors draw to them all the attendance and reſpect, 'from the Prince in poſſeſſion; that they have always a 'lingring deſire to be actually ſettled in the Throne; 'That they ſuppoſe the life of the preſent Prince too te'dious, not caring by what means it were ſhortned; 'That ſometimes it is pernicious, yea even to the ap'pointed Succeſſor himſelf alſo. On the other ſide his 'better thoughts prompted him to conſider, in what a 'miſerable diſtraction he ſhould leave the Empire, if 'ſudden death ſhould take from him an ability to nomi'nate his heir; The fear conceived in the whole City, 'at his laſt ſickneſs; That Pyrrhus of Epirus, was of all 'hands condemned, for leaving his Kingdom to the 'ſharpeſt ſword; That the Common-wealth faln into 'diſſenſions, could not be ſetled again without a lamen'table War, and a bloody Victory; That the people 'ſeeing him childleſs would not only contemn him, but 'perhaps endeavour to recover the old liberty, though 'with the ruine of the State; That it was the cuſtom 'of Tyrants, to deſire the eternizing of their deaths, by 'the downfal of their Countries. His mind thus di'ſtracted and perplexed, at laſt he brake in this man'ner. 'Thou haſt, Octavian, a Wolf by the ears, which to 'hold ſtill, or let go, is alike dangerous. Many incon'veniences may enſue, if thou doſt not declare thy Suc'ceſſor; more if thou doſt. The good of the Republick 'conſiſteth in knowing the future Prince, Thine own 'welfare dependeth on the concealment. The Common 'good is to be preferred before any private; Yet ought 'Charity to begin at home. No, Octavian no; As thou haſt 'receiv'd, ſo ſhew thy ſelf worthy of the title of Pater pa'triæ. Yea, and perhaps this deſignation may ſecure 'thine own Eſtate. For what will it profit the people to 'conſpire againſt thee; when they ſhall ſee a Succeſſor 'at hand, either of thine own body, or thine own appoint'ment, ready to take thy place, and revenge thy wrongs?

42. Thus reſolved, he adopteth Caius and Lucius; deſiring, though he made ſhew to the contrary, they ſhould be Conſuls elect, and called Princes of the Youth. Yet wiſely forecaſting the dangers incident to himſelf, if they ſhould make their abode in Rome; he ſendeth them with honourable Charge into the Provinces abroad: as well to exerciſe them in feats of War, as to take away all cauſe of faction in the Court, and ſedition in the City. Which myſtery of State as it was anciently practiſed by moſt Princes, ſo at this day by the Grand Seignior: who always ſendeth his eldeſt Son unto Amaſia, as Governour thereof; from whence till the death of his Father, he never returneth. In theſe journeys, dyed the two young Princes; a misfortune which AUGUSTUS bare nobly; neither baniſhing grief, with a Stoical Apathy; nor ſpending the time in womaniſh lamentations. Having perfonned due rites to the dead, he adopted his Wifes Son, Tiberius. A man for the conveniency and ripeneſs of his age, not unfit; in feats of Arms, not unexpert; in humane learning, not ignorant; but withal ſuſpected to be cruelly given; and poſſeſſed with the hereditary pride of the Claudian Family. A ſtrange medley of vertuous and vitious qualities! Tiberius, ſuch was the will of his Father, to eſtabliſh the ſucceſſion with more ſtayes than one, adopted Germanicus, his Brother Druſus Son; then commanding over eight Legions in Germany: which done, he ſpeedeth to his charge in Illiricum. This man AUGUSTUS appointed to be his Succeſſor, as it was afterwards (and not improbably) conjectured, neither in care to the State, nor in love to the party; but to win honour to himſelf: and to make the Roman people again wiſh for him; when they ſhould ſee that infinite diſproportion in all Royal and Kingly qualities, between the old and new Emperors. A ſtetch, after imitated by Tiberius, in the adoption of Caius Caligula.

43. The laſt (though not the leaſt) help of the Empires eſtabliſhment, was the long life and reign of our AUGUSTUS: as having ruled the State 16 years before, and 34 years after his confirmation in the Soveraignty, by the Senate and people. All the young men in the City were born after the firſt Decennium of the Monarchy. Moſt of the old men, during the Civil Wars. Few had ſeen what was the ancient form of Government in the Common-wealth; many did not deſire it. For at the preſent, enjoying peace both at home and abroad; and hearing what ſad and tragical reports their Fathers made of the former troubles and proſcriptions: they contented themſelves with the new Government; as more eſteeming a ſecure and happy ſubjection, than a dangerous and factious liberty. By which long time of Empire and the policies already recited, beſides many others, which I can neither learn by relation, nor gather by preſumptions; did AUGUSTUS ſo firmly ſettle the Roman Monarchy, that it continued ſome hundred of years without alteration: though all his immediat Succeſſors were in a manner Monſters, incarnate Devils, and indeed any thing rather than Men. Tiberius, Caius, Claudius, Nero, Galba, Otho, and Vitellius, both by their own Tyranies, and their Bondmens Extortions, would have ruined any Monarchy not founded by AUGUSTUS.

44. To ſpeak concerning the Domeſtical affairs of this Emperor, is beyond my Theme. As either how far he ſuffered himſelf to be ordered by his Wife Livia; or whether he uſed variety of women, not ſo much to ſatisfie an inordinate appetite, as by ſo many women to fiſh out the ſecret deſigns of many men. He was too exact a Stateſman to be perfect in Souldiery; and in all his Wars was proſperous by Fortune rather than by Valour, or his Captains Valour than his own. The Common-wealth which he found weak and in Rubbiſh, he left Adamantine, and invincible. In behaviour he was affable and gracious; in his diſcourſe, ſententious; to the good, of a moſt ſweet diſpoſition; to the lewd and diſhoneſt, harſh and unpleaſant. Friendſhip he contracted with few, and that ſlowly; but to them whom he once loved, constant and bountiful to the last. Finally such a one he was, of whom I will only say, what I find spoken of Severus; 'It had been an ineffable benefit to 'the Common-wealth of Rome, if either he had never died, 'or never been born.

Thus having drawn the picture of this puissant and prudent Prince (though I confess with too much shadow) I now proceed unto the Catalogue of the Roman Emperours: in which I shall take notice of such of their Actions only, as had relation to the Publick, either in the improvement or decrease of their Power and Empire; or point to any signal matter which concerns the Church.

The Roman Emperours,

A. M.

3918. 1 Julius Cæsar the last of the Dictators, and the first of the Emperours: in memory of whom the following Emperours were called Cæsars, till the time of Adrian; when it became the title of the heir apparent, or designed Successor; the first who had it in that sense being Ælius Verus, though he lived not to enjoy the Empire.

3923. 2 C. Octavianus Cæsar, to whom the Senate gave the name of Augustus; who added unto the Roman Empire the Provinces of Noricum, Pannonia, Rhætia, a great part of Spain, and the whole Kingdom of Egypt.

A. Chr. In his time the Lord CHRIST was born. 56.

17. 3 Tiberius Nero, the Son-Law of Augustus, subdued many of the German Nations, and added Galatia and Cappadocia to the Empire. In his time, CHRIST suffered. 23.

39. 4 Caius Caligula, the Son of Germanicus (Son of Drusus, the brother of Tiberius and of Agrippina Neece to Augustus Cæsar, by his daughter Julia. 3.

43. 5 Claudius Cæsar, Uncle to Caligula, Brother of Germanicus, and Son of Drusus by Antonia Neece to Augustus by his Sister Octavia; added Britain, and Mauritania, to the Roman Empire. 13.

57. 6 Domitius Nero, Son of Ænobarbus, and Agrippina Daughter to Germanicus, the last of the Cæsars. He made the Cottian Alpes a Province of the Empire, and brought the Armenians to receive their Kings from the Roman Emperours; and was the first that raised any publick persecution against the Christians. An. 67. 13.

7 Sergius Galba, chosen by the French and Spanish Legions.

8 Salvius Otho, made Emperour by the Prætorian Souldiers.

9 Aul. Vitellius, elected by the German Legions.

71. 10 Flavius Vespasianus, chosen by the Syrian and Judæan Armies, subverted utterly the Common-wealth of the Jews, by the valour and prowess of his Son Titus; and brought Achaia, Lycia, Rhodes, Samos, Thrace, and Syria Comagene, under the form of Roman Provinces. 9.

80. 11 Titus Vespasianus, the fortunate Conquerer of the Jews.

82. 12. Fl. Domitianus, who raised the second persecution against the Christians. An. 96. 15.

97. 13 Nerva Coceeius, a noble Senator, but no Roman born; as all the rest had been before him, but not many after him.

99. 14 Ulpius Trajanus, by birth a Spaniard, adopted by Nerva: he made Dacia a Province of the Empire, carryed the Roman Armies over Euphrates, subduing Armenia, Mesopotamia, and Assyria, and raised the third Persecution against the Christians. An. 110. 19.

118. 15 Ælius Adrianus, who utterly exterminated the Jewish Nation, and continued the Persecution begun by Trajan. 20.

138. 16 Antoninus Pius, whose friendship was sought by the very Indians. 24.

162. 17. Marcus Antoninus, surnamed the Philosopher, associated L. Verus in the Government, by whose valour he subdued the Parthians. He raised the fourth Persecution against the Church. An. 167. 19.

181. 18. L. Antoninus Commodus, Son to Marcus, the first Emperor that had been hitherto born in the time of his Fathers Empire. 13.

194. 19 Ælius Pertinax, made Emperour against his will.

20 Didius Julianus, who bought the Empire of the Souldiers.

195. 21 Septimius Severus, took Ctesiphon from the Parthians, subdued the Provinces of Osroene; and raised the fifth Persecution, An. 195. 18.

213. 22 Bassianus Caracalla, Son to Severus.

220. 23 Opilius Macrinus, made Emperor by the men of War.

221. 24 Varius Heliogabalus, the supposed Son of Caracalla.

225. 25 Alexander Severus, Cousen of Varius.

238. 26 Maximinus, a fellow of obscure birth; who being advanced to the Empire, raised the sixth Persecution. An. 237.

241. 27 Gordian, elected by the Senate against Maximinus. 6.

247. 28 Philip, an Arabian, supposed by some to be a Christian. 5.

252. 29 Decius, slain in War against the Goths; the Author of the seventh Persecution raised against the Church. An. 252.

254. 30 Gallus Hostilianus. 2.

256. 31 Æmilianus the Moor.

256 32 Valerianus, the Author to the eighth Persecution, An. 259. He was taken prisoner by Sapores, King of Persia, and made to serve him for a footstool.

33 Gallienus, Son to Valerianus, in whose time the 30 Tyrants ingrossed unto themselves several parts of the Empire.

271. 34 Claudius II. who after a short and troublesom time, left it to 272 35 Quintillus his Brother, who enjoyed the same but 17 days.

273. 36 Valer. Aurelianus, restored again the antient discipline, suppressed all the Invaders of the Empire, and vanquished the Goths; but was a great persecutor of the Church, An. 278. 6.

279. 37 Annius Tacitus, descended from Tacitus the Historian.

38 Florianus, an Emperor of two months only.

280. 39 Valerius Probus. 6.

286. 40 Aurelius Carus, together with his two Sons Carinus and Numerianus.

Diocletian,

288 41 Diocleſian, firſt aſſociated Maximinianus by the name of Emperor, or Auguſtus, and afterwards Galerius of Dacia, and Conſtantius Chlorus, by the name of Ceſars. He had continual Wars againſt the Perſians, and raiſed the tenth Perſecution againſt the Church, An. 295. Which held ſo long, and was ſo vehement withal, that as St. Hierome writes, there were 5000 ſlain for every day in the year, ſave the firſt of January. He afterwards reſigned the Empire, and lived in private at Salona. 20.

305 42 Conſtantius Chlorus, a friend to Chriſtians. 2.

310 43 Conſtantine, Son of Chlorus, ſurnamed Magnus, or the Great, the firſt Emperor that countenanced the Goſpel, and embraced it publickly; which he is ſaid to have done on this occaſion. At the ſame time that he was ſaluted Emperour in Britain, Maxentius was choſen at Rome by the Prætorian Souldiers, and Licinius named Succeſſor by Maximinianus, the aſſociate of his Father Chlorus. Being penſive and ſolicitous upon theſe diſtractions, he caſt his eyes up towards Heaven, where he ſaw in the Air a lightſom Pillar in the form of a Croſs, wherein he read theſe words, ἐν τούτῳ νίκα, In hoc vince; and the next night our Saviour appearing to him in a Viſion, commanded him to bear that figure in his Standard, and he ſhould overcome all his Enemies. This he performed, and was accordingly victorious, from which time he not only favoured the Chriſtians, but became a very zealous Profeſſor of the Faith and Goſpel. I know Zoſimus an Heathen Hiſtorian, partly out of malice to the Chriſtians in general, and partly a particular grudg to the Emperor Conſtantine, reporteth otherwiſe of the cauſes of his Converſion: But the authority and conſent of all Chriſtian Writers, who deliver it as before is told, is far to be preferred before the teſtimony of one ſingle Heathen, had he not been biaſſed (as he was) by his diſaffections.

Before this time it is obſerved, that few (if at all any) of the Roman Emperors died a natural death, as after they generally did. From Julius Cæſar unto Conſtantine there were 40 in all. Of which Julius was openly murdered in the Senate; Auguſtus made away by his wife Livia; as Tiberius afterwards by Macro; Caligula was ſlain by Caſſius Chereas; Claudius poyſoned by his wife Agrippina; Nero, and Otho, laid violent hands upon themſelves; Galba, and Vitellus, maſſacred by the Souldiers; Domitian by Stephanus, Commodus by Letus and Electus, Pertinax and Julianus by the Souldiers of their Guard; Caracalla by the command of Macrinus, Macrinus, Heliogabalus, Alexander, Maximinus, Maximus, and Balbinus, ſucceſſively by the men of War; Gordianus by Philip, Philip by the Souldiers; Hoſtilianus by Gallus, and Æmilianus; and they by the Souldiers; Valerianus died a Priſoner in Parthia; Florianus was the Author of his own end, Aurelianus murthered by his houſhold ſervants; Gallienus, Quintillus, Tacitus, and Probus, by the fury of the military men. And yet I have omitted out of this Accompt ſuch of the Emperors as were tumultuouſly made by the Army, without the approbation of the Senate; as alſo the Ceſars, or deſigned Succeſſors of the Empire; moſt of which got nothing by their deſignation and adoption, but ut citius interficerentur. Some of theſe were cut off for their miſdemeanors: ſome for ſeeking to revive again the antient Diſcipline; and ſome that others might enjoy their places. The chief cauſe of theſe continual maſſacres, proceeded originally from the Senate, and Emperors themſelves. For when the Senators had once permitted the Souldiers to elect Galba, and had confirmed that election; Evulgato (ſaith Tacitus) imperii arcano, principem alibi quam Romæ fieri poſſe: more Emperors were made abroad in the field by the Legions, than at home by the Senators. Secondly from the Emperors alone, who by an unſeaſonable love to their Guard-Souldiers, ſo ſtrengthened them with priviledges, and nuſled them in their licentious courſes, that on the ſmalleſt rebuke, they which were appointed for the ſafety of the Princes, proved the Authors of their ruin: ſo truly was it ſaid by Auguſtus in Dion, Metuendum eſt eſſe ſine cuſtode, ſed multo magis a cuſtode metuendum eſt. The laſt cauſe (be it cauſa per accidens, or per ſe) was the largeſs which the new Emperors uſed to give unto the men of ſerviee; a cuſtom begun by Claudius Cæſar, and continued by all his Succeſſors: in ſo much that the Empire became ſaleable, and many times he which bad moſt had it. As we ſee in Dion, when Sulpitianus offering twenty Seſtertiums to each Souldier, was (as if they had been bying a ſtock at Gleek) out-bidden by Julianus, who promiſed them five and twenty Seſtertiums a man. So that Herodian juſtly complaineth of this Donative; Id initium cauſæ, militibus fuit, ut etiam in poſterum turpiſſimi contumaciſſimiq; evaderent, hæ ut avaritiæ indies, ac principum contemptus, etiam ad ſanguinem uſque proveherent. That is to ſay; From this occaſion and beginning, the Souldiers every day grew more ſhameleſs, and leſs regardful of their Prince: ſo that their covetouſneſs encreaſing, and the contempt they had of their Emperors waxing more and more, ended at laſt in the frequent ſhedding of their bloods, in hope to have a better Market of the next Succeſſor: So as the Emperor Conſtantine wanted not good reaſon, beſides their ſiding againſt him for Maxentius, to caſhier theſe Guards, as grown more dangerous than uſeful to Imperial Majeſty. And ſo accordingly he did, levelling their ſtanding Camp to the very ground, disbanding the whole company, or putting them under other Officers, and to other Services, by means whereof they were not able to create the like diſturbances, or diſpoſe of the Empire as before. And for the Captains of theſe Guards which before were two (Præfecti Prætorio in the Latin) he encreaſed their number unto four (one for each quarter of the Empire) giving them a Civil Juriſdiction in exchange for the Military Command which they had before, and caſting them behind in place after the Patricii, an Order of his own deviſing.

As for the extent and latitude of the Roman Empire, whilſt it remained one intire Body (as it was before the time of Conſtantine, who at his death divided it among his Sons) it was in length about three thouſand miles; namely from the Iriſh Ocean Weſt, to the River Euphrates on the Eaſt; and in breadth, it reached from the Danubius Northward to Mount Atlas on the South, about two thouſand miles. And though the Romans had extended their Dominions ſometimes farther Eaſt, and North; yet could they never quietly ſettle themſelves in thoſe conqueſts. Nature (it ſeemeth) had appointed them theſe bounds, not ſo much to limit their Empire, as to defend it. For the enemies found thoſe Rivers, by reaſon of the depth of the Chanel, and violent current of the ſtream, as a couple of impregnable Fortreſſes, purpoſely (as it were) erected to hinder them from harraſing the Roman Countries.

The Revenues of it Lipſius in his Tract de Magnitudine Romana, eſteemeth to be about one hundred and fifty millions of Crowns; and that they were no leſs, may be made more than probable by theſe reaſons: 1. It is affirmed by divers, and among others by Boterus, that the yearly Revenues of the King of China amount to one hundred and twenty millions of Crowns. And if this be true (as few queſtion it) we cannot in proportion gueſs the whole Empire of the Romans to yield leſs than one hundred and fifty millions; eſpecially conſidering what Arts-Maſters the Romans were, in levying and raiſing their Taxes and cuſtomary Tributes. 2. The Legionary Souldiers which were diſperſed over the Provinces, received in ordinary pay, (beſides proviſion of corn, apparel, and Officers wages) five millions, 516062 pounds and ten ſhillings of our money; which amounteth unto ſixteen millions of Crowns, or thereabout. In the City it ſelf were kept in continual pay, ſeven thouſand Souldiers of the Watch, four thouſand or ſix thouſand for the defence of the City? and ten thouſand for the Guard of the Emperor's perſon. The two firſt had the ſame wages, the laſt the double wages of a Legionary Souldier. Add hereto the expences of the Palace; and other means of diſburſals, and I think nothing of the ſum can be abated. 3. We read that C. Caligula ſpent in one year two millions and ſeven hundred thouſand of Seſtertiums; how Nero moſt laviſhly gave away two millions and one hundred thouſand of Seſtertiums; and how Vitellius in few months, was nine hundred thouſand Seſtertiums in Arrearages; every Seſtertium being valued at ſeven pound ſixteen ſhillings three pence; all of them huge and infinite ſums. 4. When Veſpaſian came to the Empire, the Exchequer was ſo impoveriſhed, that he profeſſed in open Senate, that he wanted to ſettle the Common-wealth forty millions of Seſtertiums, amounting to three hundred and twelve millions of our Engliſh money: which Proteſtation (ſaith Sueton) ſeemed probable, Quia & male partis optime uſus eſt. Now unleſs the ordinary Revenues came to as much, or more than we have ſpoken; by what means could this extraordinary ſum be raiſed? 5. We may gueſs at the general Revenue by the moneys iſſuing out of particular Provinces; and it is certain, that Egypt afforded the Ptolomies twelve thouſand Talents yearly: niether had the Romans leſs, they being more perfect in inhancing, than in abating their Intrado. France was by Cæſar ceſſed at the yearly tribute of twenty millions of Crowns. And no doubt the reſt of the Provinces were rated accordingly. 6. And laſtly, the infinite ſums of money given by the Emperors in way of largeſs, are proofs ſufficient for the greatneſs of the In-come. I will inſtance in Auguſtus only, and in him, omitting his Donatives at the victory of Actium, and the reſt, I will ſpecifie his Legacy at his death: He bequeathed (by his Teſtament, as we read in Tacitus) to the common ſort, and the reſt of the people, three pound eight ſhillings a man; to every Souldier of the Prætorian bands, ſeven pounds ſixteen ſhillings three pence; and to every Legionary Souldier, of the Roman Citizens, four pound ten ſhillings ſix pence: which amounted to a mighty maſs of money.

The Arms or Enſigns of this Empire when it was up and in the flouriſh, was the Eagle: not born, as now in colours, and a banner; but in an Image or Portraicture on the top of a Spear, or other long piece of wood, to be fixed in the earth at pleaſure. This Enſign, Spear and Eagle together, they called the Labarum: Quæ ſigna, quod quaſi labantia haſtis appenderentur Labara dixerunt, ſaith Lipſius, Epiſt. Quæſt. Ep. 5. The uſe as of this, ſo of other ſtandards, Lyra giveth us in his Notes on the ſecond of Numbers, namely, ut ad eorum aſpectum, bellatores dividantur & uniantur, to call together, and diſtribute the Souldiers according to occaſions. And certainly for this end and purpoſe were thoſe Enſigns firſt invented. Afterwards they were applied to the diſtinguiſhing of Tribes and Families; and at laſt beſtowed by Kings and Princes as the honorary marks of well-deſerving: Thoſe which had been the Enſigns of War, ſo becoming the ornaments of Peace. At what time the form of this Labarum was altered, and began to be born in colours, I have not yet read. It is now an Eagle Saturn, in a Field Sol, which kind of bearing the Heralds call moſt rich. It was firſt born by Ca. Marius in his ſecond Conſulſhip, and in his Wars againſt the Cimbri; from him conveyed to J. Cæſar, who was allied to him in deſign and perſon; and ſo derived unto the Emperors, his Succeſſors.

But to proceed, Conſtantine having ſetled his affairs in peace, and caſhiered the Prætorian Guards, fell to new modelling the Empire; which he conceived to be too cumberſom and unwieldy to be governed by the former Polity; as indeed it was. And firſt of all, he augmented the Roman Provinces to the number of one hundred and twenty, or thereabouts; over every one of which he ordered a particular Preſident, that had his reſidence in the chief City of that Province. Then he reduced theſe Provinces under fourteen Dioceſes, (for ſo he called the greater diſtributions of his Empire) ſeven of which were in the Eaſt parts thereof, that is to ſay, the Dioceſe of Egypt, of the Orient, of Aſia, of Pontus, Thrace, Dacia, and Macedon: and as many alſo in the Weſt, viz. the Præfecture of the City of Rome (which I count for one,) the Dioceſe of Italy, Africk, and Illyricum, of France, Spain, and Britain. Finally inſtead of the two Præfecti Prætorio which had the command of the Prætorians, he ordained four for the quarters of the Empire: that is to ſay, the Præfectus-Prætorio Italiæ, under whom were the Dioceſes of Italy, Africk, and Illyricum: Præfectus-Prætorio Galliarum, who had under him the Dioceſes of France, Spain, and Britain; 3. The Præfectus-Prætorio Orientis, who had commanded over the Dioceſes of Egypt, the Orient, the Aſian, the Pontick and Thracian Dioceſes; And 4. the Præfectus-Prætorio Illyrici, under whoſe ſuperintendence, beſides Illyricum it ſelf, were the Dioceſes of Macedon and Dacia only; each of theſe Præfects having a Vicarius, or Lieutenant in the ſeveral Dioceſes under his authority, who fixed their reſidence in the head City of the Dioceſe. And this I have the rather noted, becauſe of the relation which the Polity of the Chriſtian Church had to this Diviſion: it being ſo ordered in the beſt and pureſt times thereof, that in every City where the Emperors had an Officer, whom they called Defenſor Civitatis, the Chriſtians ſhould have a Biſhop; in every chief City of the Province a Metropolitan; and over every Dioceſe an Archbiſhop or Primate, from whom lay no Appeal unto any other. And ſo far Conſtantine did well; if at the leaſt the caſting of the Empire into ſo many Dioceſes was of his deviſing. But I have reaſon to believe, that it was more ancient: the Patriarchs or Primates of Rome, Carthage, Alexandria, Antioch, and other of the greater Churches, being ſettled in a preheminence of juriſdiction over the Provinces, and Metropolitans aſſigned to them long time before the Council of Nice, and conſequently before the Empire (nay the birth) of Conſtantine, who poſſibly might act no more in this great buſineſs, than the aſſigning of a Præfectus-Prætorio to each ſeveral quarter, and the allotting of the Dioceſes unto each Præfectus. But whether it were ſo or not, certain it is, that he committed divers errors, which did more prejudice judice the Empire, than any thing that had been done by his Predeceſſors. Firſt in tranſlating the Imperial Seat from Rome to Byzantium; by which tranſplantation, the Empire loſt much of its natural vigour: as we ſee by experience of Plants and Flowers, which being removed from the place of their natural growth, loſe much of their vertue which was formerly in them. On which reaſon, Camillus would not ſuffer the Romans to remove their Seat unto the City of the Veii, newly conquered by him: but to prevent them in it ſet fire on the Town, and ſo conſumed it, ut nunc Veios fuiſſe, laboret Annalium fides, as my Author hath it. A ſecond fault of this Conſtantine, was the dividing the Empire amongſt his Sons, which only concerned himſelf. For though it was quickly re-united in the perſon of Conſtantius (his brethren dying without iſſue); yet his example being followed by others, the Empire was after torn into many pieces to the deſtruction of the whole. 'Tis true, the former Emperors uſed ſometimes to aſſociate ſome partner with them; but ſo, that they did manage it as one ſole Eſtate: Conſtantine (if I remember rightly) being the firſt which parcelled it into ſeveral Soveraignties, each independent of the other, allotting to Conſtantius, Greece, Thrace, and all the Provinces of the Eaſt; to Conſtans, Italy, Illyricum, Africk; to Conſtantine, Gaul, Spain, and Britain. The third fault of this Emperor was his removing the Legion and Colonies which lay before on the Northern Marches, into the Eaſtern parts of his Dominions; pretending to uſe them as a Bulwark againſt the Perſians; laying thereby thoſe paſſages open, at which not long after the Barbarous Nations entred, and ſubdued the Weſt. For though inſtead of theſe Colonies he planted Garriſons and Forts in convenient places, yet theſe being filled with Souldiers, for the moſt part out of other Countries, fought not as in defence of their native Soil, (as the Colonies would and muſt have done) but on the firſt onſet of thoſe Barbarians abandoned them to the will of the enemy. So that Zozimus (though in other of his reports about this Prince he bewrayeth much malice) doth call him, not untruly, the firſt Subverter of that flouriſhing Monarchy. To theſe three we may add a fourth, which concerns the Emperors in general; namely their ſtupid negligence and degenerate ſpirits, which ſhewed it ſelf moſt viſibly in the laſt of

The Weſtern Emperors.

341 1 Conſtans, the youngeſt ſon of Conſtantinus Magnus, his brother Conſtantine being dead, in the third year of his reign, remained ſole Emperor of the Weſt. 13.

354 2 Conſtantius, the other of Conſtantines ſons ſucceeded Conſtans in his part, after his deceaſe; uniting the divided Empire into one Eſtate.

3 Valentinian Emperor of the Weſt, his brother Valens ruling in Conſtantinople, and the Eaſtern parts.

4 Valentinian II. youngeſt ſon of the former Valentinian.

399 5 Honorius the ſecond ſon of Theodoſius the Emperor, (his elder brother Arcadius reigning in the Eaſt) in whoſe time Alarick with the Goths invaded Italy, ſacked Rome, and made themſelves Maſters of the Country, which afterwards they left in exchange for Spain. 26.

425 6 Valentinian III. during whoſe time Attila and the Hunnes made foul work in Italy; and the Vandals ſeized upon Africk, as they did on Italy and Rome alſo after his deceaſe: Murdered by Maximus a Roman (whoſe wife he had trained into the Court, and raviſhed) as ſhall be ſhewn hereafter on another occaſion. He was ſon unto Conſtantius Cæſar by Placidia ſiſter to Honorius, and Widow of Anthaulfus King of the Goths.

455 7 Maximus having ſlain Valentinian the third, ſucceeded in the Empire; but on the coming of the Vandals, whom Eudoxia the wife of Valentinian (who had ſome inkling of the manner of her husbands death) had drawn into Italy, he was ſtoned to death by his own Souldiers. 1.

456 8 Avitus, choſen Emperor in a military tumult.

457 9 Maiorianus. 4.

461 10 Severus. 6.

467 11 Anthemius, who at the end of five years was ſlain (as were the three before him) by Recimer a Suevian born, the chief Commander of the Armies; who had an aim to get the Empire for himſelf, but died as ſoon as he had vanquiſhed and ſlain Anthemius.

471 12 Olybrius, an Emperor of four months only.

472 13 Glycerius, another of as little note: As alſo was 14 Julius Nepos, depoſed by Oreſtes a noble Roman, who gave the Empire to his ſon, called at firſt Momillus; but, after his aſſuming the Imperial title, he was called as in contempt Auguſtulus.

473 15 Auguſtulus, the laſt of the Emperors who reſided in Italy, vanquiſhed by Odoacer King of the Heruli and Turingians. An ominous thing, that as Auguſtus raiſed this Empire, ſo an Auguſtulus ſhould ruin it.

But though Auguſtulus loſt the Empire, yet Odoacer was not ſuffered to enjoy it long: Zeno the Emperor of the Eaſt ſending Theodorick King of the Goths, to expel him thence; and to poſſeſs himſelf of Italy, the reward of his valour. And this the Emperor did the rather, partly becauſe the Goths were Chriſtians, and in good terms of correſpondency with him: but principally to remove that active Nation ſomewhat further off, who lay before too near the borders of his own Dominions. And that he might diſmiſs them with the greater content and honour, he made Theodorick a Patrician of the Roman Empire; an honour firſt deviſed by the Emperor Conſtantine; and of ſo high eſteem from the firſt Inſtitution, that they who were dignified therewith, were to have precedency of the Prætoria-Præfecti, who before took place next to the Emperor himſelf. Nor did the famous Charlemain ſet upon it any lower eſtimate, in caſe he did not add much unto it; when to the Title of Emperor of the Romans, he added that of a Patrician in the ſtile Imperial. Theodorick thus authorized and encouraged, marches toward Italy; and having vanquiſhed Odoacer, ſecures himſelf in his new Conqueſts by divers politick proceedings; firſt by Alliances abroad, and then by Fortreſſes at home. To fortifie himſelf abroad he took to Wife Adelheida, daughter to Clodoveus (or Clovis) King of the French; marrying his ſiſter Hemelfride to Thoriſmund, King of the Vandals in Africk, Amalaſunta a ſecond daughter to Eutharicus a Prince of the Goths in Spain; and Ammelberge his Neece, to Hermandfridus King of the Turingians. Being thus backed with theſe Alliances with his Neighbour-Princes, (all equally concerned in the ſubverting of the Roman Empire) he built Towns and Forts along the Alpes, and the ſhores of the Adriatick, to impeach the paſſage of the barbarous Nations into Italy. His Souldiers and Commanders he deſperſed into moſt parts of the Country; partly to keep under the Italians, of whoſe wavering and unconſtant nature he was ſomewhat doubtful; partly to unite unite both people in a mixture of Language, Marriages, and Customs; and partly that he might more easily in War command them, and in Peace correct them. Italy, which before was made a thorow-fare to the barbarous Nations, and quite disordered by the frequent inundations of Lust and Rapine; he reduced to such a peaceable and setled Government, that before his death they had quite lost the memory of their former miseries: instead whereof a general felicity had diffused it self over all the Country. Such Cities as had been formerly defaced, he repaired, strengthned, and beautified. In his Wars he was victorious, temperate in his times of Peace, and in his private carriage discreet and affable. Finally (as Velleius saith of Morobodnus) he was Natione magis quam ratione Barbarus: And went the most judicious way to establish his dominion in Italy, of any of the Barbarous Princes that ever had invaded the Roman Provinces, which he left thus confirmed & setled unto his Successors.

A. Chr. The Kings of the Goths in Italy.

495 1 Theodorick of whom before; who to his conquest of Italy added that of Illyricum, as also the appendant Islands to both those Countries; and wrested Provence in France, from the Goths of Spain.

527 2 Athalaricus, Nephew to Theodorick by his daughter to Amalasunta, who in the minority of her son managed the affairs of the Goths in Italy. Fearing some danger out of Greece, she restored Provence to the French, and by their aid drove the Burgundians out of Liguria. A Lady skilful in the Languages of all those Nations which had any commerce with the Roman Empire, insomuch that pro miraculo fuerit ipsam audire loquentem, saith Procopius of her.

534 3 Theodatus, the son of Hammelfride, the sister of Theodorick, succeeded on the untimely death of Athalaricus. Who being in War with the Romans, (or rather with the Greek Emperors, endeavouring to recover Italy from the hands of the Goths) and desiring before hand to know his success; was willed by a Jew to shut up a certain number of Swine, and to give to some of them the names of Goths, and unto others the names of Romans. Which done, and going to the styes, not long after they found the Hogs of the Gothish faction all slain, and those of the Roman halt unbristled: and thereupon the Jew foretold, That the Goths should be discomfited, and the Romans lose a great part of their strength; and it proved accordingly. Which kind of Divination is called Οιωνεια, and hath been prohibited by a General Council. The loss of this battel (won by Belisarius Commander of the Armies of the Emperour Justinian) drew on the loss of Rome, and the East parts of Italy, (with the Realm of Naples) and occasioned the death of Theodatus, slain shortly after these great losses by the Goths themselves. 3.

537 4 Vitiges, chosen by the Goths, besieged and taken in Ravenna by the said Belisarius. 3.

541 6 Ardaricus, of whom nothing memorable. 1.

542 7 Totilas, a right valiant Prince, recovered all which had been got from his Predecessors, and sacked Rome in the sight of Belisarius, then returned into Italy, as not able to hinder him. Vanquished and killed in fight by Narses, in the 11. of his Reign. 11.

553 8 Teyas, the last King of the Goths in Italy, who being vanquished by Narses in the fourteenth year of his Reign, submitted himself to the Eastern Emperours: but after breaking out again, he was finally discomfited, and slain by Narses, not far from the City of Nocera. An. 567. After which time, the Goths and the Italians mingled in Blood and Language, became one Nation.

But the miseries of Italy, and those Western parts were not so to end. No sooner had God freed them from the rod of his visitations, which he had laid upon them in the times of Persecution, formerly remembred; and giving them peace within their dwellings; but they became divided into Schisms and Factions: and after wallowed in those sins; which a continual surfeit of prosperity hath commonly attending on it. Insomuch that devout Salvian, who lived much about these times, complains of that high hand of wickedness, wherewith they did provoke the patience of Almighty God; the lives of Christians being grown so deplorably wicked, that they became a scandal to the Faith and Gospel. In nobis patitur Christus opprobrium, in nobis patitur lex Christiana maledicium, saith that godly Bishop. So that their sins being ripe for vengeance, God sent the barbarous Nations, as his Executioners, to execute his divine justice on the impenitent men; and made them sensible though Heathens, that it was Gods work they did, and not their own, in laying such afflictions on these Western parts. Ipsi fatebantur non suum esse quod facerent, agi enim se & per urgeri divino jussu, as the said godly Bishop doth inform us of them. On this impulsion the Vandals did acknowledge that they first wasted Spain, and then harried Africk: And at the same time, did Attila the Hun insert into his Royal Titles the stile of Malleus Orbis, and Flagellum Dei; acknowledging thereby his own apprehension of some special and extraordinary calling to this publick service. Nay, as Jornandes doth report, some of these barbarous people did not stick to say, That they were put on this employment by some Heavenly visions, which did direct them to the work which they were to do. In prosecution of the which, in less time than the compass of 80 years, this very Italy (though anciently the strength and seat of that Empire) was seven times brought almost unto desolation, by the Fire and Sword of the Barbarians, viz. First by Alarick, King of the Goths, who sacked Rome, Naples, &c. 2. By Attila King of the Huns who razed Florence, wasted Lombardy, and not without much difficulty was diverted from the spoil of Rome, by the intercession of Pope Leo. 3. By Genfericus King of the Vandals, who also had the sackage of Rome it self. 4. By Biorgus King of the Alani, in the time of the Emperour Maioranus. 5. By Odoacer King of the Heruli. who drove Augustulus the last Western Emperour out of his estate; and twice in thirteen years laid the Country desolate. 6. By Theodorick King of the Goths, called in by Zeno Emperour of Constantinople to expel Odoacer and the Heruli. And 7. by Gundebald King of the Burgundians, who having ransacked all Lombardy, returned home again, leaving possession to the Goths. As for these Goths, being the first and last of those barbarous Nations who had any thing to do in the spoil of Italy, after they had reigned here under eight of their Kings, for the space of 72 years, they were at last subdued by Belisarius and Narses, two of the bravest braveſt Souldiers that had ever ſerved the Eaſtern Emperors; and Italy united once more to the Empire, in the time of Juſtinian. But Narſes having governed Italy about 17 years, and being after ſuch good ſervice moſt deſpightfully uſed by Sophia (never the wiſer for her name) the wife of the Emperour Juſtinus, abandoned the Country to the Lombards. For the Empreſs envying his glories, not only did procure to have him recalled from his Government; but ſent him word, That ſhe would make the Eunuch (for ſuch he was) come home and ſpin among her maids. To which the diſcontented man returned this anſwer, That he would ſpin her ſuch a web, as neither ſhe nor any of her minions ſhould ever be able to unweave. And thereupon he opened the paſſages of the Country to Alboinus King of the Lombards, then poſſeſſed of Pannonia; who coming into Italy with their Wives and Children, poſſeſſed themſelves of all that Country which anciently was inhabited by the Ciſalpine Gauls, calling it by their own names Longobardia, now corruptly Lombardy. Nor ſtaid he there, but made himſelf maſter of the Countries lying on the Adriatick, as afar as to the borders of Apulia: and for the better Government of his new dominions, erected the four famous Dukedoms, 1. of Friuli at the entrance of Italy, for the admiſſion of more aids if occaſion were, or the keeping out of new Invadors: 2. Of Turlin, at the foot of the Alpes againſt the French: 3. Benevent, in Abruzzo, a Province of the Realm of Naples, againſt the incurſions of the Greeks, then poſſeſſed of Apulia, and the other Eaſtern parts of that Kingdom: And 4. of Spoleto, in the midſt of Italy, to ſuppreſs the Natives; leaving the whole, and hopes of more unto his ſucceſſors.

756. 23 Deſiderius, the laſt of the Lombards, of whom more anon. In the mean time, we will look into the ſtory of ſome of the former Kings, in which we find ſome things deſerving our conſideration. And firſt beginning with Alboinus, the firſt of this Catalogue: before his coming into Italy he had waged war with Cunimundus, a King of the Gepidæ; whom he overthrew, and made a drinking Cup of his Skull. Roſamund daughter of this King he took to Wife; and being one day merry at Verona, forced her to drink out of that deteſted Cup; which ſhe ſo ſtomached, that ſhe promiſed one Helmichild, if he would aid her in killing the King, to give him both her ſelf and the Kingdom of Lombardy. This when he had conſented to, and performed accordingly, they were both ſo extreamly hated for it, that they were fain to fly to Ravenna, and put themſelves into the protection of Longinus the Exarch. Who partly out of a deſire to enjoy the Lady; partly to be poſſeſſed of that maſs of Treaſure which ſhe was ſaid to bring with her; but principally hoping by her power and party there, to raiſe a beneficial War againſt the Lombards; perſwaded her to diſpatch Helmichild out of the way, and take him for her husband; to which ſhe willingly agreed. Helmichild coming out of a Bath called for drink, and ſhe gives him a ſtrong poyſon; half of which when he had drunk, and found by the ſtrange operation of it how the matter went, he compelled her to drink the reſt: ſo both died together. 2. Clephes the Second King extended the Kingdom of the Lombards to the Gates of Rome: but was ſo tyrannical withal, that after his death, they reſolved to admit of no more Kings, diſtributing the Government among thirty Dukes. Which diviſion, though it held not above twelve years, was the chief cauſe that the Lombards failed of being the abſolue Lords of all Italy. For the people having once caſt off the yoak of obedience, and taſted ſomewhat of the ſweetneſs of licentious Freedom; were never after ſo reduced to their former duty, as to be aiding to their Kings in ſuch Atchievements as tended more unto the greatneſs of the King, than the gain of the ſubject. 3. Cunibert the 14. King was a great lover of the Clergy, and by them as lovingly requited. For being to encounter with Alachis the Duke of Trent, who rebelled againſt him: one of the Clergy knowing that the Kings life was chiefly aimed at by the Rebels, put on the Royal Robe, and thruſt himſelf into the head of the Enemy, where he loſt his own life, but ſaved the Kings. 4. Aribert the 17 King, gave the Coltian Alpes containing Piemont, and ſome part of the Dutchy of Millain to the Church of Rome: which is obſerved to be the firſt Temporal Eſtate, that ever was conferred upon the Popes, and the foundation of that greatneſs which they after came to. 5. The 19 King was Luitprandus, who added to the Church the Cities of Ancona, Narnia, and Humana, belonging to the Exarchate; having firſt won Ravenna, and the whole Exarchy thereof. An. 741. The laſt Exarch being called Eutichus. But the Lombards long enjoyed not his Conqueſts. For Pepin King of France, being by Pope Stephen the third, ſolicited to come into Italy; overthrew Aſtulphus, and gave Ravenna to the Church. The laſt King was Deſiderius, who falling at odds with Adrian the firſt, and beſieging him in Rome, was by Charles the great, Succeſſor to Pepin, beſieged in Pavy, and himſelf with all his Children taken priſoners, An. 774. And ſo ended the Kingdom of the Lombards, having endured in Italy 206 years. Lombardy was then a Province of the French, and after of the German Empire: many of whoſe Emperors uſed to be crowned Kings of Lombardy, by the Biſhops of Millain, with an Iron-Crown: which was kept at Modoetum, now called Monza, a ſmall Village. This Charles confirmed his Fathers former donations to the Church; and added of his own accord, Marca Anconatina, and the Dukedom of Spoleto. For theſe and other kindneſſes, Charls was by P. Leo the Fourth on Chriſtmas day crowned Emperor of the Weſt, An. 801. whoſe Succeſſors ſhall be reckoned when we come to the ſtory of Germany. At this diviſion of the Empire, Irene was Empreſs of the Eaſt; to whom and her Succeſſors was no more allotted than the Provinces of Apulia, and Calabria, (the Eaſt parts of the Realm of Naples) being then in poſſeſſion of the Greeks. To the Popes were confirmed or given by this Emperor and his Father, almoſt all the Lands which they poſſeſs at this day; though afterwards extorted from them by the following Emperors, or under colour of their Title: by many ſeveral ways and means brought again unto them, as ſhall be ſhewn hereafter in convenient place. The Venetians, in that little they then had, remained ſui juris. The reſt of Italy, containing all the other Provinces of the Kingdom of Naples, together with Tuſcany, Friuli, Trevigina and whatſoever is at this day in the poſſeſſion of the Dukes of Milan, Mantua, Modena, Parma, Montferrat, and the Duke of Savoy as Prince of Piedmont, together with Liguria, or the States of Genoua, was reſerved by Charles unto himſelf, and in his life-time given by him to Pepin his ſecond ſon, with the ſtile or title of King of Italy. But long it did not reſt in the houſe of France; the Princes of the Lombards wreſting it from the line of Charles, and after weakning and dividing it by their ſeveral factions; till in the end, inſtead of an united Kingdom, there roſe up many ſcattered Principalities, as ſhall hereafter be declared. But firſt we muſt proceed to the Kings of Italy, of which we ſhall endeavour as exact a Catalogue, as the confuſions of that State can be capable of.

The Kings of Italy, of the French, Italian, and German Lines.

1 Pepin ſon of Carolus Magnus, died before his Father.
2 Barnard, ſon of Pepin.
3 Ludovicus Pius, Emperor, and King of France.
841 4 Lotharius, Emperor, eldeſt ſon of Ludovicus. 15.
856 5 Ludovicus II. Emperor, eldeſt ſon to Lotharius. 20.
876 6 Carolus Calvus, Emperor, the youngeſt ſon of Ludovicus Pius. 2.
7 Caroloman, Nephew to Ludovicus Pius, by Ludovicus his ſecond ſon, ſurnamed the Antient.
8 Carolus Craſſus, or the Fat-Emperor, brother of Caroloman, the laſt King of Italy of the houſe of Charles, he died Anno 888.
888 9 Guy, Duke of Spoleto, contends with Berengarius Duke of Friuli, both of the Longobardian Race, of the Kingdom of Italy; and in fine carrieth it againſt him.
894 10 Lambert, the ſon of Guy, crowned by Pope Formoſus.
11 Ludovick, ſon of Boſon Earl of Ardenne, King of Arles and Burgundy, by ſome Writers called only Earl of Provence; upon the death of Lambert invadeth Italy; and is made King.
917 12 Berengarius Duke of Friuli, vanquiſheth Ludovicus, is made King of Italy; and at laſt overcom by the Hungarians; who having waſted the Country returned back again.
13 Rodolph Duke of Burgundy Tranſ-jurane, called into Italy againſt Berengarius, reſigned it in exchange for the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy to his Couſen.
926 14 Hugh D' Arles, King of Arles and Burgundy, who held the Kingdom of Italy upon this reſignation; but after many troubles, was at laſt outed of it by Berengarius, and returned into France.
946 15 Berengarius II. ſon of the former Berengarius, on the retreat of Hugh, received by the Italians as Protector to Lotharius the ſon of Hugh; beſieging Adelhais the next heir of Italy (on the death of Lotharius) was taken priſoner by the Emperor Otho.
16 Otho, called into Italy by Adelhais, danger to Rodolph King of Burgundy and Italy; marrieth the Lady, and in her right is King of Italy.
974 17 Otho II. ſon of the former Otho, marrieth Theophania Neece to Nicepherus Phocas, Emperor of Conſtantinople, and hath Calabria for her Dower. 20.
984 18 Otho III. Emperor, and King of Italy, in whoſe minority the Kingdom was uſurped by 19 Harduicus, a man of great power in Italy, who kept it all the time of Otho; till being broken with long wars by Henry the ſucceeding Emperor, he was forced to quit it.
20 Henry, the ſecond Emperor of that name, having thrice vanquiſhed Harduicus, got the Kingdom of Italy, and left the ſame unto the Emperors his Succeſſors: the Title of Italy after this time being drowned in that of the Empire; and the Country governed as a part and Member of the Empire, by ſuch Commanders and other Officers as the Emperors from time to time ſent thither. But long it ſtaid not in that ſtate. For the Popes of Rome knowing how much it did concern them in point of Polity, to weaken the Imperial Power in Italy, without which their own Grandeur could not be maintained; ſtirred up continual factions and wars againſt them; and by that means, and by the Cenſures of the Church which they denounced according as they ſaw occaſion, did ſo aſtoniſh and diſtract them, that in the end the Emperors began to lay aſide the affairs of Italy, by which they reaped more trouble than the profit came to. Inſomuch that Rodolfus Habſpurgenſis, a valiant and a politick Prince, finding the ill ſucceſs which Henry the 4. and 5. and Frederick the 1. and 2. Emperors of more puiſſance than himſelf, had found in their Italian actions and pretenſions; reſolved to rid his hands of that troubleſom and fruitleſs Province; and to that end made as much money as he could of that commodity, which he ſaw he was not like to keep. And yet he ſold good penny-worths too, to them that bought them; the Florentines paying for their Liberties but ſix thouſand Crowns, the Citizens of Lucca, ten thouſand; others as they could make their Markets. And being once required the reaſon, why he went not into Italy to look to the affairs thereof, as his Predeceſſors had done before him: he is ſaid to have returned for anſwer that conceit of the Fox, for his not going to attend (as other beaſts did) at the Lion's Den:

——— Quia me veſtigia terrent,
Omnia me adverſum ſpectantia, nulla retroſum.

That is to ſay,

I dare not go, becauſe no track I ſee
Of any Beaſt returning towards me.

Which faulty and improvident reſolution being followed by too many of his Succeſſors, not only gave the Popes the opportunity they looked for, of making themſelves the great diſpoſers of the affairs of Italy; but many petit Princes thereby took occaſion of getting all they could lay hold on for themſelves, and others. For by this means, the Scaligers made themſelves Maſters of Verona, the Paſſarians of Mantua, the Carrarians of Padua, the Baillons of Bononia, and by the ſame, the Florentines got Piſtoia, and Ferrara was poſſeſſed by the Venetians. And although Henry the 7. provoked by theſe indignities, made a journey thither, reduced many of the revolted Cities

Cities to their former obedience, and was crowned King at Millain with the Iron-Crown; as were also Ludovicus Bavarus, and Charles the 4. two of his Successors: yet found they in conclusion such small benefit by the enterprise, as did not quit the charge and trouble which it put them to. So in the end Italy was left wholly in a manner to the Pope's disposing, who gave away to others what they could not manage; or otherwise confirmed those men in their usurpations, whom they found already possessed of the Emperors Countries, and bound them by that means the faster to the See of Rome, of which they were to hold their estates in Fee; the Emperors having nothing left them but the empty Title, nor exercising the Imperial Power there any other way, than by changing Earldoms, into Marquisates, and Marquisates to Dukedoms, which they often did for ready money, or reward of Service, or to preserve some shadow of their ancient Interest.

And now we are to look on Italy as under a new face of things, not only in regard of several Principalities and forms of Government; but as replenished with new Colonies or Sets of people, differing from the old in manners as well as language. And though the Soil be now as it was before, yet hath that also found some change in the different production of the natural Fruits, as well as in the Manufactures and works of Art. For now besides their Corn and Wine, which anciently were the staple Commodities of this Country; they supply the rest of Christendom with Rice, Silks, Velvets, Taffaties, Sattins, Grograins, Rash, Fustians, Goldwire, Allom, Armour, Glasses, and such like commodities, which make their Merchants very wealthy; who being for the most part, Gentlemen of Noble-houses, not only lose not the esteem of their Nobility by following the Trade of Merchandise (as in other places;) but by reason that they are possessed of estates in land, which they manage by their Bailiffs and other Servants, they are become the wealthiest Merchants in all Christendom.

Nor do the Gentry come behind them in all manner of affluence, which can be possibly enjoyed in so rich a Soil. Their Lands they set not at a rent, but at thirds and halfs, according as the Soil is more or less fruitful; seldom abiding in the Country, but only for a month or two in the Summer times; but then they entertain themselves with their Musick and Mistresses under the fragrant Hedges and shady Bowers, in as much solace and delight as may be desired. The residue of the year they spend in Cities, and places of the most resort, for change of company. But, on the other side, the Country-Farmer lives a drudging and laborious life, liable to all the Taxes and Impositions which are laid on the Land; the Landlords part coming in clearly without any disbursements or defalcations; insomuch that it is proverbially, but most truly said, that the rich men in Italy are the richest, and the poor men the poorest, in all the world.

The people generally are grave, respective, and ingenious. Excellent men (said once an Hispaniolized Italian) but for these three things; that is to say, in their lusts they are unnatural, in their malice unappeasable in their actions deceitful. To which might be added, that they will blaspheme rather than swear, and murder a man sooner then slander him. But this perhaps may be the fault but of some particulars: it being observed by moderate and impartial men, that they are obedient to their Superiors, to Inferiors courteous, to their Equals full of all Civilities, to Strangers affable, and most desirous by all fair and friendly offices to win their loves. In apparel they are said to by very modest, in the furniture of their houses sumptuous, at their Tables neat, sober of speech, enemies of all ill reports of others; and of their own reputation so exceeding tender, that whosoever slandereth any one of them, if it come unto the parties ear, he is sure to die for it. Of money and expence he is very thrifty, and loves to be at no more cost, than he is sure to save by, or receive great thanks for: but otherwise for civil carriage and behaviour, surpassing all the Gentry of the World besides. Only in strictness to their wives, they exceed all reason, of whom they are so extreamly jealous, that they shut them up all day from the common view, and permit them liberty of discourse with few or none. The Lock used by a Gentleman of Venice to be assured of his wives chastity in the time of his absence, is so known a story that it needs no report. But touching the predominancy of this jealous humor in most Southern Nations, we shall speak more hereafter when we come to Spain. And yet if that be true, which is proverbially spoken of the women of Italy, the husbands have more reason for this strict restraint, than other Nations are aware of. For though they be for the most part witty in speech, and modest in the outward appearance, as much as any; yet it is said of them in the way of proverb, That they are as Magpies at the door, Saints in the Church, Goats in the Garden, Devils in the house, Angels in the Streets, and Syrens in the Windows, not wanting on this ground to set out themselves with all advantages of Art, there being few amongst them who use not painting, and other the sophistical helps to fallacious Beauty; and thereupon they have a saying, that If God make them tall and fat, (for the title of a goodly woman is much prized amongst them) they will make themselves fair.

The Language of both Sexes is very Courtly and fluant, all of them speaking the Courtezan, or Court-language; notwithstanding the diversity of Dialects which is amongst them. For though there be a remarkable difference betwixt the Florentine and Venetian, the Millanese and the Roman, the Neapolitan and the Genoese; yet it is hard to be discerned by the tone or pronunciation, what language any Gentleman is of. But generally it is best spoken in the great Duke's Country, in the Cities of Florence and Sienna, but in Florence especially; in which City, Guicciardine the Historian, Boccace the Author of the Decameron, and other great Masters of the Italian Language, did live and flourish in their times.

For other men of note both for Arts and Arms; Italy hath afforded many since the fall of the Empire, viz. Æneas Silvius, afterwards Pope, by the name of Pius the second; 2. Marsilius Patavinus, a stout defender of the Imperial Rights, 3. Petrarch a Roman born; 4. Angelus Politianus, the Restorer of polite Literature in Italy; 5. Rodolphus Volaterranus; and 6. Picus Mirandula, two great Humanitians; 7. Guido Bonatus, a famous Astrologer; 8. Arioſto, and 9. Taſſo, the most renowned Poets of their times, and the latter never fellowed since; 10. Sixtus Senensis, one of the best Antiquaries of the Nation, and a great Divine; 11. Bellarmine, and 12. Baronius, the Butresses and Pillars of the Church of Rome. And then for Arms; 1. Ludovicus Conins, the first Restorer of the honour of the Italian Souldiery; 2. Forti Bracchio, and 3. Nicolao Picinino, two of his training up in the feats of Chivalry; 4, 5. Sforza, the Father, and the Son; of which the Son attained by his valour, to the Dukedom of Millain; 6. Christopher Columbus, a Genoese; Americus Vespucius, a Florentine, and 8. Sebastian Cabot, a Venetian, the fortunate Discoverers of America; 9. Andrea D' Oria, Admiral of the Navies to Charles the fifth; and 10. Ambroſe Spinola (both Genoeſe) Commander of the Armies of Philip the ſecond, King of Spain: Which laſt being once upbraided by Maurice, Prince of Orange, as iſſued from a Race of Merchants, (though otherwiſe of a very ancient and noble Family) returned this tart and ſudden Anſwer, That he thought it a greater honour to him, being a Merchant, to have the command of ſo many Princes; than it could be unto the other, though a Prince by birth, to be under the command of ſo many Merchants.

The uſual Diviſion of Italy is into ſix parts, 1. Lombardy, 2. Tuſcany, 3. the Land of the Church, 4. Naples, 5. Riviere de Genoa; and 6. the Land of Venice: and of them there is paſſed this Cenſure according to the principal Cities, i. e. Rome for Religion, Naples for Nobility, Millain for beauty, Genoa for ſtatelineſs, Florence for Policy, and Venice for riches. But take it as it ſtands at the preſent time; and ITALY is beſt divided into

- The Kingdoms of { Naples. / Sicily. / Sardinia. }
- The Land or Patrimony of the Church.
- The great Dukedom of Tuſcany.
- The Common-wealths of { Venice. / Genoa. / Luca. } { Millain. / Mantua. }
- The Eſtates of Lombardy, i. e. { The Dukedom of { Modena. / Parma. / Montferrat. } / The Principality of Piedmont. }

The Kingdom of NAPLES.

THE Kingdom of NAPLES is invironed on all ſides with the Adriatick, Ionian, and Tuſcan Seas, excepting where it joyneth on the Weſt to the Lands of the Church: from which ſeparated by a line drawn from the mouth of the River Tronto (or Druentus) falling into the Adriatick, to the Spring-head of Axofenus. By which accompt it taketh up all the Eaſt of Italy, the compaſs of it being reckoned at 1468. miles.

It hath been called ſometimes the Realm of Poville, from Poville or Apulia, a chief Province of it; the firſt poſſeſſion of the Normans (the Founders of this Kingdom) in theſe parts of Italy: but called moſt commonly the Realm of Sicil, on this ſide of the Phare, to difference it from the Kingdom of the Iſle of Sicil, lying on the other ſide of the Phare, or ſtrait of Meſſana. The reaſon of which improper appellation proceeded from Roger the firſt King hereof, who being alſo Earl of Sicil, and keeping there his fixed and ordinary reſidence; when he got the favour to be made a King, deſired (in honour of the place where he moſt reſided) to be created by the name of King of both the Sicilies. And that indeed is the true and ancient name of the Kingdom; the name or title of King of Naples not coming into uſe till the French were diſpoſſeſſed of Sicil by the Aragonians; and nothing left them but this part of the Kingdom, of which the City of Naples was the Regal Seat, called therefore in the following times, the Kingdom of Naples; and by ſome of the Italian Writers, the Kingdom only.

This is eſteemed to be the moſt fertil place in all Italy, abounding in all things neceſſary for the life of man, and in ſuch alſo as conduce to Delight and Phyſick; viz. Many Springs, and Medicinal waters, Baths of divers vertues, ſundry Phyſical herbs. It hath alſo an excellent breed of Horſes, which may not be tranſported but by the leave of the King, or at leaſt the Viceroy; great ſtore of Allom, Mines of divers Metals, and the choiceſt Wines, called anciently Vina Maſſica, and Falerna, frequently mentioned by the Poets. And as for Merchandiſe, to Alexandria they ſend Saffron, to Genoa Silks, to Rome Wines, and to Venice Oyl, &c.

The Noblemen or Gentry hereof, live of all men the moſt careleſs and contented lives; and like the Tyrant Polycrates in the elder ſtories, have nothing to trouble them, but that they are troubled with nothing. And there is a great number of them too, there being reckoned in this Realm in the time of Ortelius, 13 Princes, 24 Dukes, 25 Marqueſſes, 90 Earls, and 800 Barons; and thoſe not only Titular, as in other places, but men of great power and revenue in their ſeveral Countries; inſomuch that the yearly income of the Prince of Biſignan is ſaid to be an 100000 Crowns, one year with the other; the Princes of Salerno, and St. Severine being near as great. They are all bound by their Tenure to ſerve the King in his Wars, which gives them many priviledges, and great command over the common Subject: whereby as they were made the abler to aſſiſt the King, upon any foreign invaſion; ſo are they in condition alſo of raiſing and countenancing ſuch defections as have been made from King to King, and from one Family to another, as ſorted beſt with their ambitions & particular intereſſes. For not alone the Nobles, but in general as many of the common people as can be ſpared from husbandry; are more addicted to the Wars, than they are to Merchandiſe: The Nobles in purſuit of honour, and the Paiſant out of deſire of being in action; ſo that the greateſt part of the Forces which ſerve the Spaniard in the Low-Countries, are ſent from hence. To which, the humour which they have from the higheſt to the loweſt, of going bravely in Apparel, ſerves exceeding fitly. An humour which is ſo predominant in both ſexes, that though the Paiſant lives all the reſt of the week in as great ſervility and drudgery, as his Lord doth in pride and jollity; yet on the Sundays and Saint-days, he will be ſure to have a good ſuit to his back, though perhaps he hath no meat for his belly. And for the women, ſhe that works hard both day and night for an hungry living, will be ſo pranked up on the Sundays and other Feſtivals, or when ſhe is to ſhew herſelf in ſome publick place; that one who did not know the humour, might eaſily miſtake her for ſome noble Lady.

The principal Rivers of this Kingdom are, 1 Sybaris, 2 Buſentus, 3 Peſcara, 4 Trontus, 5 Auſidus, 6 Salinellus, 7 Vomanus, 8 Salinus and 9 Gariglian. The moſt famous of which, are Auſidus and Gariglian. The firſt as being the only River of Italy, which riſing South-ſide of the Apennine, forceth a breach through it to the upper Sea: but more for the great Battel fought on the banks thereof, called the Battel of Cannæ, of which more hereafter. The other no leſs famous for thoſe many Battels, which have been fought near it between the French and the Spaniard, for the Kingdom of Naples: eſpecially that famous Battel between the Marqueſs of Saluzzes, General of the French, and Gonſalvo, Leader of the Spaniards; the loſs of which Victory by the French, was the abſolute confirmation of the Realm of Naples to the Spaniards. More famous is this River for the death of Peter de Medices, who being baniſhed his Country at the coming of King Charles the 8. into Italy, and having divers times in vain attempted to be reimpatriate, followed the French Army hither, and after the loſs of the day, took Ship with others, to fly to Cajeta; but over-charging the Veſſel, ſhe ſunk and drowned them all. But moſt famous is it, in that Marius, that excellent, though unfortunate Captain, being by Sylla's faction driven out of Rome, hid himſelf ſtark naked in the dirt and weeds of this River: where he had not lain long, but Sylla's Souldiers found him, and carried him to the City of the Minturnians, being not far off.

Theſe

These men, to please Sylla, hired a Cimber to kill him, which the fellow attempting (such is the vertue of Majesty even in a miserable fortune) run out again, crying, he could not kill C. Marius. This River was of old called Liris; and towards its influx into the Sea expatiated into Lakes and Fens, called the Lakes of Minturni, from a City of that name adjoyning.

It is divided into the Provinces of 1 Terra di Lavoro, 2 Abruzzo, 3 Puglia, or Apulia, 4 Terra de Otranto 5 Calabria Superior, 6 Calabria Inferior, and 7 the Isles of Naples. Some of which have some smaller Territories adjoyning to them, which we shall meet withal as they come in our way.

TERRA di LAVORO is bounded on the North with Abruzzo, from which separated by the Apennine Hills, on the East with the River Silarus, which parteth it from the lower Calabria; on the South with the Tyrrhenium or Tuscan Sea, and on the West with Latium, or Campagna di Roma; from which divided by the River Cariglian; Called anciently Campania Felix, in regard of the wonderful fertility of it, and that it was the seat or dwelling of the Campani; by some modern Latinists called Campania Antiqua, to difference it from Latium, which they now call Campagna di Roma, or Campania Nova. And for the other name of Terra di Lavoro, or Terra Laboratoris, it was given to it, from the continual labour of the Husbandmen in cultivating the ground, and carrying in the fruits thereof; but neither the reason, nor the name so new, as some men suppose. But, I am sure, as old as Pliny, who calleth these parts sometimes by the name of Laboria, sometimes of Campus Laborinus; and gives this reason of the name, quod ingens in eo colendo sit labor, because of the great pains it requires to till it, and the great profit reaped by them who did till and manure it.

The Country is so exceeding fruitful in Wines and Wheat, that by Florus the Historian it is called Cereris & Bacchi certamen, and deservedly too. For in this noble Region one may see large and beautiful fields overshaded with rich Vines, thick and delightful Woods, sweet Fountains, and most wholsom Springs of running waters; useful as well for the restoring of mans health, as delight and pleasure: and in a word, whatsoever a covetous mind can possibly aim at, or a carnal covet.

Towns of note here were many in the elder times. The principal whereof, 1 Cajeta, seated on a fair and capacious Bay, from the crookedness whereof it is thought by Strabo, to have took the name; the word in the Laconian Language signifying crooked. Others will have it so called from καίω, Uro, with reference to the burning of the Fleet of Æneas by the Trojan Ladies; for fear of being forced again to go to Sea, where they had been so extreamly tossed in their former voyages. But why that Fact committed on the furthest coasts of Sicil, should be so solemnly commemorated here on the shores of Italy, I can see no reason: and therefore we may far more probably derive it from Cajeta, the nurse of Æneas, in memory of whom, being buried here, or hereabouts, Æneas is affirmed to have built this Town. Of which thus the Poet, Æneid. lib. 7.

Æternam moriens famam, Cajeta, dedisti.

That is to say,

Æneas Nurse, Cajeta, by her death,
Did to these shores an endless fame bequeath.

But on what ground soever it first had this name, it is assuredly a place of great strength and consequence; and of so special importance for the Estate of this Kingdom, that (as Comineus hath observed) if King Charles the 8. had but only fortified it and the Castle of Naples, the Realm had never been lost. 2. Naples, the Metropolis of the Kingdom, a beautiful City, containing seven miles in compass. It was once called Parthenope and falling to ruine, was new built, and called Neapolis. Among other things, here is an Hospital, the revenues whereof is 60000 Crowns yearly, wherewith besides other good deeds, they nourish in divers parts of the Kingdom, 2000 poor Infants. In this City, the disease called Morbus Gallicus, or Neapolitanus, was first known in Christendom. This City is seated on the Sea-shore, and fortified with four strong Castles, viz. 1 Castle Capodua, where the Kings Palace was, 2 Ermo, 3 Castle del Ovo, or the Castle of the Egge, and 4 Castle Novo, or the new Castle. But nature hath not done much less to her Fortifications, than the hand of Art, the Town being for the most part environed by Sea, or Mountains not to be ascended without great difficulty and disadvantages. Which Mountains, as they serve on that side as a bank to the City, so do they furnish the Citizens with most generous Wines; and being once ascended yield a gallant prospect both for Sea and Land. A City honoured by the seat of the Vice-Roy, and the continual resort, if not constant residence of most of the great men of the Realm; which makes the private buildings to be very graceful, and the publick stately. And yet it had increased much more in buildings, than it is at present, if the King had not forbidden it by special Edict. And this he did, partly, at the perswasion of his Noblemen, who feared that if such a restraint were not laid upon them, their Vassals would forsake the Country to inhabit here, so to enjoy the priviledges and the exemptions of the Regal City: but principally upon jealousie and point of State, the better to prevent all revolts and mutines, which in most populous Cities are of greatest danger. 3 Capua, once the head of the Campani, seated in a delicious and luxurious soyl, and one of the three Cities which the old Romans judged capable of the seat of the Empire, the other two being Carthage, and Corinth. Being distressed by the Samnites, they were fain to cast themselves into the Arms of the Romans, who did not only take them into their protection, but suffered them to live according to their own Laws, as a Free Common-wealth; rather like a confederate than a Subject-State. Which freedom they enjoyed, till after the revolt to the Carthaginians; when being reduced to their obedience by force of Arms, they lost all their Liberties, and hardly escaped its fatal and final ruin: drawing the whole Nation of the Campains with divers lesser States, which depended on them, into bondage with it; A. V. C. 542. Appius and Flaccus being Consuls. The pleasures of this place was it which enervated the victorious Army of Annibal, who wintered here after the great defeat given to Terentius Varro at the Battel of Canna; whence came the saying, Capuam esse Cannas Annibali. 4 Cuma, a City once of great power and beauty, till Campania was subdued by the Romans; after which, it decayed in both. Near hereunto was the Cave or Grot of one of the Sibyls called from hence Cumæa, and not far off the Lake called Lacus Avernus, the stink whereof is said to have poysoned Birds as they flew over it; supposed by ignorant Antiquity for the entrance of Hell. And finally; from this place it was, that Æneas is fabled by the Poets to have gone down to the infernal Ghosts, to talk with his Father. 5 Nola, where Marcellus discomfited the Forces of Annibal, and thereby gave the Romans to understand, that he was not invincible. 6 Puteoli, a small Town

ſtanding on a Creek of the Sea, juſt oppſite to Baiæ, on the other ſide of it; from which diſtant about three miles and a half. Both Towns remarkable for the Bridge built betwixt them by Caligula, compoſed of ſundry Veſſels joyned together in ſuch ſort, that there was not only fair and large paſſage over it, but Victualling houſes on both ſides of it: Over which Bridge thus made, he marched and remarched in triumphal Robes, as if not only the Earth, but the very Seas were made ſubject to him. And this he did (as himſelf afterwards affirmed to ſome of his friends) to awe the Ocean; and imitate (if not exceed) the like acts of Xerxes and Darius, mentioned in the ancient Writers; as alſo to terrifie the Britains, and the German Nations, with the report of ſuch a notable exploit; or (as ſome thought) to fulfil the Propheſie of one Thraſibulus a fortune-teller of thoſe times, who had been often heard to ſay in the life-time of Tiberius (his next immediate Predeceſſor) that it was as impoſſible for Caius to ſucced in the Empire, as it was for him to ride on Horſeback from Baule to Puteoli. 7 Not far hence, on a Semicircular Bay, ſtands the City of Baiæ (whereof Baule before mentioned is a part) ſo called, as they ſay, from Baius, one of the companions of Ulyſſes in his Navigations. A City in the flouriſh of the Roman Empire of five miles in length, and two in breadth; ſo wonderfully endued by nature, and adorned by Art, that no place in the world was thought comparable to it:

Nullus in Orbe locus Baiis prælucet amœnis.

Few places in the world there are
With pleaſant Baiæ to compare. As it is in Horace.

A City beautified with magnificent Temples, multitudes of Baths, or Bannia's Imperial Palaces, ſtately buildings, and the adjoyning Mannor-houſes of the principal Romans, whom the pleaſures of the place invited hither; and was indeed too great and ſenſible a monument of the laſciviouſneſs and luxury of that proſperous people, of which the Ambubaiæ mentioned in the Satyriſt is ſufficient proof; (though ſome fetch the Etymologie of the word far enough from Rome, deriving it from Ambub, a Syrian word ſignifying a Pipe, from whence the Latins give this name to their Minſtrels) now ſo demoliſhed by War, and devoured by Water, that there is nothing of it to be ſeen but ſome ſcattered ruins. 8 Miſenus, ſeated near a great Hill, or Promontory of the ſame name, at the foot whereof there is a large and capacious Harbour; where Auguſtus keeping one Navy, and another at Ravenna in the upper Sea, awed the whole Roman Empire. But theſe were places of renown in the former times; all which, excepting Naples, are now only known by what they have been, not by what they are. The principal Cities at this time, are (next to Naples it ſelf) Seſſa; the Sinueſſa or Suiſſa of the ancients, and now the title of a Dukedom to the houſe of Cordova in Spain, derived from Gonſalvo the great Captain, of whom more hereafter. 2 Averſa, a Town of great ſtrength and conſequence, ſecond to few in all the Kingdom; but forced to yield (though the Earl of Monpenſier then Vice-roy of the Realm for Charles the 8. were in perſon in it) to the good fortune of Gonſalvo, ſpoken of before: the whole Kingdom following ſhortly after. 3 Ceano, 4 Sulvi, 5 Venafre, and 6 Caſerte, with others, to the number of 22, beſides 166 Caſtles or defenſible places. Here is alſo in this Tract the Hill called Gallicanum, where Annibal that great Maſter in the Art of war, frighted that wary Captain Fabius Maximus, by the ſtratagem of two thouſand Oxen, carrying fire in their horns; by which device he freed himſelf out of thoſe difficult Straights, in which he was at that preſent. And in this Country there is alſo the Hill Veſuvius, that caſteth out flames of fire, the ſmoke of which ſtifled Pliny ſenior, coveting to ſearch the cauſe of it. The flame hereof brake forth cruelly alſo during the reign of Titus, caſting out not only ſuch ſtore of ſmoke, that the very Sun ſeemed to be in the Eclipſe, but alſo huge ſtones: and of aſhes ſuch plenty that Rome, Africk, and Syria, were even covered; and Herculanum, and Pompeii, two Cities in Italy were overwhelmed with them. There were heard diſmal noiſes all about the Province; and Giants of incredible bigneſs ſeen to ſtalk up and down, about the top and edges of the mountain; which extraordinary accident, either was a cauſe, or preſage of the future Peſtilence, which raged in Rome and Italy long after.

On the Eaſt ſide of this Campania, and properly (as anciently it was eſteemed) a part thereof, lieth that little Territory, which Alfonſo King of Naples cauſed to be called the Principate; bounded upon the Eaſt with Calabria inferior, or that part thereof which is called the Baſilecate; from which parted by the River Silarus. It extends 33 miles in length, and 10 in breadth: and was of old the Seat of the Picentini, a colony of the Picenī dwelling on the Adriatick. Principal places of it, 1 Maſſa, by the Italians called Marſo, of more note for the Hills adjoyning, than any great beauty or antiquity it hath in it ſelf. Thoſe hills now called Monte Marſo, but known to the Romans by the name of Montes Maſſici; of ſpecial eſtimation for the rich Wines, called Vina Maſſica. 2 Nuceria nine miles from the Sea, in a very plentiful and delicious ſoyl. 3 Rivelli, a City not long ſince built, which for the elegancy of the buildings hardly yields to Naples. 4. Malfi, or Amalphi, an Arch-biſhops See, in which it is ſuppoſed that the Mariners Compaſs was firſt found out. It is ſituate on the Sea-ſide, and giveth name to the coaſt of Amalfe, fenced with Hills or Mountains of ſo great an height, that to look down into the Vallies or the Sea adjoyning, makes men ſick and giddy. A Town of great note (were there nothing elſe to commend it to our obſervation) for the finding out of the Mariners Compaſs, (as before is ſaid) deviſed and contrived here about the year 1300. by one John Flavio, a native or inhabitant of it. 5 Salerno, about a mile from the Sea, the title of the Prince of Salerno, and an Univerſity, but chiefly for the ſtudy of Phyſick, the Doctors of which wrote the Book called Schola Salerni, dedicated to a King of England: not to K. Henry the 8. as it is conceived, for then the Commentary on it, written by Arnoldus Villanovanus, (who lived about the year 1313) muſt needs have been before the Text. And therefore I conceive it dedicated either to King Richard the firſt, or King Edward the firſt, who in their journies towards the Holy-Land, might beſtow a viſit on this place, and give ſome honourary encouragement to the Students of it. Beſides theſe, there are ſaid to be in this ſmall Territory, fifteen other good Towns, and two hundred and thirteen Caſtles or walled places; but theſe the principal.

II. North of Campania, lyeth the Province now called ABRVZZO, bounded on the Eaſt with Puglia, or Apulia; on the Weſt, with Marca Anconitana; on the North, with the Adriatick Sea; and on the South, with the Apennine. It is called, Aprutium by the Latins, but the reaſon of the name not agreed upon: divided anciently between the Picentes and the Samnites: the Picentes taking up thoſe parts which lay next the Adriatick; the reſt (being far the greater part) was poſſeſſed by the Samnites. Theſe laſt (for of the others we ſhall ſpeak elſewhere) a people which held longer wars with the States of Rome, than almost all Italy besides; as keeping them in continual action for the space of 70 yearys together, besides many after-claps. In which long course of Wars, the Romans were so hardly put to their shifts, that they were four times fain to have recourse to the last refuge; which was the chusing of Dictators; and yet came off so often with success and victory, that it afforded them the honour of thirty triumphs. But these Samnites, as they were a potent, so they were also a compound Nation; consisting of the Ferentani, Caraceni, Peligni, Precatini, Vestini, Hirpini, and Samnites properly so called; into which name the rest of the inferiour Tribes were after swallowed. The chief City of the whole was called Samnium, whence they had their name; which in the conclusion of the War was so defaced by Papyrius the Roman Consul, ut hodie Samnium in ipso Samnio requiratur; that not improperly (saith Florus) a man might ask where Samnium stood, even in the middle of the City. Which hapened A. V. C. 481.

The River of Pescara runneth through the midst of it, and divideth it into parts, whereof the one containeth 5 Cities, and 150 Castles, or walled places; the other, 184 Castles, and 4 Cities. The principal Cities of the whole, 1 Arpinum, once the chief Town of the Arpinates. and the Country of M. Tullius Cicero, that famous Orator, now a poor Village called Arpino. 2 Beneventum, heretofore called Maleventum, as we find in Pliny, because the Winds hereabouts were so fierce and violent, that men could not sit upon their Horses; but had at last that name of Beneventum, from the pleasant Plains and spacious Vallies, which ly round about it; in like manner as the Country of the old Allobroges, exchanged the name of Malvoy, into that of Salvoy. It was one of the four Dukedoms which the Lombards erected, when they first came into Italy, for the better assuring of their Conquest; and was given to the Church of Rome by the Emperor Henry the Fourth, in exchange of a certain Tribute remitted by Pope Leo the Ninth to the Church of Bamberg, where the said Emperor was born; and is still under the command of the Popes of Rome. 3 Aquila, built by the Emperor Frederick the Second, King of Naples, to assure the Realm upon that Quarter. 4 Lanciano, four miles from the Adriatick, a Town of great Trade, and much resorted to by Merchants at her Annual Marts. 5 Ortona, the Port-town unto Lanciana. 6 Teranum, or Teran (Ptolomy calls it Inter-amna) anciently the Metropolis of the Precatini. 7 Citta di Chiety, situate on a Hill some seven miles from the Sea, heretofore known by the name of Theate. 8 Aquino, the Birth-place of Thomas Aquinas the great School-man, who first brought the scattered limbs of Popery into a body. Here stood also, 9 the old Town Corfinium, the chief City of the Peligni, made good a while by Domitius Ænobarbus against Julius Cæsar, in his first following after Pompey, then retired from Rome. And seven miles hence, to Sulmo, honoured with the birth of Ovid, that renowned Poet, as himself testifieth.

Sulmo mihi patria est, gelidis uberrimus undis,
Millia qui novies distat ab Urbe decem.

Full of cool streams Sulmo, my native Land,
From the great City ninety miles doth stand.

There belongeth also to Abruzzo the Country of Molisi, in which are 104 walled places or Castles, and four considerable Towns, the principal of which is Bovianum, or Boiano, now a Bishops See, in former times a Colony of the Romans, by Pliny called Bovianum Undecumanorum to difference it from another in this Tract, of the same name, which he calls Bovianum vetus. 2 Luparetha, of which little memorable. In this Country also (I mean Abruzzo) are the straights called Furcæ Caudinæ, in which when the Samnites and their confederates had so inclosed the Romans, that there was no possibility to escape, they sent to Herennius, a man for his Age much honoured, and for his wisdom much followed by them, to know what they should do with the captive Enemies. Word was returned, that they should send them home safe, and without dishonour. Thinking the old man had not been well informed of the state of the business, they sent to him again, and he advised, that they should put them all to the sword. These contrary answers made them judge amiss of the old mans brain; and therefore following their own fancies, they spoiled the Romans, and disarmed them, and despightfully used them, and so sent them home. Which when Herennius came to know, he much lamented the imprudence of so rash an action; but much more the destruction of this Country, as a consequent of it. Telling them, after their return, that had they given the Romans a safe and honourable deliverance from the present danger, they had made them their friend for many Ages; or had they put unto the sword so many of their Souldiers and chief Commanders, they had disabled them for long time from persuing the War: The middle course which they had taken would be their undoing; and so accordingly it proved. For the Romans not being made their friends by so odious a benefit, but hatching revenge for the disgrace, soon renewed the War; and under the conduct of Papyrius subdued the Country, and handled the poor conquered people with the like despight. An excellent Precedent unto Princes and those in power, how to proceed towards men of Quality and Rank, when they have them under; which must be, either not to strike at all, or to strike home, and to the purpose. Nic. Machiavil, in his Florentine History taxeth Rinaldo of Albizi for committing a great Solœcism in point of State, in that hating Cosmo de Medices, and desiring to remove him from his publick managery of affairs, he thought it was sufficient to procure his banishment: which Cosmo, afterwards returning, paid in better coyn. Whereupon he inferreth this notable Aphorism, that, Great persons must not at all be touched, or if they be, must be made sure from taking Revenge. Yet do I not interdict a Prince, or any supreme Governours, the use of Mercy. I know it is the richest Jewel which adorns the Crown. Nor dare I take upon me to direct the use of that excellent vertue. Only I shall observe what usage hath been commonly afforded towards such persons after their Delinquencies; whose liberty or life may create danger to the publick. The first is present Execution; for Mortui non mordent, as the saying is: a course more to be allowed of where it cannot, than commended where it may be spared. The second is either close imprisonment under trusty Guards, or else confinement to the house and custody of some trusty Statesman: in which great caution also is to be observed. For, besides that nothing is more ordinary than the escape of great Prisoners, either by corrupting or deceiving their Keepers; We find in our Histories, how Dr. Morton Bishop of Ely, being committed to the custody of the Duke of Buckingham by King Richard the 3. not only procured his own liberty, but brought about that Duke to the contrary faction. The last, which is in all times the gentlest, and in some cases the safest, is, not only an absolute pardon of life, and a grant of liberty; but an endearing of the party delinquent, by giving him some place of honour or committing unto his fidelity some office office of truſt, it being the nature of moſt men, that where they are not truſted, they are never true; and that as long as they lie under ſuſpect and jealouſies, they will be apt to entertain ſome thoughts of their loſt condition. And of this kind of dealing with a perſon Delinquent, we have a pregnant inſtance in the Emperor Otho, who not only pardoned Marius Celſus one of Galba's faction, and a chief one too, but put him in place neareſt to him, and made him one of his principal Leaders, in the following War againſt Vitellius. His reaſon was Ne hoſtis metum reconciliationis adhiberet, leſt lying aloof as a pardoned Enemy, he might conceive the breach were but bad made up. And on the other ſide, Marius Celſus proved ſo ſenſible of the obligation, that he continued faithful to him to the very laſt; and loſt his life in the purſuance of his quarrel: ſhewing thereby, that perſons of a generous and noble diſpoſition, are more obliged by favours, than reſtrained by terrour. But it is now time I ſhould free my ſelf of theſe Furcæ Caudinæ, and ſport my ſelf a while in the Plains of Apulia.

But I muſt note, before I take my leave hereof, that theſe two Provinces of Campania and Abruzzo, make up the greateſt, richeſt, and beſt peopled part of the Realm of Naples. And therefore when the Kingdom was divided between the French and the Spaniards, it was allotted to the French, as having the priority, both of claim and power. The Provinces remaining, although more in number, yet are not comparable to thoſe two for wealth and greatneſs, and were aſſigned over to the Spaniards, as lying moſt conveniently for the Realm of Sicilie.

III. PVGLIA is bounded on the Weſt, with Abruzzo; on the Eaſt, with Terra di Otranto; on the North, with the Adriatick Sea; on the South, with Calabria. It contains the whole Country called of old Apulia; from whence the Puglia of the Italians and the Poville of the French are to be derived.

The whole Country containeth in it beſides Villages and Towns unfortified, 126 Caſtles and walled places, with 13 Cities of good note. The moſt conſiderable of which we ſhall meet withal in our Chorography of the ſeveral paats, divided anciently by Ptolemy, and ſince him, by Leander; into Apulia Daunia, and Apulia Peucetia: the former ſubdivided into the Capitanate, and Poville the Plain; the latter into Bari, and the Land of Otranto. For that the Land of Otranto, (though now a Province of it ſelf) did ſometimes paſs in the accompt of Apulia; ſeems to me moſt probable, in that all the Eaſt parts of this Kingdom were held by the Conſtantinopolitan Emperors (after the coming in of the Lombards) by no other names than thoſe of Apulia, and Calabria: and by no other names than thoſe were aſſigned over unto Otho the 2 of Germany, on his marriage with Theophania, Neece to one of thoſe Emperors. And I conceive that it was then laid unto Apulia, rather than to Calabria, firſt, in regard that the old inhabitants were the ſame in both; the Iapyges, Meſſapians and Salentini, poſſeſſing promiſcuouſly all this Tract from Mount Garganus in Daunia, to the Promontory called Iapygium in the moſt Eaſtern angle of the Land of Otranto. And ſecondly, in regard that the people of both, have a diſeaſe peculiar only to themſelves, occaſioned by the biting of a little Serpent called a Tarantula, not curable but by muſick only. This ſaid we will proceed in our Survey of the parts. And firſt, APVLIA DAVNIA, is that part hereof which lieth next to Abruzzo, from which parted by the River Phiternus (now called Fortore) and ſo extending Eaſt-wards to the River Aufidus (Lofonto, the Italians call it) where it meets with Peucetia. The reaſon of the name is not yet agreed on. But I find no more probable conjecture of it, than that it ſhould be called thus of Daunus, the ſon of Danae by Pilumnus, once the King of this Country; it being reported in the Legends of thoſe elder times, that Danae being delivered of Perſeus whom ſhe had by Jupiter, was by her Father the King Acriſius, expoſed to the mercy of the Seas; by which ſhe was wafted with her young ſon to the coaſts of this Province, here taken up by a poor Fiſher, and by him carried to the Court, where the King became ſo enamoured on her, that he took her to Wife, and by her was Father to this Daunus. But Daunus had not long enjoyed it, on the death of his Father, when either by force or compoſition, he was fain to leave it to Diomedes King of Ætolia: who at the end of the Trojan War, wherein he was principal Actor, hearing of the libidinous courſes of his Wife Ægiale, abhorred the thought of living with her; and ſo came with his people to this Country; where he fixt his dwelling, and built the City of Argirypa, whereof more anon. But as for Daunus, though he was not able to keep the poſſeſſion of this Country, yet he bequeathed his name unto it; and afterwards withdrawing into Latium with ſuch of his ſubjects as were willing to follow his Adventures, he became there the chief head of the Rutuli, and built among them the Town of Ardea, his chief ſeat at the coming of Æneas into Italy; betwixt whom and Turnus the ſon of this Daunus, grew that deadly feud, ſo celebrated in the Works of Virgil.

In this part hereof is the Lake of Leſina, ſo called from a City of that name adjoyning to it, made of the waters of Phiternus, and ſome other Rivers, which there loſe themſelves; in compaſs 40 miles, and well ſtored with Fiſh: the Eeles hereof the largeſt that have been ſeen. Another Lake called Arduarius, more memorable, though not ſo great, it being ſaid hereof by Pliny, that the waters of it are neither diminiſhed by draining, nor increaſed by Land-floods. Here is alſo the Mount Garganus, known by that name in Virgil, but now called St. Angelo, high, ſteep, and full of cragged Rocks: 20 miles in compaſs, but that extent diverſified into hills and moſt pleaſant vallies; well wooded, and well ſtored with waters: here being one Lake (beſides many others) called Lacus Varanus, ſaid to be 30 miles in circuit. A place defenſible by nature, and ſo ſtrong by art, that it is commonly the laſt piece in the Realm of Naples, which is given up to the Invader: as appears plainly by the keeping of it by the Greeks and Sarazens for many years, after the Normans had poſſeſſed themſelves of the reſt of the Kingdom.

The whole devided by Alfonſo (in his new modelling of this Kingdom) into two parts, the greateſt and moſt flouriſhing called Pouille the Plain, from the condition of the ſoil which is plain and level, not ſo much ſwelled with Hills as the reſt of Apulia: for which cauſe called Puglia Piana by the modern Italian. Interjected betwixt which and Abruzzo, lieth a ſmall Teritory, by the ſaid King Alfonſo called the CAPITANATE, deſtitute both of Woods and Rivers, and conſequently not ſo populous as the reſt of this Province: well furniſhed notwithſtanding with all ſorts of grain, and ſtored with large and ſpatious paſtures, which breed ſuch infinite herds of Cattel, that the Tribute thence ariſing was valued at 80000 Crowns per annum in the time of Guicciardine, and by him reckoned one of the beſt Revenues of the Realm of Naples. Of which Tribute when the French could receive no part, by reaſon that on the diviſion which they made with Ferdinand the Catholick (ſpoken of before) this Territory as a part of Apulia, did belong to the the Spaniards, they brake out into open War, pretending that the Country appertained to them, (as indeed it lay very near their part) and thereby gave a just occasion to the Spaniards, a more diligent nation, and more intent upon their work, to worm them by degrees out of all the kingdom.

Chief places of the whole Daunia, 1. Luceria, the Nuceria of Ptolemy, and the Rudra of Suetonius; as rich as it is ancient, and honoured with an Episcopal See. 2. Asculi, of old called Asculus, and sometimes Asculum Satrianum, to difference it from another of that name in Auconiana; the stile and honour of a Duke. 3. Troia, a Duke's title also, built by the Eastern Emperors in a place of strength and great advantage to restrain the insolencies of the Sarazens, then infesting this Country. These three in that part of it which is called the Capitanate. Then in the other part called Poville the Plain. 4. Sipontum once a Roman Colony and an Archbishops See, which honour it enjoyed till destroyed by the Sarazens. 5. Manfredonia, founded near the place of the former, by Manfred the Bastard, King of Naples, the better to assure these parts of his Kingdom. A stately and magnificent City, the Seat of the Archbishop of Siponto; beautified with a capacious Harbour for receipt of Ships, and an impregnable Castle for defence thereof. 6. Salpe of great antiquity, but not else observabe. 7. Severine of a newer date, but more rich and populous. 8. As ancient and as famous as the best amongst them, the poor Village of Cannæ, situate near the mouth or influx of the River Aufidus; ignobilis Apuliæ vicus, as it is in Florus, but such as afterwards grew more notable for the great defeat which Annibal there gave to Paulus Æmilius and Tarentinus Varro the Roman Consuls, of whose Army he slew 42700 on the very place. Which victory had he husbanded as he might have done, he had utterly subverted the State of Rome: so that it was most tartly (as most truly) said by Maharbel General of his Horse, Vincere scis Annibal, victoria uti nescis; that he knew better how to get, then to use his victory. 9. But of most note in this part of Apulia was the Town Argypia or Argyrippa as some call founded it, by Diomedes in the skirts of Mount S. Angelo towards the Sea, and in that part of this Country, which then (or afterwards) was held by the Iapyges. Of which thus Virgil in the 11. of the Æneids.

Victor Gargani condebat Iapygis arvis,

And being Victor he a City builds
Near Garganus in the Iapygian fields,
And called it Argyrippa, by the name
Of some known place i'th Land from which he came.

By which we also may conclude, that it took this name with reference to some Town of Etolia, which was the native Country of Diomedes. For although I know that many of the ancient Writers suppose it to have been first called Argos Hippium, with relation to a famous City of that name in Peloponnesus, and after by contraction or corruption to be named Argyrippam; yet those words of Patriæ de nomine gentis, do perswade me otherwise; Diomedes having nothing to do in the Country of Argolis, where that City stood; nor in the whole Demy-Island of Peloponnesus, whereof Argolis was a part or Province. It was called also Diomedia, and urbs Diomedis, because of this foundation, and his Royal Seat, after his fixing in his Country; but at the last it came to be called Aryp, and by that name was known in the time of the Roman greatness. Now no where to be found but in the ruines of time, and the Records of Antiquity, unless it be in a poor Village called Sarpy where Nigar findeth it.

APVLIA PEVCETIA, extendeth from the Banks of the River Aufidus on the West, to the land of Otranto on the East. So called as some conceive from Peucetius; the Brother of Oenotrus; which may be probable enough, this being the first Country at which Oenotrus touched, when he came unto Italy with his people. Bochartus a great Enemy of all Traditions, will have it called Peucetia, ἀπὸ τῆς πεύκης, for that great quantity of Pitch which these Countries yield, as the word signifieth in the Greek. But whatsoever was the reason of the ancient name, that of the present is well known and agreed upon from Bari the chief City hereof, being now called Barry.

Places of most importance in it: 1. Barri, seated near the Sea, but without a Haven, yet seated in so rich a soyl, and so well inhabited, that it is a fair and wealthy City, and the chief of this part of Apulia, taking name from hence. 2. Barlette, by the modern Latinists calleth Barulum, situate in or near the place of the old Canusium; an Haven Town, and of so great importance, reckoned for one of the four strong holds of Italy, in these middle Ages; the other three being Crema in Lombardie, Prato in Tuscani, and Fabrianum now called Fabiano in Anconitana. 3. Monopolis, a Port-town also not very large, but of a neat elegant building, new built, and the title of a Marquess. 4. Tranum, an ancient City, and an Archbishops See, but at this time better built than peopled by reason of some defects in the Harbour upon which it standeth. These three last together with Manfredonia in the other Apulia, pawned by the Kings of Naples (when first invaded by the French) to the State of Venice: but recovered from them not long after by Ferdinand the Catholick, when possessed of that Kingdom. 5. Bitonto, an Archbishops See also, one of which was a notable stickler in the Council of Trent. 6. Polignano, on a rocky hill, the Honourary title of a Marquess, and a See Episcopal. 7. Molfette, which gives title to a Prince, but not else considerable. 8. Vigilia, now called Bisigli a Bishops See, situate near the Adriatick amongst craggy Rocks. 9. Venosa, a strong piece and of great importance; one of the last Towns which held good for the French, in the recovery of this Kingdom from Charles, the 8. The Venusium of the ancient Romans, and the Birth-place of Horace, hence called Venusinus. Nothing considerable of these people in point of story, but that confederating with Tarentum against the Romans, as the Calabrians, Brutii, and Lucani did; they were all forced to submit to the power of Rome at the end of the War, A. V. C. 481. Papyrius Cursor and Sp. Carvilius being the second time Consuls.

IV. TERRA di OTRANTO, as it is now called, was once the Eastern part of Apulia Daunia, unto which it joyneth, from which parted only by a line drawn from Brundusium to Tarentum, of which more anon. Thus called from Otranto the chief Town hereof, the seat and habitation in the elder times of the Salentini, the Iapyges, and the Mesapiani, and is accordingly intituled in ancient Authors by the several names of Iapygia, Mesapia, and Salentina. They were the last people of Italy which held out against Rome, and sunk immediately after the Tarentini, upon whose Fate they did depend, An. V. C. 487. Junius Pera and Fabius Pictor, the two Consuls then, triumphing for it. Of these three Nations the Iapyges were of greatest Fame or of greatest infamy. Cretans originally sent in quest of Glaucus the Son of Minos, whom when they could not finde, and durst not return without him, they fixed here their dwelling; Iapyx the Son of Dedalus, being their Captain and conductor; and from him denominated.

Growing into estate and power, they became not only so luxurious in their course of life, and effeminate in their dress and habit, that they were a scorn and scandal to the neighbour Nations; but so regardless of their gods, that in the end they threw down all their Images, and destroyed their Temples: punished at last for these high insolences by balls of fire falling on them from the heavens, with which the whole stock of them were almost extirpated. The Promontory called Iapygium, being the extreme point of this Country towards Greece, now better known by the name of the Cape of St. Mary, did take name from this people; and from thence the North-west wind (or the West-north-west) which the Latines generally call Caurus, frequently blowing from this coast, had the name of Iapyx, occurring by that name in the 8. of Æneids, and in Horace, Carm. l. 1. Ode. 4.

But to proceed: this Country is invironed on all parts, with the Adriatick and Ionian Seas, saving where it joyneth to Apulia by an Isthmus of about 30 miles in bredth; reaching from Brundusium in the Adriatick, or upper Sea, to Tarentum on the Gulf or Bay thence named in the Ionian Sea. And is from land to land, as you go by water, about 200 miles in compass. The soyl hereof is very fruitful if well manured, abounding in Corn, Oyl Melons, Citrons, Saffron, and other commodities of good price; for which they never want the company of the Merchants of Genoa. They are many times much endangered by Grasshoppers, which commonly devour all whersoever they come, and would in one night consume whole fields of standing corn, if divine Providence by sending the Birds called Gaines amongst them, did not provide a remedy for so great a mischief. The greatest defect hereof is the want of waters, and therefore probably enough may be the Siticulosa Apulia; spoken of by Horace; which notwithstanding, they have very rich pastures. The people are conceived to be the simplest or most void of craft, of any in Italy; perhaps because they have so little commerce with their own Countrymen, and so much with strangers.

The chief Towns are, 1. Lecci, Aletium in Latine, a rich Town well built, and very well peopled. 2. Castro, a Sea Town, but not well fenced by Art or Nature, which hath made it very often a prey to the Turks. 3. Gallipolis, a Town built on so craggy a Rock, that it is conceived to be unconquerable. 4. Brundusium, the head Town of the Saletini, once glorying in the most capacious Haven of all the world; from whence there was continual passage into Dalmatia, Epirus, Macedon, and the rest of Greece. Here was it that Pompey took Ship to fly from Cæsar, and Cæsar took Shipping also to pursue after him: when to encourage the Pilot who was afraid of the storm, he cryed out, Cæsarem vehis & fortunam ejus. It was first built by the Ætolians, under the conduct of one Diomedes, and called Brontesion, which in the Messapian Tongue signifieth the horn or head of a Stag, which it much resembleth: from whence the Latines give it the name of Brundusium. At this day it is but a mean Town, the Haven of it being so choaked, that a Gally can very hardly enter. 5. Hydruntum, a very antient Town, and yet still reasonably well peopled, having a strong Castle upon a Rock for its defence, and a capacious Port for Traffick; the principal at the present of all the Province, which is therefore called Terra Hydruntina, by our modern Latinists. It is now called Otranto, and is a place of such importance, that the taking of it by Mahomet the Great, Anno 1481. put all Italy into such a fear, that Rome was quite abandoned. Not well inhabited again, till the expulsion of the Turks in the year next following.

Pass we on next to the two Calabriaes, so called from the Calabri an ancient people of this Tract, inhabiting that Part hereof which formerly had been called Magna Grecia, now Calabria Superior, with a part of the Country of the Salentini, lying on the Northern side of the Gulf of Tarento, now called by the name of Otranto. But the Greek Emperors being possessed of these parts of Italy, when the more Western parts thereof were under the Goths and Lombards, extended the name of Calabria, as far as to the Strait of Messana, taking the Country of the Brutii, now Calabria inferior, into the accompt: and making but two Provinces of their whole Estate which was left in this Continent by the names of Apulia and Calabria: of which, Apulia conteined all the Country on the coast of the Adriatick, from Abruzzo to the extreme point or Promontory in the land of Otranto, called antiently Iapygium, now the cape of St. Mary; Calabria, all the rest of these parts of Italy, which lye between the Tuscan or Tyrrhenian Sea, and the Bay of Tarentum. So that the antient Calabria, was but part of this; and of that Ennius the old Poet was a Native, as is affirmed by Ovid in his 3 de Arte.

Old Ennius his Garden tills
Among the steep Calabrian Hills.

Now called the Basilicate, and reckoned as a member of the lower Calabria.

But leaving these matters of remote Antiquity, let us behold the Country as it standeth at the present; divided of late times into Inferior and Superior, in which distinct capacities we shall look upon it. Premising only by the way, that this Country is the title of the eldest Son of the Kings of Naples; who were from hence called the Dukes of Calabria; and that, before it was subjected to these Kings, it had a King of its own; Holofernes, whose daughter Flora was marryed unto Godfrey of Bovillon, being King, hereof, An. 1098.

V. CALABRIA SUPERIOR, called formerly Magna Græcia, from many great and famous Cities founded there by the Grecians, hath on the East the Adriatick or Ionian Sea; on the West Lucania, from which it is divided by the Apennine, and the River Crathis; on the North, Sinus Tarentinus, or the Gulf of Tarento; and on the South and South-East, Calabria inferior, and Golfo di Squillacy, of old called Sinus Scilleticus. The principal Cities at this time are, 1. Belcastro, eight miles from the Sea, where once stood Petilia. 2. Besignan, the title of a Prince, fortified with a very strong Castle and endowed with the best Revenues of any principality or other Noble-man of Title in all the Kingdom. 3. Macera, an Archbishops See, a rich Town, and well peopled. 4. Rosanum, three miles from the Sea, a well fortified City, and situate in a very fruitful and pleasant Soil. 5. Altavilla, which gives title also to a Prince. 6. Terra Nova, given with the Title of Duke to Gonsalvo Fernandes de Cordova, commonly called the great Captain, as a reward of his signal service in the conquest of the Realm of Naples: and still enjoyed (together with the title of Duke of Sessa) by the house of Cordova.

As for the chief Cities of the Greeks in the former times, they were Locris founded by the Locrians, a people of Achaia. Here lived the Law-maker Saleucus, who ordering Adultery to be punished with the loss of both eyes, was compelled to execute the Law on his own Son, as the first offender. Therefort to shew the love of a Father, and the sincerity of a judge, he put out one of his Sons eye, and and one of his own. He also provided in his Laws that no Woman should be attended in the street with more than one Maid, but when she was drunk; that she should not go abroad at night, but when she went to play the Harlot; that she should not wear Gold or Imbroidered apparel, but when she mean to set her self to open sale; and that men should not wear Rings and Tissues, but when they went about the prostituting of some Woman; and many others of this mould. By means whereof both men and women were restrained from all extraodinary Trains of Attendants, and excess of Apparrel; the common consequents of a long and prosperous tranquillity. It was also famous in old times for the victory which Eunomus an excellent Musician obtained against Aristonus of Rhegium, another of the same profession. For though Aristonus had made his prayers to Apollo the god of Musick for his good success; yet Eunomus plainly told him, that Nature was against them in this contention, which had made all the Grathoppers mute on that side the water And so accordingly it happened. For when the day appointed came, Eunomus had the ill hap to break one of his Harpstrings, even in the middle of his Musick; when presently a Grashopper leaped upon his Harp, and supplied most melodiously the place of the broken string; and by that means obtained the victory to Eunomus. An accident not unworthy of the Muse of Strada, in his personating of the Poet Claudian. And though I bind not any man to believe this Tale (though of Strabo's telling) yet there are very good Authors for thus much thereof, that on the one side of the River Alax, which parteth Locris from Rhegium, the Grashoppers do merrily sing; but on the other side, which is that towards Rhegium, they are always silent. 2. Tarentum, a Town of no less note, situate on the Bay called Sinus Tarentinus; first built by the Spartans: the people whereof having a great command on the Country adjoyning, were one of the last Italian Nations taken in by the Romans. Nam quis post Tarentinos auderet: For who durst stir when once the Tarentines were vanquished? saith the Historian. For in the ruin of this Estate, the Apulians, Lucani, Brutii, and the neighbouring Calabrians being all confederate together in defence thereof, were brought under the command and power of Rome, A.U.C. 578. all which (from the beginning of the Tarentine war some nine years before) were either a free people, or in a kind of subjection to this mighty City; but never felt the force of the Roman puissance. So that the War began but A. U.C. 472. and ended in the total subjection of these several Nations, An. 482. Papyrius Cursor, and Sp. Carvilius being then the second time Consuls, as before was said. In the defence of this people did Pyrrhus War against the Romans, the hope of getting this place by Annibal, was the loss of Capua: finally here lived Archytas so famous for his flying Dove. 3. Crotona, the Inhabitants whereof were once so active, that at one Olympick meeting the Victors were all of this one Town. Their glory much decayed in a Battel against the Locrians, in which one hundred and twenty thousand of them and their Confederates, were vanquished by fifteen thousand of the enemy. 4. Amyclæ, a Town inhabited formerly by Pythagoras, who having been often terrified with a false report of the approach of their Enemies, published a Law prohibiting all such reports. By which means, their Enemies coming unawars possessed themselves of it. Hence grew the proverb Amyclas silentium perdidit; and hence that notable saying of Lucilius, who being commanded to be silent, returned this answer Mihi necesse est loqui, scio enim Amyclas silentio periisse: 5. Sybaris, a City built by the Græcians after the destruction of Troy; the people whereof were Lords of 25 good Towns, and could Arm 30000 men. A people so effeminate, that they permitted no Smith nor Brazier, no not so much as a Cock to live among them, because they would not have their sleeps disturbed: but the Fidlers, and Musitians were in high request, which advantage the Crotonians taking, (with whom then in hostility) they entred the Town in the habit of Musitians, and so mastered it. Before which accident there had been a Prophesie, that the Town should never be taken, till men were more esteemed then the Gods themselves. It hapened that a slave being grievously beaten by his Master, and obtaining no pardon for the Gods sake, upon whom he called, fled to the monument of some of his Masters Ancestors, and was pardoned by him; which coming to the ears of Amyris the Philosopher, he forsook the Town, most men holding him mad in a time of no danger to leave so delicate a seat: whence came the Proverb, Amyris insanit, applyed to such as under the pretence of madness or folly do provide for their safety.

VI. CALABRIA INFERIOR is bounded on the North with Calabria superior, from which parted by the River Crathis, and a branch of the Apennine; on the South with the Tyrrhenian Sea, and the Strait of Messana; on the West with that part of Campania which is called the Principate: and on the East with a part of the Adriatick or Ionian Sea. It was anciently the habitation of the Brutii, whom the Greek Writers generally call Bretti; and their Country Bretania; upon which ground, some of our modern Criticks (envying so great an honour to the Isle of Great Britain) have transferred to this Province the birth of Constantine, the first Christian Emperour. These Brutii being first conquered by the Romans, with the rest of Italy, after the defeat of Cannæ, took part with Carthage, and was for a long time the retreat of Annibal, whom the Romans had shut up in this corner. A Country not much short in fruitfulnels of the rest of the Kingdom; and having the advantage of so much Sea, is the better situate for Traffick. At one extremity hereof, is the Promontory called by Ptolemy, Leuco Petra, now Labo di Spartimento; all along which, especially in the month of May, are taken great store of Tunnies (a Fish which much resembleth mans flesh) which being barrelled up are sold to Mariners. Here are two Rivers also of a very strange nature; of which the one called Crathis, makes a mans hair yellow, and dyeth Silk white; the other named Busentus, causeth both hair and Silk to be black and swarthy.

The Principal Cities of it are, 1. Consentia, an ancient Town, comprehending seven little Hills, and a Castle on the top of one of them, which commandeth both the Town and Country adjoyning. It is built betwixt the said two Rivers, and is still reasonable rich, though not so wealthy now as in former times. 2. Rhegium, or Rhezo, on the Sea shore, opposite to Messana in the Isle of Sicily, which is supposed to have broken off from the rest of Italy, and that this Town had the name of Rhegium from the Greek word ῥήγνυμι, which signifieth to break off, or to tear asunder. A Town in former times very well Traded, but left delolate in a manner since the year 1594. when it was fired by the Turks. 3. Castrovillare, seated upon the top of a very high Mountain, 4. Belmont, and 5. Altamont, two very fair Towns, whose names sufficiently express their pleasant and lofty situations. 6. St. Euphemie, from whence the Bay which anciently was called Sinus Lametinus, or Lameticus, is now called Golfo de St. Euphemie. 7. Nicastro, three miles from the Sea, the same with Newcastle in English.

On the West side of this Calabria, and properly a part thereof, but reaching to the North as far as Apulia, standeth that mountainous Country, which in the subdivision of these Provinces by King Alfonsus, was called the BASILICATE; anciently the seat of the Lucani, and therefore called Lucania by the elder Latinists. Divided from the Principate, or West parts of Campania, by the River Silarus. A Country heretofore very unsafe for Travellers, by reason of the difficult ways, and assured company of Thieves, but now reduced to better order. It containeth in it 93 walled places, and nine Towns or Cities, the chief whereof are, Possidonia, or Pest, a City situate in so clement and benign a soil, that Roses grow there thrice a year. 2. Polycastro, on the Sea-shore, as the former is, honoured with the title of a Dukedom. And Dian or Diamum, a more midland City, near which there is a Valley 20 miles in length, and four miles in breadth; which for all manner of delights, and fruitfulness, yields to none in Naples.

VII. The ISLES of NAPLES are either in the Adriatick, and Tuscan Seas, or in the Bay of Puteoli. In the Adriatick Sea, are the Islands of Diomedes, right against Apulia, where it encountereth with Abruzzo: so called from Diomedes King of Ætolia, who after the end of the Trojan War, (in which he was so great a stickler) setled himself in some part of Apulia; the principal whereof are, St. Maries, St. Dominico, and Tremitana. 2. The Island of Acates, over against the Town of Gallipolis. 3. St. Andrews, in the Bay of Tarentum. 4. And finally, the two Islands of Dioscoros and Calypso, over against the Cape of Lacinia, now called Colonnes, in the upper Calabria. Of all which there is little famous. In the Tuscan or Tyrrhenian Seas, are the Islands of Pontia and Panditaria (now called Palmarde) as little famous as the other; save that the last is memorable in the Roman Stories, for the confinement of Agrippina the wife of Germanicus, and mother of Caligula, by the appointment of the Emperor Tiberius Nero.

Those in the Gulf or Bay of Puteoli are of better note. The principal whereof are 1. Ischia, heretofore called Oenotris, from its plenty of Wine, wherewith it aboundeth to this day; as also with Allom, Sulphur and most excellent Fruits. It is in compass 18 miles, and so begirt with Rocks and dangerous Cliffs, that it is accessible at one entrance only, and that too fortified with a strong and impregnable Citadel: and therefore chosen by King Ferdinand for his place of refuge, when he was outed of his kingdom by Charles the 8. Here is also good plenty of Hares and Conies. 2. Prochita, now called Procita, about six miles in circuit, wherein are very wholsom Baths, good store of Conies Hares, and Pheasants; the shore replenished with Fish, and the land with Fountains. John de Prochitis who plotted the Sicilian Vespers, was once Lord of this place; but afterwards for a reward of that service, made Vice-Roy of Valentia, a Kingdom of Spain. 3. Capreæ, a small rocky Island having no Haven, nor convenient station for Ships, but of a mild and temperate Air; much beautified by Augustus Cæsar, in regard that an old sapless Tree upon his casual landing here, did bud forth afresh. After that, it was much honoured by his retirement from affairs of State; and as much dishonoured by Tiberius his next Successor, who withdrawing hither many times from his Court at Rome, made it the Theater of his Cruelties, and most filthy Lusts. It hath a little City of the same name, having a fortress, and a Bishops See; and another Town called Anacapræ, inhabited by Fishermen, and Ship-wrights belonging to the Navy of Naples. Into this Island they used to confine offenders in former times, and sometimes also at this day. 4. Ænaria, a small Island given by Augustus to the Neapolitans in exchange for Capreæ, whose before it was.

There are few Nations under the Sun, who have suffered under more changes and alterations of State, than the Inhabitants of this Kingdom. For being at the first a mixture of several Nations, some of them preyed upon the others, till they were all subdued (as hath been shewed before) by the power of Rome. In the declining of her fortunes, they followed for the most part the Carthaginians, and took part with Annibal; and he being called home, they returned again to their old obedience. When Italy was subdued by the Goths, it became subject to that people, as Sicil, and the rest of those Islands did; and when the Lombars Lorded it in the Roman Provinces, all Naples fell into their hands, except Apulia and Calabria; which the Greek Emperors having conquered from the Goths with the rest of Italy, kept (but with much difficulty) to themselves. In the division of the Empire betwixt Carolus Magnus and Irene, these two last Provinces only were assigned to the Constantinopolitans; the rest to Charles, and his Successors: both outed of their several parts by the prevailing Sarazens, under the conduct of Sabba, and other successive Generals. These partly dispossessed by the Emperor Otho the first, and his Almain forces; challenging a right herein, as King of Italy; that right confirmed and enlarged by the marriage of Otho the 2. with Theophania, Neece to Nicephorus Phocas the Eastern Emperor, who brought Apulia and Calabria for her Dower or Portion. But long the Germans had not held it, when they were again expelled by the Greeks and Sarazens, joyning together against them as a common Enemy; who afterwards held bitter wars against one another, for the sole command. During these wars, it hapned that one Drangot a Gentleman of Normandy, having in the presence of Duke Robert (the Father of William the Conqueror) slain one Repostel, a Gentleman of like quality; to avoid the justice of the Prince, and the practices of Repostels kindred, fled into this Country, attended by such of his followers, as either did depend upon his fortunes, or had been medlers in the Fray. Where being come, the Duke Benevent, Vicegerent to the Eastern Emperor, took them into pay. Their entertainment being bruited in Normandy, and a report raised withal, That the Greeks hearkned after men of valour and action; caused many private Gentlemen to pass over the Alpes, and there to hew themselves out a more prosperous fortune, than formerly they had enjoyed. The fortunate success of which last Adventurers, drew thither also Tancred, the Lord of Hauteville; who with his twelve sons came into Apulia, An. 1008. and in short time not only drave the Sarazens thence, but the Grecians also, as men that had broke Covenant with them in the division of the Booty. For William the son of Tancred, combining with Melorco, Governour of Apulia for the Greek Emperor, and with the Princes of Capua and Salern, men of power and honour, for the conquest of Sicil (which the Sarazens then wholly held) agreed amongst themselves to divide the places conquered by them into four equal parts; one, for each Adventurer. But when the Sarazens were driven out, Melorco having new supplies sent him out of Greece, seized on the possession of the whole Island in the Emperor's name. Which injury William commonly dissembled, till Melorco's Forces were dispersed, and then he suddenly set upon him; first took the City of Melfi, and after by degrees, most of the other Towns and places which the Greeks held in Italy: of which both he and his Successors kept possession by the Title of Dukes of Calabria only. Of these (though all of eminent vertue) there were two besides this William, of special fame. 1. Robert Guiscard, the third son of Tancred, the most valiant Captain of his time, and chief establisher of the Normans power in Italy, to which he added in conclusion the Isle of Sicil, together with the City of Naples it self, and all the Lands which lie betwixt it and Rome. 1. Bohemund the eldest son of this Robert, who going with Godfrey of Bovillon and others of the Western Christians to the Holy-Land, was for his signal merit invested with the Kingdom of Antioch; inherited by his Children after his decease.

But to proceed: This Guiscard at his death, (but not without some wrong to the Children of his Brother William, whom he had dispossessed of all by the Pope's Authority) gave Sicil, with the Title of Earl, to his son Rogero; and his estates in Italy, to his other son William: who going to Constantinople to marry with the Emperor's daughter, was outed of his part by his brother Roger, made not long after, by the Pope the first King of this Family.

The Kings of Naples of the Norman Line.

1125 1 Roger, Earl of Sicil, created by Pope Anacletus, 2 King of both the Sicilies, at the town of Benevent; which City in requital of so great a favour, he restored again unto the Church; from which it had been taken (after the first Donation of it) by the German Emperors. 24.

1149 2 William, the son of Roger, who to assure himself of his Kingdoms, was content to take them as a gift from the hands of Pope Adrian the 4. to be holden for ever in Fee of the Church of Rome. 21.

1170 3 William, II. son of the former William, who left a daughter called Constance, who became a Nun. 26.

1196 4 Tancred, the base son of William the 2. excluded his Sister from the Crown, but was sententially deposed by Pope Celestine the 3. who had an aim to get the Kingdom for himself. But when he saw that Tancred was too strong for him, out of meer spight to be defeated of his purpose, he called in the Germans, the ancient enemies of his See; and gave the Lady Constance, then almost fifty years of age, in marriage unto Henry the 6. 2.

The German Line.

1198 5 Henry, the sixth of that name, Emperor, and Duke of Schwaben, succeeded on his marriage with the Lady Constance. 4.

1202 6 Frederick, son of the Emperor Henry and Queen Constance, crowned at the age of three years, afterwards Emperor by the name of Frederick the 2. He had to wife the daughter of John di Bren, the titular King of Hierusalem, of which the Kings of Naples have ever since had the Title of Kings; and in the rights of this Kingdom, the Kings of Spain.

1250 7 Conrade, the son of Frederick, King of Naples and Sicil, as also Emperor and Duke of Suevia, or Schwaben; poysoned (as it was conceived) by his base brother Manfred. 4.

1254 8 Manfroy of Manfred, base son of Frederick, and Duke of Benevent, first governed the Kingdom as Protector unto Conradine, the son of Conrade; but after took it to himself against the will of Pope Urban the 4. who being weary of the Germans, called in Charles Duke of Anjou, and the Earl of Provence, brother to Lewis the 10 of France: It being usual with the Popes (as Machiavel very well observeth) to call new men into Italy, and stir up new Wars for their own ambition; not suffering any to possess that long which themselves (through their weakness) could not hold; and practising the overthrow of those very men, whom themselves had raised to power and greatness.

The French Line.

1261 9 Charles, Earl of Anjou and Provence, overcame King Manfred, and was after Crowned by Pope Urbane the 4. who conditioned with him, that neither he nor his Successors should assume the Empire; and that they should pay fifty thousand Crowns per annum as a Rent to the Church. This Charles did also vanquish Conradine the son of Conrade, the last of the Royal house of Suevia, whom he caused to beheaded at Naples. After which bloody Act, neither he nor any of his posterity, did either quietly or long enjoy these Kingdoms. For in his own time Peter, King of Aragon, claimed the Kingdom of Naples, in right of Constance his wife, the daughter of Manfred: betwixt whom and Charles, a single combat was appointed to be fought in Bourdeaux, before King Edward the first of England, to decide the Controversie. But whilst Charles there expected him, he seized on Sicil Anno 1281. This Charles reigned three and twenty years.

1284 10 Charles II. son of Charles the first, formerly prisoner in Sicil to Peter of Aragon, was ransomed by the procurement of King Edward above named for 30000 Marks. By Mary, daughter of Stephen, King of Hungary, he had fourteen Children: the most pertinent of which (to our purpose) were Charles surnamed Martel, King of Hungary in right of his Mother; Robert King of Naples; John of Durazzo; and a daughter (whose name I find not) married to Charles, Earl of Valois, who in her right obtained the Earldom of Anjou. 26.

1310 11 Robert, the second son of Charles the 2. 32.

1342 12 Joane, the Neece of Robert by his son Charles, first married Andrew, the second son of Charles King of Hungary, whom she hanged at her window for insufficiency; and for her second husband had Lewis, Prince of Tarentum, who over-straining himself to satisfie her carnal appetite, died. Her third husband was James, Prince of Marjorca, a gallant young Gentleman, whom she beheaded for lying with another woman. Her fourth, Otho of Brunswick, a tough Souldier, who had the good fortune to outlive her. She was twice driven out of her Kingdom by Lewis King of Hungary, brother of Andrew her first husband: restored the first time by the power of Pope Clement the sixth; but at the second time taken and hanged at the same window where she had hanged her first husband. But first, out of an hatred to her next heirs of the house of Hungary, she adopted Lewis Duke of Anjou, (descended scended from Charles Earl of Valois spoken of before) for her heir and successor.

The Hungarian Line.

1371 13 Charles III. son to Lewis, and nephew of Prince John of Durazzo before mentioned, by the power of Lewis, King of Hungary, and the favour of Pope Urban the fifth, was made King of Naples. He overthrew and killed in Battel Duke Lewis of Anjou, his competitor, and after the death of King Lewis of Hungary, succeeded in that Kingdom also; but long he had not reigned therein, when poysoned (as it was supposed) by the old Queen Mother, to advance her daughter to that Throne. 15.

1386 14 Ladislaus, son of Charles the 3. having a quarrel with the Pope, made a voyage Royal unto Rome, where he forced his entry, and was there triumphantly received: on which displeasure the Pope called in Lewis the 2. Duke of Anjou, who gave Ladislaus a great overthrow. Insomuch, as Ladislus used to say, that if Lewis had followed his Victory the first day, he had been master of his Kingdom and Person too; if the second, of his Kingdom, but not of his Person: but not persuing it till the third day, he failed of both. So in the end he was compelled to fly to Rome, and give over the enterprise. 29.

1415 15 Joane II. Sister of Ladislaus, of as much levity, but not altogether of so ill a fame as the former Joane: observing the unprosperous successes of the house of Anjou she adopted for her heir, Alphonso the fifth of Aragon; who had some claim unto the Kingdom as the direct heir of Pedro, or Peter the 3. and Constance the daughter of King Manford, spoken of before. But finding him to stand too much on his own right, and to be too forwards in taking a possession of it, before her death; she revoked that Adoption, and made a new grant of that Estate to Lewis the fourth, Duke of Anjou, and after his decease to his brother Rene, or Renatus: both vanquished by the Aragonians.

The Aragonian Line.

1434 16 Alfonso King of Aragon, partly by Conquest, and partly by Adoption, having got the Kingdom; left it well settled unto Ferdinand, his natural son. 24.

1458 17 Ferdinand, the base son of Alfonso (the lawful sons inheriting the Realm of Aragon, Sicil, &c.) succeeded in the Realm of Naples. 36.

1494 18 Alfonso II Son of Ferdinand, in whose time the French began to aim at the Realm of Naples. This King and his two Predecessors were of the Order of the Garter.

1494 19 Ferdinand II. Son of Alfonso the second, outed of his Estate and Kingdom by Charles the eighth, son of King Lewis the eleventh of France, whom Rene the last Duke of Anjou had made the sole Heir of all his Titles and Possessions. And though Charles upon his Conquest was solemnly Crowned, yet posting back again into France before he had setled his affairs in this Kingdom, and having much discontented the chief men of Anjouvin Faction; he lost it suddainly to the same Ferdinand from whom he had so suddainly won it.

1497 20 Frederick II. Brother of Alfonso the second, and Uncle of this last Ferdinand, succeeded him in his Estate; and was the sixth King that had reigned in Naples within the compass of three years: that is to say, Ferdinand the first, Alfonso the second, Ferdinand the second, Charles of France, the second Ferdinand again, and then this Frederick. Finding himself betrayed by the Spaniards, he submitted himself to Lewis the XII. King of France, and yielded up his Kingdom to him. And indeed what else could that poor Prince do, when he saw his own blood, and such as had taken his Realm into their protection, conspiring against him?

For when Charles made his passage towards Naples, Ferdinand the Catholick, sent Gonsalvo, (who was afterward for his valour surnamed the Great Captain) with some Forces to resist the French Invaders. But when the French were expelled, Gonsolvo would not leave the Country, because his Master had not as yet sent for him. In the mean time it was agreed betwen Lewis of France, and this Ferdinand, that they should jointly set upon the Kingdom of Naples: That having won it, the French should possess Abruzzo, and Lavoro; the Spainards, Puglia, and both Calabrias: That the first should be entituled King of Naples; the other, Duke of Apulia. This Confederacy was kept secret till the French Forces were come to Rome; and Gonsolvo possessed (under pretence of defending it) of all Calabria. So that it was no marvel that they made themselves Masters of the Country. An action in which the French dealt very unadvisedly, in bringing into Italy where he was before the sole Moderator, another King as great as himself; to whom as to his Rival, his enemies might have recourse on all occasions; and the Spaniard as unnaturally, in betraying for the moity of a Kingdom, a Prince of his own blood, under pretence and promise of succours. But the two Kings did not continue long in good terms of Partnership. For the Spaniards being more intent upon their advantages, soon picked a quarrel with the French, within two or three years drave them out of all, and to this day keep it; though both this Lewis, and his Successors Francis the first, and Henry the second, have divers times, and with great effusion of blood, attempted the recovery of it.

The Spanish, or Castilian Line.

1503 21 Ferdinand III. surnamed the Catholick, King of Castile, Aragon, &c. and Naples. 13.

1516 22 Charles V. Emperor, King of Spain, and the IV. of that name in Naples. 43.

1558 23 Philip the 2. of Spain, and the first of Naples. 40.

1598 24 Philip II. of Naples, 3. of Spain. 22.

1621 25 Philip III. of Naples, 4. of Spain.

The Arms of this Kingdom are Azure, Seme of Flower de Lyces, Or, a File of three Labels, Gules.

The Revenues of it are two Millions and a half of Crowns; whereof 20000 are due to the Pope for Chief-Rent; and the rest so exhausted in maintaining Garrisons upon the Natives, and a strong Navy against the Turks, that the King of Spain receiveth not a fourth part de claro.

The

The Kingdom of SICILIA.

BEfore we can come into the Isle of Sicily, we must first cross that branch of the MEDITERRANEAN Sea, which is called the Fare, or Strait of Messana; where the passage is so strait and narrow, that it exceedeth not in breadth a mile and a half. In other parts, as the Sea grows wider, it is distant from the main land of Italy near 300 miles; that is to say, from the Town of Drepanum in Sicily, to the City of Naples. As for the Mediterranean Sea, it is so called because it interlaceth the midst of the earth; extending from the Straights of Gibralter on the West, to the Coast of Palestine on the East; and so dividing Africk both from Europe, and Asia Minor. In the Scriptures, Josh. 1. 4. it is called by the name of Mare magnum, or the great Sea: great in comparison of the dead Sea, and the Sea of Galilee, lying on the other side of the land of Palestine; but small enough if compared to the Ocean, with which in probability the Writer of that Book might have no acquaintance. Besides which general name of the Mediterranean, it hath also many particular names, as the Adriatick, Ægean, Ionian, and Carpathian Sea, where it bordereth upon Greece, and Anatolia; Mare Lybicum, where it runneth by the shores of Africk: with reference to Italy called in some parts Mare Tyrrhenum, in others Mare Ligusticum; in some parts Mare Siculum, and in others Mare Sardoum, &c. And as the Cameleon is said to apply it self to the colour of the neareſt adjacent body; so this Sea taketh its particular denominations from the neareſt shores. These Seas are also called by some modern Writers, in imitation of the French, by the name of the Levant, or the Seas of the Levant: because in respect of France, Spain, Britain, Germany, &c. they lie towards the East; the word Levant signifying in the French, a rising up, and more especially the Sun-rising. The principal Islands of this Sea which relate to Italy (for of others we shall speak in their proper places) are those of Sicil, Sardinia, Corsica and some Isles adjoyning unto these.

SICILY, environed round with the lower or Tyrrhenian Sea, contains seven hundred miles in compass; and is supposed to have been joyned to Italy in former times, being then a Peninsula, or Demy-Island, such as Peloponnesus; and joyned to the Continent by as narrow an Isthmus. The reason of that name we shall see anon.

The seperating of it from the main Land of Italy, is by the Poets ascribed to Neptune, who with his three-forked Mace, or Trident, broke it off from the land, in favour of Focastus the son of Æolus; that so he might inhabit there with the greater safety, being invironed round with waters. Which though it be a Fable or Poetical fiction, yet with some help from the Mythologists, may be made a story. For if by Æolus, and Neptune, we understand the Winds and Seas, it intimates that it was divided from the rest of Italy, either by the fury of the Waves, or by the violence of some Earthquakes, to which this Island is still subject, which might in time consume and wear away the Earth. Nor wants there very good reason for this supposition; as, 1. The narrowness of the Strait, exceeding not a mile and a half; insomuch as at the taking of Messana by the Carthaginians many of the people saved themselves by swimming over this Strait, into the opposite parts of Italy. 2. The shallowness of it, being found upon a diligent sounding, not to be above eight fadom deep. Then 'tis observed, that the land on both sides is very brittle, full of Caves and chinks made in it by the working of the Sea, on this seperation; and that on the Italian coast where the Strait is narrowest, there stands a City of old called Rhegium, which signifieth a breach or cutting off, from the Greek word Ῥήγνυμι, which signifies to break off, or violently to pull asunder; and is supposed to be so called upon this occasion. And indeed the violence of the Sea is so great and dangerous in this narrow Chanel, so subject unto blustering winds issuing out of the hollow caverns of the earth; that the breaking off of this Island from the rest of Italy, is a thing most credible. Which dangerous nature of the passage, being also full of Rocks, and unsafe by reason of the Whirl-pools occasioned it to be called by Florus the Historian, Fabulosis infame monstris fretum; chiefly so called with reference to Scylla and Charybdis, of which may fabulous things are reported by the ancient Poets. Of these, Charybdis is a Gulf or Whirl-pool on Sicily side, which violently attracting all Vessels that come too nigh it, devoureth them, and casteth up their wracks at the shore of Tauromenium, not far from Catana. Opposite to this in Italy, standeth the dangerous Rock Scylla, at the foot of which many little Rocks shoot out, on which the water strongly beating, making that noise, which the Poets feign to be the barking of Dogs. The passage between these two being, to unskilful Mariners exceeding perilous, gave beginning to the Proverb;

Incidit in Scyllam cupiens vitare Charybdim.

Who seeks Charybdis for to shun,
Doth oftentimes on Scylla run.

But there are other things which made Sicily famous in old times, besides these two, as viz. the punishment of the Giant Enceladus, for his attempt against the gods: the frequent burning of Ætna (under which he is fabled to be shut up) being supposed to proceed from his sulphurous breath. Secondly, the birth of Ceres in this Isle; and thirdly, the Rape of Proserpine. To these two last, the Isle was consecrated in those days; to Ceres, in regard she first taught the people to sow Corn, whence the word Ceres is often used in the Poets to signify Bread, and other necessary provisions for life, as Sine Cerere & Bacchо friget Venus; To Proserpine, because bestowed upon her by Pluto, to please her after the Ravishment committed on her.

It is situate under the fourth Climate, the longest day being 13 hours and an half. And was once called Trinacria, because it shoots forth into the Sea with three Capes or Promontories: viz. 1. Pelorus, now Capo de Foro, to the North; 2. Pachinus, now Capo Passaro, to the West; and 3. Lilybæum, now Capo Boii, or Capo Caro, to the South. This last looketh towards Carthage, and the shores of Africk, from which distant 180 miles. And of this Strabo doth affirm, that a man of quick and strong sight getting up into a Watch-tower that stood in this Cape, descryed a Fleet setting sail out of the Haven of Carthage; and told the Lilybitanians their bigness and number. That this is true, I dare not say: for besides the unlikelihood of kenning at so great a distance; we are taught by Philosophy, that the Sea being of an orbicular form, swelleth it self into the fashion of a round Turret or Hill, till it put bound to the eye-sight. From these three corners, this Country was (as we have said) called Trinacris, or Trinacria, according to that of Ovid.

Terra tribus scopulis vastum procurrit in æquor;
Trinacris à positu, nomen adepta, loci.

An

An Iſland with three corners braves the Main,
And thence the name of Trinacris doth gain.

The firſt Inhabitants that we find to have dwelt in this Country, are the huge Giants ſo often mentioned in the Odyſſes of the divine Poet Homer, called Læſtrigones and Cyclopes; of which laſt rank was the ſo much famouſed Polyphemus, who with ſo much humanity entertained Ulyſſes, and his companions. Theſe were afterward rooted out by the Sicani, a people of Spain, who called it Sicania. As for the name of Sicilia, ſome derives it from Sicilens, a ſuppoſed King of Spain, who is fabled to have conquered this Country. But the truth is, it came from the Siculi, who being by Evander and his Arcadians driven out of Latium, came into this Iſland: to which having maſtered the Sicani, and driven them from the Weſt and the Northern part, to the Eaſt and South they left their name. At their firſt landing they built the City of Zancle, called afterwards Meſſana, together with Neæ, Hybla, Catana, and Leontium. After them came another Italian people named the Morgetes, being driven thence by the Oenotrians; and ſate down in that part of the Iſland where ſtood the City of Morgentum, built by them at their firſt arrival. The firſt of all the Greeks who ſet footing in it (not to ſay any thing of the coming of Minos hither in the purſuit of Dædalus, having more in it of the Fiction than Hiſtorical truth) where the Chalcidians, a people of the Iſle Eubœa, now called Negropont; who built the City of Naxos; and after them Architas of Corinth, with his fellow adventurers, by whom Syracuſe was either firſt built, or very much beautified and repaired. Next them the Rhodians and Cretans ſent ſome Collonies hither, the firſt Founders of Gela; and after of the renowned City of Agrigentum: And not long after a new Plantation ſent from Sparta built Heraclea. The Citizens of Megarus, another ſtate of Greece, ſent a Colony alſo, who built Selinus. And did thoſe of Meſſene alſo, who taking the Town of Zancle from the Siculi, new built or beautified it, and gave unto it ſo repaired the name of Miſſana. Nor is it to be thought, that the Tyrians and Phœnicians, being ſo great undertakers of publick buſineſs, and very powerful in ſhipping, would ſit ſtill, when ſo fair a booty did invite their induſtry: who ſeiſing on the Promontories of Pachinus and Lilybæum, and ſome of the adjoyning Iſlands; did fortifie them for the better ſecuring of the Trade which they had in Sicily. But all theſe ſeveral Adventurers having ſeveral intereſſes, joyned not together in the work of an abſoute Conqueſt; but planting themſelves only on the Sea-ſhores, altered not the name by which they found it called at their coming thither.

The people are ingenuous, eloquent and pleaſant, but withal very uncontant, and ſo full of talk, that from thence came the Proverb, Gerra Siculæ. They are alſo ſaid to be of a very envious, ſuſpitious, and diſtruſtful nature, uncapable of injuries, and vehement in purſuit of revenge, as appears by that great ſlaughter which they made of the French: yet withal courteous enough to ſtrangers, and Paraſitical enough to their ſuperiors. They have been famous heretofore for many notable inventions, Ariſtotle aſcribing to them the Art of Oratory, and firſt making of Paſtoral Eclogues, Pliny of Clocks (or rather of Hour-glaſſes; for Clocks were but a late invention, and that of the Flemmings) and Plutarch of Military Engines; which laſt were brought by Archimedes unto great perfection.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt preached here, by ſome of the Diſciples of St. Peter, whom he ſent hither at his firſt coming to Rome; of which Pancratius (whom we call commonly St. Pancrace) is ſaid to have been the firſt Biſhop of Tauramenium, and Marſianus of Syracuſe. They are now generally of the Religion authorized by the Popes of Rome; that of the Greek Church being rather connived at than allowed of; in the Communion whereof here are thought to be ten thouſand ſouls, but looked on by the reſt as ſchiſmatical people. For the moſt part they uſe the Italian Language, but very much altered, by the Greek, Arabian, Norman, French and Spaniſh tongues; to which Nations they have been ſeverally ſubject, ſince the time of the Romans. The total number of the people is thought to be about a Million and a half.

The ſoil is incredibly fruitful in Wine, Oyl, Honey, Minerals of Gold, Silver, and Allom, together with plenty of Salt and Sugar; which laſt commodity the Natives ſell in Canes unto the Venetians, and buy it again of them when it is refined; and thereby letting ſtrangers go away with the beſt part of their gains; as generally they do in all other Merchandize; which they permit to be exported, rather than put themſelves to the trouble of Trafficking abroad in Forain Nations. There are alſo Gems of Agates, and Emralds. It yieldeth alſo great ſtore of the richeſt Silks, which grow plentifully about Meſſana; variety of moſt excellent and delicious fruits, both for taſte and colour: with ſuch abundance of all ſorts of Grain, that it was called in old times Horreum Romani populi, or the Granary of the Roman Empire; and doth now furniſh ſome parts of Italy, Spain, and Barbary, beſides Maltha, and the adjacent Iſles, with that which ſhe can ſpare of her ſuperfluities. Nay, Tully doth not only call it the Granary and Store-houſe of the City of Rome, in regard of Corn, but adds that it was accounted for a well-furniſhed Treaſury; as being able of it ſelf without charge of the State, to cloath, maintain, and furniſh the greateſt Army, with Leather, Corn, and Apparel. And if Diodorus Siculus may be credited in it, he telleth us, that about Leontium and ſome other places, Wheat did grow of it ſelf, without any labour of the Husbandman. At this day in ſome parts of the Iſle, the ſoil is ſo exceeding fruitful, that it yields unto the Husbandman an hundred meaſures of Corn for one. And certainly the Corn of this Country muſt needs yield a wonderful increaſe, the King of Spain receiving an hundred thouſand Crowns yearly for the Cuſtom of Wheat. In this Country is the Hill Hybla, ſo famous for Bees and Honey; near which there was a City of the ſame name alſo, which afterwards was called Megara. And here is alſo the Hill Ætna, now called Montgibel, which continually ſendeth forth flames of Fire, to the aſtoniſhment of all beholders. The moſt famous Conflagrations in the former times were preſently before the breaking out of the War in Sicil, which the Roman Writers call Bellum ſervile, not pacified but by the ſlaughter of 70000 of the Slaves which had taken Arms againſt Rome; and ſhortly after the death of Julius Cæſar, portending thoſe proſcriptions and bloody Wars, which did after follow. And to this day ſuch extraordinary eruptions of it are accounted ominous. The Hill it ſelf is of that height, that it is ten miles from the top to the bottom, and may be eaſily diſcerned by Saillers at an hundred miles diſtance: the lower parts thereof being very fruitful, the middle ſhaded with Woods, and the top covered with Snow, a great part of the year, notwithſtanding the frequent vomiting of flames and cinders. But theſe eruptions of fire are not now ſo ordinary as they have been formerly; the matter which gave fuel to it being waſted by continual burnings: ſo that the flames which iſſue hence are hardly viſible but by night, night, though the ſmoak ſhew it ſelf the moſt part of the day. And when it doth break out, which is commonly once in three or four years; it falleth in great flakes on the Vales adjoyning; to the deſtruction of the Vintage, and great loſs of the Country. But that, they ſay, is recompenſed by the plenty of the following years, the aſhes thereof ſo batling and enriching the ſoyl, that both the Vines and Corn-fields are much bettered by it. And this report I am the apter to believe, in regard we find by late experience here amongſt our ſelves, that the Turf taken from the ground and burnt to aſhes, and ſo ſpread on land and ploughed into it, doth yield a very great improvement, even to barren ſoyls. Which kind of Husbandry is called the Devonſhiring of land, becauſe there firſt uſed; but in Hampſhire it was called, as I remember (having been unfortunately too long a ſtranger there) by the name of burning and beaking. But to return again to Ætna, into this fiery Furnace the Philoſopher Empedocles caſt himſelf that he might be reputed a God.

——Deus immortalis haberi
Dum cupit Empedocles, ardentem frigidus Ætnam Inſiluit——

as Horace, in his Book de Arte Poetica.

Empedocles to be a God deſires,
And caſts himſelf into th' Ætnean fires.

The reaſon of theſe fires is the abundance of Sulphur and Brimſtone, contained in the boſom of the Hill; which is blown by the wind, driving in at the chaps of the Earth as by a pair of bellows. Through theſe chinks alſo there is continually more fuel added to the fire, the very water adding to the force of it: as we ſee that water caſt on coals in the Smiths-Forge, doth make them burn more ardently. The reaſon of this flame is thus ſet down by Ovid.

Ipſa bitumineæ rapiunt incendia vires;
Lutoaq; exiguis ardeſcunt ſulphura flammis.
Atq; ubi terra cibos alimentaq; debita flammæ
Non dabit, abſumptis per longum viribus ævum,
Naturæq; ſuum nutrimen deerit edaci,
Nonferet Ætna famem, deſertaq; deſeret ignes.

A rozen mould theſe fiery flames begin,
And clayie brimſtone aids that fire within:
Yet when the ſlimy ſoyl conſumed, ſhall
Yield no more food to feed the fire withal,
And Nature ſhall reſtrain her nouriſhment,
The flame ſhall ceaſe hating all famiſhment.

Under this Hill ſome Poets feign the Giant Enceladus to have been buryed, as before is ſaid, whoſe hot breath fired the Mountain lying on his face. Others ſuppoſe it to be the Shop of Vulcan, and the Cyclopes; and the groſs Papiſts take it for the place of Purgatory; all alike unfallible.

The principal Rivers hereof, 1. Taretta, anciently called Terias. 2. Himera, neighboured by Mount Hybla, much famed for Honey. 3. Iſaurus. 4. Hypſa. 5. Acaſus, of great note for its precious Stones. None of them much obſervable for length or breadth, but that defect ſupplyed by the commodiouſneſs of Bays and Creeks, which are very frequent in this Iſland, and by the benefit of Fountains and freſh-water Lakes. Moſt memorable amongſt theſe, 1. The Lake called Palicoro, (now Napthia,) which for three months doth caſt forth water very hot, but of very ill ſmell; of which there is mention made in Pliny, by the name of Ephimia. 2. A Fountain neer the foot of Ætna, the water whereof is ſharp like Vinegar, and ſometimes boyleth; into which a piece of cloth caſt, being before ſteeped in water mixed with Gall, becomes ſuddenly black. 3. Another Fountain near Drepanum, the water of which, as ſoon as drunk, provoketh looſneſs. All which effects proceed from that ſulphureous and bituminous matter, of which the whole Iſland is exceeding full. 4. Acethuſa, of greater fame among the Ancients, than all the reſt; eſpecially in that the River Alpheus (a River of Greece) having ſwallowed up one hundred and forty leſſer ſtreams, and loſing it ſelf under the ground; is thought to empty it ſelf into it. The thing affirmed by Seneca and Strabo both; and ſeems to be ſufficiently proved, by the ſeveral inſtances of a wooden diſh or cup loſt in the River Alpheus, and found riſing up in this River; and by the leaves of certain trees growing on the banks of that Greek River, and ſwimming on this in great abundance; there being none of theſe trees in all Sicil. Dicitur Alpheus (ſaith Mela) ſe non conſociare pelago; ſed ſubter maria, terraſq; depreſſus, huc agere alveum, atq; hicſe rurſus extollere.

This Iſland is famous for the worthy Scholars ſhe once produced, viz. Æſchylus, the firſt Tragedian of fame; who being bald through age, once walked in the fields, where by chance an Eagle taking his bald pate for a white Rock, let a ſhellfiſh fall on it, of that bigneſs that it beat out his Brains. 2. Diodorus Siculus, that famous Hiſtorian. 3. Empedocles the firſt inventer of Rhetorick, and his fellow Gorgias. 4. Euclide, the textuary Geometrician, who taught in Megara. 5. Archimedes, a moſt worthy Mathematician, the firſt Author of the Sphere; of which inſtrument he made one of that art and bigneſs; that one ſtanding within, might eaſily perceive the ſeveral motions of every Celeſtial Orb. He made alſo divers military Engins, which in the ſiege of Syracuſa ſorely vexed the Romans, and was at laſt ſlain in his ſtudy by a common Souldier in the ſack of the Town, to the great grief of the General Marcelus. 6. Epicharmus, the firſt inventer of Comedies; and 7. Theocritus, the firſt Author of Paſtoral Eclogues. In the latter times, Nicolas Abbot of Palermo, a learned Canoniſt, and Cardinal of the Church of Rome, commonly called Panormitanus, was of greateſt fame.

In Plinies time there were reckoned in this Iſland ſeventy two Cities, of which only twelve are now remaining. The whole divided at this time into three ſmall Provinces, that is to ſay, 1. Val de Noto, 2. Mazara, and 3. Mona; to which the Iſles adjoyning may add a fourth.

1. VALLIS de NOTO taketh up the Eaſtern parts of the Iſland. The chief Cities of which are 1. Syracuſa, once the Metropolis of the whole Iſland, and a moſt flouriſhing Common-wealth: it was (as Tully reports) the greateſt and goodlieſt City of all that were poſſeſs'd by the Greeks; for ſituation very ſtrong; and of an excellent proſpect, from every entrance both by Sea and Land. The Port thereof which had the Sea on both ſides of it, was for the moſt part environed with beautiful buildings; and that part of it which was without the City, was on both ſides banked up, and ſuſtained with very fair Walls of Marble. Nor was it only the goodlieſt City of the Greeks, as Tully tells us, but one of the greateſt alſo in the World, as is ſaid by Strabo; by whom it is affirmed, that without the outmoſt wall thereof, (for it was environed with three Walls) it contained one hundred and eighty Furlongs in compaſs, which of our meaſure cometh to eighteen miles. It was compounded of four Towns made up into one, that is to ſay, Inſula (or the Iſle) Acradine, Neapolis, and Tyche, beſides the Fort called Hexapla, which commanded the reſt; the greatneſs of all which, the ruines and foundations of it do ſtill demonſtrate. It ſtandeth North of the Promontory called Pachinus, and was built by Architas of Corinth about the time of Jotham King of Judah; who being for an unnatural Rape, committed on a young Gentleman, banished his Country, together with his friend and companion Miscellus; consulted with the Oracle at Delphos, how and in what place they should dispose of themselves. The Oracle demanding whether they most affected wealth, or health: Miscellus answered health, and Architas wealth; and thereupon the former was directed to settle himself at Crotona in Italy, and the other here. Nor did the Oracle deceive him in his expectation; this Town by reason of its beautiful and commodious Port, proving of greatest trade and wealth next to Carthage it self, in those times of the World. It was the custom of this Town, when any of the Citizens grew too potent, to write his name in an Olive-leaf; which being put into his hand, did without more ado condemn him to banishment for five years, and was called Petalism, from the Greek word Πέταλον, signifing a Leaf. Yet could not this device so well secure them in the possession of their so much desired Freedom, but that this City fell oftner into the power of Tyrants, than any one City in the World. That which is now remaining of it is the work of Augustus, who after a second destruction of it in the time of Pompey, sent a Colony hither, and built upon the Isle and the parts near unto it. But now the whole Isle (Ortygia the Ancients called it) is taken up with a very strong Castle; the whole City also being very well walled, and held by a Garrison of Spaniards. 2. Noto, which gives name to this whole Division. A City which heretofore contended with Syracuse in point of Greatness: situate on a very high Rock, unaccessible on all sides but by one narrow passage; and having under the Cape of Passari a very fair and capacious Harbour, the Key of Sicil on that side. 3. Augusta, situate on the shore also, and of so large a Haven that it could never be fortified. 4. Castro Giovanni, a Town of about four thousand Families, situate in a wholsom air, and a fruitful soil, which they hold to be the very Navel and exact middle of the Island. It is also much prized for Mines of most excellent Salt. 5. Lentini, famous for its Lake, whose fishing is farmed for eighteen thousand Crowns yearly: It was anciently called Leontium, and stood somewhat North of Syracusa; with which continually in War, either to preserve their own Liberties, or get the Soveraignty of the other. 6. Enna, a midland Town, whence Pluto is said to have ravished Proserpine: In after-times the dwelling of that Syrus Ennus, who stirred up the Roman slaves against their Lords; and having broke open the common Prisons, and received all such as came unto him, patched up an Army of forty thousand. This War the Roman Writers call Bellum Servile, ended at last but with no small difficulty, by the valour and good fortune of P. Rupilius.

2. MAZARA containeth all the West parts of the Island. The chief Cities thereof, 1. Agrigentum, now called Gergenti, famous for Phalaris the Tyrant, and his torturing Perillus in a Brazen Bull, which he had made for the destruction and torture of others. Of which aptly Ovid, ——Nec enim lex justior ulla est,

Quam necis Artifices arte perire sua.

Most just it is, a man should be tormented
With that, which first his cruel Wit invented.

It was said anciently of the people of this City, that they built as if they should never die, and ate as if they were sure to live no longer. 2. Palermo, anciently called Panormus, and then a Colony of the Phœnicians; now the chief City of Sicil, and the Seat of the Spanish Vice-roy. Situate on the West Cape of the Island looking towards Sardinia, beautified with large Streets, delicate buildings, strong walls, and magnificent Temples. It hath no natural Port appertaining to it, (Drepanum serving anciently as the Port thereof) but of late there is an Haven forced out by a mighty Pierre; a work of vast expence, and worthy of the greatness of Rome. It is also an Archbishops See, and an University. 3. Monreal, commonly called Morreal, famous for the Church, the Archbishops See. It is called in Latine, Mons Regalis. 4. Drepanum, now called Trapani, situate on a Promontory thrusting into the Sea, not far from that of Lilybæum, a Town well fortified, in regard of the ill Neighbour-hood of the Moors, who do often pillage on these coasts; and having the command of a very fair Port. The Inhabitants of this place are said to be the best Seamen of Sicil. 5. Mazara, which gives name unto all this Vale, situate South of Lilybæum, and not far from Selinus. 6. Eryx, situate on a Mountain over-looking the Sea, said by the Ancients to have took this name from Eryx the Son of Venus, slain here by Hercules: memorable in those elder times for being the Seat of K. *Aceste*s, who so kindly entertained Æneas, and his wandring Trojans; and a magnificent Temple, in which Venus was worshipped, who from thence was called Erycina; as, Sive tu mavis, Erycina videris, in the Poet Horace. This was the last Town which the Carthaginians held in Sicil. On the surrendry whereof by Amilcar the Father of Annibal; at the end of the first Punick War, it was conditioned by the Romans, amongst other things that the Carthaginians should relinquish all the Claim or Title which they had to any part of this Island; which thereby fell unto the Romans (the State of Syracusa excepted only.) Who, whatsoever colour they were pleased to put upon that action, were principally tempted to it by ambition and covetousness. And therefore in my mind Florus states it rightly, who saith, that it was undertaken Specie quidem juvandi Socios, re autem sollicitante Præda; i. e. under pretence of aiding the Mamertines, who had put themselves into their protection, but in plain terms to get possession of the Island which lay fit for Italy. Now and long since a ruine only, the place on which it stood being called Mount St. Julian. 7. Segesta, on the Sea-side, not far from Eryx, near unto which the Trojan Ladies weary of their many long and dangerous voyages, and fearing to go again to Sea, burnt the Fleet of Æneas, on which occation it was built. Peopled at first by such of the more old and feeble Trojans, (Longævosque senes, & fessas æquore matres, as the Poet hath it) who chose rather to fix their dwelling here, than to follow the fortunes of Æneas, in his quest of Italy. Called then Acesta, in honour of King *Aceste*s spoken of before, part of whose Kingdom it was made; afterwards Egesta from Ægestus one of Trojan race, born here, by whom it was repaired and beautified; and at last Segesta.

3. MONA lieth on the North-East of the Island, opposite unto Valis de Noto. The chief Towns of it, 1. Nicosia, in the mid-land. 2. Milase, on the Northern Promontory. 3. Messana, a City of great strength and beauty just opposite to Rhezo in Italy. It was the first Town which the Romans had in this Island, being put into their hands by the Mamertines, a Troop of Souldiers brought thither out of Campania for the defence of the City; who finding themselves too strong for the Citizens, made themselves Masters of the place; but being withal too weak to hold it, chose rather to surrender it to the Romans, than to its true and proper Owners. Hence the beginning of the first War betwixt Rome and Carthage. A City it is at this time, of the most beautiful beautiful building of any in Sicil; and peopled by the wealthieſt ſort both of Merchants and Gentlemen, who live here in great pleaſure (if not voluptuouſneſs) as having plenty of all neceſſary proviſions, Fruits of all kinds, delicious Wines, and Snow to moderate and qualifie the heats thereof, at cheaper rates than any elſewhere in the Country. On the Weſt ſide there ſtands a ſtrong Citadel, highly mounted, and well Garriſoned, which commands the Town: and not far off a very high Lanthorn where lights are kept burning all night long, for the direction of ſuch Mariners, as are to paſs thoſe dangerous Straits; which from this Phare or Watch-Tower, is called commonly the Phare of Meſſana. The Haven of this Town is the faireſt of Sicil, whoſe entrances are ſo ſtrongly ſconced and bulwarked, that the people let their Gates (in deriſion of the Turks) ſtand always open. It is alſo an Archbiſhops See. 4. Catana, ſo often vexed by Dionyſius the Tyrant of Syracuſe; more ancient than beautiful: ſeated on the North ſide of a great (but hollow) Bay, not eaſily approached by Ships, and therefore neither held by any Garriſon, nor much traded by Merchants; the riches of the place conſiſting principally in the fruitfulneſs of the ſoil, the habitation of many of the Gentry, and by being a ſmall Univerſity. It was once a Colony of the Naxians. And ſo was alſo Tauromenium, the 5. Town of note in this part of the Iſland, called ſometimes from its Founders Naxos, but now Thermino; a ruine only of what was in the former days: a place by nature of great ſtrength, but over-topped by Syracuſa and Meſſana, betwixt which it ſtandeth. It was in this part of the Country that the Cyclopes dwelt, there being three litte Rocky Iſlands (now not inhabited) not far from this Town, which for a long time were called Cyclopum Scopuli.

4. On the Weſt part of Sicil lye the ÆOLIAN or Vulcanian Iſlands, heretofore only ſeven, and all almoſt of equal bigneſs; now eleven in number. The firſt name derived from Æolus, once Lord of them, who being well skilled in divining from what coaſts the Winds would blow, (which he conjectured by the ſmoak aſcending from them) occaſioned the Poets to make him the God of the Winds. The other is derived from Vulcan the God of fire; by reaſon of the continual flames of fire from thence evaporating in thoſe elder days. But now the matter of thoſe flames being waſted in long tract of time, there is only one of them which burneth, now called STOMBOLO; by ſome Writers Strongyle, from the roundneſs of it. An Iſland of about ten miles compaſs, but ſuch as ſeems to be no other than a large round Mountain. Out of the top whereof iſſueth continually a flame like a burning Beacon, eaſily diſcernable far off, but at nights eſpecially: a place ſo full of horrour to the neighbouring Iſlanders, that they and many others of the Romiſh Catholicks conceive it to be Hell it ſelf. And yet in thoſe parts where the rage of the fire offendeth not, it is of a very fruitful ſoil, and apt for tillage.

2. But the faireſt and beſt-peopled of thoſe Iſlands, is that of LIPARA, ſome ten miles in circuit, (from whence the reſt are called the Liparean Iſles) ſo named from Lipara the chief Town, ſaid to be built in the time of Joſiah King of Judah; the See of a Biſhop, under the Archbiſhop of Meſſana. The Iſland generally fruitful, well furniſhed with Allom, Sulphur, and Bitumen; and with ſome hot medicinal Bathes, which are much frequented, and from thence called Thermeſſa, by the ancient Writers. It was formerly of ſo great wealth, that falling into the diſpleaſure of Agathocles (then the Tyrant of Syracuſe) they were able to buy their peace of him, at the ſum of one hundred Talents of Gold; which ſum they had no ſooner paid, but the Tyrant for a farewel, robbed their very Temples. Unproſperous in his Actions always after that adventure. Nor ſped it better with the Turks, who in the year 1544. laid the Country deſolate; in which condition it remained, till Charles the fifth repleniſhed it again with Spaniards, and fortified it very ſtrongly againſt all invaſions.

3. Not far off lieth another of theſe Iſlands, now called FAFOGNANA, or Fauciana, but anciently Ægueſa, conceived to be the ſame which Livy and Florus call Ægates; in which there is a fair and capacious Bay, able to receive the greateſt Navies; and near to which Lutatius Catulus the Conſul gave the Carthaginians their laſt blow at Sea, which drew along with it the ſurrender of Eryx, and the loſs of Sicil, Dedyme, Ericoſe, Eunymos, and Phœniceſe, four other of theſe Iſlands, but of leſſer note, I paſs over willingly; and make haſte to

4. HIERO, the ſeventh and laſt of theſe Iſlands of any conſideration, and the eighth in tale, called alſo Vulcania, in which Vulcan was worſhipped; ſaid to have firſt appeared above the water at ſuch time as Scipio African died. A barren, ſtony, and unhabited place, by reaſon of the fires which formerly have flamed ſo hideouſly (eſpecially in the year 1444.) that it made not only the reſt of theſe Iſlands, but all Sicily tremble. Near unto this Iſle was fought the firſt Naval fight betwixt Rome and Carthage. Before which time the Romans had never uſed the Seas, as being totally employed in the conqueſt of Italy; inſomuch that when they had built their Gallies, they were fain to exerciſe their men in rowing, by placing them on two Seats near the water with Oars in their hands. Which notwithſtanding, having deviſed an Engine like a grapling hook, they ſo faſtned the Adverſe Fleet unto them, that the whole fight ſeemed a Land-battel fought upon the Sea. The victory fell unto the Romans, C. Duilius the Conſul then commanding in chief; and honoured with the firſt Naval Triumph that was ever ſolemnized at Rome.

After this Iſland was once known to the Greeks, they ſent from all their chief Cities ſeveral Colonies, who planted in the Sea-coaſts of the Country, as before noted. But ſo as they never united themſelves in a body together, but had their ſeveral eſtates and particular ends; whereby they came to be devided into many factions, and at laſt made themſelves a prey to as many Tyrants. Phalaris lording it at Agrigentum, Panætius at Leontium, Gelon at Syracuſe, Cleander at Gela, and when one Faction grew too weak to reſiſt the other, they called in ſeveral Foreign Nations to abet their quarrel. For on this ground the Carthaginians were firſt called into Sicily by the Meſſanians, againſt the Agrigentines. And on the ſame was managed here a great part of the Peloponneſian Wars: the Athenians ſiding with the Leontines, and the Spartans with the Syracuſans: in which the whole power of Athens was broken by Sea and Land; and their two Generals Nicias and Demoſthenes, murdered in priſon. But becauſe Syracuſe was a City of the greateſt Authority, and of greateſt influence over the reſt of Sicily, we ſhall more punctually inſiſt on the State-affairs thereof. The Government of which at firſt was popular, as it was in moſt of the Greek Colonies, according to the platforms which they brought from home; and was but newly altered to the Ariſtocratical, when Gelon made himſelf King of it, about 26. years after the expulſion of the Tarquins at Rome; whom with as many as ſucceded in the Royal dignity, take along as followeth.

The Tyrants, or Kings of Syracuſe.

A. M.

3465 1 Gelon the Prince or Lord of Gela taking advantage of the quarrels in Syracuſa, betwixt the Magistrates and people, made himself Master of the City; and was chosen King. A valiant and prudent Prince, by whom 150000 Carthaginians were slain in battel, for their first welcome into Sicil. 7.

3472 2 Hiero, the Brother of Gelon, a valiant King also, but a rude and covetous man, whereby he lost the love of his people. 11.

3484 3 Thrasibulus, Brother of Hiero, whose Government proved so cruel and unsupportable, that it held not above 10 Months; who being forced into Exile by the Syracusans, the people did a while enjoy their liberty; but withal fell into those Factions, which after 60 years made them lose it again.

3544 4 Dionysius, that so famous Tyrant, from being General of the Forces of the Syracusans, made himself their King: A man of great vices, but great vertues withal. He brought almost all Sicily under his obedience, and the Town of Rhegium in Italy; reigning in all 38 years.

3582 5 Dionysius II. succeeding his Father in his Kingdom and vices, but not in valour or wisdom, was first outed by Dion a noble Gentleman of Syracuse; and afterward taken Prisoner by Timolean of Corinth, to which City he was sent, and there died in Exile.

3635 6 Agathocles, by trade a Potter, after that a Souldier; 20 years after the death of Timoleon, made himself King of Syracuse. To draw the Carthaginians out of Sicil, he passed over into Africk, and besieged Carthage; which example Scipio after followed, but with better fortune. 29.

3681 7 Hiero II. of a Commander of their Armies chosen King of Syracuse, by a Party which he had made amongst them. In his time brake out the first Punick War, the Romans being called in by the Mamertines, who held Messana against the Carthaginians; the Lords at that time of the greatest part of the Island. 56.

3737 8 Hieronymus, the Son of Hiero, after whose death Syracuse and all Sicil became subject to Rome, by the fortunate conduct of Marcellus.

Of these eight Kings, the six first commonly pass under the name of Tyrants; from whence and from some others of like disposition, who lorded it over the rest of the free Cities of Sicil, the name of Siculi Tyranni grew into a Proverb. But of all none more hated than the two Dionysii, who were so odious, that there were continual execrations poured on them; only one old Woman praying for the life of the latter. Who being asked the cause made answer, that she knew his Father to have been a monstrous and wicked Tyrant; on whom when the curses of the people have prevailed, and obtained his death; this his Son succeeded, worse by far then he; for whose life she was resolved to pray, lest after his death the Devil himself should come amongst them. But to proceed: after these Tyrants, as they called them, were rooted out, and the Island was conquered by Marcellus, it always followed the fortune of the Roman Empire; till in the partition of that Empire, it fell together with Apulia and Calabria, into the power of the Greeks. In the declining of whose greatness, this Island having been miserably pilled and spoiled by the Emperour Constans, An. 669. became a prey to the Saracens; from them recovered again by the help of the Normans, who held both this and the Realm of Naples, in Fee of the Church, under the title of Kings of both Sicils. From that time forwards it ran the fortune of that Kingdom, subject unto the Princes of the Norman and German Lines; till the death of Conrade, no interruption intervening. After whose death when Manfroy or Manfrede, the base Son of the Emperour Frederick, and Brother of Conrade, had forcibly made himself King of these Countries; it was offered to Richard Earl of Cornwall, Brother to Henry the third of England: a Prince of such riches, that he was able to dispend an hundred Marks per diem, for ten years together; which according to the Standard of those times, was no small sum. But the conditions which the Pope proposed were so impossible for the Earl to perform, that his Agent told him, he might as well say to his Master, I will give thee the Moon; catch, climb up, and take it. The Earl refusing it, it was offered the King for his second Son Edmund, who was invested by the gift of a Ring, and money coined in his name by the Popes appointment, with the inscription of Aimundus Rex Siciliæ. But the King not being able to pursue the business, because then overburthened by his Barons Wars, and the Pope having sucked no small store of Treasure from him; it was, in the year 1261. given unto Charles, Earl of Province and Anjou, Brother to Lewis the 10. Under him those Countries jointly continued subject till the year 1281. in which his Competitor, Peter of Aragon, claiming it in right of his Wife, Daughter of Manfroy before mentioned, promising him to fight a single combat before our K. Edward the first, at Bourdeaux, fail'd of his Word; and in the mean time so contrived it, that at the sound of a Bell tolling to prayers, all the French men in Sicily were cruelly massacred. This exploit is known now under the name of Vesperi Siculi, and was managed by John de Procbita, a Gentleman of the Realm of Naples, whom Charles had dispossessed of the Isle of Procbita, whereof he had been formerly Lord; and not content to do him such a piece of injustice, added a further insolency to it, in the forcing his Wife. Provoked with these two injuries, the abused Gentleman plots with King Pedro of Aragon, to make him Master of the Isle of Sicily, where he had very good intelligences; and where the French by reason of their Lusts and Insolencies had so exasperated the Natives; that they were capable enough of any such impressions, as a man sharing with him in his sufferings, could imprint upon them. According to the compact made, Don Pedro riggeth out his Navy, under pretence of some exploit against the Moors, and anchoreth in the Port of Sardinia, there to expect how well the Tragedy would be acted; which fell out so agreeably to his expectation, that in one instant as it were, on the signal given, the French were universally murthered in all parts of the Island: the people being so enraged, that they would not spare women great with Child, if supposed it to have been got by any of that hated Nation: and Pedro coming in with his Navy as the deed was done, was by the general consent of all sorts of people, crowned King of Sicily. A bloody policy, I confess, which as the Actors learned of the English Saxons, who had made like riddance of the Danes; so did they teach it to the French, who practised it on the Hugonots of France in that horrid Massacre of Paris, An. 1572. An Act which so provoked the Pope, that he solemnly accursed the King, and caused many of the neighbouring Princes to Arm against him. But the Fox fared never the worse for that: who did so order his affairs, that he did both clear his own Country of those enemies which on the Popes curse had come in against him; and setled Sicily more firmly in obedience to him. Since which time this Island hath belonged to the house of Aragon, but not always in possession of the Kings thereof, being a while governed as a State apart by its own Kings, whose succession followeth.

Kings

Kings of Sicily of the House of Aragon.

1281 1 Pedro, or Peter the first, King of Aragon by birth, of Sicily in right of his wife, the choice of the people, and the Legacy of Coradine (the last of the Royal line of Suevia) but principally by the power of the Sword.

1291 3 Frederick, the Brother of James, on his Brothers taking the Crown of Aragon, got possession of Sicily. By Frederick Alfonso, a younger Son of this Frederick, the Title of Duke of Athens came into this Family.

1336 4 Peter, or Pedro II. Son of Frederick.

1342 5 Frederick II.

6 Peter or Pedro III.

7 Lewis, Son to Peter III.

8 Frederick III. in the life of Lewis his Brother called Duke of Athens; after his death succeeded in the Kingdom of Sicily.

1389 9 Martin, Son to Martin the first, King of Aragon, succeeded in the right of his Wife Blanch, Daughter of Frederick the third; and dying without issue, gave the Kingdom unto Martin his Father.

1409 10 Martin II. of Sicily and the first of Aragon, of which last he was King by birth, and of the former by the gift of his Son. After which time the Isle of Sicily being again united to the Crown of Aragon, was never separated from it; except it were when John King of Aragon gave it to Ferdinand his Son, the better to fit him for the bed of Isabel Princess of Castile, with whom the match was then in treaty; and when the Emperor Charles the fifth gave it, with Naples, unto Philip his eldest Son, on his marriage with Mary Queen of England, who thereupon was stiled King of Naples, Sicily, and Hierusalem. But this held only for a year; his Father shortly after resigning to him all his Kingdoms, whereby it became joyned to Spain again.

The Revenues of this Kingdom are by some said to be but 800000, but as others say, a million of Ducats, most of which is again disbursed on the entertainment of the Vice-Roy, and the defence of the Island. The Arms are, Or, four Pallets Gules (being those of Aragon) betwixt two Flanches Argent, charged with as many Eagles Sable, beaked Gules, which was the bearing of Monfroy King of Naples, and Sicil, spoken of before, who gave those Arms with reference to his descent from the German Emperors.

This Island for the number of its Nobility compares with Naples, as having in the time of Ortelius, 80 years ago, 7 Princes, 4 Dukes, 13 Marquesses, 14 Earls, 1 Vicount, 48 Barons: Men of authority and power in their several Territories, and therefore not permitted to live much in the Island, the greatest part of their time being spent in the Court of Spain, but more to satisfie that King upon reason of State, than any affection of their own to so long an exile. And for the Government of the Church,

The Kingdom of SARDINIA.

THE Island and Kingdom of SARDINIA lieth West from Sicily; from the nearest point whereof called Cape Boii, or Cape Coro, it is distant about 200 miles. It is in length 180 miles, 90 in breadth, 560 in the circuit; and is situate under the 4. Climate, the longest day being 14 hours.

In the time of Aristotle it was called Ichnusa, next Sandaliotis, from the resemblance which it hath to a man's Shoo or Sandal; and finally Sardinia from Sardus the Son of Hercules, who coming out of Africk possessed the same. For this there is sufficient authority amongst the Ancients. Of the first names saith Pliny in as plain tearms as may be, that Timæus called Sardinia Sandaliotis, and Myrsilus, Ichnusa, from the similitude which it hath to the Shoo-sole, or impression of a man's foot on the ground; Sardiniam Timæus Sandaliotin appellavit ab effigie solea; Myrsilus, Ichnusam à similitudine vestigii. And for the last nothing can be more plain than that of Pausanias, who tells that the first who came by shipping into Sardinia, were certain Africans under the conduct of Sardus the Son of Maceris, whom the Egyptians called by the name of Hercules; who coming into this Island then called Ichnusa, τὸ ὄνομα ἀπὸ σῦ Σάρδου τότε μεταβαλὸν ἡ νῆσος, caused it after his own name to be called Sardinia. For further evidence whereof, the people in the Latin tongue are called Sardi; the adjoyning Sea, Mare Sardonum. And to this name it was so constant, that no following Plantations from other Countries were ever able to alter it. Some Companies of Attica, led by Iolaus, came and setled here, where they built Olbion, and Agrillis: leaving a memory of Iolaus their Captain in some places, which remained in the time of Pausanias, called Iolaia; and taking to themselves for his sake the name of Iolatenses. And after the destruction of Troy, some of that scattered Nation came and planted in some void parts of the Island; kept to themselves the name of Ilienses, and by the name are mentioned both by Pliny and Livy. But neither of these Nations did attempt the change of the name, because not of ability to suppress or out power the Natives. Nor could the Carthaginians do it, though a more puissant Nation than the former were; and such as by the nearness of their habitation (Sardinia being distant but 160 miles from Africk) had all advantages to make (as at last they did) a full Conquest of it; building therein the Cities of Charmis, Chalaris, and Sulchi; and holding it until it was unjustly extorted from them by the Romans, at the end of the first Punick War; at what time Carthage was in danger to be ruined by the revolt of her own Mercenaries, and so not able to resist.

But of the name and first Plantations of this Island we have said enough. Let us now look upon the place; in which it is reported that there is neither Wolf nor Serpent, neither venomous nor hurtful Beast, but the Fox only; and a little Creature like a Spider which will by no means endure the light of the Sun, except held by violence. Some Pools it hath, and those very plentiful of Fish; but generally so destitute of River-water, that they are fain to keep the Rain which falls in Winter, for their use in Summer. By means whereof, and for that there is no passage for the Northern winds, being obstructed by the high Mountains near Cape Langodera, the air is generally unhealthy, if not pestilential; Insomuch that Tully writing to his Brother Quintus being then in this Island, adviseth him to remember, as a point of health, that he was in Sardinia; and speaking of Tigellius, Tigellius a Sardinian born, ſaith of him, that he was more peſtilent than the Country which bred him.

The ſoil is very fertile in reſpect of Corſica, but barren if compared with Sicil; which yet may rather be imputed to the want of good manuring in the Husbandman, than any natural defect in the Soil it ſelf. Well ſtored with all ſorts of Cattel, as appears plainly by that plenty of Cheeſe and Hides which are ſent hence yearly into Italy and other places. The Horſes hereof, hot, headſtrong, and hard to be broken, but will laſt long. The Bullocks naturally amble, ſo that the Country-man rideth them as familiarly as they do in Spain on Mules and Aſſes. Here is alſo the Beaſt called Muſrones, or Muſcriones, found in Corſica alſo, but in no other part of Europe; ſomewhat reſembling a Stag, but of ſo ſtrong an hide, that it is uſed by the Italians inſtead of Armor: Of the skin of which carried to Cordova in Spain, and there dreſſed, is made the right Cordovan Leather. Finally, here is an Herb, of which if one eat, it is ſaid he will die with laughter; whence came the Proverb, Riſus Sardonicus. The truth of which report I ſhall not diſpute, though it be by others more probably conjectured, that the Herb being of a poyſonous nature, cauſeth men to die with ſuch a Convulſion or attraction of Sinews, that they ſeem to grin, or laugh at the time of their death.

The people are ſmall of ſtature, of complexion inclining unto ſwarthineſs, and that either by reaſon of the heat of the Sun, or more probably from their African extraction: their behaviour much participating of that people alſo. So ſlothful in the times of the Romans, that they were grown into a Proverb, and a Law made to compel them to work; but now eſteemed a very painful and laborious Nation. Much given to hunting, and ſo prone to Rebellion that the Spaniard permitteth no Cutler to live among them; yet peaceabe among themſelves, and in ſome meaſure courteous unto Strangers alſo. Their Language a corrupt Catalonian; their diet on meats common and groſs; their apparel in the Towns (eſpecially that of the women) gorgeous, in the Villages ſordid.

In matters of Religion they are little curious. That which they make moſt ſhew of, is according to the Rites and Doctrines of the Church of Rome; which both their Neighbourhood to the Pope, and their ſubjection to the Spaniard, have impoſed upon them. But in their practice of it they are looſe enough, going to Maſs on Sundays and Saints days; which done they fall a dancing in the midſt of the Church, ſinging in the mean time ſongs too immodeſt for an Ale-houſe. Nay, it is thought that their Clergy it ſelf is the moſt rude, ignorant, and illiterate of any people in Chriſtendom; ſaying their Maſſes rather by rote, than reaſon, and utterly unable to give any accompt of their Religion.

It is divided commonly into two parts, viz. Cape Lugudori, towards Corſica; and Cape Cagliari, towards Africk: the firſt the leaſt, and withal mountainous and barren; the laſt the larger, level, and by much more fruitful. Chief Cities of the whole, 1. Calaris, firſt built by the Carthaginians, and ſituate in that point of the Iſland which lieth neareſt to Africk; which from hence took the name of Cape Cagliari, by which it is at this day called. A City of ſuch fame, when it was firſt taken by Gracchus, for the uſe of the Romans, that it is called by Florus, Urbs urbium; and was deſtroyed by the ſaid Gracchus, the better to diſable the Natives from rebelling againſt the Conquerors. Being new built again in more ſetled times, it was a ſecond time deſtroyed by the Saracens; and finally re-built and beautified by the Piſans, at ſuch time as they were Maſters of this part of the Iſland. Very well fortified by Nature, as ſeated on the top of an Hill; and hath under it a ſpacious and goodly Haven, much frequented by Merchants. The Town it ſelf adorned with a beautiful Temple, being the See of an Archbiſhop, many fair Turrets, and the conſtant reſidence of the Vice-roy: from whoſe authority it is exempt by eſpecial priviledg, as to the Legal Government of it; and ordered by a Common-Council of its own Citizens. 2. Boſſa, on the Weſt ſide of the Iſland, another Arch-Epiſcopal See. 3. S. Reparata, on the North, looking towards Corſica. 4. Aquilaſtro, on the Weſtern ſhores. 5. Saſſari, a Town of conſequence, where they have an Aquæduct twelve miles long reaching from thence unto S. Gavius. Alghes-Boſa, a good Town ſituate in a wholſom air, and a fertile ſoil, and having a fair Haven of ſix miles in length, in which the Ships of Genoa and Catalonia do moſt commonly ride. 7. Oreſtagne, a large Town but very ill peopled, by reaſon of a bad air which proceeds from the Fens; the Country about which gives title to the Marqueſs of Oreſtagne. 8. Turrita, once a Roman Colony, now little better then a ruine; yet giving title to the third Archbiſhop of this Iſland, who is called in Latin, Turritanus. Here are alſo in divers parts of this Iſland the remainders of ſundry Towers and Forts which the people call Noracks from Nora, one of the Sons of Geryon; who (as they think) came into this Country, and built the firſt dwelling or manſion in it. And this Tradition of the Vulgar hath ſo much in it of Hiſtorical and undoubted truth, that certain Colonies from Spain came and planted here, under the conduct of one Nora; ſomewhat before the expedition of the Attick under Iolaus, as Pauſanias teſtifieth.

This Iſland taken by the Romans from the Carthaginians, as before is ſaid, was firſt under the immediate Juriſdiction of the Præfect of the City of Rome: but after by Juſtinian was made a Province of his new Dioceſs of Africk; and as a part thereof or rather an Appendix to it, was challenged, invaded, and finally conquered by the Saxazens, Anno 807. From them recovered by the joynt-forces of the Piſans and Genoeſe, who divided it betwixt them: the Southern part, called Cape Cagliari, being allotted to the Piſans, and the Northern towards Corſica, to thoſe of Genoa. But the Genoeſe not content with the partage, (their portion of the Iſland being leſs in quantity, and worſe in quality) began to quarrel with the Piſans, and at the laſt to break into open Wars. To part the Fray, Pope Boniface the 8. beſtowed it on James King of Aragon, who driving thence the Genoeſe, Anno 1324. became Maſter of it. The Aragonian before that did pretend ſome Title to it, in right of the Kingdom of Sicil, then in his poſſeſſion; to ſome preceding Kings whereof it had once been ſubject: and having backed that Claim by the Pope's Donation, who challenged it as a part of St. Peter's Patrimony; incorporated it for ever to the Crown of Aragon. Once indeed it was offered unto Anthony of Bourbon, in exchange for his Title to Navarre, but without any purpoſe of performance; that being only a device to fetch him off from the party of the Reformed in France, to which he formerly adhered: and was as ſuddenly laid by, as if it had done the feat intended in the Propoſition.

The Government hereof is by a Vice-roy, who reſides at Calaris, and muſt of neceſſity be a Spaniard under whom are two Deputy Governours, Spaniards alſo; the one for Cape Cagliari, the other for Cape Lugudori. Inferior Officers of Command may be of the Natives. What profits ariſe hence to the Crown of Spain, I have no where found. The Arms hereof are ſaid to be Or, a Croſs Gules, betwixt four Sarazens heads Sable, curled Argent.

Argent. Which Arms were given upon the taking of it from the power of the Moors: but first taken (as some say) for the Arms of Aragon, on occasion of the heads of four chief Princes of the Moors which were found severed from their bodies in the Battel of Alcoraz, Anno 1094. won by Don Pedro, King of Navarre and Aragon.

There are divers small Islands about Sardinia, as 1. Isola Rossa, heretofore called Phintanis. 2. The Ile of Hercules, now called Asinaria. 3. St. Peters, anciently Hieracum, or Accipitrum, with others of as little note: all which as the Appendants of Sardinia, do belong to the Spaniard.

There are in this Island,

The Land of the CHURCH.

WEST of the Realm of Naples, lyeth the LAND OF THE CHURCH, extended North and South from the Adriatick to the Tuscan Seas. Bounded on the Northeast with the River Trontus, on the Southeast with the Anofenus, by which two parted from that Kingdom; as on the North-west by the River Po, and Fiore, by which separated from the State of Venice; and on the South-west with the River Piseo, by which it is divided from the Modern Tuscany, or the State of the Florentine.

By this Accompt the Pope's Dominion taketh up the whole middle of Italy, having in breadth from the one Sea unto the other above two hundred miles, and in the length along the Adriatick to the furthest parts of Romandiola, above three hundred. By which advantages it lieth most fitly for the command of all the rest, it being very easie for the Popes to convey their Forces by Sea or Land, into what part thereof they please. And were it not that the Popes commonly are of several factions; and that the Successor pursueth not the designs of his Predecessors, but hath his own ends to himself, which for the most part are driven on without consideration of increasing the publick Patrimony; it is not possible, but that the Pope long before this time, had been Lord of all. And this may be conceived the rather, considering the extraordinary fertility of the soyl, able to spare provisions for the greatest Armies; the multitudes of people which it may afford, in regard they are so seldom consumed by Wars; and that the men of this Dominion (but chiefly those of Rome, and the parts adjoyning) are conceived to be the best Souldiers of Italy; as retaining some sparks of their Ancestors vallour, together with their gravity, magnificence, and a certain greatness of courage, which seems to be particular to them of this Nation. And they preserve also to this day so much of the ancient Roman, as to prefer any kind of life, before Trades or Merchandize. For though their Lands be very well tilled, and their Vines well dressed, and all things done exactly in the way of Husbandry: yet for their Manufactures they are brought from other places, as Venice, Naples, Florence, Genoa. And though they have the Sea on both sides, and the advantage of many fair and commodious Rivers and Havens, which with little cost might be made very useful: yet do they no way improve their fortunes, or the publick Patrimony in the way of Traffick; which is the main defect of the Papal Policy, and filleth a rich Country full of poor and indigent persons. But to proceed to the description of the Pope's Estate: it containeth the Provinces of 1. Romandiola, 2. the Territory of Ferrara. 3. the Estate of Urbine. 4. Marca Anconita. 5. Ducato Spoletano with Sabinia. 6. St. Peter's Patrimony, and 7. Campagna di Roma.

1. ROMANDIOLA extendeth from the River Isaurus (now called Foglio) by which parted from the Dukedom of Urbine on the East, to the Dukedom of Parma on the West, from which parted by the River Panaro, called of old Scultenna: and from the Apennine on the South to Padus, and the Adriatick, on the North. It was called anciently Flaminia, from Flaminius the Roman Consul, who having won it from the Galls planted Colonies in it, and had the honour (though he pursued this War against the will of the Senate) to have it called by his own name: and for the better passage betwixt Rome and this, made a very large Causey, which for a long time was called Via Flaminia. Chief Rivers hereof, besides those spoken of already, which are only borderers; 1. Ariminum, now called Marechia; and 2. Rubicon, now called Pissatello, betwixt Ariminum and Ravenna, of which more anon.

The chief Cities of it are, 1. Bononia (or Boulogne) seated in a spacious Plain near the Apennine Hills, a very populous City, of a round form, and a great circuit: the building Antique, seeming for the most part to be the work of the Lombards, the foundation of the houses of Free-stone, the rest of Bricks; built with arched Cloysters towards the street, under which one may walk dry in the greatest rain. A City honoured with many Palaces of the neighbouring Nobles, the chief University of Italy, and the retiring place of the Popes. The Civil Law is much studied here, insomuch that from hence proceeded the famous Civilians Johannes Andreas, Aza, Bartolus, and Socinus. I believe they have built Castles in the air, which ascribe the founding of this University to Theodosius the 2. The Charter of whose foundation dated, Anno 423. is an idle and foolish thing. For there it is said, that at the institution there were present Gualter Earl of Poictiers, Embassador for the King of England; and Baldwin Earl of Flanders, for the King of France: when at that time, neither those Earldoms, or those Kingdoms were in rerum natura. It is situate on the River Aposa, and was by former Writers called Felsina. Near unto this Town in a Demy-Island called Forcelli, was that meeting between Augustus, Anthony, and Lepidus; wherein they agreed on the Triumvirate, dividing the Empire and City of Rome among themselves: Which combination was confirmed by the ensuing Proscription; wherein, that they might be revenged on Cicero, Lepidus proscribed his Brother; Antonius, his Uncle. 2. Rimini, anciently called Ariminum, seated on the mouth of the River Ariminum, of no great note, but for giving name unto this City, and now called Marechia. The City large, and seated in a plentiful and pleasant soil, abundantly productive of Wines, Figs, and Olives; wealthy withal, the trade which formerly enriched Ravenna, being for the most part managed here. Divided by the River into the City and the Suburbs; but joyned together by a fair and stately Bridge, built over it by Augustus Cæsar, who also erected in the City a Triumphal Arch. It is situate somewhat East of the River Rubicon, which in those times divided Italy from Gaule: upon the Bank whereof looking towards this Town, there was an old Marble Pillar having on it a Latin Inscription to this purpose, viz. Leave here thy Colours, and lay down thine Arms, and pass not with thy Forces beyond the Rubicon; whosoever goeth against this command, let him be held an Enemy to the people of Rome. Which Rule when Cæsar had transgressed, and surprized this City, he so frighted Pompey and his faction, that they abandoned Italy and Rome it self, and withdrew themselves themſelves into Epirus. It is ſaid that Cæſar dreamed the night before, that he carnally knew his own Mother: whereby the Sooth-ſayers gathered that he ſhould be Lord of Rome, which was the common Mother of them all. Which dream, and ſeveral prodigies hapning at the ſame time with it, did ſo encourage him in his enterpriſe, that he is ſaid, at the paſſing over Rubicon, to have ſaid theſe words, Eamus quò nos Deorum oſtenta, &c. Let us go whither the ſins of our Enemies, and the Prodigies of the Gods do call us. In memory of which venturous, but fortunate action, he cauſed a monument to be erected in this City, with his name and titles. It was anciently a Roman Colony, and in the buſtles hapning betwixt the Pope and the Emperor, was ſeized on by the Malateſti, as Bononia was by the Bentivoli, two potent Families of theſe parts; who held them in defence of the Popes of Rome, till they were reduced again unto the Church, by Pope Julio the ſecond. 3. Cervia, on the Adriatick Sea, where there is made ſo much Salt, that they furniſh therewith all their neighbours of Marca Anconitana, and a great part of Lombardy: the Pope receiving for his Cuſtoms of this one Commodity, no leſs than 60000 Crowns per annum. 4. Furlii, (called of old Forum Livii) one of the Towns belonging properly to the Exarchate of Ravenna, ſeated in a very pleaſant air, and a fruitful ſoil, betwixt two freſh ſtreams; of which the one is called Ronchus, and the other Montonus. 5. Faventia, now called Faenza, on the banks of Anemus, a calm gentle River; an ancient City, but well peopled: much benefited by the Flax which groweth in the adjoyning fields, and the Earthen Veſſels which they vend to moſt parts of Italy. It was firſt given unto the Popes by Deſiderius the laſt King of the Lombards, whom they but ſorrily requited for ſo great a courteſie. 6. Sarſina, an old City, ſeated at the foot of the Apennine, the birth-place of Plautus the Comedian; 7. Imola, anciently called Forum Cornelii; and 8. Ceſena, Cities both of them of no ſmall Antiquity; but this laſt the fairer built, the better peopled, and the more ſtrongly fortified: there being a ſtrong Caſtle on the top of an Hill, the work of Frederick the 2. Emperor and King of Germany. This Town, with that of Sarſina ſpoken of before, ſeem to be ſeated on the banks of the River Rubicon, now called Piſſatello. 9. Ravenna, ſituate in the embracements of two Rivers, called Montonus and Ronchus: by the confluence whereof at their fall or influx into the Adriatick, it was once beautified with one of the faireſt Havens in the World, and for that cauſe made the Road of one of the two Navies, which Auguſtus always kept manned to command the whole Empire of Rome: the other riding at Miſenus in Campania. This of Ravenna, being in the upper Sea, awed and defended Dalmatia, Greece, Crete, Cyprus, Aſia, &c. the other at Miſenus, in the lower Sea, protected and kept under France, Spain, Africk, Egypt, Syria, &c. The walls of this City are ſaid to have been built or repaired by Tiberius Cæſar; the whole City to have been much beautified by Theodoricus King of the Goths, who built here a moſt ſtately and magnificent Palace; the ruins whereof are ſtill eaſily diſcernable. The private buildings are but mean, the publick ones are of a grave, but ſtately ſtructure. Of which the principal heretofore was the Church of St. Mary the Round, whoſe roof was of one entire ſtone, and honoured with the rich Sepulchre of the ſaid King Theoderick: which the Souldiers (in the ſack of this City by the French, Anno 1512) pulled down together with the Church it ſelf, only to get the Jewels and Medals of it. The principal at the preſent is the Church of St. Vitalis, the pavement hereof is all of Marble, and the walls all covered with precious ſtones of many ſorts, but unpoliſhed as they were taken out of Mines; which ſheweth as well the Magnificence as antiquity of it. The Patriarchs of this City, in regard it was ſo long the Regal and Imperial Seat, have heretofore contended for precedency with the Popes themſelves: not brought to yield the place to thoſe proud pretenders, till Donus the 2. in the ſhort time of his Papacy about the year 975. did in fine prevail. And this they did upon good reaſons, this City having been anciently the Metropolis of the Province called Flaminia, afterwards honoured with the Seat of the Emperour Honorius, and his ſucceſſors; next of the Gothiſh Kings, then of the Exarchs, and laſt, of its Patriarchs. And it was choſen for this purpoſe, becauſe of the plentiful Territory, ſince covered with waters, and the conveniency of the Haven, at this day choaked: though lately by expence of a great deal of treaſure, the Fens about the City have been very much drained; and the Bogs in ſome places turned to fruitful fields, to the great benefit hereof both for health and pleaſure.

As for the fortunes of this Country, it was anciently together with the Territories of Ferrara, and ſome part of Trevigiana, the habitation of the Boii, who with the Senones, the Inſubres, and the Cenomani, made up the whole body of the Ciſalpine Galls, of whom more hereafter. Finding the Romans grown too near them, by whom the Senones their next neighbours had been rooted out, they thought it was high time to beſtir themſelves, eſpecially after the defeat given them by the Conſul Minutius, who carried the War home unto them; which never any of the Romans had done before. For after this, under Carolamus their King, they ſet upon Marcellus the Conſul, killing 3000 of his men, but vanquiſhed and ſubdued by him in a following Battel. Vanquiſhed again not far from Mutina by Cornelius Merula, with the loſs of 14000 of their men, they called both the Inſubrian and Tranſalpine Galls to come in to aid them. But being then vanquiſhed alſo at the Battel of Telamon (of which more in Lombardy) A.V.C. 528. they were followed home, and utterly ſubdued by the Conſul Flaminius, as before was ſaid: after which times this Country following the ſame fortunes with the reſt of Italy, becauſe ſubject to the Goths, as a part of their Italian conqueſts: whoſe Kingdom here was no ſooner deſtroyed by Narſes, but the Lombards entred. To give a ſtop to whoſe ſucceſſes, and preſerve ſo much unto the Empire as was not already conquered by them; it was thought good by Juſtine the ſecond, to ſend thither an Imperial Officer of principal command and note, whom he honoured with the title of Exarch. His reſidence ſetled at Ravenna, as ſtanding moſt commodiouſly to hinder the incurſions of the barbarous Nations, and withal to receive ſuch aids from the Eaſtern parts, as his occaſions did require. Theſe Exarchs having divided Italy into many Governments, appointed over each ſome ſupreme Commander, dignified with the name of Dukes. And even the City of Rome it ſelf (ſo far then was it from being ſubject to the Pope in Temporal matters) had a chief Officer of this kind (accomptable to the Exarch, and ſubordinate to him) whoſe Government was called the Roman Dukedom. That which they kept unto themſelves as their own peculiar, contained the Cities of Ravenna, Rhegium, Mutina, Bononia, Claſſi, Forli, Forlimpoli, Sarcino, Parma, and Placentia: which ten Cities with the Territories belonging to them, made up that Diſtrict which properly was called the Exarchate of Ravenna; much mentioned in the Hiſtories of the middle times, by reaſon of the continual Wars which they had with the Lombards, but newly entred when this Magiſtracy had its firſt beginning. The names of theſe Exarchs are as followeth.

In the days of this Exarch, Ravenna was taken from the Empire, by Luitprandus King of the Lombards, Anno 740. But regained by Charles the Great, and by him given to the Bishops of Rome, together with Anconitana and Spoleto, as a requital for the Kingdom of France, confirmed unto King Pepin his Father, by the consent and authority of the Popes. The donation of this Exarchate to the Popes, partly to blot out the memory of the Exarches, and partly to make the people obedient to those Prelates, changed the name of the Country from Flaminia (by which name it was formerly known) to Romandiola, and now to Romagna. Notwithstanding which Donation, or Original Grant, the Popes enjoyed not long the possession of it: The Emperors of Germany, and their Vice-gerents in Italy, wresting it by strong hand out of the possession of the Church; and giving it to such as deserved well of them, and were most likely, or most able to uphold their Faction. And so it stood, till the late Popes conspiring with the French Kings, Lewis the 12, and Francis the first, brought them into Italy Anno 1509. and by their aids, and by the censure of the Church, so prevailed in fine, that they extorted Ravenna, and some other places, out of the hands of the Venetians, ejected many petit Princes out of other Cities, which they pretended to belong to St. Peter's Patrimony; and thereby got possession of all those Teritories, which lie betwixt the State of Venice, and the Marches of Ancona.

2. The Territory of FERRARA lieth in the very skirts of Romandiola towards the Venetian, extending one hundred and sixty miles in length, and about fifty in breadth: the soil thereof exceeding rich, but subject to the overflowings of the River Po; which makes the air in many places to be somewhat unwholsom. And though as well the former Dukes as the Popes, who are now Lords hereof, have been at great charge in raising high banks and Ramparts to keep in the Waters: yet could not this resist the violence of the River, falling from so high a Spring, and seconded with so great Landfloods (as sometimes it is) but that it makes many breaches in them, do they what they can. The places of most note herein, are 1. Graffignan in the borders of Tuscany, near the Apennine. 2. Carpi, a place of great importance, seated in the midst of this Dukedom; belonging heretofore to the house of the Pici. But partly by exchange made with Marcus Picus, partly for one hundred thousand Crowns in ready money, given unto Lionel Pico, once the Lord hereof; it was by Charles the 5. incorporated into this Estate. 3. Commachia, seated in the Marshes of the Adriatick, from which the Princes of this Family of Esto, were at first called only Lords of Commachia; a place which yielded great profit to the former Dukes, by the fishing of Eels. 4. Saxole, given by Duke Alphonso in exchange for Carpi. Here is also the Territory and Lordship of the Polesin, the cause of so many quarrels and contentions between the ancient Dukes of Ferrara and the States of Venice. But the chief honour of this Dukedom is in the Capital City that which denominates the whole. Ferrara, a City of five miles in compass, so called from the Iron Mines which are about it; commodiously seated on the River Po, which by reason of its breadth, depth and violent swiftness of the current, is a sufficient rampart to it on that side; the other sides being fortified with a strong wall, and a spacious mote. In the middle of the City is as fair and spacious Market-place, into which do open on all sides about twenty Streets, all of them half a mile in length; and all so streight and evenly built, that the furthest end of each of them may be easily seen. Near to this Market-place is a little Island, in which the former Dukes had a stately Palace, called Belvedere, from the fair Prospect which it had or gave to the whole City; and on the North-side of the City a large Park for pleasure. The other houses are for the most part built of fair Freestone, not joyning unto one another as in other Cities, but at a pretty distance with neat Gardens between. Ariosto, the Author of that ingenious Poem called Orlando Furioso, and Hierome Savanarolo the Prophetical Fryer, were both of them natives of this place: of which the first lieth here entombed, the last for preaching against the Pope, was burnt at Florence.

In the declining of the Power and Empire of the Lombards, this City together with Faenza was given by Desiderius their last King, to the Church of Rome, the better to oblige the Popes by so great a benefit. But being taken from them by the Emperors of the house of Schwaben, it was again recovered by the prowess of the Countess Mathildis, Anno 1107. who took it, with many other Towns in Italy, from the Emperor Henry the fourth, and at her death conferred the same upon the Church. The Popes once more possessed hereof, and not able to hold it, gave it in Fee for ever unto Azo of the house of Este, a man of great sway in the affairs of Italy, who valiantly had defended it against Ezelinus, Vicegerent of Frederick the second. This was the first of this Family who had Ferrara in propriety: His Ancestors being called before, the Marquesses of Este, and sometimes Marquesses of Ferrara, (but in title only) as Governors hereof in behalf of the Pope of Rome. Obizo the Grandchild of this first Azo, obtained of Rodolphus the first, (who was willing to make what money he could of his Lands in Italy) the Cities of Rhegium and Modena; that Grant confirmed by Guido Legat of Pope Benedict the ninth, with the Popes consent, Anno 1304. Other improvements there were made by the following Princes, according to the chance of War, but none of them continued constant in their possession but these three Cities and the Territories adjoyning to them. As for this Family de Este (Familia Atestina it is called in Latin) it took this name from Este, or Ateste, a small Town in the Siegneury of Venice, conferred upon the Ancestors of this Azo, by Charles the Great. And for the Chiefs, or Princes of it, they have been of great authority and power in their several times, commanding sometimes the Venetian Armies, and sometimes the Popes; great favourers of Learned men, and advancers of Learning; insomuch that the Reinaldo's and Rogero's of Este, make up a great part of the Poems of Ariosto and Tasso, two of the greatest Wits of Italy; and finally allied to many of the best Houses of Christendom. The Catalogue of whom, since they were made the Hereditary Lords and Princes of this noble City, I have here subjoyned.

The Dukes and Marqueſſes of Ferrara.

1236 1 Actius, or Azo de Eſte, the ninth of that name, but firſt Hereditary Marqueſs of Ferrara, by the Grant of the Pope.

1264 2 Obizo, the ſixth of that name, Grandſon to Azo by his Son Reinaldo, ſecond Marqueſs of Ferrara.

1293 3 Azo the tenth of Eſte, and II of Ferrara, Son to Obizo.

1308 4 Franciſco, Brother to Azo the 2. after whoſe death, Anno 1312 Ferrara for a time was under the command of the Popes.

1312 5 Alobrandinus, Brother of Franciſcus, who had the Title to, but not the poſſeſſion of Ferrara.

1315 6 Reinaldo the 3 of Eſte, and the firſt of Ferrara, recovered Ferrara from the Pope, and caſt out his Garriſons. 1317.

1335 7 Obizo II. Brother of Reinaldo.

1352 8 Alabrandino II. Son of Obizo.

1361 9 Nicolao the 2. of Eſte, and firſt of Ferrara, Brother of Alabrandino, whoſe children being young, he diſpoſſeſſed of the Eſtate.

1388 10 Albertus, Brother of Nicolas, the Founder of the Univerſity of Ferrara Anno 1392.

1393 11 Nicolas II. baſe Son of Albertus.

1441 12 Leonellus, the baſe Son of Nicolas, in the minority of his Brother Hercules, begot in lawful Wedlock, invaded the Eſtate, and held it.

1450 13 Borſius, another of the baſe Sons of Nicolas 2. ſucceeded Leonel in the Eſtate; who being made Duke of Mutina by Frederick the 3. was by Pope Paul created Duke of Ferrara alſo, Anno 1470.

1471 14 Hercules, the lawful Son of Nicolas the 2. made Knight of the Garter, by King Edward 4.

1505 15 Alphonſo, the Son of Hercules.

1534 16 Hercules II. Son of Alphonſo.

1559 17 Alphonſo II. who dying without lawful iſſue, Anno 1595 Pope Clement 8. challenged this Eſtate in the right of the Church; and partly by force, partly by compoſition (whereof we ſhall ſay more when we come to Modena) united it for ever to the See of Rome.

The yearly Revenues of this Dukedom were heretofore two hundred and fifty thouſand Crowns; now not ſo much worth unto the Pope, by reaſon of the Alienation of Modena and Reggio; of which more hereafter.

The Arms of theſe Dukes (which for the honour of this noble and illuſtrious Family, and for the ſtrangeneſs of the Coat, I ſhall here put down) were Pale-wiſe of three pieces, 1. Partie per Feſſe, in a chief Or, an Eagle diſplayed Sable, membred, langued, and crowned Gules; and in Baſe Azure, three Flowers de Lys Or, within a Border indented Or and Gules. 2. Gules, two Keys in Saltier, the one Or, the other Argent, charged in Feſſe, with an Eſchocheon of pretence Azure, ſupporting an Eagle of the third, membered and crowned of the ſecond. Over all in chief a Papal Crown Or, garniſhed with ſundry Gems Azure and Purple. The 3. as the firſt Counterplaced. Which Coat upon the falling of the Houſe of Ferrara, doth now belong to that of Modena and Reggio, as deſcended of it.

3. From the Territory of Ferrara proceed we to the Eſtate of Urbine; both Dukedoms and diſtinct Eſtates till theſe later times: this laſt the younger of the two, and conſequently (as in the ordinary courſe of Nature) the ſurviver alſo; but ſwallowed at laſt into the Popedom as the other was. Bounded on the Weſt with the River Iſaurus (now called Foglia) by which parted from Romandiola, on the Eaſt from Marca Anconitana, on the North with the Adriatick, and on the South with the Apennine Hills, by which parted from Tuſcany. So called from Urbine the chief City of it, and the Ducal Seat. It is in length about 60. miles, 35. in breadth: Some pieces and Eſtates belonging anciently to the Church, lying intermingled with the Lands and Signeuries which belonged to the Dukes.

The ſoil is very fruitful of Corn, Wine, and Oyl, plentiful of Figs and other fruits of moſt pleaſant taſte; and in a word, affording all things neceſſary for the life of man. But the air is generally unwholſom, eſpecially about Peſaro and Foſſembrune, by reaſon of the low flats and overflows of the water. The principal Commodities which they vend abroad, are the Wines of Peſaro, ſold in great abundance to the Venetians; and dried Figs, which they vend unto Bologne, and other places.

The moſt famous River is Metaurus, (now called Metremo) and a famous one it is indeed, by reaſon of that great Battel fought on the banks thereof, betwixt Aſdrubal the Brother of Annibal, and his Carthaginians; and the two Conſuls Livius and Cl. Nero: in which, after a long and hot diſpute, the victory fell unto the Romans; there being 56000 of the Carthaginians ſlain, (as Livy writeth) and 5400 taken priſoners. Polybius ſpeaks of a leſs number both ſlain and taken; and like enough it is that Livy, to advance the honour of that Family, might enlarge a little. But whatſoever was the truth in this particular, certain it is, that this victory turned the tide of the Roman Fortune, which from this time began to flow amain upon them: the Citizens of Rome beginning at this time to trade and traffick, to follow their affairs, and make contracts, and bargains with one another, which they had long forborn to do; and that with as ſecure a confidence, as if Annibal were already beaten out of Italy. This famous River riſeth in the Apennine Hills, and paſſing by Foſſombrune, a Town of this Dukedom, falls into the Adriatick.

There are reckoned into this Dukedom ſeven Towns or Cities, (four of which are Epiſcopal Sees) and three hundred Caſtles. The principal of which are, 1. Urbine, one of the moſt ancient Cities of Italy, which both Tacitus and Pliny mention; a fair Town, well built, and the Duke's ordinary ſeat in Summer. It is ſeated at the foot of the Apennine Hills, in a very rich and pleaſant ſoil, built in the faſhion of a Miter, and therefore called Urbinas, quod urbes binas continere videbatur. Franciſco Ubaldi the firſt Duke, built here a very ſumptuous Palace, and therein founded a moſt excellent Library, repleniſhed with a great number of rare Books, covered and garniſhed with Gold, Silk, and Silver; all ſcattered and diſperſed in the time that Ceſar Borgia ſeized on the Eſtate. Polydore Virgil, the Author of the Hiſtory of England, which paſſeth under his name, was a Native here: an Hiſtory of worth enough as the times then were, except only in ſuch paſſages as concern the Pope (the Collector of whoſe Peter-pence he was then in England) whoſe credit and Authority he preferreth ſometimes, before truth it ſelf. 2. Piſaurum, now called Peſara, the ſtrongeſt Town of all the Dukedom, two miles in compaſs, and fortified according to the modern Art of War: the fortifications of it being firſt begun by Franciſco Maria, and perfected by Guido Ubaldo, his Son and ſucceſſor; the ordinary ſeat of the Duke in Winter, well Garriſoned, and therefore truſted with the publick Armory. It is ſeated near the ſhore of the Adriatick, at the mouth or influx influx of the River Iſaurus, which parts it from Romagna: populous, of handſom buildings, and a very ſtrong wall, the ſoil exceeding rich, but the air ſo bad, that partly in regard of that, and partly by their eating of too much fruits, nothing is more frequent here than Funerals, eſpecially in the month of Auguſt; few of the Inhabitants living to be fifty years old. 3. Senogalle, called anciently Sena Gallica, (Gallica being added to it to difference it from another of that name in Tuſcany) a ſtrong and well fenced City near the River Metaurus, over which there is a Bridge conſiſting of eighty Arches, made of that length, not ſo much in regard of the breadth of the Chanel, as the frequent overflowings of that turbulent Water. 4. Foſſombrune, called in old Authors Forum Sempronii, for air and ſoil of the ſame nature with Piſaurum; bought by D. Frederick of Galeazzo Malateſte for thirteen hundred Florins of Gold. 5. Cabo or Cagli, on the Sea. 6. S. Leon, a good Town, and the chief of the Country of Montfeltre, which is a limb of this Dukedom. 7. Fano, not far from the Sea, an Epiſcopal City, and anciently belonging to the Church of Rome: of old times called Fanum fortunæ, from a Temple there erected to Goddeſs Fortune (Te facimus Fortuna deam, as the Poet hath it.) 8. Eugubium (now cacſled Augubeo) a Town belonging to theſe Princes, but properly within the bounds of the Spoletan Dukedom; and there we ſhall hear further of it. Of the Caſtles the principal are Marivola, and the Rock of S. Leon, which were the laſt that held good for Duke Guido Ubaldo againſt Cæſar Borgia, Duke of Valentinoys, Son to Pope Alexander the ſixth; and the firſt which did return again under his obedience. For which cauſe when he fled the ſecond time from the ſaid Borgia, he diſmantled all his other Caſtles, as being more likely to admit than reſiſt the Invader; and theſe two laſt being very well fortified, he left to keep poſſeſſion of the Country for him.

Here is alſo within the limits of this Eſtate, the Dukedom of CAMERINO, an ancient and well peopled Town, of a ſtrong natural ſituation amongſt the Hills: an Eſtate holden of the Church by the noble Family of Varena, till the time of Pope Paul the third; when Julia di Varena the heir thereof, conveyed it by marriage unto Guido Ubaldi Duke of Urbine. But the Pope pretending an Eſcheat for want of heirs males, made himſelf Maſter of it by force of Arms: and gave it to his Son Pitero Farneſi, whom afterwards with the conſent of the College of Cardinals he made Duke of Parma; and ſetled Camerino on the Church, as it ſtill continues.

As for the fortunes of this Country, it was anciently the habitation of the Senones; a Nation of the Ciſalpine Galls, who only had the honour of ſacking Rome, to which City it continued ſubject, till the declining of the Empire in the time of Honorius. They being rooted out at laſt (of which more in Lombardy) and the Country peopled with Roman or Latin Colonies, it followed the ſame fortunes with the reſt of Italy, till the time of Conradine, the laſt Duke of the Imperial Houſe of Schwaben, when Urbine was firſt ſubdued by the Earls of Montfeltre, whoſe Succeſſors increaſing in power, added the Town and Territory of Eugubio to it. And in the buſtles betwixt Lewis of Bavaria the Emperour, and Pope Clement the ſixth, Anno 1345. Gelaſſo di Montfeltre held it by no other Title, but as the Empero's Vicegerents. This Family enjoyed it till the year 1444. by the Title only of Earls of Montfeltre, and Lords of Urbine when Frederick Ubaldi, for his ſingular and ſurpaſſing valour, was by Pope Eugenius the fourth, created the firſt Duke hereof: to hold as Feudataries of the Church, and paying 2240 Crowns for an Annual quit-rent. A man of ſuch repute for all gallant qualities, that he was by King Henry the ſixth, made Knight of the Garter; in recompence of which high honour, the Engliſh to this day enjoy many priviledges in theſe Dominions. Guido Ubaldi this Duke's Son loſt his Eſtate to Cæſar Borgia; after whoſe death he did recover it again by the power and favour of Pope Julio the ſecond, to whom ſucceeded Franciſco Maria di Rovero, his Siſters Son, in whoſe Family it continued till now of late, as will appear by this enſuing Catalogue of

The Dukes of Urbine.

1444 1 Frederick Ubaldi, of the ancient Family de Montfeltre the firſt Duke of Urbine, and one of the Knights of the honourable Order of the Garter.

2 Guido Ubaldi, Son of Frederick, for a while outed of this Dukedom by Cæſar Borgia. He was Knight alſo of the Garter.

3 Franciſco Maria di Rovero, Siſters Son and next heir to Guido Ubaldi, was in his own right Lord of Senogallia, and had Piſauro from the Pope in reward of his many ſervices done unto the Church; diſſeized for a while by Pope Leo the tenth.

4 Laurence de Medices, Father of Catharine di Medices the French Queen, and of Alexander the 1. Duke of Florence; was for a while made Duke of Urbine by Pope Leo the 10th (being of that Family) but loſt it ſhortly after to Duke Franciſco, who after the death of Pope Leo, recovered his eſtates again, and died poſſeſſed of the Dukedom.

1538 5 Guido Ubaldi II. Son of Duke Franciſco.

6 Franciſco Maria II. Son of Guido the 2d, whoſe line expired, it eſcheated not long ſince (for want of heirs males) to the Church of Rome.

The Revenues of this Dukedom were reckoned to have been 100000 Crowns per annum; but might have been raiſed to a greater ſum, had not the Dukes preferred the love and eaſe of their Subjects, before the filling of their own Coffers. He was able to raiſe 1200 good Souldiers out of this Eſtate; and more the people would ſupply, if they had occaſion. The Arms hereof Azure a Tower Argent, environed with Flower de Lyces Or.

4. MARCA ANCONITANA is bounded on the Weſt with the State of Urbine; on the Eaſt with the River of Trontus, or Druentus, by which it is parted from Abruzzo; on the South with the Apennine Hills, by which parted from the Spoletan Dukedom; on the North with the Adriatick. The reaſon of the name we ſhall have anon.

It was formerly the dwelling of the Picentes, poſſeſſed all theſe parts on the Coaſts of the Adriatick, from the River Rubicon on the Eaſt, to that of Aufidus on the Weſt. For aiding the Tarentines their Allies, in their War againſt Rome, they were invaded and ſubdued by the Romans, A.V.C. 485. which was about five years before the firſt Punick War, under the conduct of Sempronius; at which time they were ſo great and multitudinous a Nation, that they weren umbred to amount to 3600000 which were then brought under the Command and Vaſſalage of the Roman Empire. When Italy was divided into no more then eight Regions, theſe Picentes only made up one; ſo did they alſo when divided into eleven. Afterwards, in the time of the Antonini, they made up one of the ſixteen Provinces, into which Italy was divided by thoſe Emperors; and the ſame repute it held in the time of Conſtantine, Picenum making always one: Aſculum caput gentis, as Florus calls it, which was the head of their nation, being the Metropolis of the Province.

Called in thoſe times Picenum Annonarium, partly by reaſon of the abundance of grain which it did produce; and partly to diſtinguiſh it from the dwelling of the Picentini, which from its nearneſs unto Rome, had the name of Picenum Suburbicarium; that part of Campania at this time, which is called the Principate. In the declining of the Empire, it was firſt called Marcha Firmiana, from Firmo: once a Roman Colony, and at that time of moſt importance in the Country; but by transferring the chief ſeat from Firmo to Ancona, in the time of the Lombards, it came to have the name of Anconitana. The chief Rivers, beſides thoſe named already, which are only borderers, are, 1. Chientus, 2. Sentinus, and 3. Potentia; all riſing in the Apennine, and paſſing with a ſwift courſe to the Adriatick Sea.

The chief Towns, 1. Ancona, ſeated on the Hill Cimerius, ſhooting into the Sea, glorying in giving name to the Province, and her Haven built by Trajan the Emperor; one of the faireſt in the World, not ſo much for capacity, as the pleaſantneſs and beauty of it: the deſcents down unto the Water being made of Marble, and very delectable walking on all ſides of it. The City it ſelf is begirt with Hills, on one of which Pope Clement the ſeventh built a very ſtrong Caſtle. Anno 1532. under pretence of defending the Town againſt the Turks, but indeed to keep the people in more full ſubjection, who till that time, did yearly chooſe their own Magiſtrates, and lived according to their own Laws, like a Commonwealth. 2. Recanati (heretofore Ælia Recina,) ſeated upon the banks of the River Mulſio, renowned for the great concourſe of Merchants from all parts of Europe, at her Annual Marts; and a vein of the moſt excellent Wines. 3. Firmo, ſirnamed the Strong: in former times of moſt eſteem in all the Province, which was hence called Marca Firmiana; and to this day, a place of great ſtrength and conſequence; and an Archbiſhops See. 4. Macerata, now of moſt credit, by reaſon that the Popes Legat keeps his reſidence there, and with him the Chancery for his Marquiſate. 5. Loretto, called in Latin Lauretana, a little City betwixt Recanati and the Sea; well fortified againſt the Turks, and other Pirates who once ſpoiled the ſame, and might be eaſily tempted thither on the like occaſions: The Church here being admirably rich, and frequented by Pilgrims from all parts, to pay their devotions unto our Lady of Loretto, and behold her Miracles. Concerning the removal of whoſe Chamber hither, in our deſcription of Paleſtine, you ſhall meet with a very proper Legend. 6. Aſcoli, ſirnamed the Fair, ſeated at the influx of the River Druentus, and on the furtheſt ſide of it towards Abruzzo, to which by ſome it is aſcribed. Anciently the chief City of the Picentes, as before is ſaid, and then called Aſculum, conquered by the Romans, under the conduct of Sempronius, A.V.C. 485. Nigh unto this City, was fought the ſecond Battel between C. Fabricius and the Romans on the one ſide, and Pyrrhus with the Epirots on the other; wherein the Victory (as Plutarch telleth us) fell to the King, having ſlain 6000 of his Enemies; but yet with ſuch loſs on his ſide alſo, that he affirmed to ſome of his Friends and followers, That ſuch another Victory would quite undo him; and with ſuch apparancy of valour and vertue in the Romans, that he could not but break forth into this acclamation; O quam facile eſſet orbem vincere, aut mihi, Romanis militibus, aut me rege, Romanis! This Town alſo was the ſeat of the War called Bellum ſociale, raiſed by the people of Italy againſt the Romans; Popedius being both Author of the Rebellion, and Captain. They for a while ſorely ſhaked the ſtate of Rome; but at laſt were vanquiſhed, and this Town by Strabo Pompeius forced and ſpoiled. 7. Adria, now not otherwiſe famous, than that it gave denomination to the adjoyning Sea, and the Emperor Adrian. 8. Humana, which together with Ancona, was given to Pope Zachary, by Luitprandus King of the Lombards, about the year 741. The ſucceeding Popes after the giving of this Inch, took the whole Ell.

5. Having ſurveyed the Provinces of the Church along the Adriatick, we muſt next croſs the Apennine, which parts the Marches of Ancona from the Dukedom of SPOLETO (DUCATO SPOLETANO the Italians call it) which takes up the Weſtern part of that Province, which the old Romans called Umbria: and therefore before we come to the deſcription of this, we muſt a little look on the ſtate of that. A Country bounded on the Eaſt with the River Aniene, dividing it from the Eaſt parts of Latium; on the Weſt with Tuſcia or Hetruria; on the North, with the Apennine; on the South, with the reaches or windings of the Tiber, the main body of Latium, and with that part of Tuſcany which is now called St. Peter's Patrimony. So called, becauſe being ſituate under the ſhade of the Apennine Hills, it was Regio Umbroſa. Some give another reaſon of it, and think that the Inhabitants were called Umbri, quaſi Ὀμβροι, as men that had eſcaped the Deluge; becauſe ſo ancient a people, that no body could tell the Original of them.

But whatſoever was the reaſon of the name, they were a ſtout and valiant people, and gave the firſt check to Annibal's career, after his great Victory at Thraſymene; repulſing him with loſs and ſhame from the Walls of Spoleto: yet not of power ſufficient, for all their valour, to preſerve their Country from the Tuſcans, who are ſaid to have deſtroyed in it 300 good Towns. Made by that means, if not plainly ſubject, yet ſo obnoxious to the will and pleaſure of the Victors, that at their inſtance or command they ſided with them in a War againſt the Romans (whom formerly they had found very quiet neighbours:) and by the Romans were ſubdued together with the reſt of the Confederates then in Arms againſt them, A.V.C. 458. Decius and Qu. Fabius then the fifth time Conſuls, which was about 77 years before Annibal fell into their Country. After which time in ſuch eſteem, that it was one of the eleven Regions into which Italy was divided by Auguſtus Cæſar; and finally, together with Tuſcia, made up a Province of the Empire.

As for the Dukedom of Spoleto, it taketh up the Weſtern parts of the Province of Umbria, as before was ſaid, included betwixt the Apennine, the Tiber, and the River Nar, by which laſt (now called Neara) it is divided from Sabinia, or the Land of the Sabines. The Country of a mixt nature, equally compoſed of very rough Hills, and yet moſt delectable Vallies; exceeding plentiful of all neceſſaries, and much commended heretofore for the extraordinary fœcundity of the Women. The Wine hereof is much commended by Martial, as the beſt of Italy.

Malueris, quam ſi muſta Falerna bibas.

That is to ſay,

If with Spoleta bottles once you meet,
Say that Falerno Muſt is not ſo ſweet.

Places of greateſt note herein, 1. Spoletum, built partly on the Hill, and partly on the lower ground; the reſidence heretofore of one of the four Dukes of the Longobardians, who governed as Vice-roys, or Lord preſidents, of the remoter parts of that Kingdom: from whence whence the Country round about it, was called Ducato Spoletano. It is ſtill a Town of good eſteem, populous, and of handſom building; and hath a ſtrong Fortreſs for defence thereof, built upon the ruins of an old Amphitheatre: to which men paſs over a great Bridge of ſtone, upheld by 24 great Pillars, which joyns two Mountains together; having between them a deep Valley, but narrow and without any Water. Theodorick the Goth built a fair Palace in this City, ebuilt by Narſes, but ſince ruined. 2. Eugubium (now called Augubio) ſeated on the foot of the Apennine; in or near that place where anciently ſtood that City which Pliny calls Jugi-nium; Ptolomy Iſuvium; utterly ſubverted by the Goths. A Town well ſeated in a fruitful and wealthy ſoil, and bleſſed with an induſtrious people: acknowledging the Dukes of Urbine for Lords thereof, till that eſtate was ſwallowed up into the Popedom. 3. Nuceria, (now Nocera) in Pliny's time called Alfatenia, at the foot alſo of the Appennine; the people of which in former times much traded in their wooden veſſel. 4. Aſſiſium, or Aſiſe, deſtroyed almoſt to nothing in the Civil Wars of Italy, and only famous at this time, for a See Epiſcopal, and being the birth-place of St. Francis; the Founder of the Franciſcans, or Cordeliers, as the French call them, but we in England the Grave-Friers. 5. Citta de Caſtello, anciently Tipherdum, on the banks of Tiber. 6. Tudertum, now called Todi, ſeated near the Tiber, on the declivity of a rich and fruitful Hill.

The reſt of Umbria towards the Eaſt, not being within the compaſs of the Spoletane Dukedom, but under the command of the Popes of Rome, is by late Writers called SABINIA, becauſe the dwelling in times paſt, of the ancient Sabins: who being taken into Rome, and made Free Denizens of that City in the time of Romulus, upon the League concluded betwixt him and Tatius, then the King of this people, for a long time lived under the protection of that mighty City. But after joyning with the Latins in a War againſt it, they were ſubdued by Curius Dentatus the Roman Conſul, and made a ſubject Province of that common-wealth, A. V. C. 463. But though the Sabines, at this time bare away the name, yet were they not ſole Maſters of it in theſe elder times; the greateſt part hereof being poſſeſſed by ſome Nations of the Umbri, whom by a general name they called Vilumbri (the Sabines interjected betwixt them and Rome) and as a member of that body, ſubdued together with the reſt of the Umbri by the conquering Romans. Afterwards in the diviſion of Italy made by Antoninus, it was called Nurſia; and in that made by Conſtantine, it was contained within the new Province of Valeria; Reate being the Metropolis, or head City of both. A Territory of no great circuit, but abundantly fruitful in Oyl or Olives, Vines and Fig-trees: watered with the River Farfarus, which cutteth through the very midſt of it; and with the Lake called anciently Lacus Velinus (now Laco di Pedeluco) eſteemed to be the Centre or Navel of Italy by ſome ancient Writers; the waters of which are of ſuch a nature, that in ſhort time they will cloath a piece of wood with a coat of ſtone, and yet yieldeth excellent Trouts, and other good Fiſh. The Towns and Cities of moſt note, are, 1. Reate (now called Reite) an ancient City, and the Metropolis heretofore of all this Tract; as well when it was called Nurſia, as when it was under the name of Valeria. 2. Nurſia, a City no leſs ancient, ſeated amongſt the Hills, which for the moſt part are covered with ſnow; from which Town, being heretofore of more reputation, the province of Nurſia, ſpoken of in the Itinerary of Antoninus, took denomination. 3. Magliano, a pleaſant and well-peopled Town, at this time the principal of this Territory. 4. Ocriculum, built amongſt many Fruitful Hills, a mile from Tiber. 5. Narnia, the Country and Birth-place of the Emperor Nerva, the firſt of all the Emperours not born in Rome, as after him there were few born in it. The ſoyl about it is of ſo different and ſtrange a nature, that it is ſaid to be made dirty by the Sun and Winds, and duſty by Rain: the City well-peopled, and a Biſhops See, ſeated upon a very ſteep and craggy Hill, not far from the River Nar (now Negro) from which perhaps it took the name. A City given unto the Church of Rome by Luitprandus, King of the Lombards; of which the Popes of Rome having got poſſeſſion, never left practiſing til they had got into their power all the reſt of the Country. Little elſe famous in the whole Region of Umbria, but that in the Weſtern part thereof, is the Lake called Lacus Vademonius, near to Ameria, now called Amelia, a Town of the Dukedom, where Dolobella overthrew ſuch of the Senones, a valiant Nation of the Galls, as had eſcaped the Sword of Camillus, Quinctius, Curius, and other fortunate Commanders in the Wars againſt them; Ne quis extaret in ea gente (ſaith the Hiſtorian) qui incenſam a ſe Romam gloriaretur: a former ſlaughter being made of them by Camillus, on the banks of Aniene, the Eaſtern limit of theſe Umbri.

5. S. PETERS PATIMONIE, properly and ſpecially ſo called, is that part of Tuſcanie which appertains unto the Church; bounded upon the Eaſt with Tiber, which divides it from Latium, or Campagna di Roma: on the Weſt, with the River Piſco, which falleth into the Sea near the Mountain of Argentario and parteth it from the eſtate of the great Duke of Tuſcanie; on the North, with the Apennine, and the Spoletan Dukedom on the South, with the Tuſcan or Tyrrhenian Sea. It took this new name preſently on the donation of the Counteſs Matbildis, who gave it for ever unto the Church, An. 110. (Paſchal the ſecond ſitting in the Chair of Rome) to be the Patrimony of S. Peter, and his ſucceſſors in that See. A Country not inferior unto any in Italy, for the fertility of the ſoyl: but for the moſt part of an unhealthy Air, by reaſon of the frequent overflowings of Tiber, and the thick woods which hinder that the winds cannot purge and cleanſe it.

The principal Cities, and places of moſt obſervation, are 1. Perugia, formerly called Peruſia; a famous Town; in which Auguſtus beſieged L. Antonius the brother, and Fulvia the wife of M. Antony the Triumvir, who when they had in vain attempted to ſeduce Rome from his party, repaired to this City; which alſo at the laſt, yielded to the more fortunate Emperor. Auguſtus afterwards, having much adorned and beautified it, cauſed it to be called Auguſta; but it returned not long after, to its ancient name. It is ſeated very pleaſantly on the banks of Tiber, not far from the Apennine, in a very rich and fruitful ſoil; well built both for the publick and private ſtructures; a Biſhops See and made an Univerſity, An. 1090. In the diſtructions of Italy betwixt the Emperours and the Popes, this City was ſeized on by the Baillons, who held it as Vicars of the Church. The Oddies, an oppoſite faction to them, having got together a ſtrong party of Malecontents, ſo ſuddenly entered one night into the City, that the Baillons began to fly: nor was there any thing to hinder them from being Maſters of the Palace, but the Chain which was drawn croſs the Gate. One of the Souldiers going about to cut this Chain, and wanting room to wield his arm, cryed aloud, Give back; which words being heard, but not well underſtood by thoſe furtheſt off, put them to their heels; and the foremoſt, which thought they fled not for nothing, ran away too. So the City was ſaved. 2. Orvieto, ſeated on ſo high a Rock, that it is no ſmall Terrour to look down from the top of it, into the vallies beneath; in which there is a Church of a wondrous lightneſs, and yet the Windows of the ſame (if we may credit Adrianus who reports it) are made of Alabaſter, inſtead of Glaſs. 3. Viterbo, famous for the long reſidence of the Popes, at ſuch time as they were affronted by the Roman-Senators. 4. Civitas Vecchia (called anciently Centumcellæ) the only uſeful Haven that belongeth to Rome; which being ruined by the Saracens, was rebuilt by the Popes, new named, and fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle for the defence of their Shipping. 5. Porto, ſeated on the mouth of Tiber, over againſt Oſtia; but cannot make one good Haven betwixt them both; a Biſhops See, who is one of the ſeven Cardinals which is always aſſiſtant to the Pope. 6. Farneſe, the ancient Seat and Patrimony of the Farneſi's, now Dukes of Parma. 7. Bracciano, which gives the title of a Duke to a branch of the Urſins, a well-known Family of thoſe parts. 8. Bacchano, near the laſt in ſound, although not in ſite: compaſſed round about with Hills in form of a Theatre, having a fair Lake in the midd'ſt; out of which runneth the River Cremera, neer which the Fabii were ſlain.

Here was in this Country alſo the City of the Veii, affirmed to be as big as Athens, but queſtionleſs of great wealth and power; in a War againſt which, managed for the moſt part by the aforeſaid Fabii, 306 of them were ſlain in a day, at the Battel of Cremera, a petit River of the Tuſcans: only one little child of them being left at home, who reſtored the houſe; and was the Anceſtor of that Fabius Maximus who preſerved Italy, in the wars with Annibal. Of which great ſlaughter, thus ſaith Ovid.

——— Veientibus Arvis
Ter centum Fabii, ter cecidere duo.

——— On the Veientine Plain
Three hundred and ſix Fabii were ſlain.

This City of the Veii was at laſt after a ten-years ſiege taken by Furius Camillus, and by him levelled with the earth; becauſe he found that the common people of Rome had a mind to leave their own City, and inhabit here. Here is alſo that fatal River of Allia, nigh unto which Brennus and his Galls, (that people, as ſhall be ſhown hereafter, having 200 years before been drawn into Italy, by the ſweet taſte of the Italian Wines) ſlaughtered the Romans: the Roman Army at that time conſiſting of 40000 Souldiers, moſt of them being raw and unexperienced; the Galls not more in number, but naturally of a more fierce and hardy courage, and withal ſo big-boned, that it ſeemeth they were born to be the terrour of mankind, and the ruin of Cities. Which overthrow at Allia, and the vanquiſhment of the Fabii, happning in one day, though in divers years, occaſioned the old Romans to put that day among thoſe unfortunate days, on which they never did attempt any buſineſs of importance. The like cuſtom, whether on ſuperſtition, or fear of ill-luck, is uſed by many Chriſtians; and eſpecially on Childermas-day: on which Philip de Comines telleth us: that Lewis the 11. uſed not to debate of and matter, but accounted it a ſign of ſome great misfortune towards him, if any man communed with him of his affairs; and would be marvellouſly diſpleaſed with thoſe that were near him, if they troubled him with any matter whatſoever. In this particular, little leſs ſuperſtitious (if not more) than the ancient Romans. And finally, here is the famous Lake called Thraſymene (now Lago di Perugia, from the nearneſs of it to that City) where Annibal ſlew Flaminius the Conſul, and 15000 of his Romans: which fight continued three hours, with ſo great an eagerneſs, that the Souldiers perceived not a terrible Earthquake which at that time happened.

6. CAMPAGNA di ROMA, containeth that part of Italy, which anciently was called Latium, the habitation of the Latins, and ſeat of Rome; ſo called, for that it is adjoyning to that famous City, as the more proper Territory, and precinct thereof. It is ſometimes alſo called Campania nova, to difference it from Campania properly ſo called; the ſeat and dwelling of the Campans. It is bounded on the Eaſt with the ſaid Campania, from which it is parted by the River Azofenus; on the Weſt, with Tiber; on the North with Umbria, or the now Ducato Spoletano, and Sabinia; and on the South, with the Tyrrenian, or Tuſcan Sea: and came unto the Popes by no other Title, than as they had the Soveraignty and poſſeſſion of the City of Rome, to which it always did belong.

The old Inhabitants were the Latins, as before is ſaid, but ſubdivided into many petit and inferiour Tribes, ſuch as the Æqui, Volſci, Fidenates, and others of as little note, to the number of thirty, all vanquiſhed piece-meal by the Romans, firſt under the conduct of their Kings, and then of their Conſuls and Dictators. Broken at laſt by L. Quintius the Dictator, A. V. C. 295. they became aſſociates with the Romans, and ſo continued for the ſpace of 100 years and upwards. But growing inſolent on the ſack of that City by the Galls, and impudently requiring that one Conſul yearly ſhould be choſen by and from themſelves, they drew the Romans into Arms: by whom ſubdued under the leading of Manlius Torquatus, and Decius Mus, then Conſuls, A. V. C. 413. Subject from that time forwards to the ſtate of Rome, but enjoying greater priviledges than the reſt of the conquered Nations did; excepting ſuch to whom the like were granted by eſpecial favour.

The chief place of it in old times was the City of Alba, then the Seat-Royal of the Latin, or Sylvian Kings, ruined by Tullus Hoſtillius the third King of Rome, in which War Rome and Alba being laid at the ſtake, the whole action was committed by the Romans to the Horatii; to the Curatii, by the Albans, being three Brethren of each ſide; in which it hapened that two of the Horatii were firſt ſlain, and the third counterfeiting a flight ſevered his enemies, and ſo ſlew them; whereby the Albans ever after became ſubject to Rome. 2. Lavinium, built by Æneas in honour of his Wife Lavinia. 3. Antium, honoured many times with the ſeat and retirement of the Emperors: the Country round about affording variety of Recreations. The people once very ſtrong in ſhipping till the taking of the Town by Mevius a Roman Conſul, who having broke their Forces at Sea, brought with them into Rome the Beaks of their Ships and other Veſſels, with which he decked and beautified the Pulpit for Orations (in the common Forum,) which have generally ever ſince been called Roſtra. This was the chief City of the ancient Volſci, a people very ſtrong in ſhipping though without an Haven: afterwards much frequented by the principal Romans in their retirements from the City, ſo that for pompous and ſtately buildings it might compare with any other. Out of the ruins of this Town long ago deſtroyed, ſprang the new City called Neptunum, ſituate on a Rock near unto the Sea, the ſteepneſs of which gives it natural ſtrength enough; and yet it is fortified beſides with two ſtrong Caſtles, ſurveying the Sea, and commanding the ſhore. 4. Ardea, the chief Town of the Rutuli, and ſeat of Turnus, the Rival and Competitour of Æneas: afterwards taken by Superbus the laſt King of the Romans; to which when the Galls had taken Rome, the miſerable Citizens were compelled compelled to fly. 5. Gabbi, taken also by the same Superbus, whose Son Sextus counterfeiting some dislike of his Fathers cruelties, fled to the Gabii, by whom improvidently entrusted with the command of their City, which he betrayed unto the Romans. 6. Ostia, anciently the Port-Town to Rome, built at the mouth of Tiber, by Ancus Martius, the IV. King of Rome; but the Haven hath been long since dammed up, to stop the passage of the enemies Ships unto the City. The Bishop of this Town useth to consecrate the Pope. 7. Prænestе, first, conquered by the Romans under Qu. Concinnatus the Dictator. Nothing so much endamaged this City as its natural and artificial Fortifications: for when the Romans in the times of sedition abandoned the Town, they used to make this place their refuge. Among others Marius the younger made it the seat of War, against L. Sylla: but perceiving the unsuccessfulnels of his affairs, here killed himself; and Sylla entring it as Conquerour, put 12000 of the Citizens to the Sword. It hath since been so often sacked, that it is very short now of its former lustre; but still it holds the reputation of a Bishops See. 8. Tibur, an ancient City also, and seated in a healthy Air. It is now called Tivoli, where there is a Fountain, which with artificial Engins moved with Water, representeth the notes of divers Birds. A device very rare (it seemeth) in the time of Adrianus, who reporteth it; but now grown ordinary. In the perfection of which Art, as almost all Civil Nations may pretend a share; so I conceive that the priority herein doth belong of right unto the French: whose Master-pieces in this kind do far exceed the rest of Europe. For in the Kings house at St. Germains, seven miles from Paris (if it be lawful for me to digress a little on this Argument) one may behold the Statua of a Nymph, sitting before a pair of Organs: whose fingers by the help of Water, are taught to manage the keys in so due an order, and the instrument to yield such a Musick to it, as comes exceeding near the Organ, if it be not the same; her head in the mean time jolting from one shoulder to another, like an old Fidlers at a Wake; there being also not far off, the counterfeits of divers Mills, who very busily plyed their work till the Mutick sounded, and then stood still as if inchanted with the noise. In another place, upon the drawing of a Curtain, one may see two Tritons riding on their Dolphins, in a Sea of Water; each of them with a shell in his hand, which interchangeably and in turns served instead of Trumpets. In a third, the story of Perseus and Andromeda most lively acted; and in a fourth, Orpheus in sylvis positus, Orpheus playing on a Viol, the Trees moving, and the wild Beasts dancing in two rings about him, by the artificial guidance of the Waters only; the prety Birds in every place so chirping out their several and respective notes, that the hearer would conceive himself to be in some pleasant Grove. But it is time to go from Tivoli to 9. Velitri (called anciently Velitræ, and then a City of the Volsci) famous for the Birth of the Emperor Augustus, and the dwelling of the Octavian Family; a place most delectably seated amongst the Vines; which yields as rich Wines as most in Italy. 10. Anxur, so called of the Temple which was here dedicated to Jupiter; surnamed Anxurus, that is, Beardless; first built by the Spartans, who flying from the severity of Lycurgus his Laws, did here seat themselves, after a Colony of the Volsci, and at last of the Romans. But this Town being destroyed by the tyranny of time, there starteth up 11. Terracina in the place thereof, seated upon a Mountain, but near the Sea, which it embraceth like a half Moon (it is now called the Bay of Mola:) this City lying on the one horn thereof, in the very extremity of the Popes Dominions; and that of Cajeta on the other, which is the first Port-Town of the Realm of Naples. The Country hereabouts hath most pleasant Orchards, of Citrons, Oranges, and Limons; the Oranges having at the same time both ripe and Green Fruits, and represents a kind of Summer in the dead of Winter.

Such other things as are remarkable in this Campagna (heretofore called Latium) but more by what they have been, than they are at the present, are 1. Tusculum, a Village which belongeth to Tully, who here composed his excellent Book, called the Tusculan Questions. 2. Formiæ, built by the Laconians, heretofore the delight and solace of the ancient Romans, now visible only in its ruins. 3. Privernum, once the chief City of the Volsci, and the seat of Camilla, a noble Amazonian Lady; who aided Turnus the Rutulian, in his sharp War against Æneas and the Trojans, where she lost her life. 4. Circe, an old City (in the place whereof now stands S. Felix) the habitation of Circe, that so much celebrated Sorceress, of whom, and her chanting of Ulysses and his companions, there is so much upon record, in the ancient Poets. Near to which is the head-land called the Circæan Promontory, the repercussion of the Waves by whose Southern Basis makes a dreadful noise; and gave occasion to the fabulous inventions of the roaring of Lions, howling of Dogs, &c. which were heard about that Witches dwelling.

But the great glory of Latium, and indeed not of Italy only but of all the World, was, that the famous City of ROME was seated in it, being built on the East side of Tiber; now much inlarged by the increase of 42 lesser streams or Rivers. It is distant from the Sea about 15 miles, first built, as Fryer Leander a great Italian Antiquary is of opinion, by Roma Daughter or Wife to one of the Latin Kings. But being forsaken and forlorn, by reason of the unwholsom Air coming from the Fens, was rebuilt by Romulus, much pleased with the natural strength of the situation; and therefore like to make a good Town of War. And this tradition I should rather subscribe unto, than that it was called Rome from Romulus; who had he pleased to challenge the honour to himself, might better have caused it to be called Romulea (of which name there was a Town among the Samnites) than to call it Roma. But whatsoever greatness it did after come to, it was small enough (God knows) at first; the City comprehending the Mount Palatine only, and therefore not a mile in compass; the Territory not extending as Strabo witnesseth, above six miles from the City; and the Inhabitants thereof at the first general Muster, amounting at the most to 3300 men. So inconsiderable they were as well in quality as numbers, that their Neighbours thought it a disparagement to bestow their Daughters on them; and therefore they were fain to get themselves Wives by a slight of wit: proclaiming solemn Plays and Pastimes to be held in Rome, and ravishing the Women which came thither to behold the sports. The Kings succeeding much inlarged it. Mount Aventine, and the hill Janiculum on the other side of the Water, being walled and added to it by Ancus Martius; as Quirinalis, Esquilinus, and Viminalis, were by Servius Tullus; Capitolinus and Mount Cælius, came not in till afterwards. But at the last it was improved to such an height, that in the flourishing times of that Common-wealth, the men encreased to the number of 463000, and the compass of the Town unto 50 miles; there being on and about the walls 740 Turrets. And in this number of 463000 men, I reckon neither Servants, Women, nor Children, but men able to bear Arms; Free-Denizens, and such as were inrolled into Censi, or the Subsidie-Books. To which if we ſhould add their Wives, Children, and Servants, we cannot probably conjecture them to have been fewer than three or four Millions: and ſo Lipſius is of opinion, in his Tract de Magnitudine Romana. The moſt memorable buildings of it, were firſt the Capitol, founded by Tarquinius Superbus, and beautified with the ſpoils of their conquered Neighbours; ſaved from the fury of the Galls by the cackling of Geeſe. Tacitus calleth this houſe, Sedem Jovis optimi maximi, auſpicatò à majoribus pignus imperii conditum. It was twice burnt, once in the Civil Wars of Sylla and Marius; and again in the Wars of Veſpaſian and Vitellius. In the third building of it, Veſpaſian carried the firſt basket of Earth; after him the Nobility did the like, to make the people more forward in the ſervice: and perhaps the cuſtome of laying the firſt ſtone in a building, or driving the firſt nail in a timber-work, by him whoſe edifice it is; hath, from hence, if not beginning, yet growth. 2. Here was the Temple of Janus open in the time of wars, and ſhut in the time of peace; which, during all their Monarchy, hapned but thrice: namely during the reign of Auguſtus, after the firſt Punick War, and in the time of Numa. 3. Here was the Bridge called Pons Sublicius, on which Horatius Cocles reſiſted the whole Army of King Porſena, Tarquin, and the Tuſcans; till the Citizens behind had broken down the bridge, received him ſwiming to the bank with joyful acclamations, and ſaved their City from preſent ruin. Here lived the famous Warriers, ſo much renowned in the ſtories of elder times; here flouriſhed the exact Martial diſcipline, ſo memorized by ancient Hiſtoriographers: and finally, here were laid up the ſpoils and Trophies of all Europe.

ROME, as now it ſtandeth lower on the bank of Tiber upon Campus Martius, (where it was built after the inundation of the Goths and Vandals) is in compaſs about eleven miles, within which compaſs is not a little waſte ground. The Inhabitants of all ſorts reckoned to amount to 200000, two parts whereof are Clergymen and Courtiers; that is to ſay, ſuch as have their dependance on the Court of Rome, either by holding Offices and places of employment under the Popes, or by attending on his perſon, or waiting on the Cardinals and eminent Prelates who are there abiding; or otherwiſe being of the retinue of ſuch foreign Ambaſſadors as are always commorant in the City, to follow the Negotiations of their ſeveral Maſters; all which muſt needs amount to a very great number. It was firſt built on the Eaſt-ſide of the River in the Territory of Latium, but now there is little left of the old City but the goodly ruins; and here and there ſome Churches and ſcattered houſes (except it be a little on the North-Eaſt of the River, from the Gate called Del populo, to the Iſland of Tiber): the reſt, eſpecially towards South, being taken up with paſtures and fields of Corn. The main body of the City, as now it ſtands is on the Weſt-ſide of the water, and the Holy Iſland, conſiſting of three diſtinct parts or members. Of theſe the leaſt is that which they call La Iſola, but anciently the Holy Iſland; firſt made an Iſland by the Corn, Straw, and other goods of the Tarquins, which the Senate not vouchſafing to convert to any publick or private uſe, commanded to be flung into the River; where it ſunk and ſetled to an Iſland, called afterwards the Holy Iſland, from a Temple herein built unto Æſculapius, brought hither from Epidaurus, in the ſhape of a Serpent. This Iſland is not above a quarter of a mile in length, and hardly half ſo much in breadth: but full of ſtately Churches and beautiful houſes. Next to this is that which they call Traſtavere, or Tranſ-Tiberina; but of old Janiculo, from the Mountain of that name included in it: Called alſo Civitas Ravennatium, or the City of the men of Ravenna, of the Souldiers which Auguſtus kept at Ravenna againſt Antonius; and after placed in this out-part of the City, which by reaſon of the unwholſomneſs of the air, is inhabited only by Artizans and poor people; yet compaſſed about with walls, except on that ſide next the water, and adorned with many goodly Churches and ſome handſom buildings. But the chief glory of the City conſiſteth in that part of it which is called Il Borgo, lying on the North ſide of the other, but diſ-joyned from it; compaſſed about with walls by Pope Leo the 4. and from thence called Civitas Leonina. For in this part there are, 1. the Church of S. Peter, which were it once finiſhed, would be one of the rareſt buildings in all the World. 2. The Caſtle of S. Angelo, impregnable unleſs by Famine. 3. The Popes Palace, called Belvidere, which with the Gardens thereof was compaſſed about with a very high wall, by Pope Nicolas the 5. And had his name from the fair proſpect which it hath: in the ſame ſence, as Belvoir Caſtle here in England, the Barony and Manſion of the Earls of Rutland. A Palace of magnificence and receipt enough. 4. The Library of the Hill Vatican, properly called the Palatine, but more commonly the Vatican Library: a Library firſt founded by Sextus the 4. who not only ſtored it with the choiceſt Books he could pick out of Europe; but allowed alſo a large revenue for the perpetual augmentation of it. Bibliothecam Palatinam in Vaticano, toto terrarum orbe celebrem, advectis ex omni Europa libris conſtruxit; proventuſq; certos, &c. So Onuphrius. When the Duke of Burbon ſacked Rome, Anno 1527. it was much defaced and ranſacked; but by the ſucceeding Popes it hath been again recovered to its former fame, and beauty. Rome is now an Univerſity, which was founded by Urban the fourth, at whoſe requeſt Thomas Aquinas profeſſed here. Pope Nicolas the fifth was a ſpecial benefactor to the ſame; and after him, Leo the tenth, who revived the Greek Learning and Language, which were in theſe parts almoſt forgotten. And finally, to this place are brought all the treaſures of thoſe parts of Chriſtendom ſubject to the Popes authority: partly for the expence of ſtrangers, which do there remain on their ſeveral pleaſures or occaſions; and partly for the expeditions which are there obtained, for the Inveſtitures of Biſhopricks, and Buls of Benefices, Indulgences and other matters of Court-holy-water; and partly in the Penſions, which are paid there to the Cardinals and other Miniſters of thoſe Kings and Princes, which know beſt how to make their ends of the Popes ambitions. So that it may be truly ſaid, there came not more Tributes into old-Rome from the conquered Provinces, than hath been brought into the New from the ſubject Churches, which have ſubmitted to the power of the Roman Prelates: and that they have as great command now under the pretence of Religion, as ever they had formerly by force of Arms. So truly was it ſaid by Proſper of Aquitane, (if memory fail not)

Roma caput mundi, quicquid non poſſidet Armis, Religione tenet,———

That is to ſay,

What Rome ſubdu'd not with the Sword.
She holds by colour of the Word.

But yet there wants the Genius of the ancient City, the power and natural courage of the old Inhabitants, which held the ſame againſt the bravery and aſſaults of all foreign Enemies: this City during the time of the ancient Romans, being never took but by the Galls; but since Pontifical, it hath been made a Prey to all Barbarous Nations, and never was besieged by any that did not take it. In a word, the City of Rome as now it standeth, is but the carkass of the old, of which it retains nothing but the ruins, and the cause of them, her sins.

The Popes do much brag of the foundation of their Church, and the authority of St. Peter; whose being there is indeed constantly attested by most ancient Writers; insomuch that Calvin, though no friend to the Popes of Rome, yet propter Scriptorum consensum, in regard of the unanimous consent of the primitive times, did not think fit to controvert it. The silence of the Scriptures is a Negative Argument, and concludes nothing to the contrary; against so great a Cloud of unquestioned Witnesses, as soberly and positively have affirmed the same. And yet I would not have it thought by the captious Romanists, that I conceive that it makes any thing at all for the Pope's Supremacy, because he sits in Peter's seat; no more than it did make for Vibius Rufus (as Dion doth relate the story) to attain Tully's eloquence, or Cæsar's power, because he married Tully's Widow, and bought Cæsar's Chair: though the poor Gentleman did befool himself with this opinion, that he should be Master of them both. Of which see Libi LVII. And yet the Popes relie so much upon this fancy, of being the direct heirs of St. Peter, and all his preheminencies, that all things which they say or do, must be entituled to St. Peter. Their Throne must be St. Peter's Chair, their Church St. Peter's Ship, their Lands St. Peter's Patrimony, their Tributes and Exactions must be called Peter-pence; their Excommunications fulminated in St. Peter's name; and all their Buls and Faculties sealed Annulo Piscatoris, with St. Peter's Signet. Nay, they went so far at the last, that Pope Steven not being contented to be Peter's Successor, did take upon him in plain tearms to be Peter himself. For being distressed by Astulphus King of the Lombards, he sends for aid unto King Pepin in this following stile. Petrus Apostles JESU CHRISTI, &c. i. e. Peter the Apostle of JESUS CHRIST, to you the most Illustrious King Pepin, and to all Bishops, Abbots, &c. I the Apostle Peter, whose adopted sons you are, admonish that you presently come and defend this City, &c. And doubt you not, but trust assuredly, that I my self, as if I stood before you, do thus exhort you, &c. And that I Peter the Apostle of God, will at the last day yield you mutual kindnesses, and prepare you Tabernacles in the Heavens. Baronius who records this Letter, Anno 755. numb. 17. was, it seems, prety well perswaded of it, that the Pope and Peter were all one. For in his Exhortation or Parænesis to the State of Venice, being then upon some differences with Pope Paul the fifth, he stileth him in plain tearms thus, Paulus idemque Petrus vicem Christi agens in terris, i. e. Paul, who is also Peter, and Christs Vicegerent, &c. But leaving these imaginary claims and challenges of St. Peter's priviledges, though they did really advance the reputation of that See in the darker Ages two things there were which did exceedingly conduce to the improvement of their power, in the more knowing and discerning times of Christianity. Of which the principal, was, the Orthodoxy of the Bishops or Popes of Rome, their eminent and sincere profession of the Faith of Christ; when almost all the other Churches were either torn in pieces by the fury of Schism, or wasted and subverted by the fraud of Heresie. In which regard, Appeals were frequently made to the Church of Rome, as a more competent Judge of the truth of Doctrine; the communion of it much desired by all true Christians; and a repair thither for relief and shelter in the times of trouble, made by the Orthodox Professors under persecution. And of these times, and this condition of that Church, we are to understand such passages of the Ancient Writers, as magnifie the Faith of the Church of Rome, and set it above all the batteries and assaults of Heresie. Such is that passage of St. Cyprian, Romanos esse ad quos perfidia non potest habere accessum, lib. 1. ep. 3. and that of Hierome, Romanam fidem (i. e. Romanorum fidem) Apostolica voce laudatam, ejusmodi præstigias non recipere, in Apol. cont Ruffin. and many others of that kind. Which passages it were as fooliish and ridiculous to apply to all following times; the condition of that Church being different, from what then it was; as to accommodate all those Elogies and commendations to the present City of Rome; which the Orators and Panegyrists of the elder times have hyperbolically ascribed to old Rome in her greatest glories. The next was the fixation of the Popes in the Metropolis, or Imperial City; which drawing to it such a multitude of suiters and attendants from all parts of the world, could not but add much to the power and reputation of those Prelates, who had the happiness and honor to be resident there: and thereby opportunity to gain more Diciples to solve more doubts of conscience, and decide more controversies, than any other could expect. And so we are to understand that passage in St. Irenæus, in which he saith, Ad hanc Ecclesiam propter potentiorem Principalitatem, necesse est omnem convenire Ecclesiam, i. e. eos qui sunt undiq; Ecclesiæ. And so they did as long as Rome enjoyed the honour of a more potent Principality than other Cities. But when that more potent Principality failed to be at Rome, by the removal of the Imperial See, first to Constantinople, and afterwards unto Ravenna, then did the Bishops of Constantinople and Ravenna, dispute with those of Rome for Superiority; the chief seat of Religion most commonly following the seat of the Empire. And in this claim the Patriarch or Bishop of Constantinople prevailed so far, that with the permission of Mauritius the Emperor, he took upon him the title of Universal Patriarch. Gregory the Great (of whom it is said that he was the worst Bishop of all that went before him, and the best of all that came after him) was at that time Bishop of Rome: who sharpiy inveighed as well against the Emperor, as the Patriarch of Constantinople, for this Title; and plainly maintained, that whosoever called himself Universal Bishop, was the forerunner of Antichrist. As for himself it is probable that he took the title of Servus servorum Dei, more in opposition to him of Constantinople, than with an intent to be so truly. To which though those of Rome reply that Gregory did not absolutely condemn this Title, but only blamed John the Constantinopolitan Patriarch, for assuming to himself that attribute, which properly belonged to the See of Rome; yet this cannot be. For then either in the old Buls of the former Popes, we should find mention of this Title; or else Pope Gregory would have assumed it to himself, that the world might take notice to whom of right it did belong. But Boniface, who next but one succeeded Gregory, having further aims applied himself to Phocas that bloody Tyrant: who having murthered the Emperor Mauritius, his Wife and Children, and thereby got the general hatred of all the good Subjects of the Empire, the better to assure himself of Italy, which he feared was ready to revolt, declared this Boniface to be the Oecumenical Bishop, and Head of the Church. To such a good beginning, such a gracious Patron do the Popes stand indebted for that power and Empire, which now they challeng to themselves over all the Church.

Now as the Bishop of Constantinople, and Ravenna, did challenge a priority or precedency, of the Popes of Rome; by reason that they were respectively honoured with the Seat Imperial; so were there divers other Bishops, as Antioch, Alexandria, Carthage, Millain, which claimed an equality with them; and would by no means yield them any superiority. For trial of whose claim, we must look back on somewhat which hath been said before; where it is shown, that the Roman Empire was divided into fourteen Dioceses; each Diocese being subdivided into several Provinces; each Province comprehending many several Cities: then, that in every of those Cities, where the Romans had their Defensores, the Christians also had a Bishop: in the Metropolis of each Province, which commonly was the seat of the Roman President, the Christians had their Metropolitan; and that in each principal City of each several Diocese, wherein the Vicar of that Diocese had fixed his dwelling, there did the Christians place a Primate. And this was done according to that famous Maxim of Optatus, Respublica non est in Ecclesia, sed Ecclesia est in Republica, that the Church is in the Common-wealth; and not the Common-wealth in the Church. Upon which foundation the Fathers in the Counsel of Chalcedon, raised this superstructure, Ἐκκλησιαστικὸς τὴν τάξιν, &c. that the honours of the Church should be accommodated unto those in State. So that according to this Platform, the Primates of the Church were of equal power, each of them limited and restrained to his proper Sphere; out of the which if he presume once to act, he moved irregularly, and in his Eccentricks. And for those Primates, I shall give you once for all, this general Muster, that is to say, the Patriarch or Pope of Rome, for the Diocese or Præfecture of that City; the Primate or Archbishop of Millain, for the Diocese of Italy; of Syrmium, for that of Illyricum; of Lyons, for that of France; of York, for Britain; Toledo, for Spain; and of Carthage, for Africk. Then for the East parts of the Empire, there was the Patriarch of Alexandria, for the Diocese of Egypt; of Antioch, for that of the Orient; the Primate or Archbishop of Ephesus, for the Diocese of Asia, of Nicomedia, for that of Pontus; of Byzantium, or Constantinople, for that of Thrace; of Thessolonica, for the Diocese of Greece, and of Justiniana prima, for that of Dacia. Amongst all which there was a mutual correspondence and Co-ordination, for the general Government of the Church; maintained by Letters of intercourse, which they called Literas formatas, and Communicatorias; but no subordination, and much less subjection, unto one another, as doth appear most evidently by the Canons of the Council of Nice, assigning to the three great Patriarchs their peculiar bounds, according to the custom of the former times. As for the Diocese or Patriarchate of the Popes of Rome, it contained in it those ten Provinces, which were immediately subject to the Præfect or Povost of that City (an Officer first instituted by Augustus Cæsar) that is to say, the Provinces of Tuscia and Umbria, Picenum Suburbicarium, Campania, Apulia and Calabria, Valeria, Samnium, Lucana and the Brutii, in the main Land of Italy; and the three Islands of Sicily, Corsica, and Sardinia. In which regard, (I mean as to the immediate Government of those Provinces by the Prefect of the City of Rome) as they are called Regiones Suburbicariæ, by Ruffinus an Italian Writer; so anciently the Pope himself was called Urbicus, or the City Bishop, as appears plainly by Optatus, who calleth Pope Zepherinus, Zepherinus Urbicus. But the Popes were not long content with that allotment, growing up daily by a steddy and constant watchfulness upon all occasions, to encrease the Grandeur of that See; and taking to themselves the honor to be Vindices Canonum, the strict and punctual preservers of the ancient Discipline which took extreamly well with all sorts of people. Till in the end from being Vindices Canonum, they came to be Interpreters and at last the Rulers, or rather the Over-rulers of the Canons; and from chief Labourers in the Vineyard, they became the Landlords: which was the honour aimed at, and at last obtained by the foresaid Bonifacе, whom that cruel and butcherly Tyrant Phocas made the Head of the Church, the sixty sixth Bishop and first Pope of Rome: the Latin word Papa coming from the old Greek Πάππας, signifying a Father. A Title at the first common unto other Bishops, as is evident to any one, who hath read the Fathers; but after this, appropriated unto those of Rome. Of these Popes, their Succession, and times of Government, our Chronologers are very uncertain: not one of them that ever I had the luck to see, agreeing exactly with another. The reasons whereof, as I conceive, are, 1. The frequent Vacancies; and 2. the many Schisms which have hapned in it; and 3. the Anti-Popes in them created: the Writers of those times accounting him only among the Popes, to whose faction they were most devoted. This Catalogue ensuing I have collected principally out of the Tables of Helvicus, Freigius, Bellarmine, and Onuphrius, whose differences I have reconciled as well as possibly I could: premonishing the Reader, that where the number of years which every Pope is found to sit in the Papal Chair, makes not up the full number from his first admission, to the coming in of his Successor; it must be understood of some Schism or Vacancy, hapning in the Interval, by which the tale is to be made up. And for the difficulties which occurr amongst the Antients, in the first Succession, some placing of them thus, Linus, Cletus, Clemens; some Linus, Clemens, Cletus; and finally some others putting Clemens the first, I know no better way to compose the same, than to affirm (as many of the Fathers do) that St. Peter and St. Paul were Co-founders of the Church in Rome; St. Peter of the Church of the Circumcision, and St. Paul of the Gentiles; each of them being Bishop of the Church of his own foundation: and then to draw down the Succession in this manner following.

The Bishops of Rome.

A. Ch.

44 1 St. Peter, Bishop of the Churches of the Circumcision.

70 2 Cletus, or Anacletus, Successor to St. Peter in the Churches of the Circumcision. 23.

59 1 St. Paul Bishop of the Churches of the Gentiles.

70 2 Linus, Successor to St. Paul in the Church of the Gentiles. 11.

81 3 Clemens having succeeded Linus first in the Church of the Gentiles, did after, Anno 93. succeed Cletus also in the Church of the Jews, reckoned by some the next Successor to St. Peter, because the next who after him had the charge of the whole; the Church of the Gentiles not being founded, or not distinguished from the other, till some years after Peter's coming.

To these one hundred seventy nine Popes, add the sixty five Bishops which preceded that arrogant title of Universal, and they make up the full number of two hundred forty four. How many are to come, he must be a cunning man that can determine. And yet such cunning men there have been, who have determined positively, but withal, Prophetically, of the number of Popes; by name St. Malachy one of the first Apostles of the Irish Nation, very much honoured by that people to this very day. Of whom there is remaining in Mussinghams collection of the Irish Saints, a certain number of Mottoes, in the Latin tongue; agreeable to the nature or chief accidents of as many Popes successively to one another, according to the order of those several Mottoes: and thereunto this Propheſie annexed, that when so many Popes had sate in St. Peters Chair, either either the World should end, or the Popedom fail. The Book was shewed to me by the Author, when I was at Paris, and the Popes names in order joyned to every Motto, as far as to the time of Urban, who last deceased; which I compared as well as memory would serve me, and found the Mottoes and the Popes to be very answerable. The Motto for Pope Urban, which I took most notice of, was, Lilium and Rosa: a Motto very sutable to the principal Action which was like to happen in his time, being the conjunction of the English Rose, and the French Lily; in the marriage of Charles King of England, and Madam Henrietta Maria the Princess of France; which that Pope earnestly promoted, in his speedy and cheerful granting of the Dispensation. And to take from me all suspicion of Imposture, this Massingham shewed me an old Book written by one Wion a Fleming, and printed neer 200 years before his Collection; in which the Mottoes stood as in his they did, and comparing the Mottoes with a printed Catalogue of the Popes, I found the name of Urban, and that Motto, to jump even together. From Urban down-wards there remained (as I now remember) 36 Mottoes more to come; by consequence, if this Malachy were as true a Prophet as one Malachy was, just so many Popes, and then the Popedom to be ruined, or the World to end. But I hope God for his Elects sake will abridge those days, and not permit the superstitions and the corruptions of that Church to endure so long; nor so many Assertiors and Defenders of those Roman Heterodoxies, to be added to the former number. Out of the stories of all which (pretermitting many things of less consideration) I will only select some few passages, for the better understanding of their state and story.

1. Pelagius the first, ordained that Hereticks and Schismaticks should be punished with temporal death; which severity continueth still: and that none should be preferred to Ecclesiastical dignities by Gifts, and Bribes; which pious order is long since adequated.

2. Vitalianus, first brought Organs into the Divine service of the Church of Rome, to be used with the singing or vocal Musick formerly in use; which afterwards was brought unto more perfection by the Popes succeeding.

3. Constantine was so generally beloved of all men, that going to Constantinople, Justinian the second kist his feet in sign of honour, which some of the ambitious Popes in times succeeding, drew into example, and at last brought into a custom, as it still continueth.

4. Pascal the first, caused the Priests of certain Parishes in Rome, by reason of their nearness to his person, their presence at his Election, and to honour them with a more venerable Title, to be called Cardinals. Now mates for Kings, and numbred about 70. but more or fewer at the sole pleasure of the Popes.

5. Eugenius the second, took to himself within the Territories of the Church, the Authority of creating Dukes, Earls and Knights; as the Exarch of Ravenna had used to do.

6. Sergius the second, was the first that changed his name. For thinking his own name, Bocca di Porco, or Swines-mouth, not consonant to his dignity, he caused himself to be called Sergius; which precedent his Successors following, do also vary their names. So that if one be a Coward he is called Leo; if a Tyrant, Clemens; if an Athiest, Pius, or Innocent; if a Rustick, Urbanus; and so for the rest.

7. John the eight, is by most men confessed to be a Woman, and is usually called Pope Joane. To avoid the like disgrace, the Porphyry Chair was ordained; ubi ab ultimo diacono, &c. so that both in a literal and mystical sense, this Woman may not unfitly be called, The Whore of Babylon. The name of this Female Pope, the Romish Chronologers have not inserted into the Catalogue; the reason, as Marianus Scotus giveth it, propter turpitudinem rei, & sexum muliebrem. And from hence it is that in the common Catalogues, these Popes that have called themselves Johns, are so ill ordered; some making that John which succeeded Adrian the second, An. 872. to be the 8th and others the 9th Platina only of all the Pontificians reckoneth Pope Joane as the 8th of the Johns, and so forward: in which particular I have followed his authority. And it is probable enough that God might suffer that proud See to fall into such an infamy, the better to humble the ensuing Popes, in the times of their greatest ruff and flourish; or to prevent the brag of that continued Succession, they so much pretend to. More of this Argument, (as to the truth of the story in matter of Fact) he that lists to see, may satisfie himself in Mr. Cooks Book of Pope Joane; who most industriously hath answered all objections, which have been made against it by those of Rome.

8. Nicolas the first, the better to fasten the Clergy to the See of Rome, and make them the less obnoxious to their natural Princes; was the first who did by Law restrain them from marriage. Saying, that it was more honest to have to do with many Women privately, than openly to keep a Wife: and some of his Successors followed it so close, that a Priest of Placentia being accused to have Wife and Children, was deprived of his Benefice; but upon proof made, that she was the Wife of another man, and his Strumpet only, he was again restored to it.

9. Adrian the third, ordained, that the Emperour from thenceforth should have no more to do with the Election, or confirmation of the Pope; but that it should be left wholly to the Roman Clergy.

10. Formosus was so ill beloved, and of such a general disesteem, that Pope Steven the seventh caused his body to be unburyed, all his Acts reversed, two of his fingers to be cut off, and then the mangled carkass to be again interred among the Laity. And though these Acts of Steven were adjudged illegal, both by John the tenth, and Pope Romanus, two of his Successors; and the doings of Formosus justified: yet Sergius the third caused his corrupt and putrified body to be taken once more out of the grave; and his head to be cut off, as if still alive. So little did the infallibility of St. Peters Chair preserve these Popes from falling into gross and irreconcileable contradictions.

11. John the twelfth, was the next after Sergius the second, that changed his name; a very wicked, cruel, and libidinous man: who coming to that place by his Fathers greatness, cut off the nose of one Cardinal, and the hand of another, for that they had signified to the Emperour Otho the first, what a scandal all the Church did suffer by his detestable life; and finally, being taken in Adultery, was slain by the husband of the woman.

12. Gregory the fifth, finding the power of the Emperor, as long as it continued in a way of succession, not likely to be over-born by that of the Church; and being withal incensed against the Romans, who, till that time retained some shadow of an Empire; projected the election of the future Emperours, by the Princes of Germany; by which the Germans were distracted into Factions, and the Romans weakned; and so a door left open to the Popes of Rome, to make their ends upon them both.

13. Steven the tenth, brought the Church of Millain to be under the obedience of the Popes of Rome, which till that time had challenged an equality with them; as before before Pope Domnus had done the Church of Ravenna, which for ſome time had challenged the precedency of them.

14. Gregory the ſeventh, commonly called Hildebrand, a turbulent and unquiet man, who firſt adventured to draw the premiſes laid down by ſome of his Predeceſſors into a concluſion: Excommunicating the Emperor Henry the fourth, for medling with the Inveſtitures of Biſhops, and cauſing Rodolph Duke of Suevia to rebel againſt him. A man, much favoured againſt the Princes of her own Houſe by the Counteſs Mathildis, who is ſaid to be ſo much his friend, that for his ſake ſhe left the company of her Husband, and diſherited her right Heirs, ſetling her whole Eſtates in Italy on the See of Rome. And though the Emperor had the better of this Pope, and made him fly out of Rome, and die in exile; yet he was fain at laſt to ſubmit himſelf to Pope Paſchal the ſecond, (who had Armed his own Son againſt him) to attend bare-foot at his own door, and cry peccavi.

15. Sergius the third, ordained the bearing of Candles, in the Feaſt of the Purification of the Virgin Mary, thence called Candlemas day.

16. Sergius the fourth was the firſt that on Chriſtmaſs night, with divers Ceremonies did conſecrate Swords, Roſes, or the like; to be ſent as tokens of love and honour to ſuch Princes as deſerved beſt of them, or whom they deſired to oblige. Thus Leo the tenth ſent a conſecrated Roſe to Frederick Duke of Saxony, requeſting him to baniſh Luther: and Paul the third an hallowed Sword to James the fifth of Scotland, to engage him in a War againſt Henry the Eighth, who had then withdrawn himſelf and his Kingdom, from the Pope's commands.

17. Nicolas the ſecond, took from the Roman Clergy the election of Popes, and gave it the Colledge of Cardinals.

18. Celeſtine the ſecond, was the Inventer of that mad manner of curſing, or Anathematizing, by Bell, Book, and Candle.

19. Alexander the third, purſuing the deſperate courſe of Gregory the ſeventh, excommunicated the Emperor Frederick the firſt; and by raiſing War againſt him in every place; brought him to that exigent, that he was fain to proſtrate himſelf at his feet: when the Pope treading on his neck, ſaid aloud Super Aſpidem & Baſiliſcum, &c. profanely applying thoſe words to the preſent occaſion. And when the Emperor, to put the better colour on his diſgrace, meekly raylyed, Non tibi ſed Petro; the Pope not willing to loſe his part of ſo great a glory, ſubjoyned as angerly, Et mihi & Petro.

20. Innocent the third held a Council in Rome, in which it was decreed that the Pope ſhould have the correction of all Chriſtian Princes; and that no Emperor ſhould be acknowledged, till he had ſworn obedience to him. Which bringeth into my mind that jolly humour of the great Cham of Tartary; who when he hath dined, commands his Trumpeters to ſound, and make Proclamation, that now all other Kings and Princes may ſit down to dinner. He brought in the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, and ordained that there ſhould be a Pix made to cover the conſecrated (but now tranſubſtantiated) Bread, and a Bell to be rung before it. He is alſo ſaid to have firſt impoſed Auricular Confeſſion upon the people.

21. Nicolas the third, was the firſt Pope who practiſed to enrich his kindred, intending to make one of them King of Lombardy, another King of Tuſcany; and to raiſe the reſt to great Advancements out of the Lands of the Church. Before which time (as Machiavel very well obſerveth) as there was no mention of the advancement of any of the Pope's kinſfolks or poſterity, ſo afterwards they ſtudied no one thing more than to prefer their own blood; inſomuch that they have not only laboured (as he ſaith) to make them Princes, but if it were poſſible would procure the Popedom to be made hereditary. So he, with probability enough. For ſo dearly do they love their Nephews (by which name they uſe to call their Baſtards) that it was very juſtly ſaid by Pope Alexander the third, The Laws forbid us to get Children, and the Devil hath given us Nephews in their ſtead.

22. Boniface the eighth, of whom it is ſaid, That he entred like a Fox, reigned like a Lion, and died like a Dog; by his general Bull, exempted the Clergy from being chargeable with Taxes and Payments, unto Temporal Princes. Which being complyed with by the Clergy of England, King Edward the firſt put them out of his protection; and ſo the Pope's Bull left roaring here. He cauſed the Book of the Canon Law, called the Decretals to be firſt ſet out: and inſtituted the Feaſt of Jubilee, to be held in Rome every hundredth year; but by Clement the ſixth it was brought unto the fiftieth year, and ſince reduced to the five and twentieth. This is that Boniface, who in that great concourſe of people which repaired to Rome, to obſerve his new Feaſt of Jubilee, (to which every one that did repair was to have a plenary remiſſion of all his ſins) ſhewed himſelf one day in the habit of a Pope, and the next day in that of an Emperor; and cauſed two Swords to be born before him every day, in ſign that all Power Eccleſiaſtical and Temporal did belong unto him.

23. Clement the fifth, was the firſt that made Indulgences and Pardons ſaleable. For ſeeing (ſaid he) that one drop of our Saviour's blood had been enough to have ſaved all Mankind, and yet that all his blood was ſhed, the over-plus was left to the Church as a ſtanding Treaſure, to be diſpoſed of by St. Peter and his Succeſſors. And hereunto, to make his Treaſure the more inexhauſted, he added the Merits of the Virgin Mary, and all other Saints. Being wearied with the inſolencies of the people of Rome, he removed the Papal See to Avignon in France, where it continued for the ſpace of ſeventy years.

24. Clement the ſixth, had an ill time of it. For in his Papacy the Emperor gave freely all Lands belonging to the Church, to ſuch as formerly had uſurped them; to be holden by them of the Empire. Upon which title the Malteſti became Lords of Rimini, the Ordelaffi of Forli, the Vareni of Camerine, the Bentivolies of Bononia, the Manfredi of Faenza, &c. Which Eſtates were never recovered to the Church, till the time of Pope Julio the ſecond, though conquered from the preſent owners in the time of Alexander the ſixth, by Cæſar Borgias his Son; who had an aim of ſetling them, and perhaps the Papacy it ſelf, on the Borgian Family.

25. Gregory the eleventh, returned the Papal Chair again to the City of Rome, whither he conveyed himſelf by Sea, in private, for fear of being withheld by the French: and being come thither, found the chief parts of the City ſo over-grown with briers and buſhes, and the principal buildings of it ſo decayed and ruinous, that a little longer abſence would have made it deſolate.

26. Paul the ſecond, endeavoured to encreaſe the Majeſty of the Popedom by Arms and Avarice, and exceeded all his Predeceſſors in pomp and ſhew: cauſing his Miter to be enriched with Diamonds, Saphyrs, Emeralds, and other Stones of great price; and augmenting the ſplendor of the Cardinals with a Scarlet Gown, whom Innocent the fourth had graced with Red Hats before. He brought the Jubilee from fifty years to twenty-five.

27. Sixtus

27. Sixtus the fourth ordained a constant Guard to attend his person. He very much beautified and repaired the City of Rome, and was the first founder of the Vatican Library. But on the other side he is said by some, to have set all Offices and Preferments to sale, and to have builded in Rome Stews of both sexes to bring in Beads, and to authorize our Ladies-Psalter.

28. Alexander the sixth, setting aside all modesty, was the first that openly acknowledged his Nephews (as they call their Bastards) to be his Sons. By one of which, the Cæsar Borgias before named, he recovered Forli, Imola, and many other Estates from the present owners, on a design of setling them in his own Family, as before is said; and to that end called in the French, who after made such foul work in Italy.

29. Iulio the second had more in him of the Souldier, than the Prelate, recovering many Towns unto the Church, which had been formerly usurped, being taken from the Occupants by Cæsar Borgias; and keeping Italy in his time in continual Wars. This is the Pope who passing over the Bridge of Tiber, brandished his Sword, and threw his Keys into the River; saying, that if Peter's Keyes would not serve his turn, then Paul's Sword should do it.

30. Leo the tenth was indeed a great Favourer of Learning, but of great prodigality, and vast expence. For maintenance whereof, he sent his saleable Indulgences into France and Germany: which business being indiscreetly handled by his Ministers, occasioned Luther in Germany, and Zuinglius amongst the Switzers, first to write against them; and afterwards to question many points of Popish Doctrine. In pursuance of which quarrel, the Pope of Rome burnt Luther's Books, whom he declared for an Heretick; and Luther did the like at Wittenberg, which the Pope's Canon Law, whom he declared to be a Persecutor, a Tyrant, and the very Antichrist. Which flame encreased so fast and inlarged so far, that it burnt down a great part of the Papal Monarchy.

31. Pius the fourth, continued the Council formerly called at Trent by Pope Paul the third, but interrupted and laid aside from one Pope to another, and having brought it to an end, and thereby setled and confirmed the Interest of the Church of Rome, caused it to be received as Oecumenical: though the Italian Bishops being most of them the Pope's Creatures, did more than double the number of all the rest; and yet some of the rest also were but meerly Titulars. He added also a new Creed consisting of twelve Articles to be added to that of the Apostles, by all who lived in the Communion of the Church of Rome. But of the words and actions of these Ghostly Fathers we have said enough, if not too much. I will therefore end with that of the Painter, who being blamed by a Cardinal, for giving to St. Peter's Picture too much of the Red, replied, That he had made him so, as blushing at the Lives of those who were called his Successors.

As for the Temporal power and greatness of the Popes of Rome, there is a pretended Donation of the Emperor Constantine, by which the City of Rome it self most part of Italy, and Africk, and all the Illands of those Seas are conferred upon them: the forgery whereof is very learnedly shewn by our learned Cracanthorp, in his Discourse upon that subject. But that Donation might most justly be suspected of Fraud and Forgery, though no body had took the pains to detect the same, considering how fearful the Popes are grown to have the truth thereof disputed: insomuch that many leaves are razed out of Guicciardine by the Inquisition, where it had been questioned. For in that place the Historian not only denieth the said feigned Donation, but affirms that divers learned men reported, That Constantine and Sylvester (to whom it is said to have been made) lived in divers Ages. Then sheweth, how base and obscure the Authority of the Pope was in Rome it self, during the time that the barbarous Nations made havock of Italy. 2. That in the institution of the Exarchate, the Popes had nothing to do with the Temporal Sword, but lived as subject to the Emperors. 3. That they were not very much obeyed in matters Spiritual, by reason of the corruption of their manners. 4. That after the overthrow of the Exarchate, the Emperors now neglecting Italy, the Romans began to be governed by the advice and power of the Popes. 5. That Pepin of France, and his Son Charles having overthrown the Kingdom of the Lombards; gave unto the Popes the Exarchate, Urbine, Ancona, Spoleto, and many other Towns and Territories about Rome. 6. That the Popes in all their Bulls and Charters, expressed the date of them in these following words; Such a one our Lord the Emperor reigning. 7. That long after the translation of the Empire from France to Germany, the Popes began to make open protestation, that the Pontifical dignity was rather to give Laws to the Emperors, than receive any from them. 8. That being thus raised to an earthly power, they forgot the salvation of souls, sanctity of life, and the Commandments of God, propagation of Religion, and Charity towards men: And that to raise Arms, to make War against Christians, to invent new devices for getting of money, to profane sacred things for their own ends, and to enrich their kindred and children, was their only study. And this is the substance of Guicciardine in that place: an Author above all exception. He was a man whom the Popes employed in many businesses of principal importance; so that no hate to them, but love to the truth, made him write thus much. As for the City of Rome, so unlikely is it to have been given by Constantine, that neither Pepin nor Charles his Son, (though more beholding to the Popes than that Emperor was) could be induced to part with it. Lewis sirnamed Pius, is said to have been the first Donor of it, and a Copy of his Donation is found in the third Book of Volaterran, subscribed by the Emperor, his three Sons, ten Bishops, eight Abbots, fifteen Earls, and the Pope's Library-Keeper: yet notwithstanding it is thought, by many very learned and judicious men, that really there was no such matter; but that all this was forged by Anastasius the Pope's Bibliothecarian, or Library-Keeper, who is cited as a witness to the Donation. And yet to put the matter further out of question, let us next hear what that great Polititian and Statesman, the Recorder of Florence, Nic. Machiavel, hath observed in this case. 'Rome (saith he) was always subject to the 'Lords of Italy, till Theodorick King of the Goths re-'moved his Seat to Ravenna; for thereby the Romans 'were enforced to submit themselves to the Bishops, 'An. 430. or thereabouts. And talking of the estate of the Popedom, An. 931. he states it thus. 'In Rome were 'elected yearly out of the Nobility two Consuls, who 'according to the ancient Custom ruled that City. Un-'der them was appointed a Judge to minister justice to 'the people. There was also a Council of twelve men, 'which gave Governours unto the Towns subject to 'Rome. And for the Pope, he had in Rome more or 'less Authority, according to the favour which he 'found with the Emperors, or others then most mighty; 'but the leaving of Italy by the German Emperors set-'led the Pope in a more absolute Soveraignty over the 'City. And yet it seems they were not of such abso-'lute power, but that the Romans tugged hard with 'them for their Liberties. Concerning which he tells 'us

'us in another place, That the ambition of the people 'of Rome did at that time (viz. An. 1010.) make much 'War with the Popes; and that having helped the 'Pope to drive out the Emperor, and altered the Go-'vernment of the City as to them seemed good, sud-'denly they became Enemies to him; and the Popes 'received more injuries at their hands, than at any other 'Christian Princes; and that even in those days when 'the Censures of the Popes made all the West of the 'World to tremble, yet even then did the people of 'Rome rebel, and both the Popes and the people study-'ed for nothing so much, as how one of them might 'overthrow the Authority and Estimation of the 'other.

But for the method and degrees by which the Popes ascended to their temporal greatness, take here an extract of the Story collected out of the best Authors, by the most Reverend Father in God the late Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, in his learned and laborious work against Fisher the Jesuit. 'The Pope (saith he) being 'chosen anciently by the Clergy and people of Rome, 'used always to receive from the Emperors hands a ra-'tification of that choice; in so much that about the 'year 579. when all Italy was on fire with the Lombards, 'and Pelagius the second constrained through the ne-'cessity of the times, to enter upon the Popedom with-'out the Emperor's leave; St. Gregory then a Deacon, 'was shortly after sent in an Embassie to excuse it. But 'when the Lombards grew so great in Italy, and the Em-'pire was so infested with the Saracens, and such chan-'ges hapned in all parts of the World, as that neither 'for the present the Homage of the Pope was useful to 'the Emperor; nor the Protection of the Emperour, a-'vailable for the Pope: by this means was the Bishop 'of Rome left to play his own game by himself. A thing 'which as it pleased him well enough, so both he and 'his Successors made great advantage by it. For being 'grown to that eminence by the favour of the Empe-'rors, and the greatness of that City and place of his 'abode; he then found himself the more free, the grea-'ter the Tempest was that beat upon the other. And 'then first he set himself to alienate the hearts of the 'Italians from the Emperor; in which he did prevail 'so far, that Theophylact the Exarch coming into Italy, 'was opposed by the Souldiers, who wished better to 'the Pope, than to the Emperor; and the Emperor's 'own Governour was fain to be defended from his own 'Souldiers by the Power of the Pope, who had gotten an 'interest in them against their own Master. Next he 'opposed himself against him; and about the year 710. 'Pope Constantine the first did openly affront Philippicus 'the Emperor, in defence of Images, as Onuphrius tel-'leth us. After him, Gregory the second and third, took 'up his example, and did the like by Leo Isaurus. By this 'time the Lombards began to pinch very close, and to 'vex on all sides not only Italy, but Rome too. This 'drives the Pope to seek a new Patron, and very fitly 'he meets with Charles Martel in France that famous 'Warrier against the Saracens. Him he employeth in 'defence of the Church against the Lombards; and the 'Address seems very advisedly taken, it proved so 'fortunate to them both. For in short time it dis-'solved the Kingdom of the Lombards, having then 'stood Two hundred and four years, which was the 'Pope's security: and it brought the Crown of France 'into the house of Charles, and shortly after the We-'stern Empire. And now began the Popes to be great 'indeed. For by the bounty of Pepin, the Son of Charles, 'that which was taken by him from the Lombards, was 'given to the Pope; that is to say, the Exarchate, and 'all that lay betwixt the Appennine and the River of Po. 'So that now he became a Temporal Prince. But when 'Charles the Great had set up the Western Empire, then 'he resumed the Ancient and Original power, to go-'vern the Church, to call Councils, and to order Pa-'pal Elections. And this power continued for a time 'in his posterity; for Gregory the seventh was confirmed 'in the Popedom by the same Henry the fourth, whom 'he afterwards deposed. And it might have continued 'longer, if the succeeding Emperors had had Abilities 'enough to secure, or vindicate their own Rights. But 'the Pope keeping a strong Council about him, and 'meeting with some weak Princes, and those oft-times 'distracted with great and dangerous Wars, grew stron-'ger till he got the better; yet was it carryed in suc-'ceeding times with great changes of Fortune, and 'different success; the Emperor sometimes plucking 'from the Pope, and the Pope from the Emperor; 'winning and losing ground, as their spirits, abilities, 'aids and opportunities were; till at last the Pope set-'led himself on the grounds laid by Gregory the seventh, 'in that great power which he now useth in and over 'these parts of the Christian World. A power first 'exercised (saith he in another place) by this Pope Gre-'gory the seventh, and made too good upon the Empe-'ror Henry the fourth, as by Pope Adrian the fourth, 'Alexander the third, with some others, upon Frederick 'Barbarossa. And others of the Emperors were alike 'served when they did not submit. And for this, I 'hope his Holiness was not to be blamed. For if the 'Emperor kept the Pope under for divers years together, 'against all reason; the Pope, as Bellarmine affirms, 'being never subject to the Emperor, and wanting 'force to stand on his own Prerogative: I hope the Pope 'having now got power enough, may keep the Em-'perors under foot, and not suffer them any more to start 'before him.

Having thus a little glanced at the means, by which the great power of the Church of Rome was first obtained; let us next consider of those policies, by which this Papal Monarchy hath been so long upheld in esteem and credit. We may divide them into three heads. 1. Those by which they have insinuated and screwed themselves into the affections and affairs of the greatest Princes. 2. Those by which already they have, and by which they will hereafter be able to secure their estate: And 3. those by which they keep the people in obedience and ignorance.

1. Concerning the first. First, the Donation of several Kingdoms to them which have no right nor title, but by these Grants of the Pope, cannot but bind them fast to uphold that power, without which they could lay no claim to that which they are possessed of. Of which sort was the confirmation of the Kingdom of France to the house of Pepin; of Naples to the house of Schawben, and Anjou; of Navarre to the Spaniards. 2. The readiness of their Ministers to kill such as resist them, cannot but necessitate Princes to seek their friendship, and hold fair with them: especially since by a Writ of Excommunication, they can arm the Subjects against their Soveraign; and without the charge of levying one Souldier, either destroy him utterly, or bring him to conformity. The frequent Wars raised by them against the Emperours of Germany, and that against King John in England, by these Papal fulminations only; the poysoning of the said King John by a Monk of Swinestead, and killing of King Henry the third of France, by Jaques Clement; are full proofs of this. 3. Then followeth their allowance of Marriages prohibited both by God and Nature; the issue of which cannot but uphold the Popes Authority, without which their birth would be illegitimate, and consequently themselves uncapable of the Estates they are born unto: And by this means they do more strengthen themselves by the unlawful Marriages of others, than ever Prince could do by the lawful Marriage of his own. Nothing more fastened Queen Mary of England to the See of Rome, than the question that was raised about the Marriage of her Mother to King Henry the eighth; the lawfulness of which depended chiefly on the dispensation of Pope Julio the second. 4. Then cometh in their dispensing with the Oaths of Princes, when they conceive themselves induced upon reason of State, to fly off from those Leagues and break off those Treaties, which have been solemnly made and sworn betwixt them and their Neighbours. By means whereof, such Princes think themselves not perjured, because dispensed with by the Pope; and commonly get something in advantage, or point of profit, for which they cannot be unthankful unto the Papacy. Examples of this kind are obvious in all times and stories. 5. Next comes the choosing of the younger Sons of great Princes, into the rank of Cardinals; which obligeth the whole Stock or Family to the Papal Throne: that being a means whereby young Princes are preferred without charge to their Fathers, or any diminution of the Regal Patrimony. 6. And as by these courses he holds in with all Christian Princes generally, which are of the Religion of the Church of Rome; so hath he fastned more particularly on the King of Spain; whereof we shall speak further when we come to that Country.

2. Concerning the second: 1. So it is that their Estate hath the firmest foundation of any, as being built on the Consciences of men possessed with an opinion of their Infallibility, and that undoubted power they pretend unto, not only in Heaven and upon Earth, but also over Hell and Purgatory. 2. Then comes the innumerable Preferments at their disposing, for men of all humours and affections; as having in their power the disposing of almost all the Benefices and Bishopricks of Italy, half of those in Spain, divers in Germany and France: which keepeth the Clergy, and all such as are that way studied, in a perpetual dependance upon that See; especially injoying by it many notable Priviledges, which those of the Temporalty are not capable of. 3. Consider next the multitude of Monks and Friers, whose very being depends wholly upon his Authority, every Monastery and Convent being a Garrison (as it were) to defend the Papacy, and train up a Militia of Spiritual Janizaries; men most affectionately devoted to his See and Service. Of these it is conceived that there are no fewer than a Million, one half whereof at least may be fit for action; and all maintained at other men's cost, themseves not disbursing a penny towards it. 4. Their Pardons and Indulgences are a great increase to their Revenue: some of them as unlimited as that of Pope Boniface the eighth, which was for 82000 years to all that could say such a Prayer of St. Augustines; and that for every day, Toties quoties. 5. Their practising on Penitents, whom they perswade in the very agony of their Souls, that there is no salvation for them, but by giving part of their Estates unto the Church. 6. Nor have they found any small advantage to their Power and Patrimony by the invention of Spiritual Fraternities, which are Appurtenances (as it were) to the Orders of Friers, and may in number perhaps equal them. Into these the Lay-people of all sorts, men and women, marryed and single, desire to be inrolled; as hereby injoying the spiritual prerogatives of Indulgences, and a more speedy dispatch out of Purgatory.

3. Concerning the third. 1. They deterr the people from reading the Scripture, alledging unto them the perils they may incur by mis-interpretation. 2. They breed an Antipathy between the Papists and the Protestants; insomuch that a Papist may not say Amen, unto a Protestants Deo Gratias. 3. They debar them from all sound of the Religion, in prohibiting the Books of the Reformed Writers; and hiding their own Treatises, in which the Tenet of the Protestants is recited only to be confuted; insomuch that in all Italy one shall seldom meet with Bellarmines works, or any of the like nature to be sold. 4. They have under pain of Excommunication prohibited the Italians from Travel and Traffick with Heretical Countries, or such places, where those contagious sounds and sights (as they tearm them) might make them return infected. 5. The Severity, or Tyranny rather of the Inquisition, (of which we shall speak more at large when we come to Spain) crusheth not only the beginnings, but the smallest suspitions of being this way addicted. And 6. the people thus restrained from Travel, are taught to believe that the Protestants are Blasphemers of God and all his Saints; that in England Churches are turned to Stables, the people grown barbarous and eat young Children; that Geneva is a professed Sanctuary of Roguery, and the like. We have yet two later examples of their dealing in this kind. First, thee grosse slander of the Apostasie (or, as they call it the Reconciliation) unto their Church, of the Right Reverend Father in God Dr. King, not long since the Lord Bishop of London, a Prelate of too known a faith and zeal, to give occasion for such a calumny. The second, a Book by them published, and commonly sold in Italy and France, containing a relation of God's judgments, shown on a sort of Protestant Hereticks, by the fall of an house in St. Andrews Parish in London, in which they were assembled to hear a Geneva Lecture, Octo. 26 A. D. 1623. By which dealing the simple people are made to believe that to be a judgment on us of the Protestant party, which the Authors of that Pamphlet well know to be a calumny in regard of us; and a sad chance (I will not say a judgment) which befell their own, by the fall of a Chamber in Black-Fryers, where they were met to hear the Sermon of one Drury a Popish Priest, and that too on the fifth of November in their own accompt, being the 26 of October before mentioned.

The Popedom being thus cunningly and strongly founded, it cannot be if the Popes had been chosen young, or of the same Family, (so that the Successor had not often crossed the designs of his Predecessor) but that this new Monarchy had been greater and better established, than ever the old Roman Empire was in her greatest glory. And to say truth, I have oft wondered with my self, that some of the more active Popes, especially such as were chosen young, and had the happiness to descend of Noble Families, did never seek the setling of this Estate in their own Posterity: especially considering the good Precedents which they had before them, both in sacred and in civil stories. The high Priesthood in the Church of Jewry went from Father to Son; and why should any man think it inconvenient to follow the example of Almighty God, in making the high Priesthood in the Church of Christ to be also hereditary, not elective? The Saracens who were as great Masters for Wit and Policy, as any those Ages did produce, pursued that precedent; governed by Hereditary Caliphs many years together, until the Sultans their Vicegerants (ambitiously affecting the Supream Command) rooted out their races. And if the same Obligation lie on the Masters of Religious or mixt Orders, for preserving the Rules and Statutes of their foundations; as is upon the Pope by the fundamental mental Ordinances of the Conclave, as it seems to do; why might not the Popes as well dispense with those Constitutions, and turn the Popedom into an Hereditary Estate; as Albert of Brandenbourg, and Gotardus of Denmark, Masters of the Dutch Knights in Prussia and Livonia, in their times have done? Nor can I see, but that such an alteration as I speak of, might be altogether as contenting to the Princes of Christendom, as the like change from an unsetled popular Government to an Hereditary Monarchy, was formerly unto the Provinces and People of the State of Rome. Of which it is affirmed by that notable Historian and Statesman Tacitus, Neque Provinciæ illum rerum statum abunebant, suspecto Senatus populique imperio ob certamina Potentium, & avaritiam Magistratuum, invalido Legum auxilio, quæ vi, ambitu, postremò pecuniâ turbabantur, The Provinces (saith he) disliked not the alteration, to whom the Government of the Senate and People had been long distasted, by reason of the factions of the great Ones, and covetousness of their Officers: the Laws affording no security at all, as being sway'd up and down by force, ambition and corruption. The Popedom setled in one house, would prove more constant in the preservation of all Leagues and Treaties, more careful to preserve the interest of their Estate, more useful to the Confederates and Allies thereof upon all occasions, than it is at present: where the Popes so often change their sides, and shift their factions; the Successor many times esteeming it his greatest glory, to rescind all the Acts of his Predecessor. And possible enough it is that Cæsar Borgia the Son of Alexander the Sixth, might have some such ends; when it was covenanted betwixt him and Lewis the twelfth of France, that being declared General of the Churches Forces, and giving his helping hand to that King in the Conquest of Millain; he should be aided by him in recovering all the Lands of the Church, which the Dukes of Urbine and Camerine, the Families of the Malatesti, Baillons, and Bentivogli, with divers others of less note, did possess in Italy. Which having got into his hands, had not his Fathers sudden death, and his own dangerous sickness hapning at the same time, cut off his design; it had been a matter of no great difficulty (if of any at all) to have made himself absolute Master of Rome, and of all the Lands of the Church, and to have left the same established in the Borgian Family. 'Tis true, that such an alteration would be very distastful to the ambition of the Cardinals, who by the deaths (natural or violent, it matters not) of the present Pope, aspire by all means both of love and money to that high dignity. But for my part, I cannot see how all the wit in the Conclave had been able to hinder it, if Alexander, on a purpose to poyson some of that number whom he had invited to a Supper, by a meer mistake of his Cup-bearer, had not poysoned himself, (even in the very heat of the business then almost effected) and so made frustrate the device.

But passing by this imagination of an Hereditary Popedom, let us behold it as Elective, and look upon the form and order observed in it. Now the Election of the Pope is made most commonly, in this place, and manner. In the Popes Palace on the Hill Vatican, are among other buildings five Halls, two Chappels, and a Gallery seventy foot long. The Gallery is appointed for conference, one Chappel for the Mass, and for the Election; the other with the Halls are for the Cardinals Lodgings. Every Hall hath two rows of Chambers, which are purposely for the time, made of green or violet cloth. To each Cardinal is allowed four Servants, to lie in his Chamber. They that are once within, are compelled, unless they be sick, still to continue there; and such as are once out, are no more permitted to go in: lest by that means, the Cardinals should maintain intelligence with any foreign Princes. To this Conclave (for by this name the place of the Election is called) is but one door, to which belongeth four Locks, and as many Keys. One Key is in the keeping of the Cardinals; one, of the City-Bishops; one, of the Roman Nobility; and one, of the Master of the Ceremonies. There is in this door a Wicket or Hatch, which is opened only at Dinners and Suppers, whereof the Master of the Ceremonies keepeth a Key. At this hole the Cardinals Servants receive their meat; every dish being first diligently searched, lest any Letters should be conveyed in them. As for the Lodgings they have neither holes nor windows to give light; so that there they make day of Wax-Candles: And lest the Pope should be made by force, both the City and Conclave are strongly guarded. When the Cardinals are going to Election, the priviledges of the Cardinals are recited: which every one sweareth to observe, in case he be chosen Pope. Then the Master of the Ceremonies ringing a Bell, calleth them to Mass: which ended, there is brought to every Cardinal a Chair, and therein a Scroll of all the Cardinals names. Before the Altar is set a Table covered with a Purple Cloth, whereupon is set a Chalice, and a Silver Bell, and about it six Stools, on which sit two Cardinal-Bishops, two Cardinal-Priests, and two Cardinal-Deacons. Every Cardinal writeth his voice in a piece of paper, goeth to the Altar, prayeth God to guide him in the Election, putteth his voice into the Chalice, and departeth to his Seat. The first Bishop taketh out all the papers, and delivereth them to the first Deacon; who unfoldeth each of them, readeth (without mentioning the name of the Elector) the name of the elected: and every Cardinal in his particular Scroll, noteth how many voices every one hath. The accompt being made, the first Priest having the like Scroll, pronounceth who hath most voices: which done, the Priest ringeth a Silver Bell; at which call the Master of the Ceremonies bringeth in a pan of Coals, and burneth all the little papers, wherein the names of the elected were written. He that hath the most voices (so that his voices exceed the proportion of two parts of three) is acknowledged Pope, and adored by the rest of the Cardinals: but if they exceed not this number, they must begin all anew. If in the space of thirty days the Election be not fully ended, then must the Cardinals be kept from fire, light, and victuals, till they are fully agreed. The Wicket which we before mentioned, is called the Golden Gate, at which stand an infinite number of poor people; on whom the new Pope, having opened that Gate, bestoweth his Fatherly Benediction, and remitteth to them all their sins. Then striketh he continually on the same door with a Golden Mallet; which whilst he is doing, workmen without break it open. The Chips, Stones, Dust, and Dirt which falleth from the Gate, while it is opening, are gathered and preserved as choicest Reliques; and the Golden Mallet is usually given to that Cardinal, who is in most grace with the new Pope.

This is the ordinary way of the Pope's Election, but subject to much Faction and Division amongst the Cardinals, and that in times of less deceit than the present are: Insomuch as after the death of Pope Clement the fourth, the differences amongst them held for two years and more. Which gave occasion to one of them to say in scorn, that they must uncover the roof of the house to make way for the Holy Ghost to come upon them. And there is now much more corruption and abuse in it, than ever formerly, as buying of voices, sitting up some for stales and tearing Scrutinies, every Cardinal desiring to have a Pope of his own, or his Prince's Faction. So that we find it written of an old Sicilian Cardinal, who after long abſence came to the Election of a Pope, where he expected that inceſſant Prayers, as in times of old, ſhould have procured ſome fit man to be pointed out to them for the Vicar of Chriſt: that, finding nothing but canvaſſing, promiſing rewards, and threatning for Voices in the choice; Ad hunc modum (ſaith he) fiunt Pontifices Romani? and ſo returned unto his Country, and ſaw Rome no more.

The ordinary Temporal Revenue of the Papacy ariſing out of Land-rents, Impoſts upon Commodities, and ſale of Offices, Boterus maketh to be better than two Millions of Crowns; but the extraordinary, and Spiritual, to be far beyond. For it is ſaid of Pius Quintus, who ſate Pope ſix years only, that he got from the Spaniſh Clergy 14 Millions. And though he was a very great Builder, which ſpent him a great deal of money, yet he ſo managed his Eſtate, that he laid up four Millions of Crowns in the Caſtle of S. Angelo. Sixtus the Fifth took from the Jeſuites at one clap 20000 Crowns of yearly rent, (becauſe they were too rich for men profeſſing poverty:) and having ſate but five years, had coffered up five Millions of Gold; four of which his Succeſſor Gregory the fourteenth ſpent in leſs than a year. Out of France they receive no leſs than a Million of Crowns yearly. Out of England, when it was the Pope's Puteus inexhauſtus, they and their followers extracted no leſs than 60000 Marks per annum, which amounteth to 120000 pounds of our preſent Money; and was more than the Kings ſtanding Revenue did attain unto: Yet was this in the time of K. Henry 3. before their avarice and rapine was at the height. And of late days, no longer than ſince the Reign of K. Henry 8. beſides their Peter-pence, which was an Annual Rent upon every Chimny in the Realm, firſt granted to the Pope by Offa King of the Mercians, An. 730. or thereabouts, and afterwards confirmed by Ethelwolf the ſecond Monarch of England; beſides their firſt Fruits, Tenths, and all other exactions: it was made evident that in ſome few years then laſt paſt, the Popes had received out of England no leſs than 160000 l. ſterling, for the confirmation of Epiſcopal Elections only. By which we may conjecture what vaſt ſums they drew hence on all other occaſions. Let other Countries ſubject to the Pope's Authority be accordingly rated, and the total will amount to a ſum incredible. Next add to this the ſums of money they receive from particular perſons, for pardons, for diſpenſations with unlawful Marriages; the profits ariſing from Pilgrimages, from the death and Funerals of great Perſons, from the Indulgencies granted to Abbies and Convents, in all which the Popes have a ſhare; and it would puzzle a good Arithmetician to ſtate his Intrado. So truly was it ſaid by Pope Sixtus the fourth, that a Pope could never want money, as long as he was able to hold a Pen in his hand. Yet notwithſtanding, their Treaſury for the moſt part is but low and empty. For 1. the State they keep, becauſe of that great honour which they have above other Princes, which is to be maintained at a great expence (for the more worſhip the more coſt, as the ſaying is) is very chargeable unto them; their ordinary Guards ſtanding them in no leſs than 30000 Crowns per annum. 2. The large allowances which they are fain to give unto their Legates, Nuncios, and other Miniſters, keep their Coffers low; the entertainment of their ordinary Nuncios in the Courts of Chriſtian Princes, amounting to no leſs than 1200 Crowns a month to each. And 3. their greedy deſire to enrich their Sons or Kinſmen with the treaſures of the Church (with which humour Pope Sixtus the Fifth, being of poor and obſcure birth, was never touched) keeps them always bare. Add unto theſe the exceſſive gorgeouſneſs of the Papal Veſtments (in which vanity every one ſeeketh to excel the other) eſpecially that of their Tripple-Crown; which muſt needs put them to great charge, and continual iſſues of their treaſure. And for an evidence of this laſt, we find that Clement the Fifth, who firſt transferred his See to Avignon, to ſhew his gallantry to the French (probably unacquainted with the like fine ſights) had his Crown thick ſet with Carbuncles and precious ſtones; one of which being loſt by a fall from his Horſe, was valued at 6000 Ducats.

As for the Forces of the Church, the Pope is able to impreſs as great a number of Land-ſouldiers out of his Eſtate, as any Prince or Common-wealth within the limits of Italy. Paul the 3. ſent to the aid of Charles the 5. in the Wars of Germany, 12000 Foot, and 500 Horſe, and yet raiſed his own Family to the Dukedom of Parma, Pius the Fifth ſent to the aid of Charles the 9. againſt the Hugonots, 4000 Foot, and 1000 Horſe; which Forces they maintained at their own charges. And when Clement undertook the War of Ferrara, he raiſed out of his Eſtate 20000 Foot, and 2000 Horſe, in leſs than a month; which was more than moſt Princes in Europe could poſſibly have done. And for the valour of his Souldiers, and ability of his Commanders, they retain ſo much (as before was ſaid) of their Anceſtors virtues; that there are thought to be many Families in the Eſtate of the Church, able to furniſh all the Common-wealths and Princes of Chriſtendom, with ſufficient Captains. What, and how little he is able to do by Sea, may be beſt ſeen out of the aid which he ſent to the Venetians, at the famous Battel of Lepanto, wherein he furniſhed them with no more than twelve Gallies; and thoſe too hired of the Duke of Florence: The Venetians in the Adriatick, and the Florentines in the Tuſcan Seas, having all the Trade, and conſequently all the power in the Seas of Italy. 'Tis true, the Pope was bound by the capitulation, to bear the fifth part of the charge of the War, and with the help of the reſt of the Princes of Italy (who were to march under his colours) to ſet forth 50000 Foot, and 4500 Horſe: which is as great an Argument of his riches and power by Land, as the other is of his weakneſs at Sea.

Having a purpoſe in the proſecution of this Work, to mention ſuch particular Orders of Knighthood, as moſt Countries have given beginning to; I will here ſet down the Orders of ſuch Popiſh Spiritual Knights or Friers, which his holy benediction hath erected, and fat allowance doth maintain. And for our better proceeding, we will begin with the original of a Monaſtical life; and then we will make ſpecial mention of ſome of the Romiſh Votaries of both Sexes. Know then, that under the ſeventh perſecution raiſed againſt the Church by Decius, one Paulus, born at Thebes in Egypt, retired to a private Cave under the foot of a Rock, Anno 260. Here he is ſaid to have lived one hundred years, and to have been ſeen of no man but one Anthony who was at his death. This Anthony was the firſt that followed the example of Paulus; a man of a noble Houſe, and one that ſold all his Eſtate, that he might the more privately enjoy himſelf. He lived an hundred and fifty years, and is called the Father of the Monks. To theſe beginnings doth Polidore Virgil refer the original of the Monks, and religious Orders; the name Monk coming from the Greek Μόνος, becauſe of their lonely and ſolitary lives. Thoſe of the Religious Orders are called Fratres, and in Engliſh, Friers, from the French word Frere, which ſignifieth a Brother; and that either becauſe of their brotherly co-habitation; or elſe becauſe they are Fratres in malo, Brethren in miſchief and deſign.

The foundation of Monaſtical life thus laid by Paulus, and Anthony; the world increaſed ſo faſt in Monks and and Eremites, that it seemed necessary to prescribe them Orders. Hereupon Saint Basil gathered them together, living formerly dispersed; and is said to be the first that built them Monasteries. He is also said to have ordained the three Vows, of Poverty, Chastity, and Obedience; to have instructed them in good Arts, true Religion, and in the service of God, with Hymns, Prayers, and Watching. Of this Order there are not many in the Latine Church, but good plenty of them in the Greek. They are bound to abstain from all kind of Flesh, and are called Monks of St. Basil, by the name of that Father; amongst the Writings of which Father, the Rules for these Monasticks are set down at large.

2. The next who prescribed Orders was St. Augustine, born in the year 350, who being thirty years of age, is said to have obtained a Garden without the walls of Hippo, for private Contemplations. Twelve only he assumed into his society, living with them in all integrity, and wearing a leathern Girdle to distinguish them from Monks. Branched afterwards into two several and distinct Orders, the one called by the name of Canons Regular, whose chief House here in England was St. John's near Colchester, the other called commonly Austin Friers, or the Eremites of St. Austin, as others call them; Of such esteem formerly in the University of Oxford, that all who took the Degree of a Master of Arts, were to submit themselves to their Oppositions in the publick Schools, and receive approbation from them; from whence the form, in Augustinensibus responderit vel opposuerit, still retained among them. Their house in London stood in Broad-street, of which a part of the Church still standeth, converted to a Church for the use of the Dutch; the rest demolished, and in the place thereof a stately Mansion erected by Sir William Paulet the first Marquess of Winchester, and Lord Treasurer of England. These make the first Order of the Friers Mendicants. The first Monastry of them was erected at Paris by William Duke of Guien, Anno 1155, and Anno 1200, they began to flourish in Italy, by the favour of John Lord of Mantua. The other branches of this Tree, are 1. the Monks of S. Hierom, 2. the Carmelites, 3. the Crouchet Friers, and 4. the Dominicans.

1. The Monks of St. Hierom challenge their original from the worthy Father of the Church, so called. They flourish especially in Spain, where there are thirty two Monasteries of them; their chief House being S. Bartholomews of Lupiena; and have taken unto themselves the Rule of St. Austin. Their Robe is a white Cassock, under a tawny Cloak.

2. The Carmelites so called from Mount Carmel in Syria, pretend their original from Elias, and John the Baptist. They only allowed at first the Rule of S. Basil; and were confirmed in Europe by Honorius the Third. They are by some called Jacobines, from a Church dedicated to S. James, where they had their first Convent; and by us, the White Friers, from the colour of their Habit. Their House in London stood in Fleetstreet, converted since into a dwelling of the Earls of Kent, besides other Tenements. Their Rule was afterwards corrected according to the Rule of S. Austin, by Donna Eresba (or Teresa) a Spanish Woman; who made them also certain Constitutions, confirmed by Pius the fourth, Anno 1565.

3. The Friers of S. Crosse, Crossed, or Crouched Friers, were first ordained by Cyriacus Bishop of Hierusalem, who shewed to Helena the place where the Cross was hidden; hence this Order: which being almost decayed, was restored first by Urban the Second, and afterwards by Innocent the Third, under the Rule of S. Austin. Their Robe is Watchet, and in their hands they carry the Figure of the Cross. Their House in London near the Tower, still retains its name.

4. The Dominicans, or Friers Preachers, were instituted by S. Dominick a Spaniard. He put himself in this Order with sixteen of his Disciples, under the Rule of S. Austin, Anno 1206, and had his device confirmed by Honorius the Third. Their duty is to preach the Gospel in all places unto the farthest parts of the world; which both they did, and their Successors since have done, not at home only, but in India and America, with great zeal and diligence. They are called by us Black-Friers, from the Colour of their Habits, and are the third Order of Friers Mendicants. Their House in London stood near Ludgat, and took up the whole Precinct which is still called Black-Friers; though nothing be remaining of it but the very name.

3. The third that prescribed Orders was S. Benedict, born at Nursia, in the Dutchy of Spoleto, Anno 472. He gathered the Monks of Italy together, gave them a Rule in Writing, caused them to be called Benedictines, or Monks of S. Benedict; and lived till he had seen twelve Monasteries filled with them. After his death this Order grew so populous, that there have been of it 29 Popes, 200 Cardinals, 1603 Archbishops, 4000 Bishops, besides some thousands of Canonized Saints, which they use to brag of. Their Habit is a loose Gown of black, reaching down to the ground, with a Hood of the same; an under-garment of white woollen, and Boots on their legs. The other principal streams of this Fountain are, 1. the Monks of Clugnie, 2. of Carthusia, 3. of Cisteaux, 4. the Celestines.

1. The Monks of Clugnie, are so called from the Abbey of Clugnie in the County of Burgundy, the Abbot whereof, by name Odo, was the first that reformed the Benedictines, then fallen from their former integrity, Anno 913. He obtained of the Popes and Emperours, that all such Abbies as would come under the compass of his Reformations (which were in all about two hundred) should be called the Congregations of Clugnie, and that they might call their Chapiters, and dispatch their common businesses, when and as often as they pleased.

2. The Carthusians were first instituted by one Bruno, a German Doctor of Divinity, at the Town of Carthusia in Daulphine, Anno 1080. His followers, which were at the first but six, have at this day 93 Monasteries. They eat no flesh, live by couples, labour with their hands, watch, pray, and never meet together but on Sundays. Their House in London by corruption and long tract of time, got the name of the Charter-House, (the Monks themselves being corruptly called the Charter-house-Monks) now better known by the name of Sutton's Hospital; from the Hospital of the Foundation of Richard Sutton, a wealthy Citizen of London.

3. The Monks of Cisteaux were first instituted by one Robert, Abbot of Molesme, Anno 1090, or thereabouts; who together with 21. of the most religious of his Covent, retired to Cisteaux in Burgundy Dutchy; hence the name. About five years after, one Bernard, a great Lord, became of their Order; who built and repaired for them 160 Abbies. Their Robe is a white Cassock, girt with a Girdle of wool, the rest black. They were by us called White Monks; and the common Benedictines, Black Monks; both from the colour of their Habits.

4. The Celestines owe their original to Peter de Moron a Samnite, born Anno 1250, who being afterwards for his sanctity chose Pope, was called Celestine the 5*th*. He reformed the Benedictines, then much degenerated; and had his Order confirmed by Gregory the Eleventh. There are at this present 124 Monasteries of them.

4. The fourth and last that prescribed new Orders to the Monasticks, was St. Francis of Assis in the Dutchy of Spoleta. He fell from Merchandize, which was his firſt profeſſion, unto the ſtudy of Religion, going barefoot, and behaving himſelf very penitently: whereupon, great ſtore of Diſciples following him, he gave them a Rule in writing; by which they are bound to profeſs abſolute beggery, and are not permitted to carry any money about them, or more victuals than will for the preſent ſerve themſelves and their Brethren. This they obſerve punctually in their own perſons, but give themſelves leave to have a Boy with them, to do both without ſcruple. S. Francis deſired they ſhould be called Minors, to ſhew their humility; but they are generally called Franciſcans, by the name of their Founder. By the French, called Cordeliers, becauſe of the knotty Cord which they wear about them inſtead of a Girdle; by us, the Gray-Friers, from the colour of their upper Garment. Their Houſe in London ſtood near Newgate, of which the Church, the Cloyſters, and ſome other the publick Offices, do ſtill ſtand entire; the whole converted to an Hoſpital for poor Children by King Edward the ſixth, in the latter end of his Reign, now beſt known by the name of Chriſt-Church. Their Rule and Order was confirmed by Innocent the Third, Anno 1212, and is the fourth and laſt of the Friers mendicants, or begging Friers. The other principal Children of this Father, are 1. the Minimes; and 2. the Capouchins.

1. The Friers Minimes, were firſt founded by Franciſcus de Pola, a Neapolitan, Anno 1450, according to a corrected copy of the Rule of S. Francis of Aſſis. His followers keep always a true Lenten Faſt, unleſs in caſe of ſickneſs. Their Robe is a dark tawney, an hood of the ſame hanging to their Girdles.

2. The Capouchins, (ſo called from their Cowl or Capouch) were ordained by one Matthew Baſci of Ancona. Frier Lewis his Companion, obtained for them of the Pope, the Habit and Rule of S. Francis, Anno 1526. In the ſpace of 42 years they increaſed to 2240 Aſſociates, had 222 Monaſteries, and were divided into 15 Provinces. They are bound by their Rule to ſpend their time in prayer; and are generally thought to be the devouteſt of all the Orders Monaſtical.

I ſhould now ſpeak of the Jeſuites, but that I cannot bring them under any Rule; as being a people neither ſimply Lay nor Prieſts, nor meerly ſecular nor regular, but all together. They were founded by Ignatius Loyola, born in Navarre, who being in his youth addicted to the Wars, was lamed in one of his Legs: after which maim betaking himſelf to the ſtudy of Religion, he framed this Order, conſiſting at the firſt of Ten only. Paul the Third did confirm it, Anno 1540, confining the number within ſixty: which he after enlarged ad infinitum. They are now the greateſt Politicians, ſoundeſt Scholars, and chiefeſt upholders of the Romiſh See: ſo that the only way to re-eſtabliſh the Romiſh Religion in any Land, is to plant a Colledge of Jeſuites in it. To the three Vows of Poverty, Obedience, and Chaſtity, common to all other Orders; Ignatius at the Inſtitution of this, added the Vow of Miſſion: whereby his Followers are bound to obey their General, or the Pope, without demanding any reaſon, in all dangerous and hazardous attempts whatſoever, whether it be undertaking ſome tedious voyage, for the propagation of the Romiſh Religion; or the maſſacring of any Prince whoſe life is a hindrance to their proceedings. It is reported, that a Jeſuit being in the midſt of his Maſs, which they call the Sacrifice of the Altar, was ſent for by Ignatius; to whom leaving off his Maſs, he went immediately. Ignatius having no buſineſs wherein to employ him, told him, he only ſent for him to try his obedience; and withal profanely added, that Obedience is better than Sacrifice: and this is called the blind obedience of the Jeſuites. To leave them then as they are, the greateſt diſturbers of the quiet of Europe; I have heard a worthy Gentleman, now with God, ſay many times, that till the Jeſuites were taken from the Church of Rome, and the peeviſh Puritan (or Presbyterian) Preachers out of the Churches of Great Britain, he thought there would never be any peace in Chriſtendom; with what a true preſaging ſpirit, the event hath ſhewed.

Corrivals with the Jeſuites in power and learning, and almoſt coætaneous in point of time, are the Oratorians, founded by Philip Nerio a Florentine, Anno 1564. Who marking the great ſway which the Jeſuites began to have, and the danger which the Church might run, if that Order were not equally ballanced by ſome other of as much ability; firſt eſtabliſhed this, conſiſting altogether of Prieſts; that by their diligence in preaching of the lives of the Saints, and other heads of practical and moral duties, they might divert the torrent of the peoples affection from the brood of Ignatius. The renowned Cardinal Cæſar Baronius, Francis Bourdino, afterwards Biſhop of Avignon in France, and one Alexander Fidelis, were the three firſt whom he admitted to his Rule: initiated in S. Hierom's Church at Rome by Pope Pius the Fourth with great zeal and cheerfulneſs; to whom, as to ſome of his Predeceſſors, the power and practices of the Jeſuites were become ſuſpicious. They increaſed ſpeedily (being countenanced on ſo good grounds) to great numbers, and a proportionable Revenue, as much eſteemed of for their knowledge in Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, and Practical Divinity; as the others for Philoſophy, Tongues, and the ſtudy of Controverſies; and more accepted of in moſt places, becauſe not uſually intermedling in affairs of State. So evenly looked on by the Popes, that the Jeſuites could not obtain the Canonization of their Ignatius, till the Oratorians were grown rich enough to celebrate that of their Nerius alſo: which hapned in the ſhort Popedom of Gregory the 15. Anno 1622.

To conclude this diſcourſe of Monks and Friers, I will ſay ſomewhat of the ſevereſt kind of Recluſe, which is the Anachoret, or Anchoret, ſo called from ἀναχωρέω, becauſe they uſe to live retired from company. They are kept in a cloſe place, where they muſt dig their Graves with their nails; badly clad, and worſe dieted; not to be pityed for all that, becauſe their reſtraint of liberty is voluntary; yet to be ſorrowed for in this, that after ſuch an earthly Purgatory, they ſhall find inſtead of an Euge bone ſerve, a Quis quæſivit hæc de manibus veſtris.

But concerning theſe Orders of Monks and Friers, certain it is, that at their firſt inſtitution they were a People much reverenced for their holy life; as men that for Chriſts ſake had abandoned all the Pomps and Vanities of the World. And queſtionleſs they were then a People altogether mortified, and who by their very aſpects would gain upon the affection of the hardeſt heart; inſomuch that not only mean men, but great perſonages alſo did deſire to be buried in a Frier's weeds; as Francis the Second Marqueſs of Mantua, Albertus Pius another Prince of Italy, Iſabel the renowned Queen of Caſtile and Aragon, wife of Ferdinand the Catholick; and in late times the great Scholar Chriſtopher Longolius. But as Florus ſaith of the Civil Wars between Ceſar and Pompey, Cauſa hujus Belli, eadem quæ omnium, nimia felicitas; we may ſay alſo of theſe Friers. The greatneſs of their wealth, which many on a ſuperſtitious devotion had bequeathed unto them, brought them firſt to a neglect of their former devout and religious carriage; next to a wretchleſneſs of their credits, and conſequently into into contempt: ſo that there was not a people under Heaven that was more infamous in themſelves, or more ſcornfully abuſed by others. Hence the vulgar ſayings of the people, that Friers wear Croſſes on their breaſts, becauſe they have none in their hearts; and that, when a Frier receiveth the Razor, the Devil entreth into him; and the like. Nay, Sir Thomas Moor, who loſt his head in the Pope's quarrel, ſticks not in his Utopia, to call them Errones maximos; and would have them comprehended within the Statutes of Vagabonds and ſturdy Beggers. Now to ſhew both the humours of Reſpect and Contempt, uſed ſeverally to theſe Monks and Friers, as men ſtood affected; there goeth a Tale, how the Lady Moor, Sir Thomas his Wife, finding by chance a Friers Girdle, ſhewed it to her Husband with great joy, ſaying, Behold Sir Thomas, a ſtep towards Heaven: whereunto with a ſcornful laugh he returneth this anſwer, that he feared that ſtep would not bring her a ſtep higher. And as for their retiredneſs and ſolitary courſe of life, ſo it is that many Kings, eſpecially of the Saxons in the time of their Heptarchy, have abandoned their Scepters to enjoy it: And Barclay in his Argenis, under the perſon of Anereſtus, hath defended it in ſuch Princes, as have cloiſtered themſelves to enjoy the ſolitude of a Convent. Which notwithſtanding, Philoſophers have defined a man to be ζῶον πολιτικὸν, a Creature principally made for civil converſation; the Poets ſay, Naſcitur indignè per quem non naſcitur alter, that he dieth indebted to the World, who leaveth no poſterity behind him: and the Jews, which live in great numbers even in Rome it ſelf, abhor this unſociable kind of living, and prefer a civil ſociableneſs much before it; as to Nature more agreeable, to Man more profitable, and conſequently to God more acceptable. And having ſpoken thus much of the Monks and Friers, deſcend we now unto the Nuns.

And indeed I ſhould much wrong the Friers, if I ſhould deprive them of the company of their deareſt Votaries; and therefore take ſomewhat of them alſo. Called anciently Moniales from the Greek word Μόνος, from their living alone; whence we alſo had the names of Monks and Monaſteries: in the middle times called Nuns, from Nonna an Egyptian word, (for Egypt in old times was not meanly furniſhed with ſuch Eremites) which alſo ſignifieth a ſolitary and lonely life. A word in ſome of the barbarous Latines very much in uſe. Sebaſtica the Siſter of S. Benedict, was the firſt who collected them into Companies, and preſcribed them Rules. They are ſhaved as Monks are, and vow (as they do) perpetual Poverty and Virginity. Which laſt how well they keep, let Clemangis teſtifie; who telleth us, that Puellam velare idem eſt ac publice eam ad ſcortandum exponere: to veil a Nun, and proſtitute her for a common Harlot, were terms equivalent. And one Robinſon, who lived for a time in the Engliſh Nunnery at Lisbon, hath told us, that he found an hole in the Garden-wall covered over with Morter, in which were hidden the bones of many new-born children, which their unnatural Mothers had murthered and thrown in there. But of theſe I will inſtance only in two Orders, viz. that of S. Clare, as being the ſtricteſt; and that of S. Brigit which enjoyeth moſt liberty.

1. S. Clare was a Knights Daughter of Aſſis, where S. Francis was born, with whom ſhe was co-temporary, and with whoſe auſtere life ſhe was ſo affected, that ſhe forſook her Fathers houſe, and followed him. Having learned her Lirrie of that Frier-monger, ſhe deviſed an Order of Religious Women, and had it confirmed by Pope Honorius the Third, Anno 1225. Her followers vow Poverty and Virginity, as before was ſaid, go barefoot, feed meanly, and are more ſtraitned in their courſe of life, than thoſe of any other Order. By their Foundreſs, out of a deſire to conform the better to the Rule and Order of S. Francis, they were called Minorites, or Minores, and gave name to the place near the Tower-hill in London, where they had their houſe, called from them, the Minories.

2. S. Brigit was a Queen of Swethland, and coming to Rome on devotion, obtained of Pope Urban the Third, Anno 1370, or thereabouts, that Friers and Nuns might in ſome places live together. For being a Woman, and a Widow, ſhe knew beſt (as it ſeemeth) what was good for both Sexes; and ſo deviſed ſuch a Rule, as contented both. But little needed this co-habitation or living together, under the ſhelter of the ſame roof. For they had formerly been joined in carnal affections, though parted by Walls; neither were the Viſitations of the Friers ſo fruitleſs, but that the Nuns did fructifie by them. Theſe Friers and Nuns though they lived under the ſame roof, are prohibited from coming to one another, but on ſpecial occaſions: the Foundreſs ſo ordering it, that the Nuns ſhould lie in the upper Rooms, and the Friers in the lower. The Confeſſor alſo is denied acceſs into their Chambers, but ſhrieveth them through an Iron Grate, by which his lodging is parted from the Lady Abbeſſe's. And herein lieth the Myſtery of Iniquity. For Robinſon, whom before I named, tells us, that at the time of his ſervice in the Engliſh Nunnery at Lisbon, he was ſhewed a way by which this uncharitable Grate, which ſeemed to keep the Friers from the company of their female friends, might be, and was on ſuch occaſions uſually removed, and the acceſs made free and open to each others Beds. Which if it be truly ſaid of theſe, may be ſuſpected alſo in all the reſt of this Order, and in moſt alſo of the others.

And now I return unto my Friers, which beſides the maintenance which by their Founders is allotted for their preſent ſubſiſtence; are kept in a continual hope and poſſibility of attaining to the higheſt honours which that Church can give, if they continue conſtant in their due obedience. For there is not one of them which hopeth not to be the Prior of his Convent; 2. Provincial of his Order, in that Country where he liveth; 3. and then the General of his Order. Next, none more likely than the Generals to be choſen Cardinals, and out of the Cardinals one of neceſſity muſt be choſen (and why not he, as well as any of the Pack?) to be Pope of Rome. So firm and ſweet a Companion of man is Hope, that being the laſt thing which leaves him, it makes all toyls ſupportable, all difficulties conquerable.

The Signeury of VENICE.

NOrth of the Lands of the Church from Romandiola to the Alps, lie the Italian Provinces of the State of VENICE, bounded upon the South with the Territory of Ferrara, and the reſt of Romandiola; on the Weſt, with the Dukedom of Millain; on the North, with the main body of the Alpes; and on the Eaſt, with the Adriatick and the River Arſia, by which laſt parted from Liburnia, a Sclavonian Province. Beſides which, it commands a great part of Dalmatia, together with the Iſlands of Candy, Corfu, Cephalenea, Ithaca, Zant, Cithera, and certain others of leſs note. The length of their Dominions by Sea and Land extending above a thouſand Miles, but the breadth not anſwerable.

The

The nature of the ſoil, and the principal Rivers which refreſh it, we ſhall ſee anon in the deſcription of the Provinces into which it is divided. According to which Provinces and the chief Cities of them, the Character of the people may beſt be taken: it being ſaid proverbially by the Italians, that the Venetians themſelves are ſtately, crafty, and greedy; the Veronians ſtudious and faithful; the Paduans fierce, the Vincentians eager on revenge; thoſe of Friuli, grateful, but inconſtant; thoſe of Hiſtria, neither long livers, nor of very great courage. That in the conduct of a War, thoſe of Venice bring Silver; thoſe of Treviſo, Swords; that the Breſcians are fit to dig in Trenches; thoſe of Bergomo to lay Ambuſhes; thoſe of Padua to manage Horſes. And of the Women it is ſaid, that thoſe of Crema are deceitful, thoſe of Venice inſolent, thoſe of Vincentia conſtant; thoſe of Verona gracious; thoſe of Treviſo jealous, thoſe of Breſcia diligent, and the Bergomaſque crafty.

But not to dally longer in theſe proverbial characters (though they carry a great deal of truth in them) certain it is, that the Venetians themſelves do affect a great deal of gravity in their actions, ſpeak very little at the Table; very ſevere where they have authority, and many times in the exceſs. And yet ſuch is the conſtant temper of their Government, and their impartiality in doing juſtice, that they are very well obeyed, and generally well beloved of all their Subjects (notwithſtanding the heavy preſſures which are laid upon them) as well in Italy as without. Eſteemed in former times good Souldiers both by Sea and Land, maintaining Wars continually with the Turks in Paleſtine; the Emperours of Conſtantinople, in Greece it ſelf; the Genoeſe by Sea, and their Neighbours of Italy in this Continent. But of late times they have more ſtudied to preſerve, than inlarge their Dominions; and that too rather by expence of money, than the loſs of blood, and by wit rather than by valour. So fortunate in this laſt kind of practice, that Machiavel obſerved of them in his time, that whatſoever they loſt by War, they recovered by Treaty. A pregnant evidence whereof we ſhall ſee anon.

To proceed now to the deſcription of ſuch of the Provinces and Eſtates of this Common-wealth, as paſs under the accompt of Italy, they are theſe that follow, that is to ſay, 1. Marca Trevigiana, 2. Friuli, 3. Hiſtria, 4. the Italian Iſles of the Adriatick; of which now in order; leaving the other Members of this Eſtate to be conſidered in their proper places.

1. MARCA TREVIGIANA is bounded on the South with the River Athеſis, and the moſt Northern branch of the Po, which from ſome Lime-kills near adjoining, they now call Fornaces, by which parted from the Territory of Ferrara, and the reſt of Romagna; on the Weſt, with the Rivers Mincius and Sarca, and the Lake of Benacus, (now called Lago de Garda from a little Town of that name, adjoining) by which parted from the Dutchy of Millain; on the Eaſt, with Friuli, and the Golf of Venice; and on the North with the Alpes which divide it from Tirolis, a Province of Germany. In the time of great Auguſtus Cæſar, this Tract together with Friuli the next neighbouring Province had the name of Venetia, from the Veneti, the old Inhabitants hereof; and by that name made one of thoſe eleven Regions, into which he then divided Italy. How it obtained this new name we ſhall ſee anon.

The principal Rivers of this Tract are, 1. Brenta, called anciently Meduacus Major, which riſing in the Alpes not far from Trent, and watering the Fields of Padua, paſſeth into the Sea, near the City of Venice, making up the famous Haven of Malamocco. 2. Bacbilio, called anciently Meduacus Minor, which riſeth alſo in the Alpes, and paſſing by Vincenza, emptieth it ſelf into the Brenta. And 3. Athеſis, now called Adige, which ſpringeth alſo out of the Alpes not far from Trent, and having taken many leſſer ſtreams into its chanel, paſſeth by Verona, and after is divided into two great branches; whereof the one falls into the Sea, the other loſeth it ſelf in the midſt of the Mariſhes.

The chief Cities of it are, 1. Vincentia, one of the twelve Cities built by the Tuſcans, or Hetrurians on this ſide of the Apennine; pleaſantly ſeated on the banks of the River Bachilio, and another navigable water called Retone (Erotenus formerly.) The Territory of the City not more large than fruitful, abounding with all ſtore of fruits, and yielding an excellent kind of Wine, which from thence is vended unto Venice. The buildings of it for the moſt part of poliſhed ſtone, whereof the Fields adjoining afford ſpecial Quarries; and the Inhabitants generally an induſtrious people, making a great quantity of Silks, with which they do adorn themſelves, and ſupply their Neighbours. 2. Treviſo, ſeated on the Banks of the River Silus, (which runneth through the middle of it) in the midſt of a large and ſpacious plain, abounding even to admiration, with moſt excellent Wheat, and all other Neceſſaries. A City of no ancient name, not mentioned by Ptolomy, nor others of the old Geographers: but of ſufficient note in the later times, for being the Reſidence or Seat of thoſe Provincial Governours (Marqueſſes they are ſometimes called) which the Lombardian Kings ſent hither to defend their Borders. Hence it gave name to all the Country, in Latine called Marca Treviſiana, or Tarviſana, as ſome call it: taken by the Venetians, and loſt again divers times; but was finally conquered Anno 1380, or thereabout; Antonia Venieri being Duke of Venice. 3. Padua, formerly called Patavium, built by Antenor, whoſe Tomb is ſtill here to be ſhown. From him named Antenoria, as ſome report, but after called Patavium quaſi Padavium, from its nearneſs to the River Po, and the Fens thereof. Situate in ſo delectable and ſweet a ſoil, that Conſtantius Palæologus was uſed to ſay, that did not the authority of the Scriptures perſwade him otherwiſe, he ſhould look for Paradiſe no where elſe, than in perſuavi Patavina amœnitate, amongſt the flouriſhing and delightful ſweetneſſes of the Paduan field. A Town of great eſteem in the time of the Romans, who much reſorted to the ſame: and much frequented at the preſent for the Univerſity here eſtabliſhed Anno 1220. famous for Phyſicians, who have here a Garden of Simples; of good name alſo for the birth of Livy the Hiſtorian, Julius Paulus a Civil Lawyer his Co-temporary, L. Aruntius Stella, and C. Valerius Flaccus, two famous Poets celebrated by Martial: and in the later times, of Marſilius Patavinus a Minorite Frier, who wrote ſo learnedly in behalf of the Emperour, againſt the Pope, Fr. Zabarella the Civilian, Mic. Savanarola the Phyſician, Maginus the Geographer, and divers others. It was much renowned in former times for the humanity of the Men, and chaſtity of the Women; which laſt ſo eminent and famous, that as chaſte as one of Padua, grew into a Proverb. Hereunto alludeth Martial, ſpeaking of his laſcivious Writings;

Tu quoq; nequitias noſtri luſuſq; libelli,
Uda puella leges, ſis Patavina licet.

Young Maids my wanton lines will long to ſee,
And read them o're, though Patavines they be.

The City after much viciſſitude of Fortune, fell into the power of the Venetians, with all her Territories, being in compaſs one hundred and eighty miles, Anno 1400.

Michael

Michael Steno then Duke; Vicenza being won about the same time also. 4. Brescia, the second City for bigness and beauty in all Lombardy. It is also the Seat of an Archbishop, who is an Earl, a Marquess, and a Duke. Her Territories are in length one hundred, in breadth fifty miles; which the Citizens, together with their Freedom, bought of Otho the German Emperour, but lost it to Philip Maria Visconti, Duke of Milain, Anno 1421. to whom they yielded upon certain conditions; which being broken by the Duke, they gave themselves unto the Seigneury of Venice, Anno 1434, Francis Foscari being then Duke; under whom it continueth to this day. The City is very populous, the air sound and good, the soil exceeding plentiful of Corn, Wine, and Fruits; and having in it Mines both of Iron and Copper, to the great enriching of the people. It was anciently the chief of the Cenomani, who coming out of Gaul, drove the Tuscans hence, and seated themselves in their habitations, till finally conquered by the Romans. It is situate on a little River called Garcia, which runneth through the middle of it; and is said to contain at this time 50000 Inhabitants. 5. Verona, so called (as some conceit it) quasi vere una; or as others, quasi Brenouia, because built by Brennus; both false and frivolous alike. It is situate on the Banks of the River Athesis, and is counted the first City of the second rank of the Cities of Italy: proud in the birth of Catullus, a well-known Poet; and in an Amphitheatre (a remainder of the Roman greatness) able to contain 80000 persons. The Territories hereof are sixty five miles in length, forty miles in breadth, enriched with many medicinal Herbs, (especially on Mount Baldus, an hill therein) where the Physicians go a Simpling. 6. Bebriacum, or Bedriacum, as some Writers call it, two days march from Verona, now a small Borrough named Labinia, and never of any great note when it was at the best. Remarkable in the Roman Stories, for the defeat here given by the Vitellians unto Otho's Army; and after by Vespasian's Forces unto those of Vitellius. By Tacitus called in that regard duabus Romanis cladibus notus & infaustus Vicus. 7. Crema, a Town of no great Antiquity, but situate in a wealthy soil, well peopled, and as well built for the private Edifices: so strongly fortified, that it is reckoned the chief Bulwark of the Signeury of Venice, against the Millanese, on the borders of which State it standeth. First built about the year 970. by some remnants of the Anthropomorphites, who on the destruction of Parnassus (a Town of Lombardy) where before they lived, abjured their heresie, and were permitted to build here. Honoured in succeeding times with a See Episcopal; and either the birth-place or preferment of John Cremensis, a Roman Cardinal. Who being by Pope Honorius sent into England, Anno 1225, to dissuade the Clergy men from Marriage; and having in a Convocation of the Clergy, called for that purpose, highly advanced the honour of a single life, and shewed the inconvenience and unfitness of Marriage, in men preferred unto Holy Orders; was the night following (to the great discredit both of his cause and person) taken in Adultery. 8. Bergomo, a right ancient Town, but very well built, seated upon the side of an hill, and having a very large and beautiful Suburb; the Territory whereof hath many rough and craggy Mountains, the spurs and excursions of the Alpes; but withall many rich and delightful Valleys, intermingled with them. The people of this City and Country are said to speak the coarsest language of any in Italy; but to have as fine Wits as the best. Places of more inferiour note are, 1. Este, (Ateste in most Latine Writers) whence came the Family D'Este, late Dukes of Ferrara. 2. Liniacum, a strong Garrison on the borders of Mantua; as 3. Castel-Franco is towards Ferrara; and 4. Seraval, of most remarkableness for the great quantity of Armour which is therein made. 5. Feltri, which still preserves its old name of Feltria; most memorable at the present for a See Episcopal. 6. Altina, a Bishops See also, but destroyed and ruined.

This Province being anciently a part of the Cisalpine Gaul, fell to the power of the Romans at the end of the second Punick War: and being conquered by the Romans, did continue theirs, till first the Gothes, and afterwards the Lombards became Masters of it. Afterwards in the fall of the Kingdom of Lombardy, it fell first unto the French, and after to the German Empire; from which by many mean conveyances, it came at last to Ottocarus, King of Bohemia and Duke of Austria, who bought the same of Ulricus the last Duke of Carinthia: whose Predecessor probably had been seized hereof, from the time that Henry Son of Engelbert, Præfect of Histria, adopted by Henry of Epperstein Duke of Carinthia, or Karnten, succeeded him in that Estate. Upon a reconciliation made betwixt this Ottocarus and Rodolphus of Habspurg (then Emperour of Germany) it was added (together with Austria it self) unto the Patrimony of that Family, sold by Duke Leopold the Ninth, to the Carara's, then Lords of Padua; in ruine of whose Estate and Family, it fell (together with that City) into the power of the Venetians, who still hold the same.

2. FRIULI hath on the East the River Formio, which parteth it from Histria; on the West, Marca Trevisana, and a branch of the Alpes; on the North, the main body of the Alpes, which divide it from Germany; and on the South, the Adriatick Sea, or Gulf of Venice.

It is called Forum Julii in the Latine (of which that of Friuli is derived) from Julius Cæsar, who conducting his Armies this way, built the Town so named; and from that march of his, the Alpes adjoining, as 'tis thought, had the name of Juliæ. By some Writers of the middle times it is called Regio Aquilegiensis, as appertaining for the most part, by the gift of the Emperours Otho and Conradus, to the Church, or Patriarchate of Aquileia; and by the common people of Venice for the most part, Patria, or the Country, because from these parts they derive their first Original. In which regard part of the Region of Venetia, as before was said.

The Country is in a manner square, each side fifty miles; watered with the Rivers of 1. Hydra, heretofore of no small fame for the Silver Mines; 2. Tiliaventum, rising from the Alpes, and navigable towards the latter end of its course: but broken into many Chanels (seven at least in number) which makes it not so navigable as it would be otherwise; most of these Chanels being shallow, and easily forded, but swift and violent withal, by reason of their fall from the neighbouring Hills. 3. Natisco, neighboured by the famous City of Aquileia. 4. Timavus, mentioned in the first of the Æneids, which rising out of the Alpes, and running under ground for the space of 330 furlongs, breaketh out again; and being branched into nine Chanels, falleth into the Gulf or Bay of Trieste. By Niger it is now called Laretus; but by Leander named Timavo. The Soil sufficiently fruitful, except towards the Alpes, and yielding a very pleasant Wine, which Pliny did prefer before any in Italy.

Towns herein of most note and consequence, 1. Aquileia, or Aquilegia, as some call it, made the Metropolis first of the Province of Histria and Venetia, by the Emperour Antoninus; as afterwards of the whole Diocess of Italy, by the Western Emperours. Honoured in that regard with the seat of the Præfectus Prætorio, or of his Vicarius or Lieutenant: translated from Millain to this City, as the

the Gate of Italy, by which the barbarous Nations were to make their entrance; never so like to be shut out, as by the power and presence of so great an Officer. After this time, and on this occasion, the Bishop hereof had the title of Patriarch. And here the Patriarchal See had not long continued, when the City was destroyed by Attila, that furious Hun; 37000 of the Citizens being slain with the Sword, the rest removing to some places of more safe abode. Re-edified afterwards by Narses, but never able to recover its former lustre. After which time fearing the like miseries from the hands of the Lombards, the Patriarchal See was removed to Venice, as the safer place, and setled in the Isle of Grada; yet so, that the succeeding Bishops of Aquileia (for they stayed at Venice only till the times were quiet) do still retain the dignity and name of Patriarchs, as well as those of Grada do, and with better reason. For besides the honour which it had in being made the seat of the Præfectus Prætorio, it had been formerly more honoured with the residence of Augustus Cæsar, who here kept his Court; whence it had the name of Roma altera, or a second Rome, and of Tiberius who lived here with Julia the daughter of the said Augustus, before his coming to the Empire. As for the City it self, it is situate on the River Natisco, but not well inhabited at the present; partly because of the ill Air, partly by the removal of the Patriarch thence, drawn by the Venetians of late times, for good reasons of State, to fix his dwelling in their City, and drawing after him a great resort of Bishops, and others of the Clergy of his Jurisdiction, principally by the ill neighbourhood of Venice, attracting all Trade unto it self. Most memorable in old story for enduring that famous Siege against Maximinus, for the safety of the Empire of Rome, and her Emperours Maximus and Balbinus. In whose cause the Citizens hereof were so resolutely faithful, that they bereaved the women (willing to lose that invaluable ornament of their Sex, for the common good) of the hair of their heads to make Bow-strings withall. Nor did this pious constancy of theirs want an happy issue. For they beheld the Tyrant headless under their walls (slain by the hands of his own Souldiers) and saw the Metropolis of the World preserved by their loyalty. And yet the matter was not ended with the death of the Tyrant; the Souldiers and people laying hands on his Children also, and putting all to the Sword. Of which cruelty being asked the reason, they returned this answer, That not a Whelp was to be spared of so ill a litter; none of the brood of such a Cur; or in the language of the Author, Pessimi Canis Catulus non est relinquendus. 2. Trieste, of old called Tergestum, from whence a spacious Bay adjoining had anciently the name of Sinus Tergestinus, and is now called Golfo di Trieste. The Bay replenished principally with the water of the River Timavus, which with many streams doth fall into it, and is therefore by the inhabitants of that Gulf or Bay, called Fons Muris, as Polybius in Strabo telleth us. The Town of greater Antiquity than observation, mentioned by Pliny and some others of the Ancient Writers, but not else considerable. 3. Montfalcon, famous for its medicinal herbs. 4. Porto Gruare, of old called Portus Romatinus, an Haven-Town, as the name importeth. 5. Concordia, in former times of no small esteem; but so demolished by Attila the Hun, that it is now nothing but a ruine. The people hereof betaking themselves to the Islands in the Marishes of Venice, where they planted in Torcellan, Muriano, Constantiaca, and some others were adjoining to them, of which more hereafter. 6. Utina, or Uden, the fairest and largest at this time of all the Province, containing about five miles in compass, and about 15000 Inhabitants. Honoured for a time with the Patriarchal See, removed hither from Aquilegia, at some Siege thereof: of which though long ago deprived, yet it is still the ordinary Seat of the Procurator or Principal Governour, sent from Venice hither. 7. Palma, a new Town, as being built by the Venetians no longer since than the year 1583, but held to be the best fortified of any in Italy. 8. Cividad de Austria, first built by Julius Cæsar, in some of his marches towards Gaul, by whom it was called Julium, after Forum Julii, whence the name of Friuli (Districtus Foro-Julienſis, as the Latines call it) came unto the Province. But being taken and repaired by some Princes of the Austrian Family (on the borders of whose Estate it standeth) it got this new name of Cividad de Austria.

This Province anciently was the Seat of the Euganei, inhabiting this tract and part of Marchia Trevigiana. But those being vanquished by the Veneti; and the Veneti by the Cisalpine Gauls, it became finally subject to the State of Rome, and in the fall of that great Empire was one of the four Dukedoms founded by the Lombards, when they conquered Italy; the other three being Turin, Benevent, and Spoleto. The Family of the Berengarii were once Dukes hereof; three of which were of special fame, and two of them Competitors for the Kingdom of Italy. But this Family being suppressed by the Emperour Otho, he gave a great part of the Country to the Church of Aquileia; to which almost all the rest was added by the Emperour Conrade; yet so that there were divers petit Lords, who had good Estates in it; the name of Duke remaining unto some of the ancient race. One of which named Luitprandus, envying to the Venetians their increase of Dominion, made War against them: which ended in the loss of his Country, Anno 1020, or thereabouts; ever since subject to that State: the Patriarch of Aquileia (whose authority in this Country began to decline, in the rising of the State of Venice) surrendring all his interest also to that powerful Signeury as better able to defend it against all Pretenders, Anno 1420. But notwithstanding this surrendry, the Patriarch hath still large possessions and revenues here, and still retains his Jurisdiction over the Prelates of this Country, and those of Histria and Trevigiana (20 in all, or thereabouts) six only which are those of the Isles of Venice, continuing at this day under him of Grada.

HISTRIA is invironed on the East, West, and South, with the Adriatick, in the manner of a Demy-Island, or Peninsula, save where it toucheth on Friuli; and on the North is parted from Carinthia, with the Alpes of Germany. The Country very woody, and full of quarries, affording materials to Venice, both for Ships and Houses; not comparable for fertility to the rest of Italy; and of air so sickly and unwholsom, that the Venetians were compelled to hire people to dwell there, and afterwards to grant them many large immunities. It is two hundred miles in compass, watered with the Rivers of 1. Formio, which they now call Risano; 2. Nauportus, called at this day Quietus; and 3. Arsia, which runneth into the Gulf of Quevero, called anciently Sinus Flanaticus, and divides this Country from Liburnia, a Sclavonian Province.

The chief Towns of it are, 1. Cap de Istria, called in Pliny's time Ægide; and being afterwards repaired by the Emperour Justin, was called Justinopolis. But being taken and destroyed by the Genoese, and rebuilt again, it took the name of Caput Histriæ, or Cape d' Istria; because the principal of the Province and Bishops See. Of this See was Vergerius Bishop, about the time of Luther's first preaching in Germany, who with Antonio de Dominis Archbishop of Spalato, were of most note of any of these these parts of the world, that fell off from the Church of of Rome to the Protestant party, and therefore shall be spoken of in more particulars; Spalato in his proper place: and Vergerius here. Being a man of great industry, and eminent parts, he was by many of the Popes employed in Germany, against Luther. In which negotiation he behaved himself with such dexterity, and gave such content unto the Pope, that Paul 3. An. 1541. intended to have made him Cardinal; had not some who envyed him that honour, accused him of Lutheranism. To purge himself he began to write a Book, entituled, Against the Apostata's of Germany, in the pursuit whereof pondering of Luther's reasons he became of his opinion; which being known, he was driven from Justinople. He submitted himself and his cause to the Fathers at Trent, but could not get a hearing. Thence he went to the D. of Mantua, from him to the State of Venice; but no where finding protection, he retired unto the Grisons, and there preached; till Christopher, Duke of Wittenberg, Anno 1548, placed him in his University of Tubing, and here allowed him a sufficiency of maintenance. It was built by Justinus (as before) the Nephew of Justinian the Emperour, as a Fortress against the incursions of the barbarous people. 2 Pola, built by the Colchians, at their first coming hither, the name in their language importing as much as the place of banishment. It was after made a Roman Colony, and called Pietas Julia: but being first destroyed by Attila, after by the Genoese, it recovered the old name again; and still continueth with the title of a See Episcopal. It abutteth upon Sinus Flanaticus, or the Golf of Quevero. 3. Parenzo. 4. Plitun, 5. Cita Nova, all of them seated in the Midland, and not much observable, but that Parenzo, and Cita Nova are Episcopal Sees: this last being anciently called Emonia, whence the Bishop hath the name of Emonienses. 6. Rovigno, in a little Island, and mounted on an high hill, not unfruitful in Olives; beautified with a convenient Port, and that defended also by a very strong Castle. The Town but poor, by reason of the ill neighbourhood of Venice, from which distant not above twenty miles; inhabited for the most part by Marriners, and skilful Pilots, hired by such ships as are bound for Venice, to conduct them safely over the Bars of Malamocco. The Country adjoining mountainous and somewhat wild; but those mountains covered on the outside with Physical Simples; and yielding many Quarries of most excellent Marble, which so adorn the Venetian Palaces.

It is recorded that the Histrians were a people of Colchis, who being sent by King Æeta to pursue Jason and the Argonauts, were driven up this Gulf: and either for fear of the Kings anger, or not daring to venture their weak Vessel to so long a voyage, as from hence to Colchis whence they came; stayed in this Country. It was after that time called Iapigia, from Iapis an Ætolian, who first planted here; and took the name of Itria from the Istri, a people on the banks of Ister, or Danubius; who made up a considerable part of this plantation. Siding with the Ætolians in their Wars against the Romans, and making many inrodes and excursions on them; they were invaded first by Manlius, without leave of the Senate: and him they charged with such a fury, that they beat him out of his Camp. Where finding plenty of Wine, and all store of Provisions, they fell roundly to it; till Manlius having rallied his men again, charged them in their Cups, and killed 8000 in the place, their miserable King being so hotly pursued by the Victors, that he was fain to kill himself for fear of Captivity. This was in Anno V.C. 575. Cl. Pulcher the next Consul perfected the conquest. Sempronius long time after that, sc. An. V.C. 625. reduced it to the form of a Province. So it continued to the time of Augustus Cæsar, who joining it to that of Venice (or Venetia) made out of both the eleventh and last Region of Italy. Under the Romans they continued whilst that Empire stood, and after the decay thereof regained their liberties; which they enjoyed till by Piracy molesting the Venetians, they lost many of their Towns to Duke Petro Candiano, Anno 938; and the whole Country was made Tributary, by the valour of the Duke Henry Dondolo about the year 1190. After which many times rebelling, they were still re-conquered.

4. The fourth member of this Estate with respect to Italy, are some ISLANDS in the Adriatick; which being principally under the command of this Commonwealth, is commonly called the Gulf of Venice; a Gulf extending in length 700 miles, in breadth 140 miles, in some places less; so called of Adria once a famous Haven Town (as before was said) at the mouth of Eridanus or Po. Concerning which we are to know, that though this Gulf or Bay of the Adriatick extended no farther than the Eastern parts of Dalmatia, where the Sea beginneth to take the name of the Ionian; yet Mare Adriaticum, or the Adriatick Sea was of greater length. Extended by the Ancients over the Ionian, and thence South-westward till it meeteth with the Tuscan Seas; and Southwards, till it come to the coast of Africk; insomuch as Mare Lybicum, or the Sea of Africk, is by Orosius made a part of the Adriatick. For speaking of the Province of Tripolis (a Province of Africk) properly and especially so called, he boundeth it on the North with the Adriatick; as he doth the Isle of Crete, on the South-side of it, with the Lybian Sea, quod & Adriaticum vocant, which they also call the Adriatick, as his own words are. The like might also be made evident out of other Authors, both Greek and Latin: which I note here, because Paul's being tossed up and down in the Sea of Adria, as is said Act. 27. 27. and being after cast on shore in the Isle of Melita; occasioned some to think this Melite or Malta, to be that Island of Dalmatia, which is now called Melida being seated in the Bay or Golf of Adria: whereas the Text speaks plainly of that Isle of Malta, which lieth in the furthest parts of the Adriatick Sea, on the Coasts of Africk. But to return to this Golf, it was accounted heretofore to be very tempestuous and unsafe, as appeareth by Improbo iracundior Adria, in Horace, the Minax Adriaticum, in Catullus; and the Ventosi tumor Adriæ, in Seneca's Thyestes. But when the Empress Helena had found the Cross on which CHRIST suffered, she caused one of the three Nails with which his body was fastned to it, to be thrown of purpose into this Sea; since which time, as Platina hath told us in the life of Pope Sylvester (and cites Saint Ambrose for his Author) it hath been very calm and quiet; the second nail being made into a Bridle for her Son Constantine's Horse, and a Crest for his Helmet of the third. But not to trust too much to the truth of this miracle, certain it is that the Venetians are Lords of it, by reason of their Naval Power: and that it is every year espoused to the Duke of Venice, by the solemn casting in of a Wedding Ring; and every year Baptized on Epiphany-day, by the Bishop of Zant. When this last Ceremony took beginning, I am yet to seek. But for the first, which is performed with a great deal of state, every Holy-Thursday, the Duke, and all the Magnificos being rowed in the Bucentaure (which is a rich and stately Gally made for such Solemnities, and capable of 200 persons, whence it had the name) it took beginning from Pope Alexander the third. Who being hardly put to it by the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa, fled unto Venice in the habit of a Cook; Sebastian Cyani being then Duke: in prosecution of whose quarrel, the Venetians encountred Otho the Emperors Son vanquished him, and reſtored the Pope. The Duke returning back in Triumph with his Royal Priſoners, was thus ſaluted by the Pope. Cyani, take here this Ring of Gold, and by giving it unto the Sea oblige it unto thee: a Ceremony which on this day (the Aſcention day) ſhall be yearly obſerved both by thee and thy Succeſſors; that ſo poſterity may know that you have purchaſed the dominion thereof by your valour, and made it ſubject to you, as a Wife to her Husband.

The principal Iſlands of this Sea, lie on the other ſide thereof, on the coaſt of Dalmatia. Some few there are upon this ſide, but thoſe (as well as theſe under the command of this Signeury) neither great nor famous. Of theſe the chief are, 1. MALAMOCCO, in Latin Methuacum, ſituate at the South-weſt end of the Bank or Cauſey called Il Lido; now only conſiderable for the Haven, which is large and deep, made by the influx of Meduacus before mentioned; in which the greater ſhips do ride, till they hire Pilots from Rovigno to croſs the Bars. It was ennobled heretofore with the Duke's Palace, and an Epiſcopal See: the See of Padua being tranſlated hither, at the ſack of that City by the Lombards. But the Duke's Palace being removed to Rialto, and the Epiſcopal See to the Iſland of Chioggia; it is now inhabited for the moſt part by none but Sea-men. 2. TORCELLAN, in which there is a little City of the ſame name, honoured with a Biſhops See, (the Biſhop of Altina with much people with him, for fear of the ſaid Lombards retiring hither) but by reaſon of the ill air not very well peopled. 3. MURIANUM, or MURIANO, three miles in compaſs, and but one from Venice, of a ſound air, and very well inhabited, the people whereof make the beſt Venice Glaſſes, ſo much uſed in all parts. 4. CHIOGGIA, called in Latin Foſſa Clodia, a little weſt of Malamocco, at the very entrance into the Mariſhes from the Adriatick: diſtant from Venice 25 miles; to which it ſerveth inſtead of a Bulwark. There is a Town in it of the ſame name, to which the Biſhops See was removed from Malamocco, Anno 1103, and near to which are many Saltpits, which yield great gain unto the people, and as much unto the Common-wealth. Near to this Iſland the Genoeſe ſo diſcomfited the Venetians in a Fight at Sea, that thereupon, (the taking of the Iſland following ſhortly after) they were offered a blank Charter to write what they would. But the Genoeſe being grown too inſolent on their good ſucceſs, made the City deſperate; who putting all to hazard, fell again upon them, beat them, purſued them home, and there utterly cruſhed them; as we ſhall tell you more at large when we come to Genoa. 5. POVEGIA, five miles from the City, firſt peopled by ſome who had raiſed a commotion in the City, on the death of Petro Tradonico the thirteenth Duke. After which much increaſed both in wealth and buildings, till deſtroyed by the Genoeſe. It is called Pupilia by the Latins. 6. JUDECHA, (in Latin called Judaica) ſo named from the Jews who did there inhabit: not above half a mile from the City, and not very large; but liberally furniſhed with moſt pleaſant Gardens. Theſe and the reſt reckoned as members of Trevigiana or appendants on it.

Betwixt theſe Iſlands and the main land of Friuli, lyeth a ſhoal of little Iſlets, in and amongſt which ſtandeth the renowned City of Venice, the head City of this Common-wealth, and the glory of Italy. Theſe Iſlets 72 in number, but joined together by many Bridges, of which here are ſaid to be 4000 at leaſt, beſides 10000 Boats for paſſage from one Iſle to the other. The compaſs of the whole aggregate body ſaid to be eight miles, the buildings fair, and generally adorned with Glaſs-Windows; an Ornament not common in Italy; where the windows for the moſt part are made with Paper to let in the light: and that Paper oiled all over to keep out the wet. The number of the Inhabitants eſtimated at 300 thouſand. By the ſituation one would think, that it was denominated from Venetia, which in the old Latin ſignifieth the ſeething or frothing of the Sea. VENETIA maris exæſtuatio eſt quæ ad littus veniat, ſaith the old Gloſſary upon Iſidore, out of Marcus Varro. But the truth is, that it was ſo called from the Veneti, the old inhabitants of the neighbouring Province of Friuli; who to avoid the fury of the barbarous Huns then threatning Italy, abandoned the main land and built this City in the bogs and mariſhes of the Sea adjoining. And that it might afford them the greater ſafety, they not only built it in the moſt inward part of the Adriatick Sea, commonly called the Gulf of Venice; but in the midſt of many Lakes of Salt-water, extending ninety miles in compaſs, and having on the Eaſt the ſaid Adriatick Sea for the length of 550 miles: betwixt which and the ſaid Lakes there is a Bank or Cauſey which they call Il Lido, made as it were by nature to defend the Iſlands which lie in this Lake, from the violent fury of the Sea. A Cauſey of 35 miles in length, bending like a Bow, and opening in ſeven places only; which ſerve as well to keep the Lakes always full of water, as for the paſſage of Veſſels to and from the City: known by the names of the Ports of 1. Brondolo, 2. Chioza, 3. Malamocco, 4. the three Caſtles, or the Caſtles of Lio. 5. S. Eraſmus, 6. Lito Maggiore, or the great ſhore; and 7. the Treports: of which that of Brondolo lieth moſt to the Southweſt, and that of Treports to the Northweſt of the ſaid great Cauſey. And through every one of theſe there is ſafe paſſage for Ships and Barks of ſmaller burden: the bigger being compelled to lie at Anchor, on the South ſide of the City, near to the Ports of Malamocco, and the Caſtles of Lio, which are very well fortified; and there muſt remain till they are brought in by skilful Pilots, who know the paſſages, which, by reaſon of the ſhifting of the Sands, change very often. On the Weſt and North ſides, it is compaſſed with very deep Mariſhes, about five miles diſtant from the Land; and on the South with many Iſlands, in which are ſeveral Churches and Monaſteries, like ſo many Forts; which lie between it and thoſe parts of Italy, which are not under the obedience of the Common-wealth. So that it is impoſſible to be taken, but by an Army which can ſtretch 150 miles in compaſs. It is built, as before is ſaid, on 72 Iſlands, 60 of which lie cloſe together round about the Rialto, the other at a greater diſtance. Of theſe the principal, 1. Heraclea near the firm land of Trevigiana, peopled at firſt by ſuch as followed Magnus Biſhop of Uderza, who to avoid the fury of the Lombards came and planted here: calling the Iſland and the Town which they founded in it by the name of Heraclea, in honour of Heraclius the Eaſtern Emperour in whoſe time it hapned. Made by this means a Biſhops See, and being grown populous withall, it was honoured with the firſt Seat of the Dukes of Venice, removed by Theodatus the ſeventh Duke to Malomocco, and from thence finally to Rialto. Deſtroyed by Pepin King of Italy, Son of Charles the Great; it was re-edified in the time of Angelo Partitiario the tenth Duke, and called Cita Nova; more memorable at this time for the antiquity of the Biſhops See, than the number of Citizens. 2. Jeſulan, neighbouring to Heraclea, firſt planted by ſome Country people, who flying the fury of the Lombards, brought with them a great drove of Mares, and of Horſes, whence it had the name of Equilene, or Equilia. Made afterwards a Biſhops See alſo, by the name of Jeſulanus or Equilienſis. 3. Grada, on the ſame part of the City alſo, but more towards the North, inhabited at firſt by ſuch of the City of Aquileia as betook themſelves thither thither to avoid the tyranny of the Hunnes: but made more eminent than before, by Paul the Patriarch of that City, who flying the fury of the Lombards, transported to this Island the Relicks and Treasures of his Church; and setled where the Church of S. Euphemia had been built before. And though Helie who succeeded Paul, obtained of Pope Pelagius the 2. An. 580. that the Bishops of Grada should from thenceforth have the title of Patriarchs, and be esteemed the Metropolitans of the City and Country of Venice: yet the Aquilcian would not so be robbed of his ancient priviledges, and therefore stirred up many suits and disputes about it. The business compromised at last to this effect, that the Patriarch of Aquileia should enjoy his ancient jurisdiction over all the Churches in the Continent which belonged unto him: and that he of Grada, with the title and stile of Patriarch, should have like jurisdiction over the Churches in the Islands; that is to say, the Bishopricks of Heraclea (or Cita Nova) Equilia, Torcellan, Chioggia, Caprulæ, and Castilla Olindo. His habitation near the Church of S. Sylvester, in the third Region of the City, called de Canaregio. 4. Caprulæ, towards the openings of the Adriatick, a Bishops See before the time of Charles the Great, but not else observable: none of these four, nor of the residue of the twelve, which be remote from the Rialto, being much inhabited at the present. Castello Olindo, or Olivaller as some call it; situate at the East end of the City, not far from the Causey called IL Lido, of old a City of it self (as the former were) now joined by a Bridge to the rest of Venice; of most note for the Cathedral Church of S. Peter, and the Palace of the Venetian Patriarch: this City having been made a Bishops See by Pope Adrian the first Anno 774. with jurisdiction over the Isles of Olivolla, Rialto, Lupria, and Dorse-dura. His title first Castellonensis, but afterwards, the Bishop of Venice, because the best part of the City did belong unto him, invested by the Duke, and confirmed by the Patriarch of Grada, whose suffragans they were till the year 1450. At what time Pope Eugenius the 4. (a Native of the City of Venice) advanced the Bishops hereof to the dignity and name of Patriarch; assigning the Churches of Dalmatia) of which they were entituled Primates) for their jurisdiction. By means whereof, and by perswading him of Aquileia to fix his dwelling here also, as before is said, there are no fewer than three Patriarchs which have their constant habitation in the City of Venice. 6. Rialto, which is of most esteem and reputation, so called quasi Rivo alto, because the Marishes are there deeper than in other places; or quasi Ripa alta, because it lay higher above the waters than the other Islands. For which reasons that Island getting reputation above the rest, most of the Gentlemen setled their dwellings in the same; and drew thither in the end, the Dukes Palace also, insomuch that in some ancient Writings, the whole City hath been Rialto; many of the old Records being dated in such and such a year of the Rialto. But as they did increase in numbers, so were they fain to spread themselves from one Isle to another; till in the end they built on all the Islands which lay near together, and might conveniently be joined to Boats or Bridges. By this Rialto runs the passage called the Grand Canale, being in length about 1300 paces, and some forty in breadth; adorned on both sides with stately and magnificent Palaces; and covered with incredible numbers of Boats called Gondolo's, very neatly built, and veiled over with Cloth, so that the passengers may go unseen and unknown, without the molestation of Sun, wind, or rain. For publick Buildings it hath in it 70 Parish Churches, to each of which belongeth a Market-place and a Well; 31 Cloysters of Monks, 28 of Nuns, besides Chappels and Alms-houses.

The principal Church of this City is that of S. Mark, the Patron of their Common-wealth, whose body they report to have been brought hither from Alexandria in Egypt, and intombed herein: affirmed by some to be the richest and goodliest Church in all the World. The building of Mosaick work, of which they boast themselves to have been the Authors. A kind of work by the Grecians called Ἀβάκεγτα, and by the Latine Writers Musiva, Musica, and Musaica, wrought out of Stones or Metals of divers colours, into the shape of Flowers, Knots, Birds, Beasts, and other fancies of the Workman; yet done with such exactness of skill and judgment, that it seemeth to be all one stone, the work rather of Nature than Art. A Church of admirable work both within and without, compacted of most rare pieces of Marble, Porphyrie, and a rich stone which the Lapidaries called Ophitis, because it is speckled like a Snake; adorned on the outside with 148 Pillars of Marble, and eight of Porphyrie near the door; besides 600 Marble Pillars of a lesser size, which carry up an open Gallery round about the Church; from whence the Magistrates and others of the principal Citizens, behold such shews as are presented in the Market place, adjoining to it. The Church in length not above 200 foot of Venice measure, nor above 50 in breadth; the roof whereof being of an Orbicular form, lyeth open at the very top, where the light comes in, there being no Windows in all the Church, as commonly the Churches in Italy are exceeding dark, either to strike in the spectators a religious reverence, or to make their Candles shew the better. And for the inside of the Church, the riches of it are so great, Images so glorious, the furniture of the Altars so above comparison; that all the treasures of the State, may seem to be amassed in the decking of it. And yet as goodly and as glorious as the Fabrick is, it is still unfinished; and, as some think, is kept unfinished on purpose partly to draw on other Benefactors to advance the work, the benefit of whose liberality may be employed unto the use of the publick Treasury; and partly, lest Revenues which are given already should be resumed by the Heirs of the deceased, if the work were ended. So infinitely doth the furniture of the Church exceed the sumptuousness and beauty of the Church it self.

Of other of the publick buildings, the Council-house, the Ducal Palace, Monasteries, Churches, and the like, though stately and magnificent Structures, I forbear to speak. Nor shall I here say any thing of their private houses, so large and beautified, that here are said to be no fewer than 200 (most of them on the Grand Canale) able to entertain and lodge the best King in Christendom. All I shall add, and so leave this City, will be a word or two of their Arsenal, and publick Magazine. In the first of which they have in readiness 200 Gallies, with rooms for Cables, Masts, Sails, Victuals, and Ammunition of all sorts; able thereby to set out a Navy to Sea, on the shortest warning. And in the other it is said, that they have Arms sufficient for 100000 Souldiers of all sorts; amongst which are affirmed to be a thousand Coats of Plate, garnished with Gold, and covered with Velvet; fit for the use and wearing of the greatest Princes. But of their power and forces both by Sea and Land, we shall speak more shortly. In the mean time I take my leave of this gallant City in this following Epigram of Sannazarius, one of our late Italian Poets, viz.

Viderat Adriacis Venetam Neptunus in undis
Stare urbem, & toto ponere jura mari:

Nunc mihi Tarpeias quantum vis Jupiter, arces
Objice, & illa tui mœnia Martis, ait.
Si Pelago Tibrim præfers, Urbem aſpice utramque
Illam homines dices, hanc poſuiſſe deos.

In Engliſh thus:

Neptune ſaw Venice in the Adrian ſtand,
And all the Sea brought under her command;
Now Jove, ſaid he, thy Roman Towers object,
And thoſe proud Walls which Mars did once protect.
Before the Sea if Tiber thou preſer,
Behold both Cities, and thou wilt aver,
That men built Rome; the Gods placed Venice there.

Proceed we now unto their ſtory: and if we look upon them in their firſt Original, we ſhall find them to have been a people of Paphlagonia (a Province of Aſia the leſſer) called the Heneti, who aiding Priamus King of Troy in his ten years Wars againſt the Greeks, where they loſt their King, named Philemenes (or Philemon, as ſome call him) choſe rather to ſeek out new Dwellings, than return with ſhame unto their old. Upon this reſolution they join themſelves to Antenor, who with ſome remnant of the Trojans had the ſame deſign; and ſailing as the Wind and Sea conducted them, arrived at laſt in thoſe Parts of Italy, now called Friuli. So witneſſeth the Poet, ſaying.

Antenor potuit, mediis illapſus Achivis,
Illyricos penetrare Sinus, atque intima tutus
Regna Liburnorum, & fontes ſuperare Timavi.

Antenor through the Greeks could force his way,
And ſafely piercing the Illyrian Bay,
Croſs the Liburnian Realms; and conquer all,
From fierce Timavus Fountain, to his fall.

Here landing they ſubdued the Euganei (who before inhabited this Tract) and poſſeſſed their Dwellings: the name of Heneti being changed into that of Veneti. But this perhaps not done till ſubdued by the Galls, and made part of Gallia Ciſalpina; agreeably to the name of the Veneti, an old Gallick Nation, oppoſite to Iſle of Britain. When thoſe Galls were vanquiſhed by the Romans, the Name and Nation of theſe Veneti, was ſo conſiderable, that their Territory had the name of Venetia; and together with Hiſtria, made one Province of the Roman Empire. And here they lived in peace and ſafety under the protection of the Empire, till the terrible Noiſe of the great Preparation of the Hunns, for the Conqueſt of Italy, occaſioned many of the principal Men, with their ſeveral Retinues, to betake themſelves to the Iſlands, and inacceſſible Mariſhes of the Adriatick; where in the place now called Rialto, they laid the foundation of this City, March 25, Anno 421. Exceedingly increaſed by the Deſtruction of Aquileia, and the neighbouring Cities by Attila, and the ſaid Barbarians, Anno 456. at what time it began to be called Venetia, by the name of their Nation. Not much encreaſed in Power and Greatneſs, at the fall of the Lombardian Kingdom: though ſo conſiderable at that time, that in the Diviſion of Italy made by Charles the Great, betwixt himſelf, the Popes, and the Eaſtern Emperours; the Venetians were left at liberty, as a Free-Eſtate: and they deſerved to be left in a free condition, conſidering how notably they had freed themſelves from Pepin, the Son of Charles, who invaded them with a puiſſant Army, and was well beaten for his labour, though at firſt ſucceſsful. After which, making uſe of their ſituation, they grew not only rich in trade, but ſtrong in ſhipping; and thereby did good ſervice to the Weſtern Princes, in their Wars againſt the Turks in the Holy Land. And they ſerved themſelves well by it too: getting in one Expedition only (that namely, in which the Empire of Conſtantinople was made a Prey unto the Latines, Anno 1200.) all the Iſlands which they have at the preſent, in the Ægean and Ionian Seas; many in thoſe Seas which they have loſt; and not a few good Towns in Peloponneſus, ſince conquered from them by the Turks. Contending with the Genoeſe for the Soveraignty of the Mediterranean, they received ſo great a Blow at the Naval Battel near Chioggia, (ſpoken of before) that they had utterly loſt all, if the Enemy could have uſed his Fortune with Moderation. But being recovered of that Blow, after many various ſucceſſes and Events of War, Anno 1381. they got the better of them, and made them quiet: by means whereof being Lords Paramont at Sea, they next caſt their Eyes on the main Land of Italy, which now they were at more Leiſure to look after, than they had been formerly. The Hiſtrians had before infeſted them with Piracy, and were puniſhed for it, in the time of Duke Pietro Candiano, by the loſs of many of their Towns; but in the year 1390. the whole Country is brought under the command of this Common-wealth. Padua with a great part of Trivigiana then appendent on it, they extorted from the noble Family of the Carrari, An. 1400. The City of Vincentia they poſſeſſed themſelves of in the ſame year alſo; and not long after fully perfected their Conqueſt of Hiſtria, with the Revolts whereof they had before been often troubled.

But that whereby they moſt improved their Eſtate was by a conſtant watching of their Opportunities, taking advantage of the Factions and Fractions amongſt their neighbours, and working their own Greatneſs out of others Ruines. By means whereof they came poſſeſſed of many places, of right belonging to the Empire, and the Church of Rome; as alſo of ſome Towns, pertaining to the Dutchy of Millain; and four of the beſt Havens in the Adriatick, which properly belonged to the Realm of Naples: not giving aid to any of their diſtreſſed Neighbours, without the Mortgage or Direct Sale of ſome Piece or other. Which ſordid kind of Merchandizing drew all the Princes of thoſe parts, (Confederated together in a League at Cambray Anno 1508.) to make War upon them; every one to recover by ſtrong hand, what the Venetian had extorted from them in their neceſſity. And the Confederates thrived ſo well, that Maximilian the Emperour recovered to the Empire, the Towns and Territories of Padua, Vincentia, Verona, Trieſt, Friuli, and whatſoever elſe he laid claim unto; the Popes in Right of the Church, regained Ravenna, Cervia, Rimini (or Ariminum) and Faventia; Lewis the 12. of France in Right of the Dutchy of Millain, Bergamum, Crema, Cremona, Brixia: the King of Spain in right of the Realm of Naples, Manfredonia, Trona, Barletta, and Monopoli, all upon the Adriatick; the Duke of Ferrara gained Rovigo, and the Duke of Mantua the Town of Aſſulia. So that the Venetians being like the Jay, ſtripped of all their Feathers, were fain to quit the firm land, and betake themſelves unto the Iſles and Mariſhes of their City; having not one Foot, of all their whole Dominion left them in Italy, but their Seas and Iſlands. And yet in very little time, partly by working on the Pope to whom they quitted all their intereſt in the Towns aforeſaid; and partly by dividing the reſt of the Confederates from one another; they recovered all that they had loſt, in a little time: except the Towns of Naples only, for which they were not willing to contend with the Crown of Spain.

The Government is Ariſtocratical, managed only by the principal men of all the City, both for birth and breeding; the common people having no authority in affairs of State. The chief Officers at the firſt were many, whom they called Tribunes: but experience being had of that confuſion, which a multitude of Governours carrieth for the moſt part with it, in the year 709, they made choice of one chief Officer, whom they called their Duke. Under theſe Dukes they have gotten that great Dominion which they now enjoy: The authority of which Dukes was at firſt more abſolute, but by degrees reſtrained and limited within narrower bounds. He that beholdeth him in his Robes, his gravity and outward Port, and the reſpect given him by the people, would think no Prince could be more abſolute and ſupreme. But look upon him in the exerciſe and power of Government and he is nothing in the world but an empty Title. For notwithſtanding that he enjoyeth ſo great a dignity, yet hath he a full power in nothing, not being able to determine in any point, without the preſence of his Counſellors (being ſix in number) who always ſit with him, and diſpatch affairs both publick and private; as namely, giving audience to Ambaſſadors from Foreign States, receiving Letters from their own Miniſters, granting of Priviledges, and the like; in which the Duke can do juſt nothing, if four (at leaſt) of theſe Counſellors be not preſent with him. And yet theſe Counſellors without him may conclude of any thing. Nay he is ſo reſtrained in all things to the power of the Senate, and to three Officers called the Capi, that he may not go out of the Town without their conſent; and by them is preſcribed an order in his own Apparel. So that he is but little better than a Priſoner, when within the City; and a Traytor, if he ſtir abroad: at the beſt, but an honourable Servant. And his Revenue is as little as his Authority; as being allowed out of the common Treaſury, no more than 40000 Ducats a year, towards his expence and entertainment. As for the Soveraignty of the State, that reſides wholly in the Senate; but repreſentatively in the Duke, the ſix Counſellors, and the three Heads or Preſidents of the Forty, which are thoſe Officers (as I take it) whom they call the Capi. The Senate or Great Council, conſiſts of all the Gentlemen of Venice, above five and twenty years of age, which may amount to the number of two thouſand five hundred, though ſeldom half that number do aſſemble at once, by reaſon of their ſeveral employments in affairs of the Common-wealth, in other places: who uſually do meet together every Sunday morning, and on the morning of other Feſtivals, where they chuſe Magiſtrates, and diſtribute Governments, and other matters of the State. But becauſe ſuch great Bodies move but ſlowly, and are not very capable of truſt and ſecrecy, they parcel this great Council into leſſer Members; whereof the principal are the Pregadi, and the Council of Ten. That of the Pregadi conſiſteth of 120 in which they treat of, and determine matters of the greateſt importance; and therein conclude commonly of ſuch principal points, as formerly have been propoſed and treated of in the great Aſſembly: And in this Council beſides the 120 before mentioned, the Duke, the ſix Counſellors, and the Council of Ten, and all ſuch as have born any publick Office, have their voice or ſuffrage. This is that Council which properly and more eſpecially is called the Senate; in which nothing is to be concluded or paſſed into Acts, except four of the ſix Counſellors be preſent at them, and that ſixty at the leaſt of the whole number, give their ſuffrage to it. Then for the Council of Ten, their power is univerſal, over all affairs, ſuch as the other Councils may not meddle with, as to conclude of War, or peace, to put in execution what they think moſt neceſſary for the benefit of the Common-wealth, and other things of like weight and moment: which if they were firſt treated of in the General Council or Aſſembly, and after in that of the Pregadi, as they ought to be in common courſe; could not be poſſibly managed with ſuch ſpeed and ſecrecy, as the exigencies of the State require. And in this Council, with the Prince and his ſix Aſſiſtants, the ſupreme Majeſty of the State doth reſide eſpecially. Some other Officers there are, and thoſe of great authority and reputation, as the Procurators of St. Mark, which have the charge of the publick Treaſures, and the Avogadori, or Tribunes (as one might call them) of the people, being three in all; one of which muſt be always preſent in all conſultations, leſt any thing ſhould paſs to the prejudice, and infringement of the Priviledges of the common people.

For the whole body of the City conſiſteth either of the Gentlemen, or of Artificers and Commons. Theſe laſt are the deſcendants and progeny of ſuch as came to ſettle here when the State was fixed; invited to dwell here, and to follow their occupations, by ſeveral Priviledges and Immunities which were offered to them; and theſe they neither admit into any of their Councils, nor into any of the Offices of Truſt and Power, except it be two, that namely of the Chancellor, and the principal Secretaries, which pertain only to the people. The other are the iſſue or deſcendants of thoſe, who firſt laid the foundation of their City and Common-wealth: and theſe they have in ſuch reſpect, and ſo high eſteem, that to make any Stranger (how great and eminent ſoever) a Gentleman of the City, is the greateſt honour they can beſtow; and not beſtowed but upon the beſt deſerver. Henry the 3. of France taking this City in his way out of Poland, thought himſelf graced with this attribute, which they are very dainty and ſparing of, it being the higheſt honour which they vouchſafe to impart to ſuch Commanders of their own, and Ambaſſadors of other Princes, as have well deſerved it. And that this honour may be kept up to the very height, and their Nobility grow not too cheap, by being too numerous; neither the younger Sons of theſe Gentlemen within the City, or of the Noblemen in the Country, are permitted to marry. But otherwiſe they ſuffer them to ſatisfie their luſts, with too much impunity; and for their ſakes allow of Stews, as an evil not to be voided on the former grounds.

Now, as Otho in Tacitus ſaid to the Prætorian Soldiers, Principes è Senatu oritur, Senatus è vobis: ſo out of theſe Gentlemen are choſen the Senators, out of them the Duke. His election by Contarenus is deſcribed in this manner. In the vacancy of the place, all the Gentry above thirty years of age are aſſembled. So many as meet, caſt their names into a pot; and in another, are juſt ſo many balls, of which thirty only are gilt. Then a child draweth for each, till the thirty gilt ones be all drawn, for which thirty the child draweth again the ſecond time out of another pot, that hath only nine gilt balls. The nine ſo drawn, nominate forty, out of which forty are twelve again ſelected by the ſame kind of lot. Theſe twelve nominate five and twenty, out of which five and twenty are nine again by lot ſet apart. Theſe nine nominate 45, who are by lot again reduced unto eleven. Theſe eleven chuſe forty one, of the beſt and chiefeſt of the Senators; who after an Oath taken ſeverally, to chuſe whom they judge worthieſt, write in a ſcrole every one whom he beſt liketh. The ſcrolls are mingled together and then drawn, the fitneſs of the perſons then drawn is diſcuſſed, and he that hath moſt voices above five and twenty, is the man whom they pronounce to be elected, and adjudge with due ſolemnities to be created their Duke. By the like kind of Lottery do they chuſe Gentlemen in the Senate, and make publick Officers, inſomuch that Contarenus, who hath committed unto writing theſe publick Forms, conceiveth (I will not ſay how rightly) that the Venetian Common-wealth was modelled by Plato's Platform.

But whether this be ſo or not, certain it is, that this Common-wealth thus conſtituted, and modelled, as before is ſaid; hath laſted longer under one form of Government, than any Republick in the world, either Greek or Roman. Nor hath it only preſerved it ſelf in the ſame condition, but may moſt juſtly be accounted one of the ſtrongeſt Bulwarks of Chriſtendom againſt the incroachments of the Turks: the Wars whereof hath procured peace, and the peace thereof hath procured plenty, to the reſt of Europe. Inſomuch, that it may well be ſaid, that as Europe is the Head of the World, and Italy the face of Europe, ſo Venice is the eye of Italy, the faireſt, ſtrongeſt, and moſt active part in that powerful Body. As if the Genius of old Rome by ſome Pythagorical tranſmigration had paſſed into the body of this powerful State; and animated it with all the virtues of that City, but knit with a more permanent and conſtant temper. From ſo baſe and abject a beginning, is this City grown to be one of the beſt Supporters of the Arms of Europe.

As for the Religion of this State, they tolerate that of the Greek Church, but they themſelves profeſs no other than that of the Church of Rome: yet with ſuch caution and reſpect to their own authority, that they ſuffer not the Clergy to enjoy thoſe priviledges, which they poſſeſs in other Countries, to the publick prejudice. Hence grew the quarrel betwixt them, and Pope Paul the Fifth; in which the Signeury ſtood ſtifly to their ancient Rights, and cauſed Maſs to be duly ſaid, notwithſtanding all their Churches were under the interdict; baniſhed the Jeſuites for ever out of their Dominions, for ſtickling too buſily in behalf of the Pope: and in the end prevailed ſo far by their conſtant courage, that the Pope was fain to give over the cauſe, and reconcile them to the Church, without any ſubmiſſion. A notable example to all Chriſtian Princes, how to behave themſelves towards thoſe of Rome; who are not to be gained upon, but by ſuch reſiſtances. So eaſie a thing it is for men of conſtancy and courage, to ſhake off that yoke, which Papal Tyranny and Superſtition hath impoſed upon them.

In managing their Wars they anciently obſerved two Rules, which moſt conduced to the enlargement and ſecurity of their Common-wealth. The firſt was the exempting of their own Citizens from the Wars (not out of jealouſie, but care of their preſervation) unleſs compelled to the contrary by extream neceſſity: the body of their Armies being compounded out of the Provincial Subjects, intermixt with Mercenaries. By means whereof, they did not only keep their City in the ſame condition, able at any time, and at all times, to give Law to the reſt of their Dominions; but waſted the hot and boiling ſpirits of their Subjects, in the Wars abroad; which otherwiſe might have made too much work at home. The other was the entertaining of ſome neighbouring Prince to be the General of their Forces; whom in the concluſion of the ſervice they diſmiſſed with honour and reward. And by this courſe they avoided faction, and prevented ſervitude; Either or both of which might have hapned by employing any of their own great ones in the chief commands, who (after the example of Julius Cæſar in the ſtate of Rome) having a ſtrong party within the City, and an Army without, might perhaps have made himſelf their Prince. But this was only in the conduct of their Wars in Italy, and in ſuch times when the State was not ſo well ballanced as it hath been ſince.

As for the Forces of the State, we may behold them in relation to Sea or Land. Their Land-forces which they have in continual pay, for defence of their Dominion, conſiſt of 28000 Foot, with Captains, and all other Officers inrolled and paid; and beſides thoſe, they have a choice Band of 4000 Muſquetiers, for exerciſing of which they keep yearly Muſters, as well to improve them in experience, as to proportion them ſome gratuities, according to their well-deſervings. And as for Horſe, they maintain conſtantly 6000 men at Arms, well appointed and paid; the like whereof is not to be found in all Italy. And yet beſides this conſtant and ordinary eſtabliſhment, they are able to bring great Forces into the Field; as appeareth by their Army againſt Lewis the Twelfth: in which without diſfurniſhing any of their Forts and Garriſons, they had 2000 men of Arms, 3000 light Horſe, 30000 Foot, moſt of their own natural Subjects; ſaving that they were interlined with ſome Bands of Switzers, to which people they give yearly penſions, to be aſſured of their aid upon all occaſions. Then for the Sea-Forces, beſides that they keep fifty Gallies in continual action, for defence of the Adriatick, and that they have no leſs than 200 more laid up in the Arſenal, with all manner of tackling and ammunition appertaining to them: they have 10000 men enrolled to ſerve at the Oar, and may raiſe as many as they pleaſe for thoſe kind of ſervices, out of thoſe parts of Sclavonia, which are ſubject to them. But the great evidence of the power they can make at Sea, was the great Fleet ſet out againſt the Grand Signieur for the War of Cyprus, An. 1570. in which they manned out one great Gallion, eleven great Gallies, five and twenty tall Ships, and one hundred and fifty Gallies of leſſer burden; being in all one hundred and eighty ſeven Sail, fit for preſent ſervice. To give the total ſum in brief: they held a War by Sea and Land for ſeven years together, againſt all the Princes of Chriſtendom (excepting England) confederated againſt them by the League of Cambray: in all which time they neither wanted men nor money; and in the end, were the leaſt loſers by the bargain.

By this we may conjecture alſo at the greatneſs of the publick Treaſury, and of the yearly income which ſupplies the ſame. For though it be conceived that their ordinary ſtanding Revenue be but four millions of Ducats yearly (which yet is more than any Chriſtian Prince can boaſt of, except France and Spain) yet they have many other ways to advance their Treaſury, by laying new Impoſts on commodities as they ſee occaſion; Which needs muſt riſe to vaſt and moſt conſiderable ſums, in a City of the greateſt Traffick of any in Europe, and perhaps in all the world beſides. And yet beſides ſuch Cuſtoms and Impoſts as they lay on Merchandiſe, there is nothing which the people do eat or drink, for which they pay not ſomething to the publick Treaſury: over and above which, the pooreſt Labourer in the whole Signeury payeth his Pol-money alſo. Inſomuch, that it is credibly affirmed, that the Chriſtians generally do live in a better condition under the Turk, than under the Venetians. Without ſuch helps, (though heavy and burdenſom to the Subject) they could not poſſibly have ſpent twelve millions in the War againſt Selimus the Second; and as many a little before that, in the enterpriſe of Ferrara, and the War raiſed againſt them by the League of Cambray, which was that formerly remembred.

As

As for the Dukes of Venice, though no Soveraign Princes, nor such as do succeed each other in the right of inheritance: yet being they are always men of most eminent note, and that in their names all the business of State is acted, and all writings dated, I will subjoin a Catalogue of them to this present; to the end that meeting with their names in the course of History, we may the better know in what times they lived.

The principal Orders of Knighthood in this Republick are 1. of S. Mark, who is the Patron of this City, instituted in the year 1330, and renewed again (being grown somewhat out of use) An. 1562. The honour is commonly bestowed on the person present, sometimes by Letters Patents on a party absent; as lately upon Daniel Heinsius, one of great eminence for Learning in the Netherlands. The person chosen is to be of noble blood, at the least a Gentleman; the Word or Motto of the Order, is, Pax tibi Marce.

2. Of the glorious Virgin, first instituted by Bartholomew of Vincentia, An. 1222. Their charge is to defend Widows and Orphans, and to procure (as much as in them is) the peace of Italy. It was allowed of by Pope Urban the Fourth, An. 1262. The Arms of this Order, are a Purple Cross, between certain Stars. The Habit a white Surcoat over a Russet Cloak; and seems to be as well a Religious as a Military Institution, like to the Spanish Orders, and that of Malta.

There are in the Provinces of this Commonwealth, before described, Patriarchs 2. Bishops 16.

The Great Dukedom of TUSCANIE.

HAving thus run along the Coast of the Adriatick, or upper Sea, from the Lands of the Church unto the Alpes, which divide Italy from Germany; let us next keep along the tract of the Tuscan or Lower Sea, from the said Lands of the Church, to that part of the Alpes which divide Italy from France. And in the first place we meet with the Dukedom of Florence, or the Estate of the great Duke of Tuscany; divided on the East from S. Peters Patrimony, by the River Fisco; on the West, from the Common-wealth of Genoa, by the River Macra, and the strong Fort of Sarazena; on the North from Romandiola, and Marca Anconitana, by the Apennine Hills, and on the South-side it is bounded with the Tuscan or Tyrrhenian Seas.

It taketh up the greatest and goodliest part of all that which anciently was called Tuscany, from the Greek word θύειν, which signifieth to Sacrifice; of which act of Religious Worship, or rather of some superstitious Ceremonies appertaining to it, they are conceived to be the Authors. And to say truth, they were much given to Sooth-sayings, and Divinations, and such like vanities of Gentilism: Tages, that Merlin of the old World, first appearing here, from whom they learned the greatest part of their Superstitions. So that this name was adventitious and accidental. For properly and originally it was called Tyrrhenian, from Tyrrhenus the Son of Atys King of Lydia, who came and planted in these parts about the time that Gedeon judged the Tribes of Israel. But these names signified the same both Country and people, though in divers Languages, and with respect to different Originations: the name of Tyrrheni, and Tyrrhenis being most used by the Greeks; as that of Tyscis and Tyscia, by their Neighbours of Rome, who also called the people Hetrusci, and the Country Hetruria, from a particular Province of it which was so entituled. Anciently it extended as far Eastward as the banks of Tiber, the other bounds being then as they are at the present, and in that tract gave dwelling to a potent Nation. Who not content to be restrained within the Appennine and the Tiber, wasted three hundred Towns of the Umbri, the next bordering Nation: and built twelve Cities on the other side of the Mountains, that is to say, Adria, Verona, Vincentia, Trent, Bergamo, Mantua, Como, Vercellæ, Novara, Parma, Bononia, and Rhegium; all of esteem and reputation to this very day. They were the first Nation that carried an Offensive War to the Gates of Rome, when they gave aid to the Tarquins under King Porsena; and held held it out on the Defensive as long as any: No people in all Italy standing more stifly in defence of their common Liberties, than the Falisci, and Veientes, two Hetrurian Tribes. But nothing could withstand the Fortune of that growing Empire. Twelve Nations of them were brought under by Tarquinius Priscus, who from hence brought to Rome the Fasces and Triumphal Ornaments, and other embellishments of State: the Veii and Falisci, by the Sword of Camillus; the Conquest perfected by the conduct of Valerius Corvinus, and Fulv. Centumalus, A.V.C. 455. So the Tuscans were subdued at last, after they had been governed by their own Kings 1132 years; that is to say, from Tarchon Priscus their first King, A. M. 2550, to Tarquinius Ceso their last King, A. M. 3668.

The chief Towns of it in those times were 1. Veii, and 2. Perusia, spoken of before. 3. Pesulæ, then of very great fame, now a poor Village hard by Florence. 4. Ægyllina, situate not far from the Lake of Thrasymene, which from hence was called Vadum Agyllinum: the chief Town of the Tuscans at the coming of Æneas into Italy, and the Seat Royal of Mezentius that noted Tyrant, so often mentioned by Virgil. First built by the Pelasgi, a Greek People, and by them thus named, afterwards by mistake called Cære: by like mistake as Peru Jucatan, and others of the American Provinces, got their present names: as shall there be shewn. For the Tuscans, or the Romans as others say, demanding in their language of a Country-fellow, the name of the place, was answered in his language, χαῖρε, that is to say, God save you, or, God speed you: which word they taking for the name of the Town, did ever after call it Cære. Memorable in old time for the Baths adjoining, from hence called Balnea Cæretana; more for the preservation of the Vestal Fire, and the other holy things of Rome, when that Town was taken by the Galls. Rewarded hereupon with all the priviledges of Rome, except right of Suffrage: from whence the Tables, in which the Roman Censors used to inroll the names of those, whom they deprived of their Votes in Senate, or any other publick Council, were called Cærites Tabulæ. 5. Phaleria, on the Sea side, the principal Town of the Falisci, of which there is some remainder extant in the Village called Falaris. 6. Clusium, the Seat royal of King Porsena; for aiding which against the Galls, the Romans drew upon themselves the fury of that turbulent people. Pisa, Aretium, and such others as are still in being, we shall speak of afterwards.

The Rivers and the soil do remain as formerly, though the first altered in their names. The principal of which are, 1. Arnus, spoken of before, in the general survey of Italy. 2. Sercius, by Ptolomy called Boactus; a River which by the excellency of its Carps and Trouts, makes some amends unto the people for its violent Land-floods. 3. Palia, as violent and dangerous as the other, but not so profitable; which falleth into Tiber, near Orvietto. 4. Marta, by Ptolomy called Osa. Here is also the Lake Volsinius, which is twenty four miles in compass; and that called anciently Sabatinus, but now Laco Braciani, from which Water was conveyed to Rome. By reason of these and other Lakes, and the frequent over-flowings of the Rivers, the Country in former times was full of Bogs, which made the air unhealthy, and the ways unpassable; it being in the Flats and Marishes of Hetruria, that Annibal was turmoiled, losing herein the greatest part of his Elephants, and one of his eyes. But since those times, partly by the industry of the people, and the great providence of the Princes; the Fens in most places are well drained, and the Bogs converted to firm land: whereby the air is rectified, and the ways made pleasant; care being also taken, by great Banks and Ramparts, to keep the Rivers for the most part within their Chanels. So that the Country is now full of very spacious Fields, and fruitful Vallies, swelled here and there with pleasant Mountains, little inferiour in fertility to the richest Vales; abundantly well stored with delicious Wines, and plentiful, in a word, of all the blessings of Nature: save that the parts about Florence are defective in Wheat, the want of which is supplied from the Fields of Sienna, where there is plenty enough of it for themselves and their Neighbours; though no such superfluity, as to spare any of it unto other Provinces.

But to return unto the story, Tuscany being thus brought under the command of Rome, was made the second of those eleven Regions, into which Italy was divided by Augustus Cæsar. In the division of it made by Antoninus, and in that of Constantine, it made with Umbria one of the ten Provinces, which was immediately subject to the Præfect of the City of Rome. Afterwards in the Declination of the Roman Empire, it became a member of the Kingdom of Lombardy, then of the French, and finally of the German Empire: during which times it was Governed by an Officer of Trust and Power, whom I find sometimes called the Marquess, sometimes Duke of Tuscany; who had here more or less Authority, as they could work on the Necessities of their several Princes. Desiderius the last King of the Lombards, had been Duke of Tuscany, and so was Albericus in the time of the Berengarii; and Guido is called Marquess of it, under the Reign of Henricus Auceps the German Emperor. Afterwards, as the Popes grew in Power and Greatness, so they made bold to intermeddle in the affairs of this Province: giving it one while to the Kings of Naples; another while to the Dukes of Anjou, making some Challenge to that Kingdom. In which Distractions the Florentines first bought their own Liberty, of the Emperour Rodolphus Habspurgensis; and after purchased the Town and Territory of Cortona, of Ladislaus King of Naples; that of Arezzo, for 40000 Florens, of Duke Lewis of Anjou. After this time they husbanded their Affairs so well, that they became one of the most considerable Estates in Italy; and at the last by taking in Pisa and Sienna, they got the absolute Dominion of the best and largest part of Tuscany: which now is under the command of the Great Duke, and may be branched most fitly into these four Parts; that is to say, the Cities and Territories of 1. Florence, 2. Pisa, 3. Sienna, and 4. the Islands situate in the Tuscan, or Tyrrhenian Seas.

1. And first, the Territory or Estate of Florence taketh up the North part of this great Dukedom, having the Apennine on the North, and the Estates of Pisa and Sienna on the South. So called from the City of FLORENCE, situate nigh unto the Conflux of the Rivers Arnus and Chianus; the former passing through the midst of the City, which is joined together with four Bridges of Stone: Environed with Mountains, which do serve as a Fortress against Invasions, and for defence against the Winds. First built by L. Sylla that bloody Dictator; afterwards made a Colony by the Triumviri, Augustus, Antony, and Lepidus; from the flourishing situation of it being called Florentia. The Lombards upon some displeasure razed it to the Ground, but it was rebuilt by Charlemagne, to whom and whose Successors they continued faithful, as long as they had any thing to do with the State of Italy: but after, they betook themselves to the Papal Faction, and were as rigid Guelfs as any. On this foundation it now stands, and is indeed a very fair and flourishing City, agreeable unto the name; the streets being very straight and large, paved with ſquare ſtone, and always kept exceeding clean: the ordinary buildings beautiful above any in Italy, beſides many fair and ſtately Palaces adorned with Statua's. The principal of the Palaces is that of the Great Duke, taking up the room of 50 houſes which were wont to ſtand there; capable of a great retinue: and for the largeneſs of the building, the Architecture and Ornaments of it, as alſo for the Gardens, Fountains, Statues, and other Acceſſaries, equalling, if not ſurpaſſing the goodleſt Palaces in all Europe. The like may alſo be affirmed of the Cathredal, highly commended for the excellency of the Workmanſhip, but that eſpecially of the Steeple, which both for ſtuff and ſtructure is beyond compare. This Church is called commonly the Annunciata, and worthily accounted one of the chief Ornaments of Florence: in which Cities there are, beſides ſo many excellent pieces and curious rarities, that the Arch-duke Charles was wont to ſay, that it was a City not to be ſeen but on Holy days. As for the Inhabitants of this City and the parts adjoyning, they are a very induſtrious people, and generally ſaid to be of a very great wit, ſubtle heads and of much inſight into buſines: and yet Count Imbalt, a French Gentleman, was uſed to ſay, Non ſapeve dove conſiſteſſe l'ingegne tanto celebrate di Florentini, that he could never find where that great wit of the Florentines lay. Guicciardine the hiſtorian, was without doubt a notable Stateſ-man; and Machiavel, once the Recorder of this City, a man of as ſhrewd a brain as any; and ſo were the two Coſmo's of the houſe of the Medices: but whether all the Florentines, or the major part of them, be of ſuch extraordinary wit as they ſay they are, I am not very well reſolved; nor is it much material to enquire into it.

The other Cities and chief places of this firſt diviſion, are 1. Feſulæ, one a Roman Colony, now a ſmall Village called Fieſoli; ſituate in the ſtraights of the Apennine, not far from Florence, which is thought to have riſen chiefly from the ruins of it: moſt memorable for the great defeat here given by Stilico, to the great Army of the Goths, conducted into Italy under Rhadagaſus. 2. Pizoria, or Piſtoia, ſeated on the foot of the Apennine, but ruinated with its own diſſenſions; of which the greateſt and moſt laſting, were thoſe betwixt the Neri and Bianchi (or the black men and the white) which divided Florence; and that between the Guelfs and Gibellines, which here took beginning, and for a long time exerciſed the peace of Chriſtendom. This laſt began (as ſome ſay) upon the quarrel of two Brothers, of which the one named Guelfo, ſtood for the Pope; the other named Gibellino, declared for the Emperour. The quarrel ſpreading into parties, called the Guelfs and the Gibellines, became at laſt the wonder and amazement of all good people: inſomuch as ſome are of opinion, that the fiction of the Elfs and Goblins, wherewith we uſe to fright young children, was derived from hence. As for the City it ſelf, it is ſeated in a fair and goodly plain, compaſſed with Mountains; the ſtreets paved with free ſtone, and the Church (which is Cathedral) with Marble. It was firſt walled by Deſiderius the laſt King of the Lombards, when he was Governour of this Province; but for all that, was forced to ſubmit it ſelf to the power of the Florentine, by whom it was ſubdued Anno 1150. when as yet themſelves were not the abſolute Maſters of their own City. 3. Volterra built among the mountains, the birth-place of Linus Succeſſor to St. Peter in the See of Rome. It ſtandeth on the top of an hill, the walls thereof made of ſquare ſtone ſix foot long, which are very neatly joyned together without Mortar: and in thoſe Walls five Gates for entrance, each Gate having near unto it a very fair Fountain. The Marble Statues, and ſome Epitaphs in Tuſcan Letters, do evidently declare it to be very ancient. In this Town was born Rodolphus Volteranus, one of the greateſt Reſtorers of Learning in the Weſt parts of the World. 4. Monte Pulciano, in Latin called Mons Politianus, a well fortified City, and the birth-place of Angelus Politianus, the Reviver of the Latin or Roman Elegancies. 5. Prato, another ſtrong piece of this part alſo. Neighboured by a retiring place of the Great Dukes, called Pratoline, a right pleaſant Village, beautified with a magnificent Palace; in which beſides many other ſingularities, are moſt curious Water-works, equal, if not ſuperiour unto thoſe of Tivoli. 6. Cortona, an ancient City of the Tuſcans, ſituate at the foot of the Apennine; ſold to the Florentines by Ladiſlaus King of Naples. 7. Aretium or Arezzo, one of the ancient Cities of the Tuſcans alſo, and ſold to the Florentines as the other was; this being bought for 40000 Florens of Lewis of Anjou, then the Popes Vicegerent in this Country. 8. Borgo San Sepulcro, ſeated on the Tiber, neer, or within the Spoletan Dukedom; added to this Signeury by Coſmo de Medices, the firſt of that name: by whom bought of Pope Eugenius the fourth for the ſum of 25000 Florens, and laid unto the Patrimony of this Common-wealth, to which it ſerveth for a Bulwark on that ſide of this Country.

To this diviſion alſo we may beſt refer the ſmall, but rich Signeury of Maſſa, ſituate on the borders of the ſtate of Genoa. Chief Towns whereof. 1. Maſſa it ſelf, which gives the title of a Marqueſs to the Lord hereof, of the Family of the Maleſpines. 2. Carara, three miles off from Maſſa, and more neer the Sea; of great fame for its Quatries of whiteſt Marble (much uſed in the time of the Roman greatneſs) and a breed of the faireſt Women in Italy. The Prince hereof a Feudatary to the Duke of Florence; but, amongſt his own vaſſals, Abſolute enough.

2. The ſecond member of this Eſtate, is the City and Territory of PISA, lying towards the Sea, betwixt the Genoeſe on the Weſt, and the Territory of Sienna on the Eaſt. The City firſt built by the Piſæ, a people of Elis in Greece: who following old Neſtor from Troy, were by the violence of the wind driven upon this coaſt; and here upon the River Arno, where it meeteth with Serchius, did erect this Town. In the diſtractions of the Empire it ſtood up for it ſelf, and grew ſo potent, that at one time they waged War both with the Venetians, and Genoeſe. They were once Maſters of Sardinia, Corſica, and the Baleares; but finally, being diſcomfited by the Genoeſe near the Iſle of Giglio, An. 1369. they ſubmitted themſelves to the protection of Charles the fourth, by whom it was made free. Not long after, it was taken by John Galeaze the firſt Duke of Millain, An. 1404. by John Marid his Son and Succeſſor ſold unto the Florentines, from whoſe command they freed themſelves by popular violence. The Florentines upon this beſieged them, and brought them to ſuch extremity of hunger, that they were ready to be ſtarved. Yet ſuch was the humanity of the Beſiegers, that when they entred the Town, every man carried victuals in his hand in ſtead of Weapons, to beget as it were, new life in that rebellious people. This victory the Florentines got by the valour and conduct of Sir John Hawkwood, whom the Italians call Giovanni di Aguto; who being firſt a Taylor in Eſſex, afterwards ſerved Edward the third in his French wars, where he was knighted. And when, upon the peace concluded after the battel of Poictiers, he wanted employment, he entred with his Regiment into Italy, and put himſelf into the pay of the Florentines, then in war with this City: who for his valour, have honoured him with a very fair Tomb and Monument. When Charles the 8. went into Italy, the Piſans again revolted; and were not without much labour and great Charges, reduced to their former obedience. As for the City it self, it is almost as big as Florence; this being five miles in compass, and that but six; but very short of it in the number of people, Florence being said to contain 90000 souls, Pisa not a third part of that proportion; yet hath it very good advantages to make it populous, that is to say, the publick Arsenal for shipping, an University for Students, and the See of an Arch-bishop: the Cathedral Church of which, is a very beautiful piece of work, the Gates thereof are brass, and the Steeple of it of such artificial and exquisite building, that it sheweth as if it were always falling. But the unwholsomness of the air over-ballanceth all these fair advantages.

The next place of importance within the Territory of this City is the Town and Haven of Ligorn, (Liburnum it is called in Latin) seated upon the influx of the River Arno; well fortified against the Genoese, by whom the works were once slighted, An. 1297. Upon a reconciliation made between those States, it returned again to its old Masters. And when the Pisans were sold over to the Florentines, by the Duke of Millain; Thomas Fregosa Duke of Genoa, seized upon this place and sold it also to the same Chapmen, for 120000 Ducats. By the care of Duke Cosmo and his two Sons, it is much improved in strength and beauty; and so well fortified, that it is thought to be one of the strongest Cities in Christendom: Cities I say, and not Castles, the Castles of Stockholm in Sweden, and that of Millain, being held to be the strongest Forts in the World. After this comes in 3. Peira Sancta, on the West side of the Arnus, (a place of great consequence and strength) one of the best pieces of the Pisans when a Free-Estate, against their old enemies the Genoese, towards whom it standeth. 4. Terreciola, Eastward of Ligorn, neighboured with a capacious Bay on the Mediterranean. 5. Castellona, an Episcopal See. 6. Porto Barrato bordering on the Signieury of Sienna; now nothing but a station for Ships (nor much used for that) but heretofore beautified with one of the best Cities of the Tuscans, called Populonia.

3. The third number of this Dukedom is the City and Territory of SIENNA, lying betwixt the Estate of Pisa, and the Land of the Church. The City said to be built by Bremus, who did there put his old sickly men to sojourn, and called it Sena: the birth-place of Æneas Sylvius, called afterwards Pope Pius the second; of Francis Picolomony, after Pope Pius the third; and of Sixtus (hence surnamed) Senensis, the greatest Scholar of the three, if not of all the age he lived in. By Antonine in his Itinerarium called Sena Julia; to difference it perhaps from another of that name neer the Adriatick, called Sena Gallica. Built near the Spring, or Fountain of the River Arbia, now better known by the name of Treissa; but built (which makes the situation of it exceeding pleasant) upon an high hill, on which there is a Castle that commands the Town; the Streets thereof even and very plain, centring in a large and spacious Market-place; near to which is a very fair Palace used for a Senate-house in the Free-Common-wealth, and on the South-side neer the Walls the Cathedral Church, reputed to be one of the fairest in Italy, having only one door into it, to which there is an ascent by fair Marble Stairs, of which the pavement is made also. Having long held the Gibelline or Imperial faction, it bought its liberty at an easie rate, of the Emperour Rodolphus the first. After, it self into the hands of the Spaniards, then of the French; and finally, was made over to Cosmo de Medices Duke of Florence, by the King of Spain, Anno 1558. in consideration of the great charge he had been at to beat out the French, and other services expected for the time to come. Cosmo being thus invested in it, deprived the people of their Arms, altered the Government, and was the first Prince who had the absolute command of it, after the constitution of their Common-wealth, neither the French nor Spaniards ruling here as Lords, but only as called in by their several factions; and suffered to have Garrisons in it of their own people, by the agreement of their party. And, to say truth, it stood with good reason of State, that the Florentine should use all his wit to get this City; and having got it, use all means to assure it to him. For, besides that great accession which it made unto his Estate; by adding thereunto the yearly income of 100 and 50 thousand Ducats, above all expences: it was also to be carefully looked on as a Rival, which had long time stood in competition with it, or the soveraign command of Tuscany. Besides, there had been mighty animosities between the Cities; the Florentine being always of the Guelfes, and the Siennoys of the Gibelline faction. A faction at last so generally distasted in all Italy, and so abominable to the Popes, that on an Ashwednesday, when the Pope being to cast Ashes on the Heads of the Cardinals, was to to have said, Memento, O homo, quòd cinis es, & in cinerem converteris, according to the usage of the Church of Rome: seeing a Gibelline amongst them, he forgot himself, and said thus unto him, Memento, O homo, quòd Gibellinus es, & cum Gibellinis morieris. Of chief note next unto Sienna, are 1. Montolcino (Mons Alcinus in Latin) a place of great strength both by industry and situation. 2. Castro Cartaldo seated upon a lofty Hill, most memorable for the Birth and Sepulchre of John Boccace, one of the best wits of his time, as his Decameron declareth; buried here with a sorry and unworthy Epitaph, not worth the labour of transcribing. 3. Soana, an Episcopal City; as also are 4. Pienza, 5. Crossetto, and 6. Chiusi, this last, the Clusium of the ancient Tuscans spoken of before. Besides these are 26 walled Towns within this Signeury, but of no great observation in the course of business.

There belonged also unto this Common-wealth, when a State distinct, some Ports and Peeces on the Sea, which when it was consigned over to the Duke of Florence, were retained by the Spaniard: partly thereby to keep those Princes at his devotion, but principally that by holding so many places of importance in his own hands, he might carry at his Girdle the Keys of Italy, and become Lord Paramont of those Seas. Of those the principal, if not all, 1. Piombino, in Latin called Plumbinum, from some Mines of Lead; adorned with a strong Castle, and a plentiful Territory: the Castle in the hands of the Spaniard, but the Town and Territory in possession of a Lord of its own, who receives the whole rents of the Estate. 2. Port Telamon, Eastward of Piombino, so called of old from Tellamon, an adjoyning Promontory, and known by this name in Plutarch, in the life of Marius. Accounted the chief City of Tuscany in those elder times, but most remarkable for the great Battel fought near unto it betwixt the Romans and the Galls, A.V.C. 529. the Army of the Galls consisting of 70000 Horse and Foot; that of the Romans little (if at all) inferiour to it. A fight in which Attilius, one of the Consuls being slain, the Victory was gotten by Æmilius his Collegue, with the slaughter of 40000 of the Enemies, and the taking of 10000 Prisoners: Aneroestus and Congolianus two Kings of the Transalpine Galls being slain or taken. A Victory which drew after it the total subjugation of the Cisalpine Galls, which followed within three years after. 3. Orbitello, drawing more towards the East, the Cossa of the ancient Writers. 4. Monte Argentorati, a Promontory or Peninsula, thrusting it self into the Sea, over against Orbitello, by the

Latines

Latins called Mons Argentarius: and thought by ſome, who have obſerved the ſcituation, ſtrength, and extent thereof, to be the fitteſt place for a Royal City to be built in, to command thoſe Seas. 5 Port Hercule, which ſtill retains its ancient name, imparted to it from ſome Temple of Hercules, which was founded in it; ſituate near the Eaſtern Iſthmus of the ſaid Peninſula. 6 Porto-Longone, a piece of ſpecial conſequence for command of the Mediterranean; and for that cauſe of late times gotten by the French (then aiming at the conqueſt of Naples) but again recovered by the Spaniard, who doth now poſſeſs it.

The fourth and laſt member of this Eſtate, are the Iſlands in the Tuſcan or Tyrrhenian Seas. The principal whereof is, 1 Ilva, not above ten miles from Piombino, called anciently Æthalia, by the vulgar Elba. Pliny affirmeth it to contain in compaſs a hundred miles, but it proves upon a juſt meaſurement, to be but fifty. Not very well furniſhed with Corn, and leſs with fruits; but plentiful in Mines of Iron, as formerly for Steel and Copper: for which, eſpecially for Steel, of great eſteem in the time of Virgil, as appeareth by that paſſage in the tenth of his Æneids, where it is called Inſula inexhauſtis Chalybum generoſa metallis.

A noble Iſle, and known full well,
For unexhauſted Mines of Steel.

But for all that, the Steel now failing, the want thereof is ſupplyed by Iron; which Iron is of ſo ſtrange a nature, that every 25 year it reneweth again upon the Mines, and will by no means melt whilſt it is in the Iſland, but muſt be carried ſomewhere elſe. It affordeth alſo Sulphur, Allom, Tin, Lead, Marble good plenty; and in ſome parts the Loadſtone alſo. Formerly it belonged to the Lords of Piombino, who not being able to defend it againſt the Turks, if they ſhould at any time invade it, reſigned it, by the Counſel of Charles the fifth, unto Coſmo di Medices the Duke of Florence: reſerving to themſelves the Revenues of it, and the Government of all the Towns & Villages therein, except thoſe that were thought fit for Fortification. It hath a very fair Haven called Porto Ferrario, capable to receive any great Fleet that ſhould come thither, and therefore if the Turks and Moors had been Maſters of it, they might eaſily have commanded all the Coaſts adjoining, as well in Provence as Italy. For the defence hereof, there are two ſtrong Caſtles, ſituate on two little Mountains, on each ſide one; ſo fortified by Art and Nature, that they are held to be impregnable, having alſo good ſtore of Cannon, and all ſorts of Warlike Ammunition. And not far off ſtands a ſtrong Town built by the ſame Duke Coſmo, and by him called Coſmopolis; well fortified, and made the ſeat of his new Order of S. Stephen, of which more hereafter.

The ſecond Iſland of note is Giglio, called Iglium anciently, juſt oppoſite to Monte Argentorato, and having ſome 25 miles in compaſs; near unto which the Genoeſe ſo diſcomfited the Piſans in a fight at Sea, that they were never able to recover their former puiſſance. 3 Capraria, not far from Ligorn, ſo called from its abundance of Goats; and for the ſame reaſon Ægilora, by the Greek Geographers: as, 4 Gallinaria, not far off, took name from abundance of Hens. Of the reſt nothing memorable, but that ſome of them do occurr in the ancient Writers; of which ſort are 1 Melorta, heretofore Lanellum, not far from Capraria. 2 Lamoſi, formerly Artemeſia, in which there is a very good Haven. 3 Gorgona, 4 Troja, and 5 the ſmall Iſlands which are called Formice. 6 To theſe we may add alſo the Iſle of Planaſia, more memorable than the reſt, for the baniſhment and death of Agrippa Poſthumus, the Nephew of Auguſtus Cæſar by his daughter Julia; here murdered by the command of Tiberius, to prevent all future competition to the State Imperial, ſituate ſomewhat nearer unto Corſica, than the reſt of theſe Iſlands.

As for the MEDICES, whoſe poſterity are now Dukes hereof, they were in the Free-State (as Machiavel informs us in his Florentine Hiſtory) accounted in the chief rank of the popular Nobility: thoſe being ſuch of the ancient Nobles, as, to be capable of the Magiſtracy, and publick Offices (then wholly ſhared among the Commons) had as it were degraded themſelves; and became part of the Commonalty. About the year 1410. John de Medices, (the firſt great raiſer of this houſe) ſtoutly maintaining the Liberties of the people againſt the great ones; was by them ſo honoured and enriched, that he not only got a great party, but almoſt a Sovereignty in the City. To him ſucceeded his ſon Coſmo, one of the greateſt Statelmen of thoſe times; who did not only much reform the Civil Government, but enlarged the Territory of the State by the addition of Caſentino, Burgo, St. Sepulchro, and ſome other pieces. Dying in the year 1464, he left the managery of the State to Peter de Medices his ſon, whoſe whole time was conſumed in ſuppreſſing ſuch Factions, as had at home been raiſed againſt him: and at his death left all his power, and the great wealth which he had gotten (but with a greater meaſure of his Fathers vertues) to Lawrence and Julian his two ſons. The people after his deceaſe, either deſirous of Novelties, as moſt people are; or fearing to be made hereditary to this powerful Family; ſeemed to incline to one of the Soderini, a man of plauſible deportment, and well beloved. But he judiciouſly conſidering, that new houſes as they are eaſily honoured, ſo are they as ſoon abandoned by the fickle multitude; conferred all the dependencies which were caſt upon him, on theſe two young men of the Medices: as being deſcended from a Family which had long governed the City. Againſt theſe two, the Pazzi, a potent houſe in Florence, conſpired, and at Maſs they ſlew Julian, but Lorenzo eſcaped: the blows which were ſtruck at him, being received by one of his ſervants, whom two days before he had delivered out of Priſon. For this Fact the Pazzi were hanged at the Palace window, together with the Arch-biſhop of Piſa, who had been of the conſpiracy. To revenge the death of this Biſhop, Pope Paul the 2, excommunicated the Florentines; & Ferdinand King of Naples warred upon them. Lorenzo, to divert this miſchief, went in perſon to Naples: where he grew ſo much into the good liking of the King, that there was a perpetual League made between them. After his death 1492, his ſon Peter, having very improvidently delivered Piſa and Ligorn, with other pieces, to the French King; was, together with his whole Family, baniſhed. John di Medices the ſon of Lawrence, and brother of Peter being made Pope, by the name of Leo the 10. reſtored again his Family; who not long after his death were again exil'd. This diſgrace Julio di Medices ſon to the above named Julian, and Pope of Rome, by the name of Clement the 7. not enduring, procured Charles the fifth to beſiege it: which requeſt was granted; and the City after two years reſiſtance, yielded. The Emperour then gave it to Alexander Medices (Granchild to Peter, by his ſon Lawrence) Anno 1531. And he to reſtrain the inſolencies of the people, built a ſtrong Citadel in the Town. This Alexander was a Prince of good parts enough, had he not been too much addicted to Luſt and Wantonneſs; which being obſerved by Lawrence di Medices his own Couſin, he trained him to a ſecret place, under colour of bringing him to the bed of a beautiful Lady, and there baſely murdered him. Which done, inſtead of calling the people to take Arms for recovery of their loſt liberty, as he firſt intended; he fearfully left the City, and fled towards Venice. So that before the people had notice of the accident, the heads of the Medices conſulted together, and ſent for Coſmo di Medices dwelling in the Country with his mother (and then about 18 years of age) to be their Prince: as being next Heir-male which was left of the Family, according to the Entail (as our Lawyers call it) made by Charles the Emperor. This Coſmo proving an excellent Stateſman, and a fortunate Commander, ſo ſwayed the affairs of Italy, that Philip the ſecond of Spain to be aſſured of his friendſhip, gave him the Signeury of Sienna, out of which he had lately driven the French; and Pius the fourth had an intent to have crowned him King of Tuſcany. But Philip of Spain (though otherwiſe his ſpecial friend) thwarted that intent, as loath to have in Italy any more Kings than himſelf. After in the year 1570 Pius the fifth crowned the ſame Coſmo in the Court of Rome, with the title of Great Duke of Tuſkany, for him and his Heirs for ever. In the new Duke's Coronet he cauſed to be engraven theſe words, Pius Quintus Pont. Max. ob eximiam dilectionem & religionis Catholicæ zelum, præcipuumque juſtitiæ ſtudium, donavit. Thus forward were theſe Popes to honour this Family; but their Succeſſors have been otherwiſe affected to it. For when one of Duke Coſmo's Succeſſors did ſince intreat a ſucceeding Pope, that he might be created King of Tuſcany; the Pope not liking ſo Lordly a title, made anſwer, that he was content, He ſhould be a King in Tuſcany, but not King of Tuſcany. A Scholar-like diſtinction, but not ſo ſatisfactory to the point propoſed.

The Princes of the Houſe of Medices, in the Free-eſtate.

1410 1 John di Medices, the firſt advancer of the Family to publick greatneſs.

1433 2 Coſmo di Medices, the ſon of John, called the Father of the Common-wealth.

1464 3 Peter, the ſon of Coſmo.

1472 4 Lawrence di Medices, ſon of Peter, the great advancer of Learning in Italy.

1492 5 Peter di Medices II. exiled upon the coming in of Charles the 8.

6 Lawrence di Medices II. ſon of Peter, exiled together with his Father; made Duke of Urbin by Pope Leo the 10. He was the Father of Catharine di Medices, French Queen.

The Dukes of Florence, and Great Dukes of Tuſcany.

A. D.

1531 1 Alexander di Medices, the ſon of Lawrence, the firſt Duke of Florence.

1537 2 Coſmo II. the next heir of Alexander, deſcended from Lawrence, a brother of the firſt Coſmo; the wiſeſt Stateſman of his time.

1574 3 Francis di Medices, ſon of Coſmo the 2. Father of Mary the French Queen.

1587 4 Ferdinand di Medeces, the Brother of Francis.

1609 5 Coſmo III. ſon of Ferdinand.

1621 6 Ferdinand, II. ſon of Coſmo di Medices, the twelfth of this Family, the ſixth Duke of Florence and the fifth of Tuſcany.

The length of this Eſtate is 200 miles, the breadth in ſome places not much inferior, but growing narrower where it bordereth upon that of Genoa. In all which tract, the Great Duke hath but one conſiderable Port on the main Land, which is that of Ligorn; ſo that his ſtrength in ſhipping is not very great: and yet might be greater than it is, if the Subjects did delight in Traffick, and not ſuffer their Commodities to be bought by Strangers (as generally they do in all this Country) and carried thence in foreign Veſſels. For otherwiſe being an induſtrious people, and well trained in Manufactures, their power at Sea muſt needs be greater than it is: the Great Dukes Fleet conſiſting ordinarily of no more than twelve Gallies, two Gallions, and five Galliaſſes. And for his power by Land, he hath in readineſs ſixteen thouſand Foot of his own Subjects, well trained and muſtered under experienced Commanders, to ſerve him upon all occaſions; and an hundred men at Arms, and 400 Light-horſmen, well paid, as well in times of Peace as in time of War. And beſides theſe, he keeps ſo many Forts and Towns in continual Garriſon, that his Eſtate is ſaid to be made of Iron.

What the Revenues of it were in the Free-Eſtate, I am not able to determine. That they were very great is manifeſt, in that having in thoſe five years, wherein they waged War againſt the D. of Millain, ſpent three millions and an half of Florens; their treaſury was ſo far from being exhauſted, that the next year they beſieged and endangered the City of Luca. Since the altering of the Commonwealth into a Dukedom, and the addition of a Territory and City of Sienna: the Revenues of the Duke are conceived to be a million and an half of Ducats yearly. Of which 600000 Crowns are raiſed yearly out of the Dominion of the City of Florence; 150000 more out of that of Sienna: the cuſtoms ariſing out of the Port of Ligorn, amount yearly to 130000 Ducats, the toll of Mill-ſtones only, unto 160000; that of Salt, Mines, and Iron, falls not ſhort of that: in all a million and 200000 Ducats. Then hath the Duke his ſtock going amongſt the Bankers, and trades as much as any in the way of Merchandizing; whereas in other Countries he loſeth the priviledges of a Nobleman, that betakes himſelf to Trade and Merchandize. He uſeth alſo to buy up almoſt all the Corn which is brought into the Country out of other parts, and ſell it again at his own price; forbidding any to be ſold till all his be vended. The reſt is made up by Exciſe upon all Commodities, even unto very Herbs, and Sallads, which lies very heavy on the Subject, the poor eſpecially: inſomuch that it was tartly ſaid, and perhaps not untruly, Qui ſub Medicis vivit, miſere vivit; applying an old Rule in a new ſenſe.

The only order of Knighthood in this Eſtate, is that of St. Stephen, inſtituted by Coſmo di Medices, An. 1561, and dedicated to St. Stephen, becauſe upon the Feſtival of Stephen, Pope and Martyr, being the 6. of Auguſt he won the famous battel of Marciano. Pope Pius the fourth confirmed it the ſame year, and granted them all the priviledges which they of Malta enjoy: conditioned that thoſe of this Order ſhould make a vow of Charity, of conjugal Chaſtity, and Obedience, They are to be nobly born, and in lawful Wedlock; of the Romiſh Church, and without note of infamy. The Robe is of white Chamlet, with a red Croſs on their left ſide, as well upon their military Garment, as their wearing Cloaks: intended principally againſt the Turks and Moors, for which cauſe ſettled firſt at Piſa, being near the Sea; but after at Coſmopolis in the Ille of Ilva. The number of them is uncertain; the Great Duke the Supream Maſter of it. Other Orders are commonly ſimple, but this mixt; being partly religious, partly honourary.

The Arms are Or, five Torteaux Gules, two, two, and one, and one in chief Azure, charged with three Flower de Lyces of the firſt.

Archbiſhops 3. Biſhops 26.

The

The State of LUCA.

IN the West part of Tuscany, betwixt the Estate of the Great Duke, and the Common-wealth of Genoa, lieth the City of LUCA, so called from Lucumo, a King of the Tuscans, who is said to have built it: situate on the River Serchius, not far from the mountains of Luna, whence the Country is at this day called Lunagiana. It is about three miles in compass, and contains about 24000 Inhabitants, who generally are a courteous and modest people, men of good judgment, and discreet, and by their wisdoms have preserved themselves a free Common-wealth, notwithstanding the attempts of more powerful neigbours: and they are very industrious also, and well seen in Manufactures, especially in weaving Silks and cloth of Gold, which they taught the Florentines. The City seated in a Plain, compassed with Mountains on all sides except towards Pistoa: so strongly fortified by the help of Art and Nature, that this City, Zara in Dalmatia, Canea in the Isle of Candy, and the Town of Ligorn, were thought in former times (when the Art of Fortification was less known) to be the four strongest Towns in the Christian World. The streets thereof are narrow, but paved with broad Free-stone, and most easie to walk on: the buildings very fair, built of Free-stone also, and beautified with pleasant Gardens. On the North-west stands a very strong Castle, near which lieth the Cathedral, stately paved with Marble, but very dark, as most of the Popish Churches, to give the better colour to the burning of Tapers in the day.

In this Town was the meeting of the three great Captains, Cæsar, Pompey, and Crassus, so pernicious to the Roman-Republick. For Pompey desirous to maintain his authority, Cæsar to get honour, and Crassus to encrease his wealth, here united their Counsels: Pompey's authority to be upheld by Cæsar's Arms, and Crassus his riches; Cæsar's continuance in his Province to be maintained by Pompey's power, and Crassus his money; and Crassus his estate to be secured by Pompey's greatness, and Cæsar's military reputation. This done, they made a partition of the Roman Provinces among themselves, assigning Gaul to Cæsar, Spain to Pompey, and to Crassus, Syria: which strong confederacy was the cause of that alteration which after followed in that State. For Crassus being slain not long after, Pompey and Cæsar wanting a third man to poize the ballance, fell first to discontents, then to civil Wars, which at last made Cæsar Lord of Rome. Upon which meeting, and the breach which succeeded afterwards, was grounded that so memorated speech of Cicero, that is to say, Utinam Pompeius cum Cæsare societatem aut nunquam iniisset aut nunquam diremisset.

But to return again to the affairs of Luca, in the declining of the Empire, it became possessed by the Goths, from them recovered by Narses with the rest of Italy. After this it again followed the fortune of the Empire, till taken by Count Boniface the Father of that notable Virago, the Countess Mathildis: who being deceased without issue, and the Emperors pretending to it as to an Escheat, the Citizens made a common-purse, and bought their Liberty of their Emperor Rodolphus for 10000 Crowns. Some say the money was disbursed for them by a Cardinal. But notwithstanding this purchase and their title by it, the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria seized upon it again, under pretence of freeing it from the faction of Castruccio, who had made himself absolute Master of it. By a German Garrison there left it was sold to the Genoese; and having passed through many hands, the Emperor Charles the fourth got it once again: of whom they once more purchased their desired Liberties, for 25000 Florens of Gold; and to secure themselves thereof, demolished the Castle built by Castruccio. But being not able to maintain it by their proper strength they have put themselves under the protection of their Potent neighbours; changing their Patrons, as conduced most to their preservation: and finding no security from Genoa, and as little from Florence, both which they severally tried; they put themselves at last into the Protection of the Dukes of Millain, and in that right are patronized by the Kings of Spain.

The Territories of this City extend in compass eighty miles, the chief Town next to Luca it self, being that of Luna, a Bithops See; all the rest ordinary Farms and Villages, but of a good air, and very well peopled: which yield a Revenue to the publick Treasury of 80000 Crowns per annum; and out of which the State is able to raise (if there be occasion) about 15000 Foot, and 3000 Horse. A great strength for so small a Signeury, but all too weak to save them from the Great Duke's clutches, if he did seriously attempt to force it, and would venture on the displeasure of the Catholick King: besides that, it is thought that he receives more profit thence in gifts and presents, by letting it stand as it is; than it would yield (considering the charge of keeping it) if it were his own. As for the Government thereof, the principal Magistrate is called the Gonfalonere, changeable every second month; assisted by a certain and determinate number of Citizens, whom they change every sixth month also; during which time they live together in the Palace, or Common Hall. Other inferiour Officers I insist not on. And for the Government of the Church, they have two Bithops only, which acknowledg the Archbithop of Florence for their Metropolitan.

The Commonwealth of GENOA.

DIrectly West of Tuscany, from which it is divided by the River Macra, lieth the Country anciently called Liguria, now Riviere di Genoa, the Coast of Genoa, because it lieth all along the Sea of Genoa; and by some Il Genovesate, from Genoa the Metropolis of this Country and Commonwealth. A Commonwealth once of a larger reputation and authority, than it is at the present; commanding heretofore the Islands of Corsica, Sardinia, and the Baleares, in the Mediterranean; Lesbos, and Chio, with some others in the Greekish Seas; the Town of Caphe, or Theodosia, in the Taurican Chersonese; Pera, on the other side of Constantinople; and a good part of Tuscany.

It was also then so strong both in men and shipping, that they sent seven several Armies to the Wars of the Holy Land: and in the space of three days only armed once upon occasion of present service, eight and fifty Gallies, and 8 Pamphyli (being Vessels of one hundred and forty, or one hundred and sixty Oars apiece;) and at another time, one hundred and sixty six Gallies, at a sudden pinch. By the advantage of this strength, they beat the Pisans out of Sardinia, Corsica, and the Baleares; compelling them to pay 135000 Crowns for their Peace; they got a good share in the division of the Empire of Constantinople, when that City was taken by the Latins; and held a very strong hand over the Venetians. These last they had once in so great an exigence, having vanquished their Fleet at Sea, and taken the Island of Chioggia, not far from Venice; that the Senate sent them a blank Charter bidding them write down what conditions they pleased, which should be readily condescended to. But Peter Doria Admiral of the Genoan Fleet, unseasonably proud of his advantage, would have the City of Venice wholly at his own disposal. Whereupon the Venetians, now made desperate, assault the secure Genoese, and took an hundred of their Boats and Gallies. After which they always had the worst, losing their Illands in the Mediterranean to the Kings of Aragon; Capha, and Pera, with their Illands in the Greek Seas, to the Great Turk; most of their Holds in Tuscany, to the Florentines: their power at the last being so broke by the Venetians, that in the end they were not able to set out a Navy fit for an enterprize. But these Misfortunes were occasioned principally by their own Divisions; the City being miserably torn in pieces, by continual Factions: first betwixt the Dorii and Spinoli, on the one side, the Flisci and Grimaldi on the other, Anno 1174. Secondly, of the Negri and Mollani, against the Salvatici and Embriaci, An. 1289. Thirdly, between the Spinoli and Dorii themselves, An. 1336. And fourthly between the Nobility and the Commons, 1339. Which Factions did so weaken them both at home and abroad, that having lost the greatest part of their Estate, they were fain to put themselves on the protection of their Neighbours to defend the rest; having now nothing left them but Liguria, and the Isle of Corsica.

1 LIGURIA hath on the West, the River Varus rising about the edge of Provence in France; on the East, the River Magra, by which parted from Tuscany: on the North, the Apennine Hills; and on the South, the Ligurian or Tyrrhenian Seas. It is in length an hundred and forty miles; that is to say, from the Port of Luna in the East, to that of Monaco in the West, which lieth near to Provence; but the breadth not answerable to the length: and is divided generally into two Parts or Provinces, the East, and the West, both centring upon Genoa the principal City.

The old Ligurians, were a Stout and Warlike Nation, light and swift of Body, well practised in laying Ambushes, and not discouraged by an Overthrow, but forthwith ready to fight again: to which the Nature of their Country served them very well, being Rough, Mountainous, and Woody, and full of straight and dangerous Passages; and in this Tract few open Towns, but many well-fortified Castles, so that without much Labour they could neither be taken nor besieged. And if at any time they were vanquished in the open field, they had recourse unto these Castles, and other Fastnesses, hemmed round about with Woods & Mountains; in which they plaid their after-game, and tired out their Enemies and Invaders. The principal of their Tribes were the Decenti, Oxilii, Eubariades, and Inganni; all at last vanquished by the Romans, after the second Punick War: but not without much Labour and Pains, by reason of the Woods, and Marishes, and Mountains, within, and behind which they retired and saved themselves, Insomuch that it was held a matter of more difficulty to find than to conquer them; Aliquanto major erat labor invenire quàm vincere, are the words of my Author. They did divers times, after this, much molest the Romans, till at last Posthumius so disweaponed them, that he scarce left them Instruments to plough the Earth. So in the end they grew obedient to their Masters. In the division of whole large Territories by Augustus Cæsar, Liguria was made one of the eleven Regions of Italy; as it was also one of the seventeen Provinces, into which Italy was divided by the Emperour Constantine: Millain at that time the Metropolis or Head-City of it. What kind of men they were in the breaking of the Western Empire, may be known by their actions both by Sea, and land, spoken of before: now more addicted to Merchandise than War, but most of all to Usury. A Vice which the Christians learned of the Jews, and are now thought to equal, if not exceed their Teachers. It was the saying of a merry fellow, that in Christendom there were neither Scholars enough, Gentlemen enough, nor Jews enough. And when Answer was made, that of all these there was rather too great a plenty than any scarcity, he replyed that if there were Scholars enough, so many would not be double or treble beneficed; if Gentlemen enough, so many Peasants would not be ranked among the Gentry; and if Jews enough, so many Christians would not profess Usury. The women are very fair and comely, wearing for the most their hair in tresses which they cast over their backs: they wear no upper Garments but of cloth, as being only allowed by the Laws; but their under Garments of the purest stuff. The women here are priviledged above all in Italy, having free leave to talk with whom they will, and be courted by any that will, both privately and publickly. Which liberty it is likely they gained at such time as the French were Masters of this Estate; who do allow their wives such excess of liberty, as no Italian would allow of in a common Curtizan. And though it cannot be affirmed, that the women of the Country or the City it self, do abuse this liberty; yet the Italians being generally of a different humour, reckon them to be past all shame; as they esteem the Genoan Merchants, (who make little reckoning of their promises, if not bound by writing) to be men without faith. Of which and other things concerning this Estate, they have made this Proverb, Montagne senza legni, &c. that is to say, Mountains without wood, Seas without fish, Men without faith, and Women without shame.

The Country, as before said, is very mountainous in the In-lands, and full of craggy Rocks towards the Sea: so that by Sea and Land it is very ill travelling. But amidst those Hills are Vallies of as rich a vein, as most others in Italy, abounding in Citrons, Limons, Olives, Oranges, and the like fruits; with such variety of Flowers at all times of the year, that the Markets are seldom unfurnished of them in the month of December. It yieldeth also great plenty of most pleasant wines, which the Inhabitants call La Vermozza; and another which they call Le lagrime di Christo, or Lachrimæ Christi: this last so pleasing to the taste, that it is said, a Dutchman tasting of it as he travelled in these parts, fetcht a great sigh, and brake out into this expression: How happy had it been with us, Si Christus lachrimatus esset in nostris regionibus, if Christ had shed some of his tears in the Country of Germany! Their greatest want is that of Corn, and therewith they do supply themselves out of other places.

The principal Towns and Cities of it in the Eastern part, are, 1 Sarenaza, a strong Fortress against the Florentines, and one of the best pieces of this Republick. 2 Pont-Remuli (Pons Remuli, as the Latins call it) of as great consequence as that, but possessed by the Spaniard. 3 Lerigi, an Haven in the Tuscan or Tyrrhenian Sea. 4 Sestri, a reasonable good place, remarkable for as white bread, and as pleasant Wine, as any in Italy. 5 Fino, a Haven or Port Town, not far from Genoa, anciently called Portus Delfinus. Few of the Towns in this part are of any greatness: but they are set so thick, and intermingled with so many goodly houses both on the hills and the vallies that for the space of twenty miles, the whole Country seems to be one continual building.

In the west part the Towns of most importance are 1 Monaco, of old called Monoecus, and Portus Herculis, beautified with a commodious Haven: belonging not long since to the Spaniard, who bought it for 100000 Crowns of the Grimaldi, then its proper Owners; but of late gotten by the French under colour of a late contract. 2 Ventimiglio, a good Town, and sweatly seated. 3 Savona, taken by the Genoese, An. 1250. before which time it had a Prince of its own. Remarkable for the interview betwixt Ferdinand the Catholick & Lewis 12. of Fr. A. 1507. who having having been deadly enemies, upon the taking of the Realm of Naples from the French by the Spaniard, met at this Town, and here moſt ſtrangely relyed upon one another: Lewis firſt boarding Ferdinand's Gally; and Ferdinand for divers days feaſting with Lewis in this Town then in his poſſeſſion, as Protector of the Eſtate of Genoa. Which kind of interviews (I note this only by the way) as they chance but ſeldom; ſo when they do, they prove for the moſt part dangerous unto one of the parties: great enmities not being eaſily forgot by perſons of a publick Intereſt. Nay, that notable Stateſman Philip de Comines utterly diſliketh all ſuch meetings of Princes, though in amity and good correſpondence with one another; as many times producing effects quite contrary to their expectations. And this he proveth by the example of Lewis the 11th of France, and Henry of Caſtile; who meeting purpoſely, Anno 1463. to change ſome friendly words together, took ſuch diſlike at each others perſons and behaviour, that they never loved one another after it. The like example he bringeth of an interview betwixt Edward the fourth of England, and the ſame King Lewis: and betwixt Frederick the Emperor, and Charles Duke of Burgundy; with divers others. His reaſons I purpoſely omit, as not pertinent to my preſent undertaking, and make haſte again unto the Town; which is about a mile and an half in circuit, and hath many ſtately buildings in it. It was called anciently Sabate or Sabatia, and hath been under the command of divers Lords: being taken from the Genoeſe by the Viſconti, and the Sforzas, Dukes of Millain, from them by the French, and at laſt recovered again by thoſe of Genoa. I further note, that this one Town hath yeilded to the Church of Rome three Popes, viz. Gregory the 7. Julio the 2. and Sixtus the 4. which is as much as Genoa it ſelf can brag of. 4. Nola, upon the Sea-ſide, a commodious Haven. 5. Finali, a goodly Port-Town alſo, and very well fortified; honoured a long time with the title of a Marquiſate, one of the ſeven founded by the Emperor Otho, (of which more hereafter;) but taken from the laſt Marqueſs by the Count of Fuentes, then Governour of Millain for the King of Spain, and garriſoned immediately with 200 Spaniards, the poor Marqueſs being put off with an Annual Penſion, Anno 1602. 6. Mileſimo, a ſmall Town adjoyning, poſſeſſed upon the ſame right by the Spaniard alſo; who by theſe pieces hath a ſtrong command on the Trade of Genoa. 7. But the great Ornament of thoſe parts of Italy, is the City of Genoa, firſt built, ſay ſome, by Janus the Son of Saturn; as others ſay, by Janus Genius Priſcus, an Italian or Tuſcan King. But by whomſoever it was built, certain it is, that it was miſerably deſtroyed by Mago the Brother of Annibal, repaired by Lucretius Surius, at the command of the Senate of Rome, for whoſe cauſe and quarrel it was ruined: once again ſpoiled and waſted by Rotharis a great Prince of the Lombards, Anno 660. or thereabouts; but built more beautiful than before by Charles the Great. On his Foundation it now ſtands, ſituate on the ſhore of the Liguſtick or Ligurian Seas, to which, being partly built on the declivity of an hill, full of ſtately Palaces, it giveth a moſt pleaſant and magnificent proſpect. It is in compaſs ſix miles, of an orbicular form, fortified towards the Sea by Art; towards the Land by Art and Nature: there being but one way to come to it by Land, and that over ſteep and craggy Rocks. The Streets are narrow, paved with Flint, and moſt of them on the ſides of the hill; which is the reaſon that they uſe Horſe-litters here inſtead of Coaches, and moſt of the better ſort are carried on mens ſhoulders in Sedans or Chairs: which from hence came hither into England. But that which they call La Strada Nueva, or the New-ſtreet, reaching form the Weſt to North-eaſt, is of a very fair breadth: each houſe whereof is built with ſuch Kingly Magnificence, that it is thought to be the faireſt ſtreet in the World. In all the reſt the buildings for the height of two ſtories are made of Marble, curiouſly wrought; but the Laws forbid Marble to be uſed any higher. The Haven of it is very fair and capacious, ſafe from the violence of Tempeſts, and well fortified: ſo that the Spaniards uſe to ſay, that were the Catholick King abſolute Lord of Marſeilles in Provence, and Genoa in Italy he might command the whole World. After the re-edifying of it by Charles the Great, the People here continued ſubject to his Succeſſors; till the Berengarii, as Kings of Italy, made them free, Anno 899. in which condition they remained till the year 1318. when being ſhrewdly weakened in their Eſtate, they were fain to give themſelves to Pope John the 22. after to Robert King of Naples. But being ſoon weary of a foreign Government, the people in a popular tumult made choice of one Simon Bocca Negra, to be their Duke, Anno 1339. which Government continued till the French were called in by the Guelfian Faction, in the raign of Charles the 7. under whom they continued thirteen years; and then expelling thence the French for their many inſolencies, they put themſelves under the protection of the Dukes of Millain, Anno 1403. Long time they lived under the protection of thoſe Princes, in great tranquillity, who never carried towards them any rigorous hand; ſave that once D. Lodowick Sforza exacted of them a great maſs of money. But as the tale goeth, his Agent being invited to the houſe of a Genoeſe, and walking in a Garden with him, was ſhewed an herb growing there called Baſil, which ſtroking gently he ſmelt thence a moſt pleaſing ſavour, but as unſavoury a ſmell when he ſtrained it hard. The Genoeſe hereupon inferred, Sir, if our Lord Duke Lodowick will gently ſtroake the hand of his puiſſance over this City, it will prove pliant to him by obedience; but may chance to prove rebellious if he do oppreſs it. But Lodowick being taken Priſoner by King Lewis the 12. the firſt came under the command of the French, and then of the Spaniard; according as thoſe Nations had poſſeſſion of the State of Millain; and after many changes and alterations, obtained again their freedom of King Francis the firſt. Which being not able to preſerve by their proper ſtrength, they finally put themſelves under the ſhelter of the Spaniard, who is now their Protector; and that not for nought; he being indebted to them, Anno 1600. a Million and a half of Gold; that being the remainder of 18. Millions, cut off by the Pope's Authority; that ſo the King might be indebted to that See; for moſt of his Lands were formerly engaged to the Money-Maſters of this City. The ſame courſe of non-payment the King took with the reſt of his Creditors in Florence, Ausburg, and the reſt, inſomuch that it was commonly ſaid in Italy, that the King of Spain had made more ill faces upon the Exchange in one day, than Michael Angelo the famous Painter, had ever made good in all his life. And thus you ſee this great City which commanded the Ocean, the Lady of ſo many Iſlands, and a great Moderator of the affairs of Italy, fain to put her ſelf into the protection of a foreign Prince, and that too at the charge of a great deal of Treaſure; which he continually raiſeth from them in the way of Loan, of which he often proves but a ſorry Pay-maſter. And if the Wars he had with England did ſo drain their purſes (for it was that War, and the War which he had in the Netherlands; that made him ſo indebted to the Banks of Genoa) no queſtion but the revolt of Catalogne, and the laſting Wars made againſt him by the French in ſo many places, places, have plunged him in as deep as ever. Which notwithstanding this people do so thrive under his protection, and draw so great commodity from their Trade with Spain, that it is thought their private men were never richer, the publick Treasury never fuller than it is at the present.

CORSICA is an Island in the Ligustick or Ligurian Sea, opposite to the City of Genoa, from whence it is distant about sixty miles; and lying just North of the Isle of Sardinia, from which it is distant seven miles. It comprehends in length an hundred and twenty miles, seventy in breadth, and three hundred twenty five in circuit; and lyeth under the fifth Climate, the longest day being almost fifteen hours.

The people are stubborn, poor, unlearned; supposed to be more cruel than other Nations, and so affirmed to be by Cæsar in his Book of Commentaries; the Progeny, as some say, of the 52 Daughters of Thespius, who being all got with child in one night by Hercules, were by their Father put to the mercy of the Sea; by which they were brought unto this Island, after peopled by them. From one of these sons named Cyrnus, the Island had the name of Cyrnos, by which it oftentimes occurreth in some old Greek Writers. This is the conceit of Fabius Pictor, one of Annius his Authors. And that of Eustathius, a far more credible Writer, is not much unlike, who will have it called Corsica from a woman so named, dwelling in the coast of Liguria; who following her Bull hither, was the first that discovered it. But these Originals I look on, the first especially, as the worst kind of Romances: the name of Cyrnos being more like to be derived from the Punick Keranoth, which signifies a horn or corner, by reason of the many Promontories with which it shoots into the Sea. Corsica insula multis promontoriis angulosa est, as it is in Isidore, Lib. 15. cap. 6. And for the name of Corsica, I should derive it rather from the Corsi (by which name the Inhabitants hereof are called in most Latin Writers) one of the two Nations of most note in the neighbouring Island of Sardinia. Celeberrimi in ea populorum Balari, & Corsi, as we find in Pliny. Which Corsi, or some of them, being overborn by some new Invaders (which the Island of Sardinia was seldom free of) were fain to shift their seat, and came over hither.

This Country yieldeth excellent Dogs for game, good Horses, fierce Mastiffs; and a beast called Mufoli, not found in Europe, excepting in this Island, and Sardinia only, but there called Mufrones, or Mucriones, (for I conceive they are the same under divers names) said to be horned like Rams, and skinned like Stags; which skin is of such incredible hardness, that the beast being cast headlong against a Rock, receives no hurt, but nimbly flies from his Enemy to his den.

The soil by reason of the mountains (which every where are too thick and barren in it) is not very fruitful; producing Corn in less plenty, but the best Wines, and such as the old Romans well relished, in good measure. It produceth also Oyl, Figs, Raisons, and Honey: the first three in a mediocrity of goodness, the last somewhat bitter, and by many deemed unwholesom. It aboundeth also with Alom, Box-trees, Iron Mines, and the Tree called Taxus, whose poysonous Berries, though in taste pleasing, are much fed on by Bees: and therefore thought to be the cause of the bitterness of the Honey. In some few places where the Rivers have their currents, especially towards Liguria, it recompenceth by its fertility, in bearing all manner of grain, the barrenness of the mountains. Which mountains cutting through the midst of it, divide the whole Island into Cismontanum, being that towards Genoa; and Transmontanum, lying towards Sardinia; yet so, that the people on each side call themselves the Cismontanes, and the other the Tramontanes. Both of them speak a corrupt Italian, in which there is not a little mixture of French and Spanish.

For Rivers, there are none of note; the principal of those which the Island yields, being called Gelo, and Travignano. And as for Cities, some of the Ancients reckoned 33. which Strabo doth conceive to be Castles only; there being but four Towns or Cities in it in his time: of which four, two were Roman Colonies, the one planted by Marius, called Mariana; the other by L. Sylla, in the Town called Alleria; a place of some Antiquity before that time, and at this day a Bishop's See. But now the place of most importance, is the Town of Bastia, seated in the North-east part of the Island, opposite almost unto Alleria, with a commodious Haven to it, and a strong Garison to defend it: as being the ordinary seat of the Governour sent hither from Genoa; and of the Bishop of Alleria, who makes there his residence. 2. Aiazzo, a reasonable strong Town, and a Bishop's See; and so is also 3. Nebbio, called Chasunum by Ptolomy. Then there is 4. Porto Vrechio, built not long since in the place of an old decayed Haven, and peopled by a Colony sent from Genoa. 5. St. Florence, a Port-town in the Northern part in the midst betwixt Nebbio and Mariana: and 6. St Boniface, called by Ptolomy, Portus Syracusanus, just opposite unto it in the South corner of the Isle; both of them places of good safety, and capable of the greatest vessels that frequent those Seas.

Who were the first Inhabitants is not easily known. That the Phœnicians or Tyrians had some footing here, is manifest by that of Callimachus an old Greek Poet, who calleth it Φοίνικα Κύρνος, the Phœnician Cyrnus; and by that of Diodorus Siculus, affirming that the Carthaginians and Tyrrheni (which questionless he mistook for Tyrii) cast the Phocenses out of this Island. But whether these Phocenses did first inhabit, or only had a Colony in some part thereof, is not demonstrable from those Authors. The Carthaginians after this made a Conquest of it, and held it till the time of the first Punick War; when they were driven thence by the valour of Cornelius Scipio. Yet was it not totally subdued, nor brought into the form of a Roman Province, till some time after; when it was fully conquered by C. Papyrius, A.V.C. 541. This Island and Sardinia at the first being joyned together, governed by one Prætor only; but afterwards made two distinct Provinces, immediately subject to the Præfect of the City of Rome, and consequently members of the Roman Patriarchate. In the falling of the Roman Empire, it became a prey unto the Vandals, who used to send their condemned persons out of Africk hither, to fell Timber for shipping; the Country even till then being very much over-grown with Woods. Afterwards with the rest of the Illands of the Mediterranean, it was under the power of the Saracens, against whom Ademar the Count or Governour of Genoa armed a Fleet of Gallies, and vanquished them in a fight at Sea, but lost his life in the action: which notwithstanding the Genoese following their good fortune, seised on the Island, and carried thence 13 of the Enemies Ships. The Pisans after this got possession of it, but being vanquished by the Genoese in the fight near Giglio (before mentioned) they were fain to leave it to the Conquerors. Since that, it hath always followed the fortune of Genoa, save that it remained somewhat longer than that City did in the hands of the French, who in the year 1554. seized on it by the aid of the Turks, whom (to the great dishonour of Christianity) they entertained in their Wars against Charles the fifth, but in the end, restored it to the Common-

Common-wealth, upon the peace made betwixt France and Spain, Anno 1559. And for securing of this Island to the State of Genoa, they fell upon this handsom project: imploying none but natural Genoese to serve in the Garrisons of the Islands, the better to keep under this untractable People; and filling all their Garrisons upon the Continent with natural Corsicans, whereby the Island is unfurnished of its ablest men, who also serve for Hostages of the Publick Faith.

Having thus took a brief view of the several parts and members of this Common wealth, let us next look upon the whole, as to the Government, Forces, and Revenue of it. First for the Government, the principal of their Magistrates hath the name of Duke; as titular as the Duke of Venice, but of less esteem: that Duke continuing in his Office for term of life, but this being alterable and removed at the two years end. So that he may be called most properly the Mayor of Genoa. For these two years he dwells in the publick Palace, and hath 500 Germans for the Guard of his Person; in nothing like a Prince but that: and for that time, he alone hath the power of propounding any thing to the Senate, which carrieth some resemblance of a Negative Voice. His time expired, he returns unto his house as a private Person, but so, that during life he hath the office of a Procurator in the Common-wealth. To him there are assistant eight principal Officers, who sit upon the same Form with him, and continue in their office for two years also; which eight, together with the Duke, are called the Signeury: but he, and they, in matters of most weight and moment, subordinate to the General Council, consisting of 400 Persons, all of them Gentlemen of the City; who with the nine before remembred do constitute the body of the Common-wealth. Under this form they have continued, ever since by the power and Goodness of Andreas Doria (who might have made himself their Prince) they were discharged of their Subjection to the French, Anno 1528. never in danger of relapsing to their former servitude, but in the treasonable practice of the Flischi, a remarkable Family of the City; who hoping to possess themselves of the Principality under Protection of the French, had so laid their plot, that Augustine di Flischi, who was designed to be their Duke, had in the night time seized on the Navy, and slain John Doria who had the command thereof. But leaping from one Gallie to another, to make sure of all, stumbled and fell into the Sea, where he and his ambitious treasons were both drowned together.

As for their Forces, there are within the Signeury 10000 men ready to arm at any time, as they see occasion; 25 Gallies always ready in the Publick Arsenal, and four continually at Sea for defence of their Trading. Sufficient strength to save them from a petit force, though not to guard them from the power of a strong Invader. But the chief strength which they rely on, is the King of Spain; whose protection, though it costs them dear, is worth their money; and they have prospered so well by it, that notwithstanding all the Losses which they have sustained, it is supposed that the Revenue of the Common-wealth (besides the Treasury of St. George, which is very rich, and managed as a distinct body from the Publick, by its own Officers) amounteth to no less than 430000 Crowns per annum.

As for the Treasury of St. George, though it contain no part of the publick Patrimony, but be governed by its own Officers, as a State distinct: yet is it of such ready use, so able at all times to furnish the Republick with vast sums of money; that the security and preservation of this Common-wealth, depends much upon it. The Institution and Administration whereof, together with the benefit which from hence rebounds unto this Estate, I cannot better present to the Readers View, than in the words of Machiavel the greatest Politick of his times; who in his History of Florence hath expressed it thus. ‘ Post diuturnum illud bellum quod Genoenses ‘ multis abhinc annis cum Vene is gessere, &c. After that ‘ tedious War between the Genoises, and Venetians, was ‘ ended in the year 1381. and that the Genoese found ‘ themselves unable to repay those monies, which they ‘ had taken up of their private Citizens in pursuit there- ‘ of, they thought it best to assign their ordinary Taxes ‘ over to them, that so in tract of time the whole debt ‘ might be satisfied; and for that end alotted them a ‘ Common Hall, there to deliberate and determine of ‘ their affairs. These men, thus made the Masters of ‘ the publick Taxes, elect among themselves a Com- ‘ mon-Council of an hundred; and over them eight Offi- ‘ cers of especial power, to order and direct the rest, ‘ and to dispose of the Intrado: which Corporation so ‘ established, they intituled St. Georges Bank. It hapned ‘ afterward, that the Republick wanting more moneys, ‘ was glad to have recourse unto St. George; who grow- ‘ ing wealthy by the orderly managing of his stock, ‘ was best able to relieve them in their necessities: and ‘ as before they assigned their Taxes over to him, so ‘ now, ditionem suam oppignorabant, they Mortgaged all ‘ their Demain. So that St. George continually waxing ‘ richer, and the State poorer, this Corporation became ‘ possessed at last, of almost all the Towns and Terri- ‘ tories of the Common-wealth: all which they go- ‘ verned by their own Magistrates, chosen by common ‘ suffrage from among themselves. It followed hereupon, ‘ that the common People bearing less respect unto the ‘ Publick, applyed themselves unto St. George; this ‘ being always orderly and prudently governed; that ‘ many times inclining to Tyranny; this never changing ‘ Officers, or form of Government, that subject to the ‘ proud ambitious lusts of each Usurper, whether Do- ‘ mestical or Foreign. Insomuch that when the two ‘ potent Families of the Fregosi and Adorni, contended ‘ for the Soveraignty in this Estate, most of the People ‘ looked upon it as a quarrel which concerned them not: ‘ St. George not medling more in it, than to take an Oath ‘ of the prevailing Faction, to preserve his liberties. ‘ Rarissimo sanè exemplo, &c. A most excellent and rare ‘ thing (saith he) never found out by any of the old ‘ Philosophers in their imaginary Forms of a Common- ‘ wealth: that in the same State, and the same People, ‘ one may see at the same time, both Tyranny and Liberty ‘ Justice and oppression, Civility and Misgovernments: ‘ This only Corporation preserving in the Common- ‘ wealth its ancient Lustre. So that in case St. George ‘ should in the end become possessed of the remainder ‘ of the Patrimony and Estate thereof, as it is possible ‘ it may; the State of Genoa might not alone be equalled ‘ with that of Venice, but preferred before it. So far, and to this purpose that great Master of State-craft; a man of less impiety, and more regular life, than some of those who have traduced him for an Atheist.

The Estates of LOMBARDIE.

LOMBARDIE, is bounded on the East with Romandiola, and the Estate or Territory of Ferrara; on the West, with that part of the Alpes, which divides Italy from France; on the North, (reckoning Marca Trevigiana within the bounds hereof) with that; part of the Alps which lieth towards Germany; and on the South, with the Apennine, which parteth it from Liguria, or the State of Genoa.

It was called anciently Gallia Ciſalpina, whereof we ſhall ſpeak more anon; and took this new name from the Lombards, or Longobardi, a people of Germany (of whom we have already ſpoken, but ſhall ſpeak more at large when we come to Hungary;) who coming out of Pannonia poſſeſſed themſelves of a great part of Italy, but left their name to this Tract only. A Tract of ground of which it may be truly ſaid, that, as Italy is the Garden of Europe, ſo Lombardy is the Garden of Italy, or the faireſt Flower in all that Garden. A Country of ſo rich a mixture, that ſuch another piece of ground for beautiful Cities, goodly Rivers, for Fields and Paſtures ſhaded with ſuch excellent fruits, for plenty of Fowl, Fiſh, Corn, and Wine, cannot be found again in our Weſtern World. So that it is no wonder, that the two great Kings of France and Spain, have ſtrived ſo eagerly and with ſuch an effuſion of Chriſtian blood for the Dutchy of Millain, a part only (though the richeſt part) of this goodly Country; and but a ſpot of Earth compared to their own Dominions.

Anciently it was of more extent than now it is, containing beſides the Principalities hereafter mentioned, the Provinces of Romandiola, and Trevigiana; even all, which in the infancy and growth of the Roman Empire, had the name of Gallia Ciſalpina: called Gallia from the Galls, who being drawn over the Alps by the taſte of the ſweet Italian Wines, in the time of Tarquinius Priſcus King of Rome, under the conduct and command of Beloveſus ſon of Ambigatus Kings of the Celtæ, ſubdued the Natives, and poſſeſſed themſelves of all the Country, from the Weſt parts of the Tuſcan Sea and Apennine Hills to the Adriatick; and from the Alps to the River Rubicon on the North-Eaſt, and the River Arnus on the South-Eaſt. Ciſalpina it was called becauſe it lay on that ſide of the Alps which was near to Rome, to difference it from Gallia on the other ſide of the Mountains, which had the name of Tranſalpina. It was alſo called Gallia Togata becauſe the people of it being civilized, conformed themſelves to the Roman habit: that on the other ſide of the Alps being called Braccata becauſe they kept themſelves to their former Mantles (reſembling thoſe now worn by the vulgar Iriſh) which by the Latines were called Braccæ. For though the word Braccæ in ſome of our common Dictionaries be rendred Gally-ſlops or Breeches (and poſſibly the word Breeches may be thence derived) which made me conceive that the habit heretofore of thoſe Galls was a kind of Trouzes, ſuch as thoſe uſually worn by the Iriſh Foot-men: yet when I find in approved Authors, that it was Tunica Sago impoſita, a Garment which they wore over their Coats and Caſſocks, I conceive I had good reaſon to tranſlate it otherwiſe.

They were generally divided into four great Nations, that is to ſay, 1. the Inſubres, inhabiting from the Alps to the River Arnus, and conſequently ſpreading over the Dukedoms of Millain, Parma, Modena, Mantua, Piemont, and ſome part of the Dukedom of Florence: 2. The Cenomani who lay next the Inſubres poſſeſſing the greateſt part of Trevigiana: 3. The Boii, taking up the reſt of Trevigiana, with the Dukedom of Ferrara, and ſo much of Romandiola as lyeth on the North Weſt ſide of the River Rubicon: 4. The Senones who paſſing over the Rubicon inhabited the reſt of Romandiola and the Dukedom of Vrbine. Of theſe the Senones (or Semnones as Ptolemie calls them) were of greateſt fame. Theſe were the men that under the conduct of Brennus, having defeated the Roman Armies at the Battel of Allia, followed their victory unto Rome, which they ſacked and burned: nothing made good in all the City but the Capitol only, which alſo had been taken by them, ni anſeres diis dormientibus vigilaſſent, as S. Auguſtine ſcoffs it, if the Geeſe had not been more watchful than their Gods, or Guards. Failing herein they compounded for 1000 pound weight of Gold to forſake the City: but before the money was received, they were aſſaulted by Camillus, driven out of the Town and vanquiſhed in a ſet Battel, about eight miles off; who is therefore called Rome's ſecond Founder. This hapned Anno V. C. 364. Vanquiſhed again at the River Aniene, by T. Quinctius the Dictator; and after that Anno V.C. 404. by the ſaid Camillus, being then 80 years of age, in the Poutine fields: they got the Boii to aſſiſt them, and after joyned with the Samnites, Tuſcans, and other Nations in a common War. But being for the moſt part beaten, and the War carried to their own doors a little before the coming of Pyrrhus into Italy, by M. Curius, the Conſul: they were by him driven out of their own Country; and finally ſo ſlaughtered by Dolabella at the Lake of Vadimon, Anno V. C. 470. that there was ſcarce any left of all that Nation, to brag that any of their Anceſtors had ſet fire on Rome.

The Senones being thus deſtroyed, the Romans ſuffered the reſt of the Gallick Nations to remain in quiet till the end of the firſt Punick War, when being grown of more ſtrength, and at very good leiſure, they took up Arms againſt the Boii, who fearing the like fortune as the Senones had found before, called to their Aid both the Inſubrians and Tranſalpines; making in all an Army of 50000 Foot, and 20000 Horſe. An. V.C. 528. Diſcomfited by Æmilius the Roman Conſul, near Talamon a City of Tuſcany, with the ſlaughter of 40000 of their men; they were ſet upon in their own Country ſhortly after by the Conſul Flaminius, vanquiſhed and mulcted with the loſs of one half thereof: moſt of them after this diſaſter paſſing into Germany, where we are like to hear more of them. And for the Inſubres and Cenomani, being thus left unto themſelves (the remainders of the Tranſalpines excepted only) they were invaded the next year after, (Anno V. C. 431.) under the Conſuls M. Claudius Marcellus, and Cornelius Scipio: to whom upon the loſs of their Armies, and ſome of their beſt Towns, they did yield themſelves: the Romans ſo becoming Maſters of all this Country. And yet it was accompted as a Province diſtinct from Italy, until the ſetling of the Empire in Auguſtus Cæſar, who dividing Italy into eleven Regions, made three of them out of this Ciſalpina; that is to ſay, Gallia, Venetia, and Italia Tranſpadana: as afterwards it made up four of the ſeven Provinces of the Dioceſs of Italy, according to the diſtribution of it which was made by Conſtantine. How it came with the reſt of Italy into the power of the Lombards, and how from them taken by the French, with the reſt of that Kingdom, had been ſhown already. Won by the French, and from the French transferred with the Empire to the Kings of Germany; it did ſo far preſerve the reputation of a Kingdom, that the Emperours were ſometimes Crowned at Millain with an Iron Crown for the Kingdom of Lombardy: as at Aken (a Town of Cleveland) with a Silver Crown for the Realm of Germany; and with a Golden Crown at Rome, for the ſacred Empire. But the Emperour being weakned by the Artifices of the Popes of Rome, this goodly Country was torn from it; and parcelled, in concluſion, amongſt many Princes, as it ſtill continueth.

The Lombards being Maſters of it, and having given it their own Name, divided it by the River Po into Longobardia Ciſpadna, lying betwixt the Po, and the Apennine Mountains: and Tranſpadana, lying betwixt the Po and the Alps: the firſt of which the old Romans called Æmilia, from Æmilius Lepidus, the Founder Founder of the City of Reggio (then called Regium Lepidi) once Proconsul of it. In the division of Italy by Augustus Cæsar it had the name of Gallia. The other was by him honoured with the name of Italia Transpadana, by which name it was known in the times of Tacitus; and by him called, Florentissimum Italiæ latus, the most flourishing part of all Italy. But this division being long since worn out of use, and the whole Country being cantoned into many Estates, as before was said, we will consider it at the present as it stands divided into the Dukedoms of Millain and Mantua, which with Trevigiana, described already, make up Transpadana: and those of Modena, Parma, and Montferrat, which with the Principate of Piemont, make up Cispadana.

The Dukedom of MILLAIN.

THE Dukedom of MILLAIN hath on the East, the Estates of Mantua and Parma; on the West, Piemont, and some part of Switzerland, one of the Provinces of the Alpes; on the North Marca Trevigiana; and on the South, the Apennine which parteth it from Liguria, or the State of Genoa. In elder times the habitation of the Insubres, originally a Tribe of the Hedui inhabiting in those parts of the Gallia beyond the Alpes, which now make up the Dukedom of Burgundy: but crossing the Mountains with the rest of the Gallick Nation spoken of before, they setled here, built the City of Millain, and finally became one of the greatest Tribes of the Cisalpine Galls: from thence, this Country hath the name of Insubrium Ducatus in some of the nearer Modern Writers; but commonly is called Ducatus Mediolanensis, from Mediolanium, or Millain, the chief City of it.

Principal Rivers of it, 1. Padus, 2. Addua, 3. Ollius, and 4. Ticinus; of which somewhat hath been said already; and besides those it hath also in it the Lake called anciently Lacus Larius, but now Lago di Como (from the City of Como which it neighboureth) 60 miles in length.

The chief Cities and places of note are, 1. Modoecum, not far from Millain, of more fame than greatness; the fame thereof arising from the Iron Crown kept in a Monastry here, wherewith some of the Emperours have been crowned by the Archbishops of Millain. A custom taken up from the Kings of Ostrogoths, who are said to have first used the same, in testimony that they had won their Estates by Iron. 2. Pavie, or Papia, seated on the Flood Ticinus, united to Millain by John Galeazi, the first Duke thereof; made an University by Charles the Fourth, Anno 1361. And famous for the Battel in which Francis the First of France was taken Prisoner by Charles the Fifth, Anno 1525. It is seated, as before was said, on the Flood Ticinus, about four miles from the Po, or Padus: the River carrying at this City so great a breadth, that the Bridge over it is no less than 200 walking paces long, built of Free-stone, and covered over head with a roof supported all along with Pillars. From this River the City it self was anciently called Ticinum: and took the name of Papia from its great affection to the Popes; or, as some say, quasi Patria piorum (the two first syllables of those words being joyned together by reason of the many godly men it did produce. It lyeth in length from East to West, a new fair street dividing it in the very midst: on the West side whereof are two handsom Market-places, and a strong Castle built by Galeazi, the first Duke of Millain; whose Tomb, together with that of Luitprandus King of the Lombards, are here still remaining; the Kings of Lombardy being so pleased with the situation of the place, that they made it the Seat-Royal of their Kingdom. The Cathedral here is one of the best endowed in Italy, if not in Europe; the Revenues of it amounting to 300000 Crowns per annum. 3. Como, the Birth-place of both the Plinies; a rich and handsom Town situate on the South-side of the Lacus Larius, which from this Town hath now the name of Lago di Como: into which Lake and through it runs the Addua, and yet the waters do not mingle: that of the River passing over those of the Lake. About this Lake are many fair houses and handsom Villages, which do much beautifie the place; and in the midst thereof an Island called Comacina, in which there was a strong Fortress in former times, wherein the Longobardian Kings did preserve their Treasure. 4. Lodi, or Lauda in the Latine, seated in a prosperous soil, and blessed with a painful and industrious people. 5. Novara, situate upon an high Hill, in which live many ancient and noble Families: of right belonging to the Spaniard, as Dukes of Millain; but at the time when Maginus wrote, consigned over upon some conditions to the Dukes of Parma. But this Town, though it appertained to the Dukes of Millain, is situate within the Dukedom of Montferrat; and so is, 6. Alexandria also, once a poor small Village, known by the name of Roboretum, from a Grove of Oaks adjoyning to it: afterwards being raised to its present greatness, by the joynt Purses of the Citizens of Cremona, Millain, and Placentia; in honour of the Emperor it was called Cæsarea. But in short time these people siding with the Popes, drew on themselves the anger of the Emperour Frederick Barbarossa: who having in a manner desolated the City of Millain, the people thereof, at the destruction of the City, retired to this Town; calling it in honour of Pope Alexander the Third, whose part they then took against the Emperour, by the name of Alexandria, which it still retaineth. It is now the strongest outwork of the whole Dutchy, well fortified against all assaults and batteries, which may come from France. 7. Marignan, situate South from Millain, remarkable for the great defeat here given the Switzers, by King Francis the First, and now the title of a Marquess. 8. Cremona, situate on the Banks of the River Po, in a very rich and healthful soil; an ancient Colony of the Romans, but a beautiful City to this day; and of such fidelity to its Prince, that it hath got the name of, Cremona the faithful. It was built in the first year of the second Punick War, and burnt to the ground by Vespasians Souldiers, after the defeat of Vitellius his Forces: which defeat was given under the Walls of this Town. For when Antonius, Vespasians General, first after his Victory entred into it, he went into a Bath to wash away the sweat and blood from his body: where finding the water somewhat too cold, he said by chance, that it should anon be made hotter. Which words the Souldiers applying to their greedy desires, set fire on the Town, and spent four days in the pillage of it. By the encouragement of Vespasian it was again re-edified, and is now grown famous for the high Tower; from which the by-word, Una turris in Cremona, unus Petrus in Roma, unus portus in Ancona. 9. Millain, a fair Town, once the Metropolis of the Province of Liguria, and afterwards of the whole Diocess of Italy, called therefore Μητρόπολις Ἰταλίας, the Metropolis or Mother-City of Italy, as Dionysius one of the Bishops hereof is called the Metropolitan of Italy by St. Athanasius. At this time the fairest and the biggest of all Lombardy, having a Castle so strongly fortified, with natural and artificial Ramparts, that it is deemed impregnable. A City very populous, containing 200000 persons; and of great Trade, here being private Shops equalling the publick Store-houses of other places; the people consequently so rich, that the wife of every mechanick will flant it in her Silks and Taffeties. This City is said to have been built by the Galls, 359 years before Christ. It is seven miles in circuit, and honoured with an University, wherein flourished Hermolaus Barbarus, Cælius Rhodoginus, and Cardanus. Seated it is, in as commodious a Soil as any in Italy, environed with Water by two great Chanels; the one drawn from the River of Addua, the other from the Tesis or Athesis: which run hard by it, and convey all things to the City in so great abundance, that things there are at very cheap rates; and add much also to the industry of the Inhabitants in the vending and dispersing of their Manufactures, which are of great esteem in most parts of the World. The buildings of the City generally are fair and stately, but three especially commended for their magnificence; that is to say, The Castle, the Hospital, and the Cathedral. For matter of Religion it doth use to glory, that Barnabas the Apostle was its first Bishop, and Saint Ambrose one of his Successors; that formerly their Bishop stood on even terms with the Popes of Rome, and their Church as much priviledged as that; and that since those times they have given unto the World four Popes, that is to say, Alexander the second, Urban the third, Celestine the fifth, and of late, Gregory the fourteenth.

As for the fortunes of it, it continued in the power of the French, and the Kings of Italy of that Nation, from the destruction of the Lombards, till the Kingdom of Italy fell from the house of Charles the Great, and came at last into the hands of the German Emperors. Under them it continued till the time of Frederick Barbarossa, from whose obedience it revolted Anno 1161, in behalf of Pope Alexander the Third; the Emperor divers times defacing the City, and the people still ministring fresh occasions of dislike and quarrel. Beatrix the Wife of Frederick, coming to see the City, without any ill intentions to it; was by the irreverent people first imprisoned, and then most barbarously used: For setting her upon a Mule, they turned her face towards the tail, which they made her hold instead of a Bridle; and having thus shewed her up and down the City, they brought her unto one of the Gates, and there kicked her out. To revenge this horrible affront, the Emperor besieged and forced the Town; adjudging all the people to die without mercy, but such as would undergo this ransom. Between the buttocks of a skittish and kicking Mule, there was fastned a bunch of Figs; one or more of which, such as desired to live must snatch out with their teeth, their hands bound behind them, as the Mule was pacing through the streets. A condition which most of them excepted; and thereupon gave occasion to the custom used among the Italians: who when they intend to scoff or disgrace a man, are wont to put their thumb betwixt two of their fingers, saying Ecco la Fico; a disgrace answerable to that of making Horns (in England) to him that is suspected to be a Cuckold. The City after this, rebelling and again taken by the Emperor, he levelled it unto the ground, pulled down the walls; and caused the whole ground on which it stood, to be plowed up, and sowed with Salt; seeming to threaten by that Emblem, that it should never be re-edified. Which notwithstanding, the City was not only new built again, but the Pope with the help of these Millanese and Venetians, had at last the better of the Emperor; whom he enjoined, after a vile submission, to undertake a journey to the Holy Land. Freed from the Emperor, they began to live after the form of a Republick; in which condition they continued about 56 years: when Otho, surnamed Vesconti (quasi bis Comes, because he was Lord of Millain and Angerona) assumed the title to himself, and settled it upon that Family after his decease; but so that for the most part they were under the command of the German Emperors, and to them accomptable. Galeaze the first, so called (as some write) because the Cocks crowed more than ordinarily at the time of his birth, added to the Estate hereof the Cities of Crema, and Cremona. In the person of John Galeazo it was advanced unto a Dukedom by the Emperor Wenceslaus, for 100000 Crowns in ready money; which John, increased so mightily in wealth and power, that he had 29 Cities under his Command; and died as he was going to Florence to be crowned King of Tuscany. To him succeeded John Maria, and after him his brother Philip: who in his life had married his only daughter (but illegitimate) to Francisco Sforza, the best Commander of his times; and at his death appointed Alfonso of Aragon, King of Naples, for his Heir and Successor. Before Alfonso could take any benefit of this designation, Sforza was quietly possessed both of the City and the loves of the people. This Francis Sforza (I must needs crave leave to tell this story) was the son of James Altendulo, a plain Country-man, who going to his labour with his Axe in his hand, whilst a great Army was passing by him, compared the misery and unpleasingness of his present condition, with those fair probabilities which a Martial life did present unto him. And being in a great dispute within himself what were best to do, he presently fell upon a resolution of putting the question to the determination of the Heavenly Providence; by casting his Axe unto the top of a Tree next to him: conditioning with himself, that if the Axe came down again, he would contentedly apply himself to his wonted labour; but if it hung upon the boughs, he would betake himself unto higher hopes, and follow the Army then in passage. He did so, the Axe hung upon the boughs, he went after the Army, and thrived so well in that imployment, that he became one of the best Captains of his time; surnamed de Cotonigla from the place of his dwelling, and Sforza from the greatness of his noble courage. By Antonia the Daughter of Francis di Casalis, the Lord of Cortona, he was the Father of this Francis Sforza whom now we speak of; who was so fortunate a Commander in the Wars of Italy, that to oblige him to his party, Philip the Duke of Millain bestowed his daughter upon him, and thereby a fair title to this great Estate, which he successively obtained against all pretenders. In his line it continued till the coming of Lewis the Twelfth of France, the Son of Charles, and Nephew of Lewis, Dukes of Orleans, by Valentina the sole Daughter of John Galeaze the first Duke: who getting Duke Lodowick Sforza (betrayed by the Switzers) into his hands, carried him prisoner into France, and possessed himself of the Estate. Outed not long after by the Confederate Princes of Italy, who were jealous of so great a neigbour; he left the cause and quarrel unto Francis the first, his next successor in that Kingdom: in pursuance whereof, it is said by Bellay a French Writer, that the use of Muskets was first known. But Francis being in conclusion taken at the Battel of Pavie, and carried prisoner into Spain; for his release, was forced to release all claim unto this Estate. A release long before endeavoured by some French Politicians, because the pretensions hereunto had brought such damage unto that Crown: and no less eagerly opposed by Chancellor Prat (on the same reason that Scipio Nasica did oppose the destruction of Carthage, that is to say) because it did not only keep the French Nation in continual discipline of War; but served for a purgation of idle and superfluous people. Yet notwithstanding this release, Francis renewed the War again; and laid siege to Millain, then under the command of Antonio di Leva, and a Spanish Garrison: during which which War, the wretched Millaneſe endured the worſt of miſeries. For firſt the Governor, under colour of providing pay for his Souldiers, got all the victuals of the Town into the Caſtle, to be ſold again at his own price: which many of the poorer ſort not able to pay, periſhed of Famin in the ſtreets. And on the other ſide, his Souldiers which were quartered in moſt parts of the City, uſed when they wanted money, to chain up their Hoſts, and then to put them to a ranſom. Such as upon this barbarous uſage fled out of the City, had their Goods confiſcate: on which there followed ſuch a diſconſolate deſolation, that the chief ſtreets were over-grown with Nettles and Brambles. In this miſerable eſtate it continued, till Charles the Emperor having totally driven out the French, reſtored it to Francis Sforza, brother to the laſt Duke Maximilian, and ſon of that Ludowick, who to advance himſelf unto this Eſtate, had moſt improvidently taught the French the way into Italy. But this Francis dying without iſſue, and the houſe of Sforza failing in him; the Emperor entred on the Dukedom as right Lord thereof, and left the ſame to his ſucceſſors in the Realm of Spain. This ſaid, we will ſum up the whole ſtory of this Eſtate, in the enſuing Catalogue of

The Lords and Dukes of Millain.

1277 1 Otho Viſconti Archbiſhop of Millain.
1295 2 Matthew, Brothers Son to Otho, confirmed in his command of Millain by Albertus the Emperor.
1322 3 Galeaze Viſconti, Son of Matthew, diſſeized of his command by Lewis of Bavaria Emperor.
1329 4 Actio Viſconti, Son of Galeaze, confirmed in his Fathers power by the ſame Lewis the Emperor.
1339 5 Luchino Viſconti, Brother to Galeaze.
1349 6 John Viſconti, the Brother of Luchino.
1354 7 Galeaze II. Son of Stephen, the Brother of John.
1378 8 John Galeaze, Son of the firſt Galeaze, created by the Emperor Wenceſlaus, the firſt Duke of Millain, An. 1395.
1402 9 John Maria, Son of John Galeaze, ſlain by the people for his horrible tyrannies.
1412 10 Philip Maria, the laſt of the Viſconti, which commanded in Millain; a Prince of great power in ſwaying the affairs in Italy. He died Anno 1446; the Millaneſe for ſome years reſuming their former liberty.
1446 11 Francis Sforze, in right of his Wife Blanch the baſe daughter of Philip, ſeconded by the power of the Sword, admitted Duke by the general conſent of the people of Millain, one of the Knights of the Noble Order of the Garter.
1461 12 Galeaze Sforze, a valiant but libidinous Prince cruelly murdered by his own Subjects.
1477 13 John Galaze Sforze, privately made away (as it was ſuppoſed) by his Unkle Lodowick.
1494 14 Lodowick Sforze, the Son of Francis, and Brother of Galeaze, who to ſecure himſelf of his ill-got Dukedom, drew the French into Italy.
1501 15 Lewis the XII. of France, Son unto Charles, and Nephew to Lewis Duke of Orleans, by Valentina Daughter to John the Firſt Duke of Millain; vanquiſhed Ludowick, carried him priſoner into France, and took the Dukedom to himſelf.
1513 16 Maximilian Sforze, the ſon of Ludowick, reſtor'd to the Dukedom by the power of the Switzers, and Venetians; but again outed of it by Francis the firſt, Son-in-law and Succeſſor to King Lewis the twelfth in the Kingdom of France.
1529 17 Francis Sforze, Brother of Maximilian, reſtored to the Eſtate, and the French expelled by the puiſſance of Charles the fifth; who after the death of this Duke Francis (the laſt of the Sforzes) Anno 1535, united it for ever to the Crown of Spain.

This Dukedom is not now of ſuch great extent, and power, as in former times; there being but nine Cities remaining of thoſe 29, which were once under the command of the Dukes hereof; the reſt being gotten in by the State of Venice, the Florentines; the Dukes of Mantua, and Parma. And yet is this accompted the prime Dukedom of Chriſtendom (as Flanders was accompted the prime Earldom of it) affording the Annual Revenue of 800000 Ducats to the King of Spain. A good Revenue, might it come clear unto his Coffers. But what with the diſcharge of his Garriſon-ſoldiers, the defraying of his Vice-roy, the Salaries of Judges and inferior Miniſters; it is conceived that he ſpends more on it than he getteth.

The Arms hereof are Argent, a Serpent Azure, Crowned Or; in his Gorge, an Infant Gules. Which was the Coat-Armour of a Saracen, vanquiſhed by Otho the firſt of the Viſconti in the Holy-Land.

The Dukedom of MANTUA.

THE Dukedom of MANTUA, is bounded on the Weſt, with Millain; on the Eaſt, with Romandiala; on the North, with Marca Trevigiana; and on the South, with the Dukedom of Parma.

The Country about Mantua is reaſonably good, and yieldeth all ſorts of Fruits being well manured: plentiful in Corn and Paſtures, the very High-ways by the Fields being planted with Elms, to train up the Vines which grow there intermingled in every place, as generally it is in all parts of Lombardy. But the Inhabitants are conceived not to be ſo civil, and well-bred, as the reſt of Italy, childiſh in their apparel, without manly gravity, poor in the entertainment of their friends, and exacting all they can from ſtrangers.

The places in it of moſt note are, 1 Mercaria, bordering next to Millain. 2 Bozilia, a ſmall, but pleaſant habitation, belonging to ſome Princes of the Ducal family; built with fair Cloyſters towards the Street, in which paſſengers may walk dry in the greateſt rain. 3 Petula, a ſmall Village, but as famous as any, in regard it was the place wherein Virgil was born: but generally ſaid to be born in Mantua (Mantua Virgilio gaudet, as the old Verſe is) becauſe the Village is ſo near the City of Mantua (being but 2 miles diſtant) that his birth might very well be aſcribed unto it. 4 Mantua, ſeated on the River Mincius, now called Sarca; which coming out of Lago di garda falleth not far off into the Po, from whence there is a paſſage unto Venice. By Nature ſtrong, environed on three ſides with a running water, half a mile in breadth; and on the fourth ſide with a wall. The Dukes to take their pleaſure on the Lakes and Rivers, have a Barge called the Bucentaure, five ſtories high, and capable of two hundred perſons (whence it had the name) furniſhed very richly both for ſtate and pleaſure. Ocnus the Son of Manto the Propheteſs, the Daughter of Tireſias, is ſaid to have been the Founder of it, and to have given unto it his Mother's name; but I more then doubt it, though Virgil a Native of thoſe parts do report

Port it so; this City being one of those which the Tuscans built beyond the Apennine, as the soundest Antiquaries do affirm. Made memorable (by whomsoever built at first) in the declining times of Christian purity, for a Council holden in it, Anno 1061, wherein it was decreed, that the choosing of the Pope should from thenceforth belong unto the Cardinals. A Prerogative which of old belonging to the Emperors, was first by Constantine the third, sirnamed Pogonatus, given to the Clergy and people of Rome, in the time of Pope Benedict the second, Anno 684, resumed by Charles the Great, when he came to the Empire; and now appropriated only to the Colledg of Cardinals. But to return unto the Town: on the East-side of a Bridg of about 500 paces long, covered over head, and born up with Arches, stands the Duke's Palace for the City; and not thence the Domo, or Cathedral Church of St. Peter. The Palace very fair and stately, but far short for the pleasures and delights thereof, of his Palace at Mirmirollo, five miles from the City: which though it be of a low roof (after the manner of ancient buildings) yet it is very richly furnished, and adorned with very beautiful Gardens: able to lodg, and give content to the best Prince in Christendom. Here are also many other Towns, as 5 Capræna, and 6 Lucera, of which nothing memorable.

As for the fortunes of this Dukedom, it is to be observed that Mantua followed for long time the fortunes of the Western Empire; till given by Otho the second, son to Theobald Earl of Canosse, for the many good services he had done him. Boniface who succeeded him, had to Wife Beatrix the Sister of Henry the second; and by her was the Father of Mathildis, that famous Warrioures, who carried so great a stroke in the state of Italy. Being dispossessed of her Estate by Henry the Third, she joyned in Faction with the Popes, recovered all her own again, and dismembred from the Empire many goodly Territories, which at her death (having had three Husbands, but no issue) she gave in Fee for ever to the See of Rome, Anno 1115. After her death, Mantua continued under the protection of the Empire. But that protection failing them, by little and little it was brought under by the Family of the Bonacelsi: who Lording it over a Free-people with too great severity, contracted such a general hatred, that Passavino the last of them, was slain in the Market-place by the people, under the command and conduct of Lewis de Gonzaga, a noble Gentleman; who presently with great applause took to himself the Government of the Estate, Anno 1328. which hath continued in his house to this very day, with a great deal of lustre. Whose Successors take here as followeth, under the several Titles of

The Lords, Marquesses, and Dukes of Mantua.

A. Chr.

1328 1 Lewis Gonzaga, the first of this Line, Lord of Mantua.
1366 2 Guido, Son of Lewis.
1369 3 Lodowick, or Lewis II. Son of Guido.
1382 4 Francis Gonzaga, Son of Lewis II. highly extolled by Pagio the Florentine for his Wisdom and Learning; who valiantly repulsed the attempts made against his Estate, by John Galeaze, the first Duke of Millain.
1407 5 John Francisco Gonzago, created the first Marquess of Mantua, by the Emperour Sigismond.
1444 6 Lodowick, or Lewis III. Son of John Francisco, who entertained the Emperour Frederick, and the King of Danemark, with great magnificence.
1478 7 Frederick Son of Lewis the Third.
1484 8 Francis II. Son of Frederick.
1519 9 Frederick II. Commander of the Armies of the Pope, and Florentines, entertained Charles the Fifth with great solemnity; by whom he was made Duke of Mantua, 1530. and declared Marquess of Montferrat, in right of his Wife.
1540 10 Francis III. Son of Frederick the second Duke of Mantua, and Marquess of Montferrat.
1550 11 William the Brother of Francis the Third, created the first Duke of Montferrat.
1587 12 Vincent, Son of William, Duke of Mantua, and Montferrat.
13 Francis IV. Son of Vincent, had to Wife Margaret the Daughter of Charles Emanuel Duke of Savoy, and by her a Daughter named Mary; in whose behalf, the Duke of Savoy undertook the War against her Uncle, for Montferrat.
1613 14 Ferdinand, the Brother of Francis the Fourth, succeeded him in both Estates, notwithstanding the opposition of the Duke of Savoy.
15 Vincent II. the Brother of Ferdinand and of Francis the Fourth.
1628 16 Charles Gonzaga, Duke of Nevers in France, by his Mothers Line; and of Mantua, and Montferrat by his Father Lewis Gonzaga, the third Son of Frederick the first Duke of Mantua; succeeded on the death of Vincent the Second: but not without great opposition of the Spanish Faction, who sacked Mantua, distressed Casal, and much impoverished both Estates. But the Business was at last composed by the Power of the French, and the Investiture conferred upon him, by the hands of the Emperour.

The Territories of this Duke (reckoning in that of Montferrat also) are in circuit nigh unto those of Florence; but his Revenues fall much short, which amount to about 500000 Ducats only; but might be greater, if either the Duke would be burdensom to his Subjects, as Florence is; or if he were not on all sides Land-locked from Navigation and Traffick.

The chief Order of Knighthood in these Dukedoms, is, of The Blood of our Lord JESUS CHRIST, instituted Anno 1608. The Author of it was Duke Vincent Gonzaga, when the Marriage was solemnized between his Son Francis and Lady Margaret, Daughter to the Duke of Savoy. It consisteth of twenty Knights, whereof the Mantuan Dukes are Soveraigns; and was allowed by Pope Paul the Fifth. The Collar hath Threads of Gold laid on fire, and interwoven with these words, Domine Probasti. To the Collar are pendent two Angels, supporting three drops of Blood, and circumscribed with, Nihil isto triste recepto. It took this name, because in St. Andrews Church in Mantua, are said to be kept as a most precious Relique, certain drops of our Saviours Blood (thou canst not, O Reader, but believe it) with a piece of the Sponge.

The Arms of Mantua are Argent, a Cross Petee Gules, between four Eagles Sable, membred of the second, under an Escocheon in Fesse, charged quarterly with Gules a Lion Or, and Or three Bars Sable.

THE

The Dukedom of MODENA.

THE Dukedom of MODENA containeth the Cities of Modena and Reggio, with the Territories adjoyning to them: both of them ſituate in that part of Lombardy which is called Giſpadana; and conſequently partake of the pleaſures and commodities of it.

The people of this Dukedom are ſaid to be better natured than moſt of Italy: thoſe of Modena being quick in their reſolution; eaſie to be pacified when wronged, and friendly in their entertainment of Srangers; the Reggians being affable, of preſent wits, and fit for any thing they can be imployed in: the women in both Towns of a mild diſpoſition, neither too courtly, nor too froward, as in other places.

The firſt principal City is that of Modena, anciently better known by the name of Mutina, and famous in thoſe times for the firſt battel betwixt Antony and Auguſtus Cæſar; this latter being then not above eighteen years of age, and yet made head of a new League againſt Antonius, whom the Senate and people looked upon as a common Enemy. The managing of the War was left to Hirtius and Panſa then Conſuls; the fortune of the day ſo equal, that Antony left the field, and the Conſuls their lives; leaving Auguſtus the abſolute command of a powerful Army, into whoſe favours he ſo cunningly did work himſelf, that he made them the foundation of his future greatneſs. It was at that time a Roman Colony, but being ruined by the fury of the Goths and Lombards, was afterwards new built at the charge of the Citizens, ſituate near the Appennine in a very good ſoil, and of indifferent fair buildings. In the diſtractions of Italy betwixt the Emperors and the Popes, Guido the Pope's Legate, and then Biſhop thereof, conſigned it over to Azo of the houſe of Eſte, Lord of Ferrara, Anno 1304. the Pope himſelf conſenting to it, upon the payment of a yearly tribute of 10000 Crowns: ſince which time it hath been for the moſt part in the power of that houſe: Borſius the Marqueſs of Ferrara, being by Frederick the third made Duke of Mantina. 2. Reggio, the ſecond Town of note, hath taſted much of the ſame fortune; at firſt a Roman Colony called Regium Lepidi, afterwards ruined by the Goths when they came firſt into Italy; repaired and compaſſed with a Wall by its own inhabitants, and for a time under the command of the Earls of Canoſſe. But being weary of that yoke, they recovered their liberty; which being unable to maintain in thoſe buſtling times, they gave themſelves unto Obizo the Father of Azo, Anno 1292, and after that in the year 1326, to the See of Rome. Paſſing through many other hands, it was at laſt ſold for 60000 Ducats to the Viſconti, Lords of Millain, Anno 1370, and in the end recovered by the houſe of Eſte, Anno 1409, and gave the title of a Duke to the aforeſaid Borſius, whom Frederick the third made Duke of Modena, and Reggio, 1452.

The ſucceſſors of this Borſius are before laid down in the ſucceſſion of Ferrara; who held the whole Eſtate together till the death of Alphonſo the laſt Duke. He dying without lawful iſſue, Anno 1595, left his Eſtate to Cæſar de Aſte, his Nephew by a baſe ſon, called Alphonſo alſo; betwixt whom and Pope Clement the 8th. a War was threatened for the whole: but at laſt compromiſed upon theſe conditions, That the Church of Rome ſhould have Ferrara, with all the Lands and Territories appertaining to it, as an Eſtate anciently holden of that See; and that Modena, and Reggio, being Imperial Fiefes, ſhould remain to Cæſar; but to be held in fee of the Papal Throne. Duke Cæſar to have leave to carry away all his movable goods, to ſell ſuch of his lands as were not of the ancient demain of the Dukedom; and to have one half of the Ordnance and Artillery. By which agreement the Cities of Modena and Reggio, became a new erected State, diſtinct, and independent of any other: each City being well fortified, and garriſoned, and furniſhed with Ordnance for defence thereof. But what they yield unto the Prince in the way of Revenue, and what Forces he is able to raiſe out of his Eſtates, I cannot poſitively determine: but by the Tribute formerly paid unto the Popes for the City of Mutina, and the rich Territory of both Towns, and the great Revenues of the Dukes of Ferrara; I conceive they cannot yield leſs than 100000 Crowns of yearly In-come. The Arms of this Duke the ſame with thoſe of Ferrara, before blazoned.

The Dukedom of PARMA.

THE Dukedom of PARMA hath on the North the Dukedoms of Millain and Mantua, from which it is parted by the Po, on the South the Appennine, which divideth it from Liguria; on the Eaſt the Country of Modena, and Romandiola, from which laſt parted by the River Scultenna now called Panaro; on the Weſt Montferrat: ſituate, as Modena is, in Lombardia Ciſpadana; and much of the ſame nature both for ſoil, and air, and other the commodities of thoſe parts of Italy.

The principal Cities of it are, 1. Parma, an ancient City, and made a Colony of the Romans at the end of the ſecond Punick War; as Mutina and Aquileia at the ſame time were. It is ſeated on a ſmall River of the ſame name, which runneth almoſt through the midſt of it; beautified with very handſom buildings, and peopled by a race of ingenious men, whether they do betake themſelves unto Arts or Arms. The grounds about this City are of excellent paſturage, and yield great plenty of the Cheeſe which is called Permeſan. 2. Placentia, ſeated on the Po, one of the firſt Colonies which the Romans planted amongſt the Ciſalpine Galls; and famous for the reſiſtance which it made both to Annibal, and Aſdrubal, who ſeverally in vain beſieged it: made afterwards the Metropolis of the Province of Æmelia, yet nothing the leſs beautiful for ſo great an age. The fields adjoyning have the ſame commendation with thoſe of Parma, for moſt excellent Cheeſe; but go beyond for Salt-pits and Mines of Iron, which the other wanteth. 3. Mirandula, a proper Town built in the time of Conſtans the ſon of Conſtantine the Great: the Patrimony of the noble Family of the Pici (of which was Picus de Mirandula that renowned Scholar) but held by them as Feudataries to the Dukes of Parma. 4. Briſcello, called anciently Brixellum, not far from the chief City Parma; of no great note at the preſent time, but memorable in the Roman ſtory for the death of the Emperor Otho, who here killed himſelf. For hearing here that his Forces were overthrown by Valens, and Cecina, Commanders of the Forces of Vitellus, then his Competitor for the Empire; he rather choſe to fall by his own ſword, than that the Romans ſhould be forced, for his ſake, to renue the war. And this he did with ſo much honour to himſelf, that many of his Souldiers ſlew themſelves at his Funeral Pile; not out of conſciouſneſs of crime, or for fear of puniſhment; but to teſtifie their affections to him, and to follow ſuch a brave example as was laid before them. So as we may truly ſay of him, as he is ſaid by Tacitus to have ſaid of himſelf, viz. Alii diutius imperium tenuerunt, nemo tam fortiter reliquit. 5. Monticella, in the middle way almoſt between Parma and Placentia, and and opposite unto Cremona, a chief Town of the Dutchy of Millain, from which parted by the River Po.

These Towns (as others in these parts) have been partakers of the diversities of fortune, as being (after the declining of the Western Empire) sometimes under the Venetians, most times under the Millanoys; and at last conquered by Pope Julius the second in the confusions and destructions of the Dukedom of Millain, under the two last Princes of the house of Sforza. By Paul the 3*d*. being of the house of the Farnesis, the Cities of Parma and Palcentia with their Appendixes, were given unto his son Petro Aleigi (or Petrus Aloysius, as the Latins call him) with the title of Duke, An. 1549. The Signeury of Camerine, which he had lately taken from the Dukes of Urbin, being given in recompence to the Church. This Petro being a man of most vicious life, had amongst other villanies committed an unspeakable violence on the person of Cosmus Chirius the Bishop of Fanum; and soon after poysoned him. For which most detestable fact, he received no other chastisement of his Father than this, Hæc vitia me non commonstratore didicit, that he was sure he had not learnt those vices by this example. But going on in these wicked courses, he was slain at last by Count John Aguzzola; and Placentia, after a short siege, yielded to Ferdinand Gonzaga (Vice-roy in Millain for the Emperor Charles the fifth) conceived to be privy to the murder. Octavian the son of Petro Luigi, hearing what had hapned, fortified himself in Parma as well as he could: but being hated by the new Pope, and distrustful, not without good cause, of the Emperor's purposes, he had quite lost all, if Henry the second of France, had not taken him into his protection. For the Emperor Charles fully determined (notwithstanding that Octavian had married his base daughter) to have made himself Lord of the Town: and the French King was loth to see so great a strength added to the Emperor's possessions in Italy. When the war had now lasted four years, Philip the second (who afterwards succeeded Charles) considering how necessary it was for his affairs in Italy, to have this Octavian his friend, restored unto him the City of Plaisance or Placentia, and so withdrew him from the French faction, Anno 1557. Yet because he would be sure to keep his house in a perpetual dependence on Spain, he restored it not absolutely at the present, but held the Citadel thereof with a Spanish Garrison, till the year 1583: when in regard of the good services, which Alexander Prince of Parma had done him in his Wars against the Hollanders, and others of the revolted Provinces, he caused it to be surrendered into the hands of his Father Octavian. By which, and by his setling upon this house the Town and Territory of Novara, in the Dukedom of Millain, and other personal favours which they have conferred on the Princes of it, the Kings of Spain seem to have given some satisfaction to this house for stepping betwixt them and the Kingdom of Portugal; to which they might have made such a probable title, as would have troubled his Estate, had they stood upon it.

The Dukes of Parma.

A. Chr.

1549 1 Petro Luigi Farnesis, son to Paul the third, made by the Pope, his Father, the first Duke of Parma.

1550 2 Octavian Farnesis, son to Petro Luigi, married Margaret base daughter to Charles the fifth; afterwards Governess of the Netherlands.

3 Alexander, son of Octavian and Margaret of Austria, one of the most renowned Souldiers of his time, Governor of the Netherlands for King Philip the second.

1592 4 Rainutio Farnesis, son of Alexander and Mary of Portugal, eldest daughter of Edward son to King Emanuel; one of the Competitors for that Crown.

5 Odordo Farnesis, son of Rainutio.

The Dukedom of MONTFERRAT.

THE Dukedom of MONTFERRAT, is situate betwixt Lombardy and Piemont, on the Rivers of Tenarus and Po, on the East, and West; extended North, and South, in a line or branch, from the Alpes to the borders of Liguria; of which last it was sometimes counted part, and called Liguria Cisapennina for distinction sake.

It took this name either à Monte ferrato, from some Mountain of it stored with Iron; or else à Monte feraci, as some rather think, from the fertility of the Mountains. And to say truth, though the whole Country seem to be nothing else than a continual heap of Mountains; yet are they Mountains of such wonderful fruitfulness, that they will hardly give place to any Valley in Europe.

The principal River of it is the Tenarus, above mentioned, which springing out of the hills about Barcis, a Town of the Marquisate of Saluzzes, falleth into the Po not far from Pavie. The principal Cities of it are; 1. Alba, called by Pliny, Alba Pompeia, situate on the banks of the said River, in a rich and fertil soil, but a very bad air: near to which, in a poor Village called Zobia, the Emperor Pertinax was born. Who being of mean and obscure parents, after the death of Commodus, was called by the Conspirators to the Roman Empire. But being over-zealous to reform the corruptions of the Souldiers, he was by the Prætorian Guards (hating their Princes for their vertues, as much as formerly for their vices) most cruelly murthered; and the Imperial dignity sold to Julianus, for 25 Sestertiums a man. 2. Casal, vulgarly called Saint Vas, from the Church there dedicated to Saint Evasius (or Saint Vas, as they speak it commonly) the strongest Town in all this Country; well built and peopled with many ancient and noble Families, of which the Family of St. George is one of the principal; and made a Bishops See by Pope Sixtus the fourth, Anno 1474. It was in former times, the chief seat of the house of Montferrat, and for that cause compassed with a strong wall, and a fair Castle: but of late fortified after the modern manner of Fortifications, and strengthened with an impregnable Citadel by Duke Vincent Gonzago, as the surest Key of his Estate, in which new Citadel the Governor of the Province holds his usual residence. 3. Aique, in Latin Aquensis, famous for its Baths or Fountains of hot and medicinal waters. 4. Saint Saviours, where there is a very strong Fortress, as there is also in. 5. Ponsture, or Pont di Stura, so called of the River Stura. 6. Osoniano, anciently Occimianum, the old seat of the first Marquesses of this Montferrat. 7. Belzale, 8. Liburn, and many others of less note.

Here are also within the limits of this Dukedom, the Towns of Ast, Cherian, and Chivasco, belonging to the Dukes of Savoy, in the description of whole Country we may speak more of them; together with Novara and Alexandria appertaining to the Dukedom of Millain, which we have spoken of already. And hereunto also I refer the strong (and in those times) impregnable Fortress, by the Latin Historians called Fraxinetum, from some Grove of Ashes near unto it: situate in the advantages of the Mountains, and not far from the Sea, by consequence better able to defend it self and admit relief; and therefore made the receptacle or retreat of the Saracens, at such time as they had footing in these parts of Italy. First took and fortified by them in the year 891. recovered afterwards by the prowess and good Fortune of Otho the Emperour, deservedly surnamed the Great, about sixty years after. Of great note in the stories of those middle times. By Luitprandus placed near the borders of Provence; by Blondus, and Leander, near the River Po, and the Town of Valenza, once called Forum Fulvii; and finally by Sigonius in the Cottian Alpes: and so most fit to be referred unto this Country, though now so desolated that there is no remainders of the ruins of it.

This Country was made a Marquisate by Otho the second, 985. one of the seven by him erected and given to the seven Sons of Waleran of Saxony, who had married his Daughter Adelheide. A Military Family, conspicuously eminent in the Wars of Greece, and the Holy-Land; where they did many acts of singular Merit: insomuch as Baldwin and Conrade, issuing from a second branch hereof, were made Kings of Hierusalem, and Boniface one of the Marquesses, got the Kingdom of Thessaly, and many fair Estates in Greece. But the Male-issue failing in Marquess John, the Estate fell to Theodorus Palæologus, of the Imperial Family of Constantinople, who had married the Heir-General of the House; continuing in his name till the year 1534. when it fell into the hands of the Dukes of Mantua. In the person of Duke William Gonzaga raised to the honour of a Dukedom, as it still continueth; the best and richest part of the Duke's Estate, and the fairest flower in all his Garden. The residue of the story may be best collected out of the following Catalogue of

The Marquesses of Montferrat.

A.C.
985	1	William, one of the Sons of Waleran and Adelheide, made the first Marquess of Montferrat.
	2	Boniface, the Son of William.
	3	William II. who accompanied the Emperour Conrade the III. and St. Lewis of France, to the Holy-Land.
1183	4	Boniface II. Son of William the II. his younger Brother William being designed King of Hierusalem, and Reyner another of them made Prince of Thessaly, succeeded his Father in Montferrat. Aiding his Nephew Baldwin, the Son of William, in recovering the Kingdom of Hierusalem; he was took prisoner by Guy of Lusignan, Competitor with him for that title.
	5	William III. Son of Boniface, poisoned in the Holy Land, where he endeavoured the restoring of his Brother Conrade, to that languishing Kingdom.
	6	Boniface III. Son of William the Third, for his valour in taking of Constantinople, made King of Thessaly.
1254	7	Boniface IV. Son of Boniface the Third, added Vorcelli and Eporedium unto his Estate.
	8	John, surnamed the Just, the last of this house.
	9	Theodore Palæologus Son of the Emperour Andronicus Palæologus the elder, and Yoland his Wife, Daughter of Boniface the Fourth.
	10	John Palæologus, Son of Theodore.
	11	Theodorus II. Son of John, a great builder and endower of Religious houses.
	12	Jacobus Johannes, Son of Theodore the second.
	13	John III. eldest Son of Jacobus Johannes.
1464	14	William IV. Brother of John the Third, Founder of the City and Monastery of Casal.
1487	15	Boniface V. Brother of John and William, the two last Marquesses, invested by the Emperor Frederick the Fourth; Blanca Maria the Daughter of William surrendring her Estate unto him.
	16	William V. Son of Boniface the Fifth.
1518	17	Boniface VI. Son of William the Fifth.
1530	18	John George, Brother of William the Fifth, succeeded his Nephew in the Estate; which he held but four years. After whose death, Anno 1534, this Marquisate was adjudged to Frederick the first Duke of Mantua, who had married Margaret Daughter of William the Fifth, and next heir to George.

Whose Successors may be seen in the former Catalogue of the Dukes of Mantua.

The Arms hereof are Gules, a Chief Argent.

Here are in this Estate.

And now according to my method, I should proceed to the description and story of the Principality of Piemont, the last and most Western part of Italy. But being it lieth partly in, and partly at the foot of the Alpes, was anciently a part of the Province called Alpes Cottiæ, and is now part of the Estate of the Duke of Savoy: we will defer till we come to those Alpine Provinces, which are next to follow. And so much shall suffice for Italy, in which there are, besides those of Piemont,

ALPES.

BEfore we can come out of Italy into France, we muſt croſs the Alpes; a ridge of Hills wherewith (as with a ſtrong and defenſible Rampart) Italy is aſſured againſt France and Germany. They are ſaid to be five days journey high, covered continually with Snow, from the whiteneſs whereof they took this name; that in the Sabine Dialect being called Alpum, which in the Latine was called Album.

They begin about the Mediterranean or Liguſtick Seas, and croſſing all along the Borders of France and Germany, extend as far as to the Gulf of Cornero, in the Province of Iſtria; and are in ſeveral parts called by ſeveral names, which we will muſter up as they lie in order from the Mediterranean to the Adriatick. And firſt thoſe which lye neareſt to the Mediterranean, are for that cauſe called Maritimæ, from the nearneſs to Liguria, called by ſome Liguſticæ. 2. Then follow thoſe called Cottiæ, from Cottius, a King of the Allobroges: And 3. thoſe named Graiæ, from the paſſage of Hercules and his Græcian Followers; of which, both amongſt the Poets and Hiſtorians, there is very good evidence. 4. After we come to the Pœninæ, ſo named from the march of Annibal and his Carthaginians, whom the Latin Writers call by the name of Pœni; or from the Mountain-God Pœninus, worſhipped by the Veragri, the Inhabitants of it. 5. Next come we to the Lepontiæ, ſo named from Lepontii, who did there inhabit: As 6. the Rhæticæ, which lye next to them, from the Rhæti, once a powerful people of that mountainous tract. 7. Then follow thoſe called Juliæ, from the paſſage of Julius Cæſar over them, in his march towards Gaul: and ſo at laſt we come unto thoſe called Carnicæ, extending to the ſhores of the Adriatick, denominated from the Carni who did here inhabit, and who gave name alſo to Carniola, an adjoining Province.

The ancient Inhabitants of theſe mountainous Countries, beſides the Allobroges, Veragri, Lepontii, Rhæti, and Carni, ſpoken of before; were the Sedani, Salii, Valenſes, Vacontii, and divers others of leſs note and eſtimation: all vanquiſhed by the indefatigable induſtry of the Romans. After whoſe ſubjugation, and the ſetlement of the Roman Empire, theſe Mountains, and ſome part of the Vales adjoining, made five ſeveral Provinces; viz. The Province of the Cottian Alpes, containing Walliſland, and Piemont. Secondly, of Rhætia Prima, comprehending the Griſons, and part of the Dukedom of Millain, now in poſſeſſion of the Switzers; both which were members of the Dioceſe of Italy. Thirdly, of the Alpes Maritimæ, now part of Daulphine and Provence. Fourthly, of the Graiæ and Pœninæ Alpes, and the greateſt part of Maxima Sequanorum, including ſome part of Savoy, and moſt part of Switzerland; both which were members of the Dioceſe of Gaul. And fifthly, of Noricum Mediterraneum; comprehending Carniola, Carinthia, and the parts near hand; which were members of the Dioceſe of Illyricum Occidentale. The people anciently, as now, by reaſon of their drinking Snow-water, diſſolving from the tops of the Hills, and ſometimes falling thence with as great a violence as the Cataracts of Nilus are ſaid to do; were generally troubled with a ſwelling in the throat, which the Latines call Struma: being the ſame with that which we call the Kings-Evil; becauſe by ſpecial priviledge curable by the Kings of France and England. Quis tumidum guttur miratur in Alpibus? as the Poet hath it.

Of theſe vaſt Hills, the loweſt are the Carnicæ and Maritimæ, lying neareſt to the ſeveral Seas before remembred: The Cottiæ and the Graiæ not ſo high, but that the paſſages lie open for the moſt part of the year. The reſt, by reaſon of their deep and dreadful præcipices, their tedious and ſteep aſcents, narrow ways, dangerous craggy Rocks, fierce whirlwinds, and huge balls of ſnow, tumbling with an incredible violence from the tops of the Mountains; are hardly paſſable by Horſe, not at all by Waggon. And yet amongſt theſe dreadful hills, there are obſerved to be ſome Vallies of great fertility, not giving ground for fruitfulneſs to the beſt in Europe; and for the ſweetneſs of the temperature going much beyond them. With ſuch an equal hand, doth the heavenly Providence diſpenſe the benefits of Nature to his whole Creation; that plenty bordereth upon want, and pain on pleaſure.

And yet for all the Difficulty and Danger of theſe Alpine Paſſages, Covetouſneſs, or Curioſity, or Deſire of Conqueſt, have found a way to make them paſſable in many places; and that not only for private and particular Paſſengers, but for vaſt Multitudes and numerous Armies, ſuch as thoſe led by Annibal and Julius Cæſar. But eſpecially the barbarous people found out five ways to break into Italy, which have been ſince much travelled by divers Nations; of which three be out of France, and two out of Germany. The firſt from France is through Provence, and ſo cloſe to the Liguſtick Seas; eaſieſt for private Paſſengers, but too ſtrait and narrow for great Armies: there being many paſſages in the Country of Nizze, ſo narrow, that ten men may make head againſt ten thouſand; as in that called the Pace of the Virgin for one. The ſecond is over the Hills called Gencure, into the Marquiſate of Saluzzes, and ſo to the other parts of Lombardy; which was the way that Charles the eighth marched towards Naples, and by the Italians, is commonly Strada Romana, becauſe the ordinary Paſſage betwixt France and Rome. The third way is over the greater Cenis, (which ſome call the leſſer St. Barnard) ſo to Aoſt, or Turin; which (if we may believe Antiquity) was first opened by Hercules, and after followed by Annibal: who found the Passages so closed up, that he was forced to break his way (as Plutarch telleth us) with Fire and Vinegar; whence that so memorable a saying, Viam Annibal, aut inveniet, aut faciet. From the passage of those Worthies, this Tract, and that adjoining were called Alpes Graiæ, and Pœninæ. Or if (as others think) Annibal took the former way, and came directly upon Turin, which Town it is most certain that he took in his march; then these Pœninæ must take name from the Passage of Asdrubal, or of some part of Annibal's Army, which probably was too great to go all one way: or else from the Mountain-God Pœninus, as before was said.

The first way out of Germany into Italy, is through the Country of the Grisons, by the Valtolin, which the Spaniard seized into his hands. So that by the keeping of the Veltlyn, or Valtolin, and manning of the Fort Fuentes, which he also erected; he was in a manner the Lord of this Passage: not only to the discontent of the Natives, but to the distast of his neighbours the Savoyards and Venetians. The other way out of Germany into Italy, is through the Country of Tirolis, by the Towns of Inspruch, and Trent. This passage is commanded by the Castle and Fort of Eresberg, seated on the Confines of this Country towards Suevia, and from Inspruch, is two days journey distant. Which Fort, in the War which the Protestant Princes made against Charles the fifth was surprized by Captain Scherteline, so to hinder the coming of the Pope's Forces into Germany: for which the Emperour so hated him, that when all the rest of that Faction were pardoned, he only continued a Proscript, his head being valued at 4000 Crowns. The taking also of this Fort, and the Castle adjoining, by D. Maurice of Saxony, made the said Charles then being in Inspruch, to fly out of Germany; and shortly after to resign his Empire to his Brother Ferdinand.

Out of these Mountains rise the Springs of many of the most Renowned Rivers in these West parts of the World; as, 1. The Rhene, which springeth from two several Fountains, the one which they call the Nearer Rhine, out of the Lepontiæ; and the other which they term the Vorder, or further Rhine, out of the Rheticæ; which meet together about a Dutch mile from Chur the chief Town of the Grisons, and so go on by Constance to Germany. 2. Rhosne, which riseth in that part of the Lepontiæ, which is called Die Furchen, about two Dutch miles from the head of the Nearer or Hinder Rhine, and so through Wallisland into France. 3. Padus, or Po, which hath his head in a branch of the Cottian or Coctian Alpes, heretofore called Mons Vesulus, and so through Piemont into Italy. Out of them also spring the Rivers of Russe, Durance, and Athesis, the first a Dutch, the second a French, and the third an Italian River also; not to say any thing of others of inferiour note. The great Lakes which are found in this mountainous Tract, we shall hereafter meet with in their proper places.

Let us next look upon the Countries and Estates here situate, which bordering upon Italy, France, and Germany, and partaking somewhat of them all, do belong to neither; but reckon themselves to be free and absolute Estates, Supreme, and independent upon any others, as indeed they are. Such other of these Alpine Countries, which are under the command of the German Princes, as some parts of Schwaben and Bavaria, together with Tirol, Carniola, and the rest which belong to Austria, shall be considered in the History of those States and Princes, to which of right they do belong. But for the rest, which as they lye entire together without intermixture, so they are absolute in themselves, and owe nor suit nor service unto any other, we will consider them in this place, under the name of the Alpes, or the Alpine Provinces.

The ALPES then, or the Alpine Provinces, call them which you will, are bound on the East with Tirol in Germany, and the Dukedoms of Millain and Monferrat in Italy; on the West with Provence, Daulphine, and La Bresse, parts of the Continent of France, on the North with the County of Burgundy in France, and Suevia or Schawben in High Germany; and on the South, with Lombardy, and a branch of the Mediterranean Sea. Called in the middle times by the name of Burgundia Transjurana, because it contained that part of the Kingdom of Burgundy, which lay beyond the Mountain Jour. A Mountain which beginning near the City of Basil, and not far from the Rhine, passeth South-westward by the Lakes of Bieler-Zee, Newenburger-Zee, and that called Lemane, till it come almost unto the Rhosne: dividing by that means the Provinces of Switzerland, and Savoy, from the County of Burgundy.

It lieth under the sixth Climate, and some part of the seventh, so that the longest day in Summer is fifteen hours, and three quarters. Of different nature in regard both of Soyl and People; which will best shew it self in the survey of the several Provinces, into which divided; that is to say, 1. the Dukedom of Savoy, 2. the Signeury of Geneva; 3. the Resorts of Wallisland, 4. the Cantons of the Switzers, and 5. the Leagues of the Grisons. Which several States, though they be reckoned to belong to the German Empire, and that the Bishops of Chur, Sion, and Basil are generally accounted for Princes of it: yet they neither come unto the Diets, nor are subject to the publick Taxes, nor comprehended within any of those ten Circles into which the Empire is divided.

The Language herein spoken, partakes somewhat of all three, as before was said: the French being wholly spoke in Savoy, the lower Wallisland, and generally by the Switzers, bordering on the Lake Lemane; the Dutch being common to the greatest part of the Switzers, the Grisons about Chur, and the upper Wallisland: and finally the Italian, used by the generality of the Grisons, the Præfectures appertaining unto them and the Switzers both in Piemont, and those parts of Savoy which lie next unto it.

The principal Souldiers of these mountainous Provinces, 1. Rodolph, Earl of Habspurg, the Founder of the present Austrian Family. 2. Thomas, and 3. Peter, Earls of Savoy, this last sur-named Charlemain the second. 4. Emanuel Philibert, one of the later Dukes hereof Commander of the Armies of the King of Spain. 5. John Tzerclas, commonly called Count Tilly, General of the Imperial Armies in the War of Germany. For Scholars of more special note for which we are beholding to these Countries, we have 1. Philip Theophrastus Bombastus à Boenham, commonly called Paracelsus, the Author, or Instaurator of Chymical Physick; born in the Mountains of Helvetia, as he saith himself: a man of most prodigious parts, and of no mean vices. 2. Zuinglius one of the chief Agents in the Reformation. 3. Musculus, and 4. Oecolampadius, two Divines, his seconds. 5. Henry Bullinger, one of the same profession also. 6. Sebastian Castalio, of as much learning as the best of them, though of different judgment. 7. Dan. Tossanus the Hebrician. To which we may add 8. Calvin also, who though he had his birth in France, had his being here; and never grew to any eminency in Fame or Learning, till he was setled in Geneva.

For matter of Religion, it is of a very mixt condition also, in all these Countries: that of the Romish only having publick countenance in the Dukedom of Savoy, and Piemont; but so that the Reformed is tolerated in some parts thereof, especially in the next parts Daul- phine, to which the neighbourhood of Geneva gives a great encreaſe. In Switzerland there are four Cantons which are wholly for the Reformation, viz. Zurich, Bern, Baſil, and Schaffhauſen: Seven that ſtand wholly for the Doctrine of the Church of Rome, i.e. Uren, Switz, Underwalden, Lucern, Zug, Friburg, and Solothurn: in Apenzel, and Glaris, they allow of both. The Griſons are confuſedly divided betwixt both Religions; but the Italian Prælectures admit no other but the Romiſh. The cauſe of which diviſion came upon the preaching of Zuinglius, a Canon of the Church of Zurich: who being animated with Luther's good ſucceſs in Germany, began about the year 1519 to preach againſt the Maſs, and Images, and other the corruptions of the Church of Rome. In which his party ſo increaſed, that on a publick Diſputation which was held at Zurich, the Maſs was abrogated in that Canton by the authority of the Senate, Anno 1526, and Images deſtroyed at Bern, 1528. After which proſperous beginnings, the Reformation began to ſpread it ſelf amongſt the Confederates, and had prevailed further both in France and Germany, but for a difference which aroſe betwixt him and Luther about the Sacrament of the Supper: in which Luther did not only maintain a real Preſence, but a Conſubſtantiation alſo in the ſacred Elements; which Zuinglius maintained to be only a bare ſign and repreſentation of Chriſts bleſſed body. For reconciling this difference, wherein the enemies of both did extreamly triumph; a conference was held between them at Marſpurg, a Town of Haſſia, by the procurement of that Lantgrave, but without ſucceſs: Luther profeſſing that he durſt not agree in that point with Zuinglius, Ne principes ſuos interpretatione tantopere Pontificiis exoſa, magis inviſos redderet; for fear of drawing too great hatred on the Princes of his own profeſſion. From this time forwards all brake out into open flames, the names of Ubiquitarians, and Sacramentarians, being reciprocally caſt upon one another; to the great hinderance of the cauſe which they had in hand: yet ſo that the Lutheran opinions got ground in Germany, the Zuinglians amongſt theſe Mountains, and in France it ſelf; and finally prevailed by the means of Calvin in many parts in Germany alſo. But hereof more hereafter in convenient place.

As for the ſtory of thoſe Countries, before they were divided into ſo many hands, we are to know that the old Inhabitants hereof (mentioned before) were conquered ſeverally by the Romans: as ſhall be ſhewn in the deſcription of the ſeveral Provinces. Won from the Romans by the Burgundians, in the time of Honorius the Weſtern Emperour, they became a member of their Kingdom; except the Country of the Griſons, and ſome parts of Switzerland, which fell under the Almans: united afterwards in the new Kingdom of Burgundy, of the French erection, when ſubdued by that Nation. But Charles the Bald, the laſt of the French Kings of Burgundy, having united it to the Kingdom of France, divided that Kingdom into three Eſtates; that is to ſay, the Dukedom of Burgundy on this ſide of the Soaſne, the Dukedom of Burgundy beyond the Soaſne, and the Dukedom of Burgundy beyond the Jour. This laſt, containing the greateſt part of all theſe Alpine Provinces (except Piemont only) was by the ſaid Charles given to Conrade a Saxon Prince, the Son of Witikind the Third, and younger Brother of Robert, the firſt Earl of Anjou; by the name of Earl of Burgundy Transjurane or Burgundy beyond the Jour. Rodolph his Son and Succeſſor, by Eudes the King of France, his Couſin German, was honoured with the title of King: to make him equal at the leaſt, with Boſon Earl of Burgundy beyond the Soaſne, whom Charles the Groſs, about the ſame time had made King of Arles. But Rodolph finding it offenſive to the German Emperors, abandoned it on the death of Eudes, and took to himſelf the title of Duke. The reſidue of the ſtory we ſhall have in the following Catalogue of

The Earls, Dukes, and Kings of Burgundy Transjurane.

1 Conrade the firſt Earl of Burgundy Transjurane.
890 2 Rodolph, Earl, King, and Duke of Burgundy Transjurane.
912 3 Rodolph II. elected King of Italy againſt Berengarius; which title he exchanged with Hugh de Arles, who was choſen by another Faction, for the poſſeſſion of the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy; on the aſſuming of which Crown, he reſigned this Dukedom to his Brother Boſon.
4 Boſon the Brother of Rodolph the Second, ſucceeded his Brother in the Dukedom of Burgundy, beyond the Jour; as afterwards he ſucceeded Rodolph, his Brothers Son, in the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy.
965 5 Conrade II. Son of Boſon, King of Arles and Burgundy, and Duke of Burgundy Transjurane.
690 6 Rodolph III. Son of Conrade, who dying without iſſue, left his Eſtates to Henry ſurnamed the Black, the Son of his Siſter Giſela, by Conrade the Second; Emperour and King of Germany: united ſo unto the Empire, till by the bounty and improvidence of ſome following Emperours, it was cantoned into many parts; of which more anon.

It is now time to lay aſide this diſcourſe as to the general condition and affairs of theſe Alpine Provinces; and to look over the particulars: beginning firſt with the Eſtate of the Duke of Savoy, ſituate wholly in the Mountains, and lying next to Italy, where before we left.

The Dukedom of SAVOY.

THE Dukedom of SAVOY is bounded on the Eaſt with Millain and Montferrat in Italy; on the Weſt, with Dauphine in France; on the North, with Switzerland, and the Lake of Geneva; and on the South, with Provence, and the Mediterranean. The Country of ſo different nature, that it cannot be reduced under any one character: and therefore we muſt look upon it in the ſeveral parts into which divided; that is to ſay, 1. the Principality of Piemont, and 2. Savoy, eſpecially ſo called.

1. PIEMONT, in Latin called Regio Pedemontana, becauſe ſituate at the foot of the Mountains (as the name in both Languages imports) is bounded on the Eaſt, with Millain, and Montferrat; on the Weſt, with Savoy, on the North with the Switzers; and on the South, it runneth in a narrow Valley to the Mediterranean, having Montferrat on the one ſide, Provence and a part of the Alpes upon the other. The Country wonderfully fertile compared with Switzerland, and Savoy, which lie next unto it; but thought to be inferiour to the reſt of Italy. It containeth, beſides Baronies, and Lordſhips, 15 Marquiſates, 52 Earldoms, 160 Caſtles or walled places: and is ſo populous withal, that once a Piemonteſe being demanded the extent of his Country, made anſwer, that it was a City of three hundred miles in compaſs.

The

The principal Cities of it are, 1. Turin, called of old Augusta Taurinorum, because the head City of the Taurini, once the Inhabitants of this Tract: from which Taurini, it deriveth the name of Turin, and not as some conceive from the River Duria, on whose banks it standeth. In this City is the Court and Palace of the Duke of Savoy (who is the Lord of this Country), the See of an Archbishop, and an University, in which the renowned Scholar Erasmus took his degrees in Divinity. It is situate on the River Po, in a place very important for the guard of Italy; for which cause the Romans sent a Colony hither, and the Lombards made it one of their four Dukedoms. Adjoining to it is a Park of the Dukes of Savoy, watered with the Duria, Sture, and Po, six miles in circuit, full of Woods, Lakes, and pleasant Fountains; which make it one of the sweetest situations in Europe. 2. Mondeni, seated on the swelling of a little hill, with very fair Suburbs round about it; in one of which the Dukes of Savoy built a Church and Chappel to the blessed Virgin; intended for the burial place of the Dukal Family. It is the best peopled Town, for the bigness of it, of any in Italy. 3. Augusta Prætoria, now called Aost, situate in the furthest corner of Italy to the North and West. 4. Vercelli, a strong Town bordering upon Millain, to which it formerly belonged; and was given first in Dower with Blanch the Daughter of Philip Maria Duke of Millain, to Amadee the third Duke of Savoy; anciently the chief Town of the Libyci, who together with the Salassi and Taurini, were the old Inhabitants of this Country. 5. Inuria called by Ptolomy Eporedia, situate at the very jaws of the Alpes, an Episcopal City. 6. Nicæa, or Nizze, an Haven on the Mediterranean, at the influx of the River Varus, which divides it from Provence; beautified with a Cathedral Church, the Bishops Palace, a Monastery of Nuns, and an impregnable Citadel. A place so naturally strong, that when as yet the Fortifications were imperfect, it resisted the whole Forces of Barbarossa the Turkish Admiral, An. 1543, lying before it with a Navy of two hundred sail, and battering it continually with incredible fury. First fortified by Duke Charles, upon occasion of some words of the Duke of Burbon, who passing this way with his Army, Behold, saith he, a situation of which they know not the importance: the Citadel being after added by Emanuel Philibert, and garrisoned for the most part with 400 Souldiers. 7. Suse, seated in the ordinary thorough-fare betwixt France and Italy, called of old Segovio; and honoured in those times with a stately Sepulchre of King Coëlius, a King of the Allobroges: one of the seven Marquisates in the middle times erected by the Emperour Otho. 8. Pignarolle, fortified with a Castle of great importance, which commandeth all the adjoining Vallies, sold by Duke Charles Emanuel to Lewis the 13. of France, together with the Fort and Vally of Perousa, (and in them both to the number of ten or twelve Towns and Villages) for the sum of 494000 Crowns, to be for ever in the propriety and Soveraignty of the Kings of France; and thereby giving to the French commodious pass from Daulphine into Italy upon all occasions, and no small influence and command on his own Estates. 9. Quiers, adorned with many goodly Churches, fair Convents, and noble Families. 10. Ville Franche, a place of great strength, more towards the Sea. 11. Savillan, seated in so pleasant a Country, that Duke Emanuel Philibert had once a purpose to setle his abode in it, and make it the chief of his Estate. 12. Busque, a Marquisate, another of the seven erected for the Sons of Waleran. 13. Hereunto we may add the City of Ast (though properly within the limits of Montferrat) anciently a Colony of the Romans; and now to be compared, for the greatness and beauty of her Palaces, to the most stately Cities of Lombardy; situate betwixt the two Rivers of Po and Tenarus, very rich and populous.

Here is also in this Country the Marquisate of Saluzzes, (of the same erection as the former, but a greater Estate) the cause of so many differences betwixt France and Savoy. The principal Town whereof is called also Saluzze (from the Salassi questionless who dwelt hereabouts) seated about the Spring of the River Po: reasonably big, and fortified with a very large Castle, fitted with rooms for all uses, and for every season. 2. Carmanvogla, which gave name to that famous Captain who carried so great a sway in the Wars of Italy. A Town so fortified and stored with all sorts of Ammunition, that it is thought impregnable. 3. Ravelle, a well fortified place. 4. Doglian, the thorow-fare for the greatest part of the Trade which is driven betwixt Piemont, and the River of Genoa. The Arms hereof Argent, a Chief Gules.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Country were the Salassi, Libyci, and Taurini, as before is said, all vanquished by the Romans, and their Country made a Province of that Empire, by the name of the Province of Alpes Cottiæ, in the time of Nero; of which Genoa was the Metropolis or principal City. The present are descended, for the most part, of the Heruli, who under the Conduct of Odoacer conquered Italy; whereof he was proclaimed King by the Romans themselves, but Odoacer being vanquished near Verona, by Theodorick King of the Goths, the Heruli had this Country allotted to them by the Conquerour for their habitation. They had not held it long when subdued by the Lombards, of whose Kingdom it remained a part, till given by Aripert the seventeenth King of the Lombards, to the Church of Rome; affirmed by some to be the first temporal Estate that ever the Popes of Rome had possession of. But lying far off, and the donation not confirmed by the Kings succeeding, the Popes got little by the gift: so that in the subverting of the Kingdom of the Lombards, it was at the devotion of the Kings of Italy; of the house of Charles the Great: and afterwards of his Successors in the Empire, by whom distracted into several Estates and Principalities; Thomas and Peter, Earls of Savoy, made themselves Masters of the greatest part of it, by force of Arms: the former in the year 1210, the latter in the year 1256. Since that time the first Son of Savoy is stiled Prince of Piemont. The Marquisate of Saluzzes, containing almost all the rest, was added by the marriage of a daughter of this Marquisate, with Charles Duke of Savoy, An. 1481. Of which marriage though there was no issue, yet the Savoyards always held it as their own; till the French upon as good a title possessed themselves of it: Recovered by the Savoyard, An. 1588, the Civil Wars then hot in France. But finding that he was not able to hold it against Henry the fourth (who looked upon it as a door to let his Forces into Italy) he compounded with him, An. 1600, the Country of Bresse being given in exchange for his Marquisate: Of which, together with the residue of Piemont, and some pieces of importance in the Dukedom of Montferrat, that noble Family of Savoy doth now stand possessed.

The Arms of this Principality are Gules, a Cross Argent, charged with a Label of three points Azure.

2. SAVOY, strictly and specially so called, is bounded on the East with Wallisland, and part of Piemont; on the West, with Daulphine, and La Bresse; on the South, with some parts of Daulphine only; and on the North with Switzerland, and the Lake of Geneva.

The Country is for the most part hilly and Mountainous, tainous, overspread with the branches of the Alpes, healthy enough, as commonly all Hill Countries are, but not very fruitful, except some of vallies which lie nearest to the Western Sun, and the plain tract about the Lemanian Lake, lying towards Geneva. By reason of the difficult and narrow ways, and those full of Thieves, it was once called Malvoy: but the passages being opened by the cost and industry of the people, and purged of Thieves by good Laws and exemplary Justice, it gained the name of Savoy, or Salvoy, quasi salva via: as Maleventum, a Town of the Realm of Naples, on the like considerations got the name of Benevent. By the Latines of these later times it is called Sabaudia, a name not known to any of the ancient Writers; who knew it by no other name than that of the Allobroges, or Allobrogum Regio.

The common people are naturally very dull and simple, so gross of understanding for all their continual converse with other Nations, who take this Country in their way to Italy; that they believe the Duke of Savoy to be the greatest Prince in the World: and so unwarlike, that a few men of another Nation well trained and disciplined, will make a great number of them flie. But on the other side, the Gentry are of a very pleasing conversation, civil, ingenious, and affecting all good exercise: so as there may be daily seen in Chambery as much good company, and as well appointed and behaved, as in many of the best Towns of France or Italy. The number of both sorts (taking in Piemont who are not interessed in the first place of this character) are thought to be 800000.

The chief Cities are, 1. Chambery, situate on the banks of the River L'Arch, in a very pleasant Valley, compassed round with Mountains; the principal of the Dukedom on that side of the Alpes: honoured with the Dukes Court when he resideth in this Country, the ordinary seat of Justice, and many neat houses which belong to the Gentry, fortified of late with a strong Castle and sufficient Outworks; but not recovered of the damage it received, Anno 1600, when it was forced by King Henry the fourth of France, in his Wars with Savoy. 2. Tarentaise, an Archbishops See, situate in the midst of the Mountains; heretofore the Metropolis of the Province of the Alpes Graiæ, and Pœninæ, and called by Antoninus, Civitas Centronum, from the Centrones who inhabited about this Tract. 3. Lunebourg, in the Country of the old Medulli; betwixt which and Suse, a Town of Piemont, lyeth the most ordinary road betwixt France and Italy. 4. Aque belle, situate at the foot of a craggy Rock. 5. Rapaille, a sweet and fruitful situation, on the South-side of the Lake Lemanus, the chief Town of the Signeury of Fossigney: where Amadee the first Duke of Savoy, having given over his Estate, lived a Monastick life, and was thence chosen Pope by the Fathers at Basil, An. 1440. 6. Nun or Nevidum (by some of the old Latins called Noviodunum) an ancient City, laid desolate in or before the time of Julius Cæsar, repaired again in the Empire of Vespasian; the Seat of late times of the Bishops of Geneva, since their expulsion out of that City. 7. Bele, on the Rhodanus, or Rhosne. 8. Albon, founded about the year 456. 9. Conflans, fortified by the late Dukes of Savoy, but otherwise of small importance. 10. Annunciada, not much observable, but for being the seat or place of Solemnities, for an order of Knights called by that name. 11. Maurienne, or St. John de Maurienne, an Archbishops See, situate in a Valley of the Alpes so called; the chief City of the old Medulli, who dwelt hereabouts; from whence the Princes of this house were first entituled Earls of Maurienne only. 12. Charboneers, a well fortified place. Here is also the strong Town and Fort of Montmelian, which held out four Months against Henry the fourth, and many thousand shot of French Cannon, An. 1600, and the impregnable Fortress of St. Catharines, which yet submitted to that King; the Government whereof being denyed to the Duke Byron, plunged him in discontent and Treason, to the loss of his head.

The many Tribes in and about this Mountainous Country, of which we have mentioned some before, pass generally in most ancient Writers, by the name of Allobroges; because the most powerful of them all. Of whom the first mention which we find in story, is the Atonement made by Hannibal in his passage this way, between Brancus and his Brother, about the succession of the Kingdom. Afterwards siding with the Salii a Gallick Nation, in a War against Marseilles, then a confederate of the Romans, they drew that people on their backs: by whom they were in fine subdued, with the loss of no less than 120000 Galls, under the several conducts of Cn. Domitius Ænobarbus, and Qu. Fabius Maximus: by which last, Bituitus, or Bitultus King of the Auverni, one of the Confederates, was led in triumph unto Rome. The Country and people at that time were much alike, Cœlum atrox perviaci ingenio, a sharp air, and a stubborn people, as it is in Florus: not without commendation in the following Ages, for discovering Catilines conspiracy, by which the whole Roman State was in danger of ruine. After which we find Coctius one of the Kings of these Allobroges to have been in special favour with Augustus Cæsar: affirmed to be the Founder of twelve Cities in this mountainous Tract, whence it had the name of Alpes Coctiæ; and by that name reduced into the form of a Province, by the Emperour Nero. In the declining of that Empire, this Province became a part of the Kingdom of Burgundy; and passed, with other rights of that falling Kingdom, to the Emperors of Germany, by the gift of Rodolph the last King. To them it did continue subject till the year 999, in which Berald of Saxony, Son of Hugh of Saxony (which Hugh was Son of Otho, and Brother to Otho the third) for killing Mary the lascivious Wife of his Unkle, fled from Germany; and setled himself here, near France. His Son Humbert, (surnamed Blanchmanis, that is Whitehand) was by the special favour of the Emperor Conradus Salicus, made Earl of Maurienne; which is a Town of this Country, An. 1027. And by this Marriage with Adela, the Daughter and Heir of the Marques of Suse, added that noble Marquisate (one of the seven erected by Otho the second, and given amongst the Sons of Waleran) unto his Estate. Humbert the second gained by Conquest the Town and Territory of Tarentaise; as Ame, or Amadee the third, did the Counties of Vaulx, and Chablais, Anno 1240, or thereabouts. Ame, or Amadee the fourth, by the Marriage of Sibille Daughter and sole Heir of Ulric Earl of Bresse, added that Earldom to his house: as Ame or Amadee the Ninth, did the Town and Territory of Vercelli, upon the contract betwixt Philibert his Son and Successor, with Blanch the base daughter of Philip Maria Duke of Millain, who afterwards was married unto Francis Sforza. Ame, or Amadee the second Earl of Maurienne was by the Emperor Henry the Fifth, invested with the title of Earl of Savoy; and Amadee the eighth, created the first Duke, by the Emperor Sigismund, An. 1397. But the main improvement of the power and patrimony of this House, came by the valour and good success of the two Earls, Thomas, who in the year 1210, and Peter one of his Sons and Successors (for his manifold Conquests, surnamed Charlemain the Junior) An. 1256, by conquest got a great part of Piedmont; to which the Marquisate of Saluzzes, containing almost all the rest, was united by a marriage of the daughter of the Marquisate, to Charles

Duke

Duke of Savoy: and though he dyed without iſſue by her, An. 1489. yet his Succeſſors ſtill kept the poſſeſſion of it, till Francis the Firſt, pretending ſome title to it in the right of his Mother (a Daughter of the Houſe of Savoy) laid it unto the Crown of France; from which it was again recovered by the Savoyard, during the French Civil Wars, An. 1588, and now is peaceably poſſeſſed. The Country of Breſſe being given to the French, for their pretenſion to this Marquiſate, An. 1600. Theſe Dukes of Savoy have a long time been devoted to the Faction of Spain, eſpecially ſince the French Kings took in the leſſer States bordering on them, as Burgundy, Bretagne, &c. Charles the third ſided ſo conſtantly with the Emperour Charles the Fifth, that denying Francis the Firſt a paſſage for his Army through the Country into Italy; he was by the ſaid King deſpoiled of his Eſtates, An. 1536. The Emperour to recover it left nothing undone, but in vain; for the French encountring his force in the open field, vanquiſhed them, with the ſlaughter of fifteen thouſand of his men. In the year 1558, peace being made between Henry and Philip, Succeſſors to thoſe great Princes: Emanuel Philibert, Son to Duke Charles, was reſtored to all his Rights. His Son and Succeſſor having married Katherine the Daughter of King Philip the Second, depended wholly upon Spain, notwithſtanding many quarrels which did grow betwixt them; his Sons receiving thence many great penſions and preferments. For at the ſame time, Prince Amadee Victorio the ſecond Son, during the life of Philip his elder Brother, was chief Commander of that King's Gallies; and had in penſion a hundred thouſand Crowns per annum; Philibert the third Son, was Vice-roy of Sicil: Maurice the Fourth a Cardinal, had a moity of the Revenues of the Arch-Biſhoprick of Toledo; and Don Thomaza, though then young, had his penſions alſo. But Amadee Victorio, who ſucceeded him, marrying Madam Chriſtiane, a daughter of King Henry the Fourth of France, changed his dependences; and held more cloſe to France than any of his Predeceſſors: but whether to the hurt or benefit of his Eſtates, future times will ſhew. For leaving his Heir a Minor, in the hands of his Mother, the French upon pretence of preſerving the Country for him, againſt the incroachments of the Spaniard, have made themſelves Maſters of the greateſt parts of it: which when they will reſtore to the proper owner, is beyond my cunning to determine. But now behold the Catalogue of the Earls and Dukes of Savoy.

999	1	Beral of Saxony.
1027	2	Humbert, the firſt Earl of Maurienne.
1048	3	Ame, or Amadee I.
1076	4	Humbert II.
1109	5	Ame, or Amadee II. the firſt Earl of Savoy.
1154	6	Humbert III.
1201	7	Thomas, Son of Humbert.
1234	8	Ame, or Amadee III.
1246	9	Boniface, Son of Ame III.
1256	10	Peter, a young Son of Earl Thomas, called Charlemagne the leſs.
1268	11	Philip, Brother of Peter,
1285	12	Ame, or Amadee IV. Nephew of Thomas the 7. Earl, by a Son named Thomas.
1323	13	Edward, Son of Ame IV.
1329	14	Ame, or Amadee V. the Brother of Edward.
1342	15	Ame, or Amadee VI.
1385	16	Ame, or Amadee VII.
1397	17	Ame, or Amadee VIII. the firſt Duke of Savoy:
1434	28	Lewis, Son of Ame VIII.
1491	19	Ame, or Amadee IX.
1475	20	Philibert, Son of Ame 9th.
1481	21	Charles, Brother of Philibert.
1489	22	Charles II.
1495	23	Philip II. Son of Lewis, the ſecond Duke.
1496	24	Philibert II.
1504	25	Charles III. the Brother of Philibert, outed of his Eſtate by King Francis the Firſt.
1559	26	Emanuel Philibert, reſtored upon his Marriage with Margaret the Daughter of King Francis the Firſt, made Knight of the Garter by Queen Mary.
1580	27	Charles Emanuel.
	28	Ame X. called alſo Amadee Victorio, Son of Charles Emanuel, married Chriſtiane the Daughter of King Henry the Fourth.
1637	29	Charles Emanuel II. Son of Amadee Victor. or Ame the Tenth, at the age of three years ſucceeded his Father.

The Forces of this Duke conſiſt eſpecially in his Forts and Garriſons, whereof he hath good ſtore in Savoy, and Piemont, well fortified and plentifully furniſhed with all manner of Ammunition. And it concerneth him ſo to have, conſidering, what dangerous neighbours he hath near him, and that his Country is a continual thorow-fare, for the Armies both of France and Spain, upon all occaſions. Nor doth it leſs conduce to his preſervation, that he hath ſo many retreats of natural ſtrength, as are not eaſily acceſſible by a conquering Army: of which laſt ſort is, amongſt many others, the Valley of Aoſt (which ſome reckon for a part of Savoy, and ſome of Piemont) ſo ſtrong by reaſon of the narrow entries, the uneaſie paſſages, and the great multitudes of the people which inhabit in it; that thoſe who have made themſelves Maſters of the reſt of the Country, durſt never attempt it. And of the firſt, beſides thoſe formerly deſcribed, is the Town of Nizze, ſo fortified and flanked upon all acceſſes, that it ſeems rather to be an aſſembly of Forts, than a ſingle Fortreſs. Out of which Garriſons, the Duke is able to draw great Forces for preſent ſervice; beſides the readineſs of the Piemonteſe upon all occaſions, which are for the moſt part given to Arms.

The ordinary Revenue of this Dukedom (taking Piemont) are ſaid to be above a Million of Crowns per annum. But his extraordinary is ſo great, that Duke Charles Emanuel, during his Wars with Henry the fourth, in a very few years drew out of Piemont only 11 Millions of Crowns; beſides the charge which they were put to in quartering of Soldiers. By which it may appear, that the Dukes are not like to want money to ſerve their turns, when they ſhall deſire it of the Subject; and yet not charge them more than they are able to bear.

The only Order of Knighthood in this Duke's Eſtate is that of the Annunciada ordained by Amadee the firſt Duke, at what time he defended Rhodes from the Turks, An. 1409. Their Collar is of fifteen Links, to ſhew the fifteen myſteries of the Virgin: at the end is the portraiture of our Lady, with the hiſtory of the Annunciation. Inſtead of a Motto, theſe letters, F.E.R.T. id eſt, Fortitudo Ejus Rhodum Tenuit, are engraven in every plate or link of the Collar: each link being interwoven one within the other, in form of a True-lovers knot. The number of the Knights are fourteen, beſides the Duke, who is the Sovereign of the Order: the ſolemnity was held antiently on our Lady-day, in the Caſtle of Saint Peter in Turin, but of late time in the Town of Annunciada, from hence ſo denominated. So from this victory (for every repulſe of the beſieger, is a victory to the beſieged ſieged) there aroſe a double effect; firſt, the inſtitution of this Order; ſecondly the aſſumption of the preſent Arms of this Dutchy, where are G. a Croſs A. This being the Croſs of Saint John of Jeruſalem, whoſe Knights at that time were owners of the Rhodes. Whereas before, the Arms were Or, an Eagle diſplayed with two heads, Sable, Armed Gules ſupporting in Feſſe, an Eſcotchion of Saxony, that is Barrewiſe ſix pieces Sable and Or, a Bend flowered Vert. A Coat belonging to the Emperours of the houſe of Saxony, from whom the firſt Earls of Savoy did derive themſelves.

3. The Signeury of GENEVA.

GENEVA is a City in the Dukedom of Savoy, formerly ſubjects to its Biſhops, acknowledging the Dukes of Savoy for the Lord in chief: now reckoned as a Free-Eſtate, bordering cloſe upon the Switzers, and with them confederate; and ſo more properly within the courſe and compaſs of the Alpine Provinces. It is ſituate on the South-ſide of the Lake Lemane, oppoſite to the City of Lozane in the Canton of Bern, from which it is diſtant ſix Dutch miles: the River Rhoſne (having paſſed through the Lake with ſo clear a colour, that it ſeemeth not at all to mingle with the waters of it) runneth through the lower part thereof, over which there is a paſſage by two fair Bridges. This lower part is ſeated on a flat or level, the reſt on the aſcent of an Hill: the buildings fair and of Free-ſtone, well fortified on both ſides both by Art and Nature; in regard of the pretenſions of the Duke of Savoy (whom they ſuffer not to arm any Gallies upon the Lake) and other jealouſies of State. The compaſs of the whole City is about two miles, in which there are ſuppoſed to be about ſixteen or ſeventeen thouſand ſouls. One of their Bridges is more ancient, and better fortified than the other, belonging anciently to the Switzers (or Helvetians, the old inhabitants of that tract) but broken down by Julius Cæſar, to hinder them from paſſing that way into Gallia.

The people of the Town are generally of good wits in the managery of publick buſineſs, but not very courteous towards Strangers, of whom they exact as much as may be; modeſt and thrifty in Apparel, and ſpeak for the moſt part the Savoyard, or worſt kind of French. So that the great reſort of young Gentlemen thither, is not ſo much to learn that Language (which is no where worſe taught) as out of an opinion which their Parents have, that the Reformed Religion is no where ſo purely practiſed and profeſſed as there. By means whereof, the fry or ſeminary of our Gentry being ſeaſoned in their youth with Genevan Principles; have many times proved diſaffected to the forms of Government (as well Monarchical as Epiſcopal) which they found eſtabliſhed here at home: to the great embroilment of the State, in matters of moſt near concernment. The Women are ſaid to be more chaſte (or at leaſt more reſerved) than in any other place in the World: which poſſibly may be aſcribed to that ſeverity, with which they puniſh all Offenders in that kind. Dancing by no means tolerated in publick or private; Adultery expiated by no leſs than death: Fornication, for the firſt offence with nine days faſting upon bread and water in priſon; for the ſecond, with whipping; for the third with baniſhment. But notwithſtanding this ſeverity, they make love in ſecret, and are as amorous in their dalliances, as in other places.

The Territories of it are very ſmall, extending not above two Leagues and an half from any part of the Town: but the ſoil, if well manured, bringeth Grain of all ſorts, and great ſtore of Wine. There is likewiſe plenty of paſture and feeding grounds, which furniſh the City with fleſh-meats, Butter, and Cheeſe, at very reaſonable rates: the nearneſs of the Lake affording them both Fiſh and Wild-Fowl in good meaſure, and amongſt others (as ſome ſay) the beſt Carps in Europe.

But the main improvement of this State is by the induſtry of the people, and the convenient ſituation of the City it ſelf: the City being ſituated very well for the Trade of Merchandiſe, in regard it is the ordinary paſſage, for tranſporting Commodities out of Germany, to the Marts at Lyons; and from thence back again to Germany, Switzerland, and ſome parts of Italy. And for the induſtry of the people, it is diſcernable in that great ſtore of Armour, and Apparel, and other Neceſſaries, brought from hence yearly by thoſe of Bern; and their Manufactures in Sattin, Velvet, Taffatee, and ſome quantities of Cloth, (fine, but not durable) tranſported hence yearly into other places.

The Soveraignty of this City was anciently in the Earls hereof, at firſt Imperial Officers only, but at laſt the hereditary Princes of it. Betwixt theſe and the Biſhops (Suffragans to the Metropolitan of Vienna in Dauphine) grew many quarrels for the abſolute command thereof. In fine, the Biſhops did obtain of the Emperor Frederick the Firſt, that they and their Succeſſors ſhould be ſole Princes of Geneva; free from all Taxes, and not accomptable to any but the Emperour. Which notwithſtanding, the Earls continuing ſtill to moleſt the Biſhops, they were fain to call unto their aid the Earl of Savoy; who took upon him firſt as Protector only, but after by degrees as the Lord in Chief. For when the rights of the Earls of Geneva, by the Marriage of Thomas Earl of Savoy, with Beatrix a Daughter of this Earl's, fell into that houſe; then Ame or Amadee the ſixth of that name, obtained of the Emperour Charles the Fourth, to be Vicar-general of the Emperor in his own Country, and in that right ſuperior to the Biſhop in all Temporal matters: and Ame or Amadee the firſt Duke, got from Pope Martin (to the great prejudice of the Biſhops) a grant of all the Temporal juriſdiction of it. After which time, the Biſhops were conſtrained to do homage to the Dukes of Savoy, and acknowledge them for their Soveraign Lords: the Authority of the Dukes being grown ſo great (notwithſtanding that the people were immediately ſubject to their Biſhop only) that the Money in Geneva was ſtamped with the Duke's name and figure: Capital Offenders were pardoned by him; no ſentence of Law executed till his Officers were firſt made acquainted; nor League contracted by the people of any validity, without his privity and allowance: and finally the Keys of the Town preſented to him as often as he pleaſed to lodge there; as once (for inſtance) to Duke Charles the third, coming thither with Beatrix his Wife, a Daughter of Portugal. And in this ſtate it ſtood till the year 1528, the Biſhop being all this while their immediate Lord, and having jus gladii & alias civilis juriſdictionis partes, as Calvin himſelf confeſſeth in an Epiſtle to Cardinal Sadolet. But in that year, Religion being then altered in the Canton of Bern, near adjoining to them, Viret and Farellus did endeavour it in Geneva alſo. But finding that the Biſhop and his Clergy did not like their doings, they ſcrewed themſelves into the people, and by their aid in a popular tumult compelled the Biſhop and his Clergy to abandon the Town. And though the Biſhop made them many fair overtures, out of an hope to be reſtored to his Eſtate; yet would they never hearken to him, nor admit of him any more being once thruſt out. Nor did they only in that tumult alter the Doctrine and Orders of the of the Church before eſtabliſhed; but changed the government of the State alſo; diſclaiming all allegiance both to Duke and Biſhop, and ſtanding on their own Liberty, as a Free-Commonwealth. And though all this was done by Viret and Farellus, before Calvin's coming to that City, which was not till the year 1536, yet being come, ſuffragio meo comprobavi, as he ſaith himſelf, no man was forwarder than he to approve the Action.

But Calvin being come amongſt them, made their Divinity Reader, and one of the ordinary Preachers, he firſt negotiated with them to abjure the Papacy, and never more admit their Biſhop; to which he found a cheerful and unanimous conſent in all the people. Then finding that no Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline was in uſe among them, he dealt with them to admit of one of his own compoſing: which at laſt he obtained alſo, but with very great difficulty; and got it ratified by the Senate, July the 20. 1537. The next year after, the people weary of this yoak, and he and his Colleagues (Farellus, and Coraldus) as reſolute to hold them to it; they were all three baniſhed the Town in a Popular humor; and with like levity ſued to, to return again: to which he would by no means yield, except they would oblige themſelves by a ſolemn Oath, to admit of ſuch a Form of Diſcipline, as he with the advice of their other Miniſters, ſhould preſcribe unto them. This being condeſcended to by that fickle multitude, he returns in triumph to Geneva, September the thirteenth, 1541, and got his new Diſcipline eſtabliſhed on the twentieth of November following. The ſum of the Divice was this; All Miniſters to be equal amongſt themſelves; two Lay-men to be ſuper-added unto every Miniſter; the Miniſter to continue for term of life; the Lay-Elders to be annually choſen: theſe being met together to be called the Presbytery; and to have power of Ordination, Cenſures, Abſolution, and whatſoever elſe was acted by the Biſhop formerly. Hitherto is related to Geneva only, which being but one City, and a ſmall one too, was not capable of more than one Presbytery. The names and notions of Claſſical, Provincial, and National Aſſemblies, came not in till afterwards; as it got ground in Kingdoms, and larger Provinces. This Platform though of purpoſe framed to content the people; yet ſince the Lay-Officers were to be but annual, and after ſubject to the laſh like other Mortals; it gave but ſorry ſatisfaction unto wiſer men. And being built withal on a falſe foundation, was for a long time hardly able to ſtand alone, and fain at twelve years end to borrow a ſupport from Zurich, and others of the Proteſtant Cantons: whom Calvin earneſtly ſolicited to allow his project, againſt which one Perinus, and ſome principal Citizens, had begun to ſpurn. And ſo we have the true beginning of the Genevan Diſcipline; begotten in Rebellion, born in Sedition, and nurſed up by Faction.

Being born in the World by the means aforeſaid, ſome other helps it had to make it acceptable, and approved of, in other Churches. As firſt the great content it gave to the common people, to ſee themſelves entruſted with the weightieſt matters of Religion; and thereby an equality with, if not (by reaſon of their number, being two for one) a ſuperiority above their Miniſters: Next, the great reputation, which Calvin for his diligence in Writing and Preaching, had attained unto; made all his Dictates as authentick amongſt ſome Divines, as ever the Popes Ipſe dixit in the Church of Rome. Whereby it came to paſs, in a little time, that only thoſe Churches which imbraced the Doctrines and Diſcipline authorized by Calvin, were called the Reformed Churches: thoſe in high Germany, and elſewhere, which adhered to Luther, being generally called by no other names than the Lutherans, or the Luthern Churches; as not reformed enough from the dregs of Rome. Then comes in his endeavours to promote that Platform, in all other Churches, which he had calculated from the Meridian of Geneva only: commending it to Gaſper Olevianus, Miniſter of the Church of Triers, as appears by his Letters dated April the twelfth 1560, congratulating the reception of it in the Churches of Poland, as appeareth by others of his Letters. And for the laſt help, comes in Beza, who not content to recommend it as convenient, for the uſe of that Church (beyond which Calvin did not go) impoſed it as a matter neceſſary upon all the Churches: ſo neceſſary, ut ab eo recedere non magis liceat, quam ab ipſius Religionis placitis, that it was utterly as unlawful to recede from this, as for the moſt natural points of the Chriſtian Faith. So he, Epiſt. 83. By means whereof their followers in moſt of the Reformed Churches drove on ſo furiouſly, that rather than their Diſcipline ſhould not be admitted, and the Epiſcopal Government deſtroyed in all the Churches of CHRIST, they were reſolved to depoſe Kings, ruin Kingdoms, and to ſubvert the fundamental Conſtitutions of all Civil States. And hereunto their own Ambition gave them ſpur enough, affecting the ſupremacy in their ſeveral Pariſhes; that they themſelves might Lord it over God's Inheritance, under pretence of ſetting CHRIST upon this Throne. Upon which love to the preheminence, they did not only prate againſt the Biſhops, which malitious words, (as Diotrephes for the ſame reaſon did againſt the Apoſtles) but not therewith content, neither would they themſelves receive them, nor permit them that would, caſting them out of the Church, with reproach and infamy. Which proud ambition in the ordinary Parochial Miniſter, was cunningly fomented by ſome great perſons, and many Lay-Perſons in all places, who under-hand aimed at a further end: the one to raiſe themſelves great fortunes out of Biſhops Lands; the other to keep thoſe Tythes themſelves, to which by the Law they only were to nominate ſome deſerving Perſon. Such were the helps, by which this new device of Calvin was diſperſed and propagated.

But to return unto Geneva, though Calvin for his time did hold the Chair as a perpetual Moderator, and Beza too, until Daneus ſet him beſide the Cuſhon: yet after that, the power of the Preſbytery was ſhrewdly leſſened in Geneva, and the good members ſo reſtrained in the exerciſe of it; that they have no power to convent any man before them, but by the authority of a Syndick, or Civil Magiſtrate. And as for maintenance, they hold their Miniſters ſo ſtrictly to a ſorry pittance, as would be ſure to keep them from preſuming too much on their power in the Conſiſtory. Tythes of all ſorts were to be taken up for the uſe of the State, and laid up in the publick Treaſury; and ſtipends iſſued out to maintain the Miniſtry: but thoſe ſo mean, that Bezaes ſtipend whilſt he lived, hardly amounted to eighty pounds per annum, the reſidue of the City-Miniſters not to ſixty pound, thoſe of the Villages adjoyning, having hardly forty pounds, enough to keep them always poor, and miſerably obnoxious to the wealthier Citizens. And that they may not ſteal the Gooſe, and ſtick up a feather, the State doth uſe to make ſome poor allowance to the wives and daughters of their deceaſed Miniſters, if they die poor, or leave their children unprovided; or otherwiſe have deſerved well in the time of their lives. In reſpect hereof though the Miniſters are very ſtrict in forbidding Dancing, and have writ many Tracts againſt it; yet to give ſome content to the common people (who have not leiſure to attend it at other times) they allow all Manlike exerciſes on the Lords-day, as ſhooting in Pieces, Long-bows, Cross-bows, and the like, and that too in the morning, both before and after the Sermon; so it be no impediment to them, from coming to the Church at the times appointed.

As for the Government of the State, it is directed principally by the Civil or Imperial Laws; the Judge whereof is called the Lieutenant-criminal; before whom all causes are tried, and from whom there lyeth no Appeal; unless it be unto the Council of two hundred, whom they call the Great Council, in which the supreme power of the State resideth. Out of this Council of two hundred, there is chosen another lesser Council of five and twenty, and out of them four principal Officers whom they call the Syndicks, who have the sole managing of the Common-wealth; except it be in some great matter, as making Peace or War, offensive or defensive Leagues, hearing Appeals, and such like general concernments: which the great Council of two hundred must determine of. They have a custom superadded to the Civil Law, that if any Malefactor from another place flye to them for refuge, they punish him after the custom of the place in which the crime was committed. Otherwise their Town being on the borders of divers Princes, would never be free from Vagabonds. Examples hereof I will assign two: the first of certain Monks, who robbing their Convents of certain Plate, and hoping for their wicked prancks at home to be the welcomer hither, were at their first acquaintance advanced to the Gallows. The second is of a Spanish Gentleman, who having fled his Country for clipping and counterfeiting the King's Gold; came to this Town, and had the like reward. And when for defence he alleadged, that he understood their City being free, gave admission to all Offenders; True (said they) but with an intent to punish them that offended: a distinction which the Spaniard never till then learned, but then it was too late.

As for their ordinary Revenue, it is proportionable to their Territory, if not above it, conceived to amount to 60000 pounds per annum; which they raise upon the demain of the Bishop, and the Tythes of the Church, and on such impositions as are laid upon flesh and Merchandise. But they are able to raise greater sums if there be occasion, as appears plainly by the sending of 45000 Crowns to King Henry the third, before they had been long setled in their own estates.

And as for Military Forces, they are able to impress two thousand men, and have Arms of all sorts for so many in the publick Magazines: as also twelve or fourteen pieces of Ordnance, with all manner of Ammunition appertaining to them; and on the Lake some Gallies in continual readiness, against the dangers threatned them by the Dukes of Savoy. And for the greater safety of their Estate, and the preservation of their Religion, they joyned themselves in a constant and perpetual League with the Canton of Bern, Anno 1582, communicating to each other the Freedom of their several Cities; and by that means, are reckoned for a member of the Commonwealth of the Switzers, which is no small security to their affairs. But their chief strength, as I conceive, is, that neighbouring Princes are not willing to have it fall into the hands of that Duke; or any other Potentate of more strength than he. Insomuch that when that Duke besieged it, Anno 1589, they were aided from Venice with four and twenty thousand, and from England, with thirteen thousand Crowns, from Florence with Intelligence of the Enemies purposes. Another time, when the Pope, the French King, the Spaniard, and Savoyard had designs upon it; the Emperor offered them assistance both of Men and Money: yea and sometimes the Dukes of Savoy have assisted them against the others, as being more desirous that the Town should remain as it doth, than fall into any other hands than his own. So ordinary a thing it is for such petit States, to be more safe by the interests of their jealous neighbours, than any forces of their own.

The Arms of Geneva, when under the command of the Earls thereof, were Or, a Cross Azure. But for the title of Geneva after it had been born a while by the Earls of Savoy, it was given to Philip youngest son of Ame or Amadee the first Duke, to Janus the third son of Lewis the second Duke; and finally to Pilip Duke of Nemours, the fourth son of Philip the seventh Duke of Savoy, in whose posterity (Dukes of Nemours) it doth still continue.

4. WALLISLAND.

EAstward from Savoy, in a long and deep bottom of the Alpes Pœninæ, lyeth the Country of WALLISLAND: so called either quasi Wallensland, or the land of the Valenses, once the inhabitants of the Country about Martinacht, a chief town hereof; or quasi Vallies-land, or the Land of Vallies, of which it totally consists. It reacheth from the Mountain de Furken, to the Town of St. Maurice, where again the hills do close, and shut up the valley; which is so narrow in that place, that a Bridge laid from one hill to another (under which the River Rhosne doth pass) is capable of on more than one Arch only, and that defended with a Castle and two strong Gates. On other parts it is environed with a continual wall of steep and horrid Mountains, covered all the year long with a crust of Ice; not passable at all by Armies, and not without much difficulty by single passengers: so that having but that one entrance to it, which before we spake of, no Citadel can be made so strong by Art, as this whole Country is by Nature. But in the bottom of those craggy and impassable Rocks, lies a pleasant Valley, fruitful in Saffron, Corn, Wine, and most delicate fruits; and happily enriched with Meadows, and most excellent Pastures, which yield a notable increase of Cheese and Butter: And in the Country about Sion they discovered in Anno 1544 a Fountain of Salt: and have also many hot Baths, and medicinal waters very wholsom. Of Springs, and River-water, they are very destitute; having scarce any but what they fetch from the Rhosne, with a great deal both of charge and trouble (the common people using snow-water for the most part for domestick uses): which made one pleasantly observe, that they pay dearer for their Water, than they do for their Wine. Cattel they have sufficient to serve their turn, and amongst others, a wild Buck, equal to a Stag in bigness, footed like a Goat, and horned like a fallow Deer, leaping with wonderful agility from one precipice to another, and so not easily caught but in Summer time, for then the heat of that season makes him blind.

It is divided into the Upper and the Lower Wallisland: the Upper lying towards the Mountain di Furken, in the very bottom of the Valley; and the Lower stretching out to the Town of St. Maurice, which is at the opening of the same: the length of both said to be five ordinary days journey, but the breadth not answerable. The Upper Wallisland containeth the seven Resorts, of 1. Sion, or Sedune, 2. Leuck, 3. Brig, 4. Nies, 5. Rawwren, 6. Sider, 7. Gombes, in which are reckoned thirty Parishes: the Lower comprehending the six Resorts of 1. Gurdis, 2. Ardoa, 3. Sallien, 4. Martinacht, 5. Juremont, and 6. St. Maurice: in which are 24 Parishes. The people in both parts said to be courteous towards strangers, but very rough and churlish towards one another.

The ſeveral Reſorts before mentioned, are named according to the names of their principal Towns: which according to their reckoning are thirteen in number. The chief of which are 1 Sedunum, Sittim, or Sion, a Biſhops See, ſuffragan to the Metropolitan of Tarentuniſe; the chief of all this little Country: of no great beauty in it ſelf, but neat and gallant in reſpect of the Towns about it. Situate in a Plain on the River of Rhoſne, under a Mountain of two tops; on the one of which being the lower, is ſeated the Cathedral Church, and the Canon's houſes; and on the other, looking downwards with a dreadful precipice, a very ſtrong Caſtle, the dwelling place of the Biſhop in the heat of Summer: which being built upon an hill of ſo great an height, and ſo hazardous an aſcent, is impoſſible almoſt to be took by force; the ſharpneſs of the Rocks keeping it from the danger of aſſaults, and the highneſs of the hill from the reach of the Gun-ſhot. 2 Marchinacht, by Cæſar called Octodurus, and Civitas Valenſium by Antonius, remarkable for its antiquity only. 3 St. Maurice, or St. Morits, antiently Aganum, the Key of the whole Country; but in Winter eſpecially, when all the other paſſages are frozen up, that there is no other entrance but by the Bridge at this Town, which for that cauſe is very well manned and fortified to avoid ſurpriſal; and therefore alſo choſen for the ſeat of the Governour of the Lower Walliſland.

This Country now called Walliſland, is in moſt Latin Writers called by the name of Valeſia, but corruptly, as I think, for Valenſia, as the Dutch or Engliſh name for Wallenſland: which name I ſhould conceive it took from the Valenſes, the old inhabitants of this Vally, of whom Octodurus (now called Marchinacht) is by Antonius made to be the Metropolis, or principal City. It was made ſubject to the Romans by Julius Cæſar, at ſuch time as the Helvetians were conquered by him: and falling with the Weſtern parts of the Roman Empire unto Charles the Great, was by him given to Theodulus Biſhop of Sion, Anno 805. Under his ſucceſſors they continue to this very day; but ſo, as that the Deputies of the ſeven Reſorts have not only voices with the Canons in his Election, but being choſen and inveſted unto the place, they join with him alſo in the Diets for chooſing Magiſtrates, redreſſing grievances, and determining matters of the State. The Lower Walliſland obeyeth the upper, made ſubject by long War, and the chance of Victory, and hath no ſway in the publick Government, but takes for Law that which their Governours agree of. The ſame Religion is in both, being that of Rome. For maintenance whereof they combined themſelves with the ſeven Popiſh Cantons of Switzerland, Anno 1572, or thereabouts: as alſo for their mutual defence and preſervation againſt Foreign Enemies, and keeping amity and concord amongſt one another.

5. SWITZERLAND.

NEXT unto Walliſland lyeth the Country of the SWITZERS, having on the Eaſt, the Griſons, and ſome part of the Tirol, in Germany; on the Weſt, the Mountain Jour, and the Lake of Geneva, which parts it from Savoy, and Burgundy, on the North, Suevia, or Schwaben, another Province alſo of the upper Germany; and on the South, Walliſland and the Alpes, which border on the Dukedom of Millain.

The whole Country heretofore divided into three parts only, that is to ſay, 1 Argow, ſo called from the River Aaz, whoſe chief Town was Lucern: 2 Wiſliſpurgergow, ſo called from Wiſliſpurg an old Town thereof, the chief City whereof is Bern: And 3 Zurichgow, ſo named from Zurich, both formerly and at this preſent the Town of moſt note in all this Tract; but ſince the falling of theſe Countries from the houſe of Auſtria, divided into many Cantons, and other members, of which more anon.

It is wholly in a manner over-grown with craggy Mountains, but ſuch as for the moſt part have graſſie-tops, and in their bottoms afford rich Meadows, and nouriſhing paſtures, which breed them a great ſtock of Cattel, their greateſt wealth. And in ſome places yields plenty of very good Wines, and a fair increaſe of Corn alſo, if care and induſtry be not wanting on the Husband-mans part, but neither in ſo great abundance, as to ſerve all neceſſary uſes, which want they do ſupply from their neigbouring Countries. And though it ſtand upon as high ground as any in Chriſtendom, yet is no place more ſtored with Rivers, and capacious Lakes; which do not only yield them great abundance of Fiſh, but ſerve the people very well in the way of Traffick, to diſperſe their ſeveral Commodities from one Canton to another. Of which the principal are, Bodenſee, and the Lake of Cell, made by the Rhene; Genſer-ſee, or the Lake of Geneva, by the Rhoſne; Walldſtet-ſee, and the Lake of Lucern, made by the Ruſſe; Namonburger and Bieter-ſees, by the Orbe; and Zurich-ſee, by the River of Limat, or Limachus.

It is in length two hundred and forty miles, an hundred and eighty in breadth; conceived to be the higheſt Country in Europe (as before is ſaid) the River which do iſſue from it running through all quarters of the ſame; as Rhene, through France and Belgium, North; Po, through Italy to the South; Rhodanus, through part of France, to the Weſtern Ocean; and the Inn, which falling into the Danubius paſſeth through Germany, and Hungary, into Pontus Euxinus.

And as the Country is, ſuch are the Inhabitants, of rude and rugged diſpoſitions, more fit for Arms than any civil occupations, capable of toyl and labour, which the neceſſities of their Country do inure them to, not able otherwiſe to afford them an hungry livelihood: the poverty whereof makes them ſeek for ſervice, which they ſhift and change according as they like the conditions of their entertainment; and having no way to vent their ſuperfluous numbers by Navigation, are able to ſpare greater multitudes to a Foreign War, than a man would eaſily imagine. In a word, the people are naturally honeſt, frugal and induſtrious, impartial in the adminiſtration of Juſtice, and great lovers of liberty.

In matters of War, they were once of ſuch a reputation, on the defeats given by them to Charles of Burgundy, that no Prince thought himſelf able to take the Field, or ſtand his own ground in defence of his Dominions if he had not Switzers in his Army: And to advance their reputation, the Wars which followed in Italy about the Dutchy of Millain, ſerved exceeding fitly. For being borderers on that Country, they could be hired better cheap by the French, or Spaniards, than any Army could be brought out of France, or Spain. And having had ſome good ſucceſſes to increaſe their fame, they grew ſo terrible at laſt; that the Spaniards in the War of Guien were more afraid of one band of Swiſſe, than of all the reſt of the French Army. But being found withal to be falſe and treacherous, and eaſily bought off by the better purſe (which they moſt evidently diſcovered in betraying Duke Lodowick Sforza, who had put himſelf and his eſtate into their hands); and thoſe Italian Wars growing unto an end, they did decay ſo faſt in their reputation, that first the neighbouring Princes could do well without them; and at last used them not at all, or at least very sparingly. And now it is their honour that they are chosen of the Guard to the French King, and the Popes of Rome, and the Dukes of Genoa; and that the greatest Princes of Europe give them yearly pensions. Which pensions were given heretofore to be assured of their aid upon all occasions, but now to keep them from engaging on the other side.

For matter of Religion it is proportionably mixt; some of the Cantons being wholly Popish, some wholly Protestant; in others, both Religions used promiscuously. At first the differences were so eagerly pursued on both sides, that notwithstanding the mediation of some potent Neighbours, it broke out into a Civil War; the Cantons of Switz, Uren, Underwald, Lucern, and Zug, (which the Latin Writers of this story call the Quinquepagici) arming against Urich, Bern, and others which adhered to Zuinglius. In the beginning of which War, the Protestant party was discomfited, Zuinglius himself slain in the head of the Battel, and his body burnt: his heart remaining in the midst of the fire, whole and untouched as Archbishop Cranmer's also did) when all the rest of his body was consumed to ashes. But those of the Reformed party would not so give over. Another field they fought for it, and therein had the better of the adverse party. Wearied at last with reciprocal defeats, they agreed the business, indulging each to other the free exercise of their own Religions. So it continueth at this day, diversity of opinions not drawing them from a due care of the publick interest, nor giving any interruption to that bond of peace which was so firmly knit amongst them in their first Confederacy.

Now for the body of their State, it consists of three distinct parts, or members, which are to be considered in this discourse, viz. the Swisse themselves, the Præfectures which are subject to them, and the States that are confederates with them. The Swisse are subdivided into thirteen Cantons, that is to say, Switz, Uren, Underwald, Lucern, Zug, Bern, Zurich, Basil, Friburg, Soloturn, Apenzel, Glaris and Schaffhausen. These properly make the body of that Common-wealth, enjoying many rights, priviledges and preheminences which the others do not; as power to determine of War and Peace, to dispose of the Præfectures, and divide amongst themselves the spoil of the enemy. The first confederacy was made betwixt the Cantons of Switz, and Underwald, Anno 1315. Of which the Switz being the most potent, the most exasperated, and that which did most hotly prosecute the combination, gave to the rest the name of Switzers, first made for ten years only, in defence of themselves against the violences of Albert the first, Emperor and Duke of Austria; intending to alienate them from the Empire, and add them by strong hand to his own Estates, Anno 1309. but made perpetual after their great victory obtained against Duke Leopold son of Albert, in the fields of Mortgarten, of which more anon. Lucern was added to the three, Anno 1332. Zug, Zurich, and Glaris, came not into the confederacy till the year 1352; nor Bern until the year next after. Friburg and Soloturn came in Anno 1481. Basil and Schaffhausen united with them in the year 1501. And Apenzel, which was the last which was admitted into their confederacy, Anno 1513. So that there passed within little of two hundred years, from the first beginning of these Leagues, to the finishing of them.

The second Member of this body, are the Towns and States, Confederates with them, for the preservation of their common Liberties, viz. the Town and Abbot of Saint Gall, the Towns of Rotwel, Mulhausen, Nuenberg, and Biel, situated on the Lake thence named: (of which the first belonged heretofore to the Earls of Longeville in France, the latter to the Bishops of Basil) with the City and Signeury of Geneva: And of these, Rotwel and Mulhausen are confederate with all the Cantons; the rest, with some particulars only. The Abbot of St. Gall first entered into League with Zurich, Lucern, Switz, and Glaris, for the preservation of his Lands and Towns then revolting from him: and the Town following his example, confederated with Zurich, Bern, Switz, Lucern, Zug, Glaris, the better to preserve themselves from the power of their Abbot, who was before their natural and immediate Lord. This was in Anno 1452. Rotwel, and Mulhausen, two Imperial Towns in the Province of Schawben, confederated in a perpetual League with all the Cantons, the first, Anno 1515, the other, 1519, Newenberg, Biel, and Geneva, with Bern only.

As for the Præfectures of the Switzers, they are such lesser parcels and additaments, as have accrewed to their Estate, and are subject unto their authority; either by gift, purchase, or the chance of War: some lying in Switzerland it self, some amongst other parts of the Alpes, and some in Italy. These are the Towns and Countries of Baden, Brengarten, Millingen, Rappenswyll, Wagenthall, interposed here and there amongst the Switzers: the Town and Country of Sargans, lying amongst the Rhætian Alpes, not far from the Grisons; and Rhineck, lying in a valley of the Alpes, on the left shore of the Rhene, near the Lake of Constans; and finally the vallies of Locarno, Magia, and Lugano, Mendrisio, and Belinzano, situate in and amongst the Alpes, near the Dukedom of Millain, to which they formerly belonged. Of which the Præfectures of Badin, and Mellingen appertain to the eight first Cantons: Wagenthall, the Sargans, and Rhineck to the seven first Cantons; Rappenswyll to Uren, Switz, Underwald, and Glaris; and Thurgow, unto the ten first Cantons: Belinzano to the three first only; and all the rest of the Italian Præfectures to the Cantons generally, excepting Apenzel, which was not entred into the confederacy when these Præfectures were given unto the Switzers, by Maximilian Sforza Duke of Millain; which was in Anno 1513. some months before the taking in of Apenzel to the rest of the Cantons.

Such is the number of the Cantons, Præfectures, and States-confederate, amongst all which there are few Towns or Cities of any note: there being no City nor walled Town in the Cantons of Switz, Uren, Underwalden, Glaris, Apenzel, nor in any of the States confederate situate amongst the Switzers, but St. Gall only; nor in any of the Præfectures but that of Baden. So that the places worthy of consideration are not like to be many. Of those that are, the principal are, 1 Zurich, a large City, and a renowned University, situate on both sides of the River Liman, where it issueth out of the Lake called Zurich-See. It had antiently two Monasteries in it, in one of which Huldericus Zuinglius was a Canon, slain near this Town in the Battel spoken of before, Anno 1531, now giving name to the most honourable of the Cantons, to which belongeth the authority of summoning the general Diets as of those also of the Protestants; the Legats thereof presiding in both assemblies. 2 Friburg, situate on the River Sana, on the declivity of an uneven and rocky hill, founded by Bertold the fourth Duke of Zeringen. 3 Solothurn, (the Solothurum of Antonius) on the River Aar, famous for the Martyrdom of S. Ursus, and his 66 Theban Souldiers, in the time of the Emperor Diocletian. A Town of great Antiquity, but not so old by far as the people make it: who would have it to be built in the time of Abraham. 4 Basil, so called either of a Basilisk slain at the building of the City; or of the German word Pasel, signifying a path; or of Βασίλεια, signifying Kingly. It was built Anno 382, and is famous for an University founded by Pius the second, Anno 1459. It was made a Canton, Anno 1501; and is honoured with the Sepulchres of Oecolampadius, Erasmus, Pontanus, Glarianus, and Hottoman the famous Civilian. In this City, Anno 1431, was held that notable Council, wherein though the Papal authority was then at the height, it was declared that a general Council was above the Pope. What was then enacted, was immediately put in practice; the Council deposing Pope Eugenius the fourth, and placing in his room Amadeus Duke of Savoy, afterward called Felix the fourth; who having held the See nine years in a time of Schism did willingly in order to the peace of Christendom, resign the Popedom to Nicholas the fifth, who had before been chosen by the opposite Faction. The City is great, rich, and populous, sometimes a Town Imperial, still a Bishops See: the Bishop being subject to the Archbishop of Besanson, in the County of Burgundy: seated upon the River Rhene (where it receiveth Weis and Byrsa, two lesser Brooks) by which it is divided into the greater Basil lying towards France, and the lesser lying towards Germany. 5 Lucern, situate on both sides of the Russe, where it issueth out of the Lake of Lucern; so called from Lucern, i. e. the Lanthern, which was placed here on an high Tower, to give light to Water men in the night. A City well traded and frequented by strangers, because the ordinary road from Germany into Italy, passing from hence through the Country of the Grisons, and in regard that the Diets for the Popish Cantons, which heretofore were held at Uren, are removed hither. Not far from this Town is the Mountain called Pilates hill, of Pontius Pilate, whose ghost (as the common people are made to believe) doth walk once a year on the banks of this Lake in his Judges Robes. And to be sure the fiction shall not be confuted, they add, that whosoever seeth him shall die that year. 6 Bern, compassed almost round with the River Aar, and taking up the whole extent of a little Mountain; the houses of free-stone, neatly and uniformly built. A Town which gives name to the largest and most potent of all the Cantons; one of the first which did embrace the Reformation, and the first of all which purged it self of Images, those excellent Instruments of Superstitition and Idolatry; defaced here in a popular tumult, Anno 1548. 7 Lausanna in the Canton of Bern, a Bishops See, Suffragan to the Archbishop of Besanson; seated on the banks of the Lake of Lemane, and compassed with mountains always covered with Snow, which open themselves on the East side only, which is towards Italy. 8 Schaffhausen, the only Town of all the Cantons, which lyeth on the other side of the Rhene, of right belonging unto Suevia, or Schawben, a Province of Germany, and reckoned as a part thereof, before it was incorporated into this Confederacy.

German

Next for the Præfectures, and Confederate States; they have not many Towns of note (excepting Rotwel, and Mulhausen, two Imperial Cities, which properly belong to another place.) Of those which be, the principal amongst the Confederates, lying within the bounds of this Country, is the Town of Saint-Gall, (Sengall as they corruptly call it) an Imperial City, situate amongst the Mountains near the Boden-See. A rich, populous, and well-governed Town, taking name from the Monastery of S. Gall, a famous Scot, and the Apostle of those parts, Anno 630, or thereabouts; the Abbot of which having great possessions in this tract (before Apenzel, and this Town revolted from him) was a Prince of the Empire. The Anabaptists were once very prevalent here, in so much that one of them cut off his brothers head in the presence of his Father and Mother, and said (according to the humour of that sect, who boast much of dreams, visions, and Enthusiasms) that God commanded him so to do. The principal amongst the Præfectures is the Town of Baden, or (to difference it from Baden a Marquisate in Germany) the Upper Baden: seated on a little Mountain near the River Limat, almost in the middle of the Country: and for that cause the place of meeting for the Council of Estate of all the Confederates. It taketh name from the Baths here being, two of which only are publick, the rest in private houses: conscious, as it is thought, to much lasciviousness. For whereas it is said of Adrian, that Lavacra pro sexibus separavit; here men and women promiscuously bathe together; and which is worst, in private: where as Munster telleth us, Cernunt viri uxores tractari, cernunt cum alienis loqui, & quidem solam cum solo; and yet are not any of them disturbed with jealousie. The Baths are much frequented, yet not so much for health as pleasure. Their chiefest vertue is the quickning power they have upon barren women. But as the Friers use to send men whose wives are fruitless, in pilgrimage to Saint Joyce, the Patroness of fruitfulness; and in the mean time to lie with their Wives: so it may be with good reason thought, that in a place of such Liberty as this is, the lusty young Gallants that haunt this place, produce greater operation of barren women, than the waters of the Bath it self. No other Town of eminent note amongst the Præfectures of the Swisses, except Rhineck it self, the seat of the Governour for the Switzers, situate near the Lake of Constance: and none of any note at all amongst the Italian Præfectures, except Belinzana, and Locarno, neither of them containing four hundred Houses, and those none of the handsomest.

Within the limits of this Country, and in that part thereof which was called Argow, containing the now Cantons of Uren, Switz, Underwald, Glarona, and Lucern; with some of the adjoining parts of Germany, and some part of the Dukedom of Savoy; did sometimes stand the famous and renowned Castle of HABSPURG: from the Lords whereof the house of Austria, and most of the Kings and Princes of the Christian World do derive themselves. First founded, as some say, by Ottopert the third Prince of this line, at or before the year 700; as others say, by Rapato the son of Betzeline, about the year 1020. Situate on the River Aar (by the Latins called Arula) near a Town called Bruck; now so decayed, that there is no tracing of the ruins. Preserved in memory by the Lords and Princes of it, descended in a direct line from Segebert the eldest son of Theodebert King of Mets, or Austrasia; first settled in these parts by Clotaire the second, King of the French, with the title as some say, of Duke of Upper Almain (the Lower Almain being that which is now called Suevia or Schawben, an adjoining Province of Germany). Being soon weary of that empty, but invidious title, they were sometimes called Earls of Habspurg, by the name of this Castle; sometimes Earls of Altemburg, another Castle not far off, of their own foundation. And after, closing in with the Kings of Burgundy Transjurane, and the German Emperors, they received of them a great part of the Country of Argow; from which some of them were called Earls of Argow. Not known distinctly by the title of Earls of Habspurg, till the time of Rapato above-mentioned; when those of Altemburg and Argow became discontinued. However we will here lay down the whole succession of this famous family, either Earls, or the Progenitors of

The Earls of Habſpurg.

A. Ch.

635 1 Sigibert, ſon of Theodobert King of Metz, by Clotaire the ſecond of that name, French King, diſpoſſeſſed of the Kingdom of his Father, and afterwards by him indowed with a great part of thoſe Countries, which are now called Switzerland, with the title of Duke of Upper Almain.

2 Sigibert II. ſon of Sigibert the firſt, Duke of Upper Almain.

3 Ottopert, or Otbert, the ſon of Sigibert the ſecond, the founder, as ſome ſay, of the Caſtle of Altemburg and Habſpurg, of which promiſcuouſly called Earl.

4 Bebo, the ſon of Ottopert, the laſt Duke of Upper Almain; which title he exchanged for that of Earl of Altemburg, and Habſpurg.

5 Robert, or Rother, as ſome call him, the ſon of Bebo, Earl of Altemburg.

766 6 Hertopert, the ſon of Robert, who added unto his Eſtate that part of Schwaben, or Suevia, which is called Briſgow.

7 Rampert, the ſon of Hertopert, who flouriſhed Anno 814, at what time he procured the Canonization of S. Trutpertus.

8 Guntram, the ſon of Rampert, Earl of Altemburg.

9 Luithard, the ſon of Guntram.

909 10 Luitfride, the ſon of Luithard.

929 11 Hunifride, the ſon of Luitfride, who added unto his Eſtates the Territory now called Sungow, bordering on Alſatia, a Province of Germany; recovered after his deceaſe by the Dukes of Schwaben.

950 12 Guntram II. ſon of Hunifride, the firſt who took unto himſelf the title of Earl of Argow: from whoſe ſecond ſon named Berthilo, deſcended the Dukes or Earls of Zeringen, poſſeſſed of almoſt all Briſgow, and a good part of Switzerland, which they inherited from Berthold, the ſon of Gebiro the third ſon of Guntram; Who having founded the Caſtle of Zeringen, and acquired great poſſeſſions in adjoining parts of Schwaben, left them at his deceaſe (being childleſs) to Berthold the ſon of Berthilo, and his Couſen German.

13 Betzo, or Betzeline, the eldeſt ſon of Guntram the ſecond, Earl of Argow.

14 Rapato, ſon of Betzeline, the founder or repairer of the Caſtle of Habſpurg, from whence both he and his ſucceſſors were conſtantly called Earls of Habſpurg. Great Grand-father by Theodorick his youngeſt ſon, of Rodolph Earl of Rhinefelden, and Duke of Schwaben, elected Emperor (at the inſtigation of the Pope) againſt Henry the fourth.

1096 16 Otbo, the ſon of Warner or Berenger.

1108 17 Warner II. ſon of Otbo, enriched by the Emperor Henry the fourth, with ſome fair Eſtates belonging to the Dukes of Schwaben.

18 Albert, the ſon of Warner the ſecond, ſurnamed the Rich.

19 Albert II. ſurnamed the Wiſe, ſon of Albert the firſt, added to his Eſtates a great part of the Upper Alſatia; which he had by the right of Heduigis his wife, one of the daughters and heir of Simon the laſt Earl thereof.

1238 20 Rodolph, the fortunate ſon of Albert the ſecond, added to his Eſtate the reſt of the Upper Elſate, elected Emperor of the Romans, Anno 1273. Of which he made ſo good advantage, that he added unto his Eſtates the great Dukedom of Auſtria, with all the incorporate Provinces thereunto belonging, and laid the firſt foundation of the Auſtrian greatneſs; of which more in Germany. Here only note, that beſides the following Princes of the Houſe of Auſtria, thoſe of the line Collateral ſtill retained the title of Earls of Habſpurg (according to the ill cuſtom of Germany) increaſed with the addition of the Earldom of Kyburg, of which more hereafter: and ſo continued till the expiring of that line in the perſon of Rodolph the fourth, the laſt that bare the title of Earl of Habſpurg, Anno 1356, by whoſe death many fair Eſtates were added to the Auſtrian Family.

Having on the occaſion of theſe Earls of Habſpurg, beheld ſo much of the affairs of this Country, as related unto that puiſſant and illuſtrious family, let us go forward to the reſt: firſt taking in our way the ancient Eſtate hereof, in the time of the Romans. At what time this whole mountainous tract, containing many ſeveral Nations (ſome of them ſpoken of before) was comprehended under the general name and notion of the Helvetii; the greateſt and moſt populous of all the reſt: ſo called, as Verſtegan will have it, Quaſi Hil-vites, or the Vites of the Mountains, to difference them from the Vites of the lower parts, inhabiting in that part of Cimbrick Cherſonneſe, which is now called Juitland; and from thoſe dwelling in the middle, betwixt both extremes in the little Province ſtill called Voitland. Grown by long peace, and want of opportunity by traffick into foreign parts, to ſo great a multitude, that the Country barren of it ſelf, was no longer able to maintain them; they ſet fire on their Towns and Houſes, and with a general reſolution went to ſeek new dwellings. The total number of men, women, and children, which went upon this deſperate action, are ſaid to have amounted to the number of 3680000, whereof 900000 were fighting men. They had not long before overthrown L. Caſſius a Roman Conſul, ſlain the Conſul himſelf, and ſold his Souldiers for Bond-ſlaves: upon the apprehenſion of which good ſucceſs, they thought no body able to withſtand them. But they found Ceſar of a ſtronger metal than L. Caſſius. Who having ſtopped their paſſage by hewing down the Bridge of Geneva, till he was grown ſtrong enough to bid them battel; ſo waſted them in ſeveral skirmiſhes and defeats, that they were forced to crave leave of him to go home again, and to rebuild thoſe Towns and Villages which they had deſtroyed before this enterpriſe: which he upon delivery of Hoſtages, did vouchſafe to grant. It is conceived, that at the leaſt two Millions of them periſhed in this journy, and not ſo much by the Sword (though that ſpared them not) as for want of neceſſaries. After this they continued Members of the Roman Empire, till conquered in the times of Honorius and Valentinian the third, by the Burgundians and Almans, betwixt whom divided; the River Ruſt parting their dominions. From them being taken by the French, it was made a part of the Kingdom of Burgundy; ſome parts firſt taken out, and given to the Progenitors of the Earls of Habſpurg, as before was noted. Given with the reſt of that Kingdom to the Emperor Conrade

the second, by Rodolph the last King thereof: parcelled out by the German Emperours (as their custom was) into divers States; most of the which were drawn in by the Dukes of Schwaben, the Earls of Habspurg, Kyburg, Werdenburg, &c. and the Dukes of Zeringen; as afterwards in the fall of the one, and as heirs to many of the other, by the Dukes of Austria. By means of which united titles the Austrian family was possessed of so much of this Country, as now makes up five Cantons, and as many of the principal Præfectures; that is to say, the Cantons of Zug, Glarona, Lucern, Friburg, and Schaffehausen; the Præfectures of Baden, Brengarten, Mellingen, Wagenthall, Roperswyll; together with a great part of the Country of Targow, wherin stands the City of St. Gall, now a Confederate with the Switzers; some of the rest, as Uren, Switz, Underwalden, being brought under by the power of the Emperor Albert, the son of Rodolph of Habspurg, who had a purpose to unite them to the house of Austria; because obnoxious also to the power of those Princes. But the people being at last over-burthened by the tyranny of those Governors, whom the Dukes of Austria and their other Lords had sent among them; seeing withal the Empire by the Pope's Fulminations distracted into many Factions, and the Austrian Family weakned by a sub-division of that great Estate into many parcels; they contracted an Offensive and Defensive League amongst themselves, for defence of their Liberty: into which first entred those of Switz, Uren, and Underwalden, Anno 1385. Not all united into one Confederation till the year 1513, as before was noted. At their first beginning to take Arms, Frederick, one of the many Dukes of Austria (to whose share they fell) sent his Brother Leopold against them with a puissant Army which they encountred near Mortgarten a Village of the now Canton of Underwalden, and there overthrew him: but more by the convenience of those narrow passages, through which his Army was to march, than by any valour. In which it was no small help to them, that the ways were all so filled with Ice, that he was able to do no service with his Horse, and his Souldiers so amazed at the present difficulties, that the Confederates only casting stones on them from the tops of the Mountains, made them leap into the Lakes adjoyning. This hapned in the year 1315. Grown confident by this success, they brought the new Canton of Lucern into their confederacy by the force of Arms, Anno 1332, and that of Zurich by their reputation and like hope of Liberty, Anno 1351, in which year those of Zug, and Glaris invaded by the former five and willing to discharge themselves of their Lordly Masters, were united to them, as was the new Canton of Bern in the year next following. In the year 1381, the Towns of Solothurm and Friburg, descended from the house of Zeringen, (at the expiration of that line) upon those of Habspurg, revolted from their natural Lords and admitted Cantons, occasioned Leopold son of Albert the short, and brother of Albert the fourth, Dukes of Austria, to make War upon them: in which War being vanquished and slain near Sempach a Village of the Canton of Lucern, with the Flower of his Nobility and Gentry, Anno 1386, and the succeeding Dukes not venturing any more against them, the residue of the Cantons and Confederates were in time made up.

Having thus cleared themselves of the House of Austria, they continued free and unmolested, but never came to any reputation for their valour, till the War made upon them by Charles Duke of Burgundy, whom they discomfited in three great Battels, and slew him also in the third. A War commenced by him at the first on small occasions, and less hopes: the Country being so barren, and the people so poor; that their Ambassador to the Duke (as Comines reporteth) protested, that if all their Country-men were taken; they would not be able to pay a Ransom, to the value of the Spurs and Bridle-bits in his Camp. Certainly at that time they were so poor, that they knew not what riches was. For having won the first Battel at Granson (the other two were those of Morat and Nancy) one of the goodliest Pavilions in the World was by them torn in pieces, and turned into Breeches and Side-coats: divers silver plates and dishes they sold for a French Sous (each Sous a little more than an English penny) supposing them to be but pewter; and a great Diamond of the Dukes, which was the goodliest Jewel in Christendom, was sold to a Priest for a Guilder; and by him again to some of the Lords of the Country for three Franks. After their valour showed in these Battels, Lewis the eleventh took them into pension, giving them yearly forty thousand Crowns, viz. thenty thousand to the Cantons, and twenty thousand to particular persons: and bowed so much beneath the Majesty of the most Christian King, as to learn himself one of the Burgesses of their Corporation; and to contend with the Duke of Savoy, which of them should be held for their first Allie. By these arts, and the nearness of their Forces for those occasions, he wrested Burgundy out of the hands of Mary the daughter of Charles; and Lewis the twelfth won Millain from Ludowick Sforze, whom they perfidiously betrayed as was said before. Upon the merit of these services, they required an augmentation of their pensions: which when this Lewis the twelfth denyed, they withdrew themselves from the Amity of the French, and entered into the service of Pope Julio the second; who therefore stiled them the Defenders of the Church, Anno 1510. The fruits of which entertainment was the defeat of the whole forces of King Lewis, and the loss of Millain; into which Maximilian Sforze, the son of Ludowick, was solemnly re-inflated by the Confederates: who to oblige the Switzers more firmly to him, gave them those Towns and Vallies in the Alpes of Italy (formerly members of that Dukedom) which now belong unto the Switzers; reckoned amongst the Præfectures of their Common-wealth. Francis the first in pursuance of his claim to Millain, gave them a great and memorable overthrow at the Battel of Marignan. Yet afterwards considering what damage his Realm had sustained by the revolt of the Auxiliaries to his Enemies, he renewed the Confederation with them; on condition that he should restore the antient pension of forty thousand Crowns; secondly, that he should pay unto them at certain terms, six hundred thousand Crowns; thirdly that he should entertain four thousand of them in his pay continually; fourthly, that for the restoring of such places as they had taken from the Dutchy of Millain, he should give unto them thirty thousand Crowns: fifthly, that he should give them three months pay before-hand: sixtly and lastly, that Maximilian Sforze, whom they had estated in Millain, and were now going to dispossess, might by the King be created Duke of Nemores, endowed with twelve thousand Franks of yearly revenue, and married to a daughter of the blood royal. On these conditions, as honorable to them as burthensom to the King, was the League renewed, Anno 1522, since which time, they have obtained, that six hundred of their Country are to be of the French King's Guard; five hundred of which wait without at the gates of the Court, the other hundred in the great Hall. And yet the French Kings did not so ingross the Market, though they raised the price of the commodity, but that all other Princes might have them also for their Money: the Kings of Spain and others bidding fair for them, but never never going ſo high as the French had done. At laſt, upon the differences which grew amongſt themſelves in point of Religion they grew to be divided alſo in point of Penſion: the Popiſh Cantons taking penſions of the Pope, and the King of Spain; the Proteſtants of the French; the mixt, of both; and all, of the Venetians. By which means being bribed and corrupted by all, they came in very little time to be truſted of none. Which ſudden ſinking of that fame and reputation which they had attained to, together with the reaſons of it; that notable Stateſman and Hiſtorian Guicciardine doth deſcribe as followeth: "The name (ſaith he) of this wild "and uncivil Nation hath got great honour by their "Concord, and glory by Arms. For being fierce by na-"ture, inured to War, and exact keepers of Military diſ-"cipline, they have not only defended their own Coun-"try, but have won much praiſe in foreign parts: which "doubtleſs had been greater, if they had ſought to in-"large their own Empire, and not for wages to inlarge "the Empire of others; and if nobly they had pro-"pounded unto themſelves any other ends, than the "gain of money; by the love whereof being made ab-"ject, they have loſt the opportunity of becoming fear-"ful to Italy. For ſince they never came out of their "confines, but as mercenary men, they have had no pub-"lick fruit of their Victories: but by their covetouſneſs "have become intolerable in their actions where they "overcame, and in their demands with other men; yea "at home froward and obſtinate in their concluſions, as "well as in following their commands under whoſe pay "they ſerve in War. Their chief men have penſions of "ſeveral Princes to favour them in their publick meet-"ings: and ſo private profit being preferred before the "good of the publick, they are apt to be corrupted, and "fall at diſcord amongſt themſelves, with great leſſen-"ing of their reputation which they had gotten amongſt "ſtrangers. So he, relating the occurances of the year 1511, which the following iſſue of affairs hath fully verified.

As for the Government of this State, it is meerly popular, and that not only in the particular Cantons, but the aggregate body of their Council: the Gentry and Nobility being either rooted up in thoſe long wars which were betwixt them and their Vaſſals, juſtly provoked by thoſe intolerable preſſures and exactions which they laid upon them; or elſe worn out of memory and obſervation, for want of ſway and ſuffrage in the Councils of the Common-wealth. Only in Schaffehauſen, Baſil, and Zurich, are ſome Gentry left, not capable of any place or ſufferage in the Senate of the ſaid Cantons (from which they are excluded by the Common people, becauſe they joyned not with them in their firſt revolt) unleſs they wave their Gentry, and be enrolled amongſt the number of Plebeians. The reſt they have (it ſeemeth) in ſo poor eſteem, that Porters and Mechanicks of the meaneſt Trades, in all occaſions of War, are numbred with, and amongſt theſe Gentlemen; making up one ſociety only, and joyning with them in electing the Maſter of their Company, who is one of the Senate. But becauſe that every Canton hath his proper Magiſtrates, but more or fewer, according as it is in greatneſs, or in the number of its ſeveral Reſorts, or Sub diviſions; it will not be amiſs to ſhew what number of Reſorts are in every Canton: that is to ſay, in Underwalden only two, in Switz ſix, in Uren ten, in Zug five, in Glaris or Glarona fifteen, in Apenzel ſix, in Lucern ſeven, in Solothurn no more than one, in Friburg nineteen, in Baſil and Schaffehauſen but one apiece (the Cantons there and in Solothurn, reaching but little further than the Towns themſelves) in that of Zurich thirty one, and thirty in that of Bern; in all one hundred forty and eight. Of theſe conſiſts the body of this Common-wealth. In ordering whereof, every particular Canton hath its proper Magiſtrate, choſen by the Commonalty of that Canton (whom they call the Wuaman) together with a ſtanding Council aſſiſtant to him, choſen out of the people, for the directing and diſpoſing of their own affairs; which meet and ſit in the chief Town and Village of that Diſtrict. But if the cauſe concern the Publick, then every Canton ſendeth one or more Commiſſioners to the general Diets; where they determine of the buſineſs which they meet about, according to the major part of the Votes: the Commiſſioners of every Canton having one Vote only, though many may be ſent from each, to add the greater weight to their conſultations. The places of meeting is moſt commonly at the Town of Baden, in reſpect of the commodity of the Inns and Houſes, the pleaſant ſituation and famous Medicinal Baths: and becauſe it is ſeated in the very centre of Switzerland, and ſubject to the eight firſt Cantons. And here they do determine of War, Peace, and Leagues; of making Laws, of ſending, receiving, and anſwering Ambaſſadors; of Governments, and diſtributing the publick Offices; and finally of difficult Cauſes and Appeals, referred unto the judgment of the Great Council. In which the City Zurich, chief of the Cantons, hath the firſt place, not by antiquity, but dignity, and of old cuſtom hath the greateſt authority of calling together this Great Council, ſignifying by Letters to each Canton, the cauſe, time, and place of meeting: yet ſo, that if any Canton think it for the publick good, to have an extraordinary meeting of their Commiſſioners, they write to them of Zurich to appoint the ſame. That which the greater number do reſolve upon, is without delay put in execution.

The Forces of theſe Swiſſe conſiſt altogether of Foot, Horſe being found unſerviceable in this Mountainous Country. And of theſe Foot, Boterus reckoneth that they are able to raiſe ſixſcore thouſand. Which poſſibly may be true enough, if it be underſtood of all that be able to bear Arms. For otherwiſe de facto, the greateſt Army that ever they brought into the field, conſiſted but of one and thirty thouſand men, which was that wherewith they aided the confederate States of Italy againſt the French, and reſtored Maximilian Sforze to the Dukedom of Millain. Their ordinary ſtanding Forces are conceived to be ſixteen or ſeventeen thouſand, which they may bring into the field leaving their Towns and Forts well furniſhed. And for their Revenue, it is not like to be very great, conſidering the poverty of their Country, and their want of Traffick with other Nations. That which is ordinary and in common, ariſeth out of the Annual penſions which they receive from Foreign States; the profits ariſing out of their Dutch and Italian Prefectures, the Impoſt laid on Wines ſold in Taverns, and Corn uſed by Bakers; and the Rents of a diſſolved Monaſtery called Kings-field (or Conings-field) becauſe many Kings and Queens have been cloyſtered there, amounting to forty thouſand Guldans yearly. Which Monaſtery was built in the year 1380, in memory and honour of the Emperor Albertus, ſlain by his Nephew Spantback, nor far from Baſil. Their extraordinary doth conſiſt of ſpoils that be gotten in the War; which if it be managed in common, are divided in common; but if by two or three of the Cantons only, the reſt can claim no ſhare in the booty gotten.

But this is only in relation to the Switzers themſelves. For otherwiſe taking in the Confederate States as well without as within the bounds of that Country, they are able to raiſe fifty or threeſcore thouſand men; that is to ſay, the Switzers themſelves ſeventeen thouſand men, the the Grisons ten thousand, those of Wallisland six thousand, the Abbot and Town of S. Gall four thousand, the City of Geneva two thousand; besides what Rotwell and Mulhausen, two Imperial Cities, are able to contribute towards it; the Dukes of Savoy being bound by their antient Leagues to aid them with six hundred Horses, at his own charges; besides two thousand six hundred Crowns in Annual pensions. But the Revenue of those States is ordered by it self apart, and never comes within the computation of the publick; unless it be on the repulsing of a common Enemy, in which they are equally concerned. In which case, and others of a general interest, they communicate both heads and purses: the Delegates and Commissioners of all the States of this Confederacy, meeting together to consult of the Common Cause, which meeting they entitle the Greatest Council. But this is very seldom held, publick affairs being generally ordered by the Commissioners of the Switzers only: though they themselves disclaim that name of Switzers, as too mean and narrow, and call themselves Eidienossen, that is to say, Partakers of the sworn Leagues. More of this Common-wealth he that lists to see, may satisfie himself in Simler, who purposely and punctually hath described the same.

The Leagues of the GRISONS.

THE Country of the GRISONS comprehendeth all that part of the Alpes, which lieth between the Springs of the Rivers Rhene, Inn, Adice or Athesis, and Adna: being bounded on the East, with the Country of Tirol; on the West, with Switzerland; on the North, with Suevia or Schwaben, and a part of the Switzers; on the South, with Lombardy. A Country far more mountainous than any of this Alpine tract, and having less natural commodities to boast it self of, more than the Fountains of those Rivers before mentioned.

The People of it by most Latin Writers of these times, are called by the name of Rhæti, the Country Rhætia: and so far properly enough, as that the ancient Rhæti did inhabit all the Lands possessed by the Grisons: though the Grisons do not inhabit a fourth part of those Lands, which were possessed heretofore by the ancient Rhæti: For anciently the Rhæti did extend their dwellings as far as from the Alpes of Italy, to the River of Danow; comprehending besides, this of the Grisons, a great part of Suevia or Schwaben, Tirol, Bavaria, and so much also of the Switzers, as was not in possession of the old Helvetii. Within which Tract there were not only many rich Valleys and fruitful Fields; but a most pleasant race of Wines called Vina Rhætica, much drank of by Augustus Cæsar, and by him preferred before all others; which no man can conceive to grow in this barren Country. More properly Ammianus Marcellinus calleth this Tract by the name of Campi Canini, Mountainous Fields, which the continual Snow made to look of an hoary hue: and by allusion thereunto, the Dutchmen call this Nation at the present by the name of Graunpuntner, that is to say, the hoary or gray Confederates.

As for the Rhæti, take them in the former latitude, they were subdued by Drusus and Tiberius the Sons-in-law and adopted children of Augustus Cæsar, A.V.C. 739. And in the time of Antoninus made up two Provinces of the Empire, viz. Rhætia prima, and Rhætia secunda, both of them appertaining by Constantines new model, to the Diocese of Italy. A Nation in the first Original, of Italian race, and so more properly to be assigned to that Diocese; but had inhabited this Tract, from the time that Bellovesus the Gall seised on part of Tuscany, expelling thence the ancient inhabitants thereof: who under the conduct of Rhætus, a great man amongst them, possessed themselves of these Mountains, and afterwards of the Vales adjoyning, which they called Rhætia, by the name of their Captain General. This hapned in the time of Tarquinius Priscus, in the first cradle, as it were, of the Roman Empire: in the declining age whereof, during the reign of Valentinian the third, and Anastasius, those parts which lay neerest unto Germany, and were worth the conquering, were subdued by the Almains, and Boiarians; by them incorporated with the rest of their several States. The residue of this Mountainous Tract, as not worth the looking after, continued a member of the Empire; till given by Charles the Great to the Bishop of Chur; whose successors, being several ways molested by their potent neighbours, confederated with the Switzers for their mutual aid and preservation, Anno 1497. By whose aid they so valiantly made good their ground against the Austrians, that at the last, after the loss of twenty thousand men on both sides, the points in difference were accorded, and a peace concluded.

This is the substance of this story, as to former times, to which there cannot much be added in the way of History; little or no alteration hapning in their affairs, but a more perfect setling of them in a form of Government. Concerning which we must observe that this whole Tract is cast into three Divisions; that is to say, the Upper League or Liga Grisa, 2. Liga Cadi Dio, or the League of the house of God; 3. The Lower League called also Liga Ditture, or the League of the ten Commonalties. The eight Italian Præfectures will make a fourth. Their buildings generally in the three first being cold and mountainous, are of free-stone, but low, and for three parts of the year covered with Snow: the windows thereof glazed and large, of which for the said three parts of the year they only open a little quarry of Glass, and presently shut it close again; the outside of the windows having leaves of wood, to keep the heat of their Stowes from going out, or any cold from coming in. And as for travelling, the ways are for the most part unsafe and dangerous, by reason of the straight passages, dreadful precipices, and those almost continual Bridges which hang over the terrible falls and Cataracts of the River Rhene, descending with great violence from the highest Mountains: huge hills of Snow tumbling into the Valleys, with a noise as hideous as if it were a clap of thunder.

For the particulars, the Upper League lieth in the highest and most mountainous parts of the Alpes of Italy, having therein those vast Mountains of Lockmannier, and Der Vogel; out of which the two streams of the Rhene have their first Original. By the French it is called Liga Grise, or the Gray League, (the word Gris, or Grise, in that Language, being Gray in ours) in the same sense as the Dutch call it Graunpuntner, that is, Confœderati cani, which we may render properly the Confederate Grisle-pates: either because the Mountains are continually covered with a perriwig of hoary Isicles, or from the heads of the people, Gray before their time. It consisteth of nineteen Resorts or Commonalties, according to the number of their Vales and Villages; of which four only speak the Dutch, all the rest a corrupt Italian: and was the first which did confederate with the Switzers, from whence the name of Grisons came unto the rest, who after joyned with them in the same confederacy. It hath no City nor Town of note. The principal of those that be, are 1. Ilanter, the place ſometimes of the General Diets for theſe Leagues. 2. Diſentis, where is a very rich Monaſtery. 3. Saint Bernardino, ſituate at the foot of the Mountain Vogel. 4. Maſox, ſometimes an Earldom, giving name to the Valley Maſoxer-tal. 5. Galouckter, whence the Vale ſo named, inhabited by none but Basket-makers. 6. Ruffla, ſituate on the River Mueſa, near Belinzano, on the skirts of Italy.

2. The ſecond League, is Liga Cadi Dio, or the League of the houſe of God, ſo called becauſe it was the proper Patrimony of the Biſhop and Church of Chur: and may be called the middle League, as being ſituate between the upper League on the Weſt, and the lower League upon the Eaſt. It is the greateſt of the three, containing twenty one Reſorts or Commonalties: of which nine lie on this ſide the tops of the Mountains towards Germany, the reſt towards Italy: and yet two only ſpeak the Dutch, the others a corrupt Italian. The places of moſt note are, 1. Tintzen, the Tinnetio of Antoninus, ſeated amongſt high and inacceſſible Mountains, betwixt Chur and the Valley of Bergel. 2. Mur, (called Murus by the ſame Antoninus) in the Valley of Bergel; a Valley extending from the head of the River Maira, towards Chiavenna, one of the Italian Præfectures. 3. Stalla, called Bevio by the Italians, becauſe the way doth in that place divide it ſelf. 4. Jacomo (in the vally of Compoltſchin) called Travaſede by Antoninus. 5. Sinnada, in the vally of Engadin. And 6. Chur, by ſome Coira, but more truly Curia, ſo called from the long ſtay that Conſtantine the Great made here with his Court and Army, in a War intended againſt the Germans; built afterwards by ſome part of his Forces which continued here, Anno 357, about half a Dutch mile from the meeting of the two ſtreams of the Rhene, in form triangular, the buildings indifferent in themſelves, but not uniform with one another. High on a Hill; in one corner of which ſtandeth the Cloſe, and therein the Cathedral Church, a ſtately Edifice, but more in accompt of the Natives who have ſeen no fairer, than it is with ſtrangers: and near the Church the Biſhop's Palace, and the houſes of the Canons, all well built, and handſomly adorned. The Biſhop of this City, and of all the Country of theſe Leagues (for they recieved their Biſhop and the Faith together, Anno 489) acknowledgeth the Archbiſhop of Mentz for their Metropolitan; is reckoned for a Prince of the Empire, and the rightful Lord both of this City and the whole League: but on the introduction of the Reformed Religion, which they had from the Switzers and Genevians, the Citizens withdrew themſelves from their obedience to the Biſhop, and govern the City in the manner of a Free State. So far conformable to him, for their own preſervation, that as the Biſhop and his Canons, with the reſt of this League, upon occaſion of the wrongs done them by the Houſe of Auſtria, Lords of the neighbouring Tirol; joyned in confederacy with the ſeven firſt Cantons of the Switzers (which was in the year 1498.) So did the Citizens of Chur, after they had withdrawn themſelves from the command of their Biſhops, concur with them at laſt in that mutual League.

3. The third League of theſe Griſons, is the Lower League, called alſo Liga Ditture, or the League of the ten Juriſdictions; ſituate cloſe upon Tirol, in the North-eaſt part of the whole Country. Of all the ten, two only, which are thoſe of Malans and Meienfield, obey the joynt commands of the three Leagues of the Griſons: the other eight being ſubject to the Arch-Duke of Auſtria under whom they are ſuffered to enjoy their ancient priviledges, for fear of uniting with the Switzers; which hitherto they have not done. Only they did unite together in one common League, Anno 1436, conditioning their mutual defence againſt all Enemies, preſervation of their peace, and maintenance of their priviledges; reſerving notwithſtanding their obedience to their natural Lords. In which reſpect, and by reaſon of the intereſs and ſociety which they have with the reſt of the Griſons, they are in friendſhip with the Swiſſe, but in no confederacy. City or Walled-Town they have none. The chief of thoſe they have, are 1. Caſtels, the ſeat of the Governour for the Arch-Duke of Auſtria: 2. Malans, and 3. Meienfield, both bordering upon the Rhene. 4. Tanaan, giving name to the firſt and greateſt of the ten juriſdictions, the chief Town of this League, in which are held the General Diets for the ſame; and where are kept Monuments and Records which concern their Priviledges. In this League is the Mountain called Rhetico mons, by Pomponius Mela, but now Prettigower-berg, becauſe it is at the end of the vally which the Dutch call Prettigow.

4. As for the Italian Præfectures they are eight in number, and were given unto the Griſons by Maximilian Sforze, Duke of Millain, Anno 1513, at ſuch time as he gave the like preſent to the Cantons of Switzerland. Of theſe the firſt is called Plurs, ſo called from the chief Town of the ſame name, in Latin Plura, once ſeated in a Plain at the foot of the Alpes, near the River Maira, the chief of ſundry Villages lying in the ſame bottom; now nothing but a deep and bottomleſs Gulf. For on the 26 of Auguſt 1617, an huge Rock falling from the top of the Mountains, overwhelmed the Town, killed in the twinckling of an eye 1500 people, and left no ſign or ruin of a Town there ſtanding; but in the place thereof a great Lake of ſome two miles length. 2. Chiarama, ſituate in a pleaſant valley ſo called, near the River Maira, and ten Italian miles from the Lake of Como. Antoninus calleth it Clavenna, and the Dutch Clevener-tal, or the valley of Cleven, more near unto the ancient name. 3. The Valtoline, Vallis Tolina in the Latin, a pleaſant valley, extending threeſcore miles in length, from the head of the River Aada, unto the fall thereof in the Lake of Como: the Wines thereof are much commended, and frequently tranſported on this ſide the Alpes. It is divided into ſix Præfectures, according to the names of the principal Towns. The chief whereof, are 1. Bormio, ſeated near the head of the River Aada. 2. Teio, the chief Fortreſs of the whole valley. 3. Sondrio, the chief Town, and the Seat of the Governour, or Lieutenant General of the whole Country. This Valley lying opportunely for the paſſage of the King of Spain's Forces, out of Millain into Germany, by the practices and treaſons of Rodolphus Planta one of the Natives of it, and of the Romiſh Religion; was delivered to the Duke of Feria, being then Governour of Millain, Anno 1622, the whole Country brought under the obedience of that King, Chur it ſelf forced and taken by them, and the Religion of Rome ſetled in all parts thereof. But two years after, by the joynt Forces of the French, Venetians, and Savoyards, the whole Vally was recovered from the Spaniards, and after a long treaty between France and Spain, the Griſons re-eſtated in their juſt poſſeſſions, Anno 1630, ſave that the Spaniard ſtill holds the Fort of Fuentes, for the ſafer paſſage of his Forces, if occaſion be.

Such is the ſtate of the three Leagues conſidered ſeverally and apart from one another. In reference to the whole, they make up one Government, or Commonwealth; for ordering whereof they hold a General Diet, once in every year, conſiſting of threeſcore and three Commiſſioners: that is to ſay, 28 from the Upper League, 23 from the League of the Houſe of God, and 14 from the League of the ten Juriſdictions.

Theſe

these have authority to determine of Appeals from the common Prefectures, to conclude of Peace and War, Confederacies, Ambassies, and Laws, which concern the publick: yet so, that in a point of Judicature, it is lawful to appeal unto the Commonalties of every League, who have authority if need be, to reverse the sentence; the causes being severally proposed, and passed by the major part of voices. The Government of each League, popular, as amongst the Switzers.

There are in these Alpine Provinces.

OF FRANCE.

HAving thus crossed the Alpes, we may indifferently dispose our selves for France or Germany. But, we will follow the Course and Fortunes of the Roman Empire, which first passed into France, before it medled with the Germans; and had brought Spain & Britain under the Form of Roman Provinces, when Germany was looked on at a greater distance.

FRANCE then, according to the present dimensions of it, is bounded on the East, with a branch of the Alpes, which divide Dauphine from Piemont; as also, with the Countries of Savoy, Switzerland, and some parts of Germany, and the Netherlands; on the West, with the Aquitan Ocean, and a Branch of the Pyrenean Mountains, which divide it from Spain; on the North, with the English Ocean, and some parts of Belgium; and on the South, with the rest of the Pyrenean Mountains, and the Mediterranean.

The Figure of it, is almost Square, each side of the Quadrature being reckoned 6000 miles in length. But, they that go more exactly to work upon it, make the length hereof to be 660 Italian miles; the breadth 570 only; the whole Circumference to amount to 2040. Seated in the Northern Temperate Zone, between the middle Parallel of the Fifth Clime, where the longest day is 15 hours; and the middle Parallel of the Eighth Clime, where the longest day is 16 hours and an half.

It hath this present Name of France, from the Franci, or Franks, a people of Germany, who seised upon those parts of it which lay neerest to the Rhene, in the time of Valentinian the third; and, having afterwards subdued Paris, and made it the Seat-Royal of their growing Empire, they caused the Country thereabouts, to be called France. Which Name, as they enlarged their borders, they imposed on, or communicated rather, to the rest of this Country, and to those parts of Germany also, which were conquered by them. At which time, for distinction sake, they called the East parts of their whole Empire, by the name of Osten-reich, or Austrasia, lying now wholly out of France, in Germany, and that part of Belgium, which is subject to the King of Spain: and for the West parts thereof, they have the name of Westen-riech, or Westrasia, (in the barbarous Latin of that Age) West France, or Francia Occidentalis; to which, the name of France was at last appropriated, according to the limits before laid down.

Anciently, it was called Gallia, and the people, Galli; and by that name occurrs, most commonly, in the Writers of the Roman story: and Gallia Transalpina, because situate on the further side of the Alpes, from Italy, to difference it from the Country of those Gauls, which being planted in those parts which we now call Lombardy, was called Cisalpina. Sometimes it was called Galatia also, and by that name known amongst the Greeks: by Ptolomy called Celto-Galatia, or the Galatia of the Celtæ, a potent Nation of old Gaul; to distinguish it from Galatia one of the Provinces of Asia minor, denominated from the Galatians, or Gauls, of this Country. Whence it became so named, is not yet determined. Some think it was called Gallia, from the Greek word Γάλα (Gala) signifying Milk, quia Lacteos, i. e. albos homines producebat, for the milky and white complexion of the people, compared to the Greeks and Romans, who first imposed it. Others, and amongst them, Diodorus Siculus, derive the name from Galata, a son of Hercules; to which that of Galatia comes as near as may be. That Hercules was sometimes in this Country, is affirmed also by Ammianus Marcellinus; who further adds, That after he had suppressed those Tyrants which oppressed the people, he begat many Children on the principal Women; Et eas partes quibus imperitabant, nominibus suis appellasse, Lib. XL, Who gave their own names to those parts over which they ruled. But, in another place, acknowledging, That the Græcians call this people, Galatæ, (ita enim Gallos sermo Græcus appellat) he telleth us from Timogenes an ancient Author, one very diligent in the search of the Gallick Antiquities, that the Aborigines, or first Inhabitants hereof, called themselves Celtæ, by the name of one of their Kings, whom they highly honoured; Et matris ejus vocabulo Galatas, and Galatæ, from the name of his Mother Galata; who, properly enough, might be a daughter of Hercules, mistook by Diodorus, for one of his sons.

Of the Original of this people, more anon. In the mean time, we may take so much notice of the ancient Gaul as to affirm him (out of Cæsar, and other Authors) to be quik-witted, of a sudden and nimble apprehension; but withal, very rash and hair-brain'd, (ut sunt subita Gallorum ingenia, is a note set upon them by the Pen of Cæsar:) so full of Law-suits and Contentions, that their Lawyers near wanted work. Gallia Causidicos, &c. as that Poet hath it; of vehement affections, and precipitate in all their actions, as well Military, as Civil: falling on like a Clap of Thunder, and presently going off in Smoak. Primus impetus major quàm virorum, secundus minor quàm fœminarum, was a part also of their Character, in the time of Florus the Historian. And though the present French be generally of another Original; yet, there is so much of the old Gaul still left among them, either by the impression of the Heavenly Bodies, or by Inter-marriages with the Gauls, as they overcame them; that all the qualities are still predominant minant in the French; not differing from the ancient Gaul, but in Name and Habit. For further evidence whereof, take with you a Comparison, homely I must confess, but to the life expressing the nature of the French, compared with the Dutch and Spanish, in matters of War. The French is said to be like a Flea, quickly skipping into a Country, and soon leaping out of it; as was the Expedition of Charles the Eight, into Italy. The Dutch is said to be like a Lowse, slowly mastering a place, and as slowly (yet at last) driven out of their hold; as was their taking and losing of Ostend and Gulick. The Spaniard is said to be like a Crab, or Pediculus inguinalis, which being once crept into a place, is so rooted there, that nothing but the extremity of Violence, can fetch him out again. In which, I think I need not instance; it being generally observed, that the Spaniards will endure all possible hardship, before they will part with any thing that they are possessed of. It is used also for a By-word, That the Italian is wise before-hand, the Dutch in the time of action, and the French after it is done: a Wisdom much like that of the ancient Gauls. Nor are they less Litigious than the old Gauls were: insomuch as it is thought, that there are more Law-suits tryed among them in seven years, than have been in England from the Conquest, till the time of King James. They are great Scoffers, yea even in matters of Religion, as appeareth by the story of a Gentleman lying sick on his death-bed, who, when the Priest had perswaded him, that the Sacrament of the Altar was the very Body and Blood of CHRIST, refused to eat thereof, because it was Friday. Nor can I forget another in the same extremity; who seeing the Host (for so they call the Consecrated Elements) brought unto him by a Lubberly Priest, said, That CHRIST came to him, as he entred into Jerusalem, riding upon an Ass. As for the Women, they are said to be witty, but apish, wanton, and incontinent; where a man at his first entrance, may find acquaintance; and at his first acquaintance, may find an entrance. So Dallington, in his View of France, describeth them. But I have since heard this Censure condemned of some Uncharitableness, and the French Gentlewomen highly magnified for all those Graces which may beautifie and adorn that Sex. And it is possible enough, that it may be so in some particulars, though it be more than any man would guess at, that cometh amongst them. For, generally, at the first sight you shall have them as familiar with you, as if they had known you from your Cradle; and are so full of Chat and Tattle, even with those they know not, as if they were resolved sooner to want Bread, than Words; and never to be silent, but in the Grave.

As to the persons of this People, they are commonly of a middle stature, and for the most part, of a sleight making; their Complexion being generally hot and moist; which makes them very subject to the heats of lust, and easily inclinable unto those Diseases which are concomitants thereof. Their Constitution somewhat tender, if not dilicate; which rendereth them impatient of Toil and Labour; and is, in part, the cause of those ill successes which have happned to them in the Wars; in which they have lost as much for want of constancy and perseverance in their Enterprizes, as they have gained by their Courage in the undertaking. And for the Women, they are, for the most part, very personable, of straight bodies, slender wasts, and a fit symmetry of proportion in all the rest; their hands white, long, and slender, and easily discernable to be so; for, either they wear no Gloves at all, or else so short, as if they were cut off at the hand-wrist. To these, the Complexion of their Faces, and the Colour of their Hair, too much enclining to the black, holds no true Decorum. 'Tis true, the Poets commend Leda for her black hair, and not unworthily; Leda fuit nigris, conspicienda comis, as it is in Ovid. But this was specially, because it set off, with the greater lustre, the amiable sweetness of her Complection; for in that case, the Hair doth set forth the Face, as Shadows commonly do a Picture; and the Face so becometh the Hair, as a Field Argent doth a Sable bearing; which kind of Coat, our Critical Heralds call the most fair. But when a Black Hair meets with a Brown or Swarthy complexion, it falls short of that attractiveness of Beauty, which Ovid, being so great a Crasis-Master in the Art of Love, did commend in Leda.

The chief Exercises they use, are, 1. Tennis; every Village having a Tennis-Court, Orleans 60, Paris many hundreds. 2. Dancing; a sport to which they are so generally affected, that were it not so much inveighed against by their straight-laced Ministers, it is thought that many more of the French Catholicks had been of the Reformed Religion. For, so extreamly are they bent upon this disport, that neither Age, nor Sickness, no nor Poverty it self, can make them keep their heels still when they hear the Musick. Such as can hardly walk abroad without their Crutches or go as if they were troubled all day with a Sciatica, and perchance have their raggs hang so loose about them that one would think a swift Galliard might shake them into their nakedness, will to the Dancing-green howsoever, and be there as eager at the sport as if they had left their several infirmities and wants behind them. What makes their Ministers (and indeed, all that follow the Genevian Discipline) inveigh so bitterly against Dancing, and punish it with such severity when they find it used, I am not able to determine, nor doth it any way belong unto this Dicourse. But being it is a Recreation which this People are so given unto, and such a one as cannot be followed, but in a great deal of company, and before many witnesses and spectators of their carriage in it; I must needs think the Ministers of the French Church more nice than wise, if they chuse rather to deter men from their Congregations by so strict a Stoicism, than indulge any thing unto the jollity and natural gaiety of this People, in matters not offensive, but by accident only.

The Language of this People is very voluble and pleasant; but rather Elegant, than Copious; and therefore much troubled for want of proper words to find out Periphrases: besides that very much of it is expressed in the action; the head and shoulders move as significantly toward it, as the lips and tongue; and he that hopeth to speak it with any good grace, must have somewhat in him of the Mimick. A Language enriched with great plenty of Proverbs, and consequently, a great help to the French humour of Scoffing; and so naturally disposed for Courtship, as makes all the people complemental; the poorest Cobler in the Parish, hath his Court-cringes, and his Beaubeuiste de Cour, his Court-holy-water, (as they call it) as perfectly as the best Gentleman-Huisher in Paris. Compared with that of other Nations, the Language of the Spaniards is said to be Manly; the Italian, Courtly; and the French, Amorous. A sweet Language it is, without question, the people leaving out in their pronunciation, many of their Consonants; and thereby giving occasion to this By-word, That the French-man pronounceth not as he writes, singeth not as he pricketh, nor speaks as he thinketh. In the Original thereof, it is a compound of the old Gallick, German, and Latin Tongues; the old Gallick being questionless the same with the Welsh or British, as appeareth clearly by these Reasons. 1. The Latin words are known to have been received from the Romans; and the German words, at the coming in of the Franks and Burgundians; but the Welch words which they have, we can give no reason, but that they are the remainder of their ancient Language; of which Welch words, which ſtill continue in that Language, Cambden, in his Britannia, reckoneth not a few. 2. It is ſaid by Tacitus, that the Britans were the Deſcendents of the Gauls; and this he proveth, as by other Arguments, ſo from the identity or near reſemblance of the Language which both Nations ſpeak. Utriuſque ſermo haud multum diverſus, as his own words are. And 3. it is ſaid by Cæſar, That the Gauls uſed to paſs into Britan, to be inſtructed in the Rites and Learning of the Druids; which ſhoweth that both People ſpake but one common Tongue; there being, in thoſe times, no one Learned Language which other Nations ſtudied, beſides their own.

The ſoyl is extraordinary fruitful, and hath three Load-ſtones to draw riches out of other Countries, Corn, Wine, and Salt; in exchange for which, there is yearly brought into France 1200000*li.* Sterling, the Cuſtom of Salt, only to the King, being eſtimated at 700000 Crowns per annum. And indeed, the benefit ariſing on this one Commodity, is almoſt incredible; it being conſtituted by the King's Edict, (which is all in all) That no man ſhall have any Salt for Domeſtick uſes, (except by ſpecial Priviledg, and that dearly paid for) but what he muſt buy of the King's Officers, and that upon ſuch prices too, as they pleaſe to ſell it. Nor can it but be very well ſtored with Fiſh: for, beſides the benefit of the Seas, their Lakes and Ponds belonging to the Clergy only, are ſaid to be 135000. Their other Merchandizes are, Beeves, Hogs, Nuts, Wood, Skins, vaſt quantities of all ſorts of Linen. And, to ſay truth, there are not many Countries in the Chriſtian World, to which Nature hath been ſo prodigal of her choiceſt bleſſings, as ſhe hath to this; the Fields thereof, being large and open, and thoſe ſo intermingled with Corn and Vines, and every hedg-row ſo beſet with choice of Fruits, that never any covetous or curious Eye, had a fairer object. And yet ſo miſerable is the condition of the common Peaſant; partly by reaſon of the intolerable Taxes laid upon him by the King; and partly, by thoſe great, but uncertain Rents, which are ſet upon him by his Landlord, (for, the poor husband-man is Tenant only at the will of his Lord) that there is many one amongſt them, who farmeth yearly thirty or forty Acres of Wheat and Vines, that never drinks Wine, nor eats good Bread, from one end of the year unto the other.

The Chriſtian Faith was planted firſt amongſt the Gauls, by ſome of St. Peter's Diſciples, ſent hither by him at his firſt coming to Rome: Xyſtus, Fronto, and Julianus, the firſt Biſhops of Rhemes, Perigort, and Mants, (Cenomanenſium, in the Latin) being ſaid to be of his ordaining, in the Martyrologies. The like may be affirmed (but on ſurer grounds) of Trophimus, the firſt Biſhop of Arles. For, on a Controverſie betwixt the Arch-biſhops of Vienna and Arles, for the dignity of Metropolitan, in the time of Pope Leo the firſt, it was thus pleaded in behalf of the Biſhop of Arles, Quod prima inter Gallias, &c. That Arles, of all the Cities of Gaul, did firſt obtain the happineſs of having Trophimus ordained Biſhop thereof, by the hands of St. Peter. Nor is St. Paul to be denied the honour of ſending ſome of his Diſciples thither alſo to preach the Goſpel; Creſcens ſent by him, as he telleth us, 2 Tim. 4. into Galatia, being the firſt Biſhop of Vienna, ſpoken of before; as, not the Martyrologies only, but Ado Viennenſis, an ancient Writer of that Church, doth expreſly ſay. And that it was into this Country that he ſent that Creſcens at that time, and not unto Galatia in Aſia minor, the teſtimonies of Epiphanius and Theodoret, which affirm the ſame, and that which hath been ſaid before of this name of Galatia, may confirm ſufficiently. But Chriſtianity being deſtroyed by the French at the firſt coming hither, was again planted by the induſtry of St. Remigius, the firſt Biſhop of Rhemes, Clovis, or Clodivæus the fifth, King of the French, giving way unto it for his Wives ſake, who was zealous in it; and after taking unto himſelf that holy Calling, on a great victory which he won againſt the Almains; by whom, being over-laid in the day of Battel, he made his prayers to CHRIST, whom his Wife Clotilda worſhipped; vowing to be of that Religion, if he got the Victory: Which Vow he had no ſooner made, (as the Story telleth us) but Alemannos invaſit timor, a ſudden fear fell upon the Almains, and the French were Conquerors.

At this time they are divided in Religion, as in other places; ſome following the Doctrine of the Church of Rome; and others, that of thoſe Reformed Churches which adhere to Calvin. But this diviſion is more ancient than Calvin's days; the ſame opinions (as they relate unto the Errors in the Romiſh Church) being maintained formerly by the Albigenſes, the Waldenſes, or Pauperes de Lugduno, (the Vaudoys, as the French Writers call them) of whom we ſhall ſpeak more, when we come to Lyons. Suffice it in this place to note, That the Doctrine of the Reformed Churches was not new in France, when Zuinglius firſt preached againſt the ſuperſtitions of the Maſs, and the worſhip of Images; and Calvin travelled in advancing the Reformation, though much ſuppreſſed as to the outward profeſſion of it. But, being revived by their endeavours, it ſprung out again, and ſpread it ſelf ſo ſpeedily in this Kingdom, that there were reckoned in the year 1560, above 1240 Churches of them; which cannot, in ſuch a long time, but be wonderfully augmented, though ſcarce any of them have ſcaped ſome Maſſacre or other. Of theſe Maſſacres, two are moſt memorable, viz. that of Merindol and Chabriers, as being the firſt; and the Maſſacre of Paris, as being the greateſt. That of Merindol hapned in the year 1545; the Inſtrument of it, being Minier, the Preſident of the Council of Aix: for, having condemned this poor people of Hereſie, he muſtred a ſmall Army, and ſet fire on the Villages. They of Merindol, ſeeing the flame, with their Wives and Children fled into the Wood; but were there butchered, or ſent to the Gallies. One Boy they took, placed him againſt a Tree, and ſhot him with Calievers; 25 which had hid themſelves in a Cave, were in part ſtifled, in part burned. In Chabriers, they ſo inhumanly dealt with the young Wives and Maids, that moſt of them dyed immediatly after. The Men and Women were put to the Sword; the Children were re-baptized; 800 Men were murdered in a Cave, and 40 Women, were put together in an old Barn, and burned. Yea, ſuch was the Cruelty of theſe Souldiers to theſe poor Women, that when ſome of them had clambred to the top of the Houſe, with an intent to leap down, the Souldiers beat them back again with their Pikes. The Maſſacre of Paris was more cunningly plotted. A Peace was made with the Proteſtants; for the aſſurance wherof, a Marriage was ſolemnized between Henry of Navarre, chief of the Proteſtant Party, and the Lady Marguerite the King's Siſter. At this Wedding, there aſſembled the Prince of Conde, the Admiral Coligni, and divers others of chief note; but there was not ſo much Wine drank, as Blood ſhed at it. At midnight the Watch-Bell rung, the King of Navarre, and the Prince of Conde are taken priſoners, the Admiral murdered in his bed, and 30000, at the leaſt, of the the greateſt and moſt potent men of the Religion, ſent by the way of the Red Sea, to find the neareſt paſſage to the Land of Canaan, Anno 1572. Yet notwithſtanding theſe Maſſacres, and the long and frequent Wars which were made againſt them by their Kings, they grew ſo numerous, and got unto ſo great a Power; that partly by Capitulations with the French Kings, at the end of every Civil War; but principally, by the connivence of King Henry the fourth, who was ſometimes the Head of their party, they had gotten above Three hundred Walled Towns and Garriſons, and were abſolute Maſters, in effect, of all thoſe Provinces which lye along the Aquitain ſhore, and the Pyrenees, from the Mediteranian Sea, to the River of Loyre. But, being grown too inſolent by reaſon of ſo great a Strength, and ſtanding upon terms with the King, as a Free Eſtate, (the Commonwealth of Rochel, as King Henry the fourth was uſed to call it) they drew upon themſelves the Jealouſie and Fury of King Lewis the thirteenth. Who ſeeing that he could not otherwiſe diſſolve the Knot of their Combination, than by the Sword, drew it out at laſt; and was ſo fortunate in the ſucceſs of his Undertakings, that in Two years, (viz. Anno 1621, 1622) he ſtripped them of all their Walled Towns, except Montalbon and Rochel only; and thoſe two he reduced not long after, by the power of his Arms, leaving them nothing to rely on for their future ſecurity, but the Grace and Clemency of their King, promerited by their Obedience and Integrity. And it hath ſped ſo well with them ſince that time, that they never had the exerciſe of their Religion with ſo much freedom, as they have hitherto enjoyed ſince the reducing of their Forts and Garriſons to the Kings obedience.

The other Party in Religion, having the countenance of the State, and the preſcription and poſſeſſion of ſo many years to confirm the ſame, is in as proſperous a condition both for Power and Patrimony, as any that acknowledgeth the Authority of the Popes of Rome. In point of Patrimony, the Author of the Cabinet computes the Tythes and Temporal Revenues of the Clergy, beſides Proviſions of all ſorts, to 80 Millions of Crowns: but this accompt is diſallowed by all knowing men. Bodin reporteth from the mouth of Monſieur Alemant, one of the Preſidents of Accompts in Paris, that they amount to 12 Millions, and 300000 of their Livres, which is 1200000 l. of our Engliſh money: and he himſelf conceiveth, that they poſſeſs ſeven parts of twelve, of the whole Revenues of that Kingdom. The Book, entituled Comment d'Eſtat, gives a lower eſtimate; and reckoning that there are in France 200 millions of Arpens (which is a meaſure ſomewhat bigger than our Acre) aſſigneth 47 millions, which is near a fourth part of the whole, to the Gallican Clergy. And then it is reſolved by all that the Baiſemain, (as they call it) which conſiſts of Offerings, Churchings, Burials, Dirigies, and ſuch like Caſualties, amounteth to as much per annum, as their ſtanding Rents. Upon which ground Sir Edwin Sandys computeth their Revenue at ſix millions yearly. And to ſay truth, there needs a very great Revenue to maintain their numbers; there being reckoned in this Kingdom, 13 Arch-biſhops, 104 Biſhops, 1450 Abbots, 540 Arch-Priories, 12320 Priories, 567 Nunneries, 700 Convents of Friers, 259 Commanderies of Malta: beſides the Colledges of the Jeſuites, which being of a late foundation, are not here accompted. And for the Pariſh-Prieſts, they are reckoned at 130000 of all ſorts, taking in Deacons, Sub-deacons, and all thoſe of Inferior Orders, which have ſome Miniſtry in their Churches, the number of which was reckoned, in the time of King Lewis the 11*th*, to be little leſs than 100000. But then 'tis like, that Chanteries and Free Chappels went in that accompt; or elſe the Hugenots in the Wars have deſtroyed more Churches than they are like to build again in haſte; there being found in France on a juſt Accompt, no more than 27400 Pariſh-Churches, beſides Oratories and Chappels of Eaſe appertaining to them. In which there are ſuppoſed to live 15 millions of people, whereof the Clergy, and the Miniſters depending on them, do make up 3 millions, which is a fifth part of the whole. And for their Power, the Gallican Clergy ſtands more ſtoutly to their natural Rights againſt the Uſurpations and Encroachments of the See of Rome, than any other that lives under the Pope's Authority; which they acknowledg ſo far only, as conſiſtent with their own Priviledges, and the Rights of their Soveraign. For neither did they in long time ſubmit to the Decrees of the Council of Trent; nor have they yet admitted of the Inquiſition; nor yield ſuch ſtore of Griſt to the Pope's Mill, as probably might redound to him from ſo rich a Clergy. And for his Temporal Power over Kings and Princes, it is a Doctrine ſo averſe from the Poſitions and Principles of the Gallican Church, that in the year 1610, the Divines of Paris publiſhed a Declaration, in which it was affirmed, that the Doctrine of the Popes Supremacy was an erroneous Doctrine, and the ground of that Helliſh Poſition, of Depoſing and Killing Kings. And this, indeed, hath conſtantly been the Doctrine of the Gallican Church, ſince the time of Gerſon, maintaining the Authority of a Council, above that of the Pope.

But to proceed; The men moſt eminent for Learning of either ſide, have been, (beſides thoſe mentioned in the Alpine Provinces) Peter du Moulin, highly commended for his Eloquence, by the Pen of Balſac: Fr. Junius, a moderate and grave Divine; Chamier the Controverſer, and Philip de Morney, Lord of Pleſſis. Of the other Party, Claudius Eſpencæus, a Sorbon Doctor, the famous Cardinal of Peron; Genebrard the Hiſtorian, Petavius a learned Jeſuit, &c. In the middle times, St. Bernard, Abbot of Clarevalle; Pet. Lombard, Biſhop of Paris, John Gerſon, Chancellor of that Univerſity. More anciently, Proſper of Aquitain, Caſſianus the Hermit, Irenæus the renowned Biſhop of Lyons, (though not here a Native.) And as to men of other Studies, Auſonius the Poet Hotoman and Gotfredus, the Civilians; Duarenus the Canoniſt, Barn. Briſſonius the great Antiquary, Iſaac Caſaubon that renowned Philologer, Budæus that great Maſter of the Greek Language, Thuanus the Hiſtorian, Laurentius the Anatomiſt, &c. And as for Military men, it hath been famous for the valour of Clovis, the firſt Chriſtian King of the French; Charles Martel, that ſtout Champion of the Church againſt the Saracens; and Charles the Great, the Fourth of the Weſtern Empire. In the middle times for Godfery of Bouillon, one of the Nine Worthies, (as they call them) the ſon of Euſtace, Earl of Boulogn in Picardy: and in theſe latter days, for King Henry the fourth; Francis and Henry, Dukes of Guiſe; Charles Duke of Bayenne, Charles Duke of Biron, &c.

The Laws of this Kingdom are either Temporary, and alterable at pleaſure; or Fundamental, which neither King nor Parliament (as they ſay) can alter. Of this laſt ſort, the principal are, the Salique Law, and the Law of Apennages. By that of the Apennage, the younger Sons of the King are not to have partage in the Kingdom with their Elder Brother. Which Law was made by Charles the Great, before whoſe time we find the children of the Kings eſtated in their ſeveral Thrones, and the Realm parcelled out among them into many Kingdoms. But by this Law, they are to be entituled to ſome Dutchy or County, (though they are content ſometimes with Annual penſions) with all the Rights Rights and Profits thereunto belonging; all matters of Regality (as Levying Taxes, Coynage, and the like) excepted only; which, upon the failing of the Masculine line, do return again unto the Crown. The name thereof derived from Albamago, a German word, signifying a Portion.

But the main Law they stand on, is the Salique Law, by which the Crown of France may not descend unto the Females or fall from the Lance to the Distaff, as their saying is. Which Law, one undertaking to make good out of Holy Writ, urged that Text of St. Matthew, where it is said, Mark the Lilies, (which are the Arms of France,) and see how they neither labour nor spin. This Law they pretend to have been made by Pharamond the first King of the French; and that the words Si aliqua, so often used in it, gave it the name of the Salique Law. But Haillian, one of their best Writers, affirms, That it was never heard of in France, till the time of Philip the Long Anno 1315; and that it could not possibly be made by Pharamond; who though he was the first King of the French, had not one foot of Land in France: Clodion, the son of Pharamond, being the first of the French Kings which passed over the Rhene; their third King, Merovee the first that ever fixed his seat in the Modern France. Others say, it was made by Charles the Great, after the Conquest of Germany, where the incontinent lives of the Women, living about the River Sala, (in the Modern Misnia) gave both the occasion, and the name. De terra verò Salica, nulla portio hæreditatis mulieri veniat, sed ad virilem Sexum tota terræ hæreditas perveniat, are the words thereof. This Terra Salica, the Learned Selden in his Titles of Honour, Englisheth, Knights-Fee, or Land that is holden by Knights Service, as our Lawyers call it; and proveth this Interpretation, by a Record of the Parliament of Bourdeaux, cited by Bodinus; where an old Will or Testament being once produced, in which the Testator had bequeathed unto his Son all his Salique Land; it was resolved by the Court, That thereby was meant, his Land holden in Knights Service. And then the sense thereof must be, That in Lands holden of the King by Knights Service, or the like Military tenure, the Male-children should inherit only, because the Females could not perform those Services for which those Lands were given, and by which they were holden. And for this there may be good reason, though in England we deal not so unkindly with the Female Sex, but permit them after the age of 15 years, to enjoy such Lands, because they may then take such Husbands as are able to do the King those services which the Law requireth. But this interpretation (how good and genuine indeed soever it be) cannot stand with the French Glosa. For then the Crown, being held of none but God, and so not properly to be called a Fee or Feife, could not be brought within the compass of the Salique Law, because not to be counted for Salique Land. Give them therefore their own Glosa, their own Etymology and Original; and let us see by what right their Kings Daughters are excluded from their succession to the Diadem. For first, supposing that to be the Salique Land which lyeth about the River Sala, in the Modern Misnia; I would fain know how it could reach unto the King's Daughter in France, so far distant from it; or with what honesty they can lay on them the like brand of Incontinency, as was supposed to have been found in those Women of Germany? And next, supposing that the Law had been made by Pharamond, I would fain learn how it can be applyed to the Crown of France, to which Pharamond had then no title, nor so much as one foot of Land on that side of the Rhene. And finally, supposing that the Law was made in such general terms, as to extend to all the Countries, which the French in time to come should conquer, and consequently unto France when once conquered by them: I would then ask, Whether it did extend to the Crown alone, or to all subordinate Estates which were holden of it? If unto all Estates holden of that Crown, I would fain know with what pretence they could give sentence in behalf of Charles of Blois, against John de Montfort, in the succession to the Dukedom of Bretagne: Charles of Blois claiming by his Mother, the Neece of Arthur the second, by his second son Guy: where as John de Montfort was the third son (and the next Heir-male) of the said Duke Arthur. If only to the Crown of France, it would be known by what right they detain that Dukedom from the true Heirs of Anne the Dutchess; whose Daughter and Heir, the Lady Claudè, being married unto Francis the first, had issue, Henry the second, and other Children. Which Henry, besides Francis the second, Charles the ninth, Henry the third, and Francis Duke of Anjou, all dying without issue, had a Daughter named Isabel, or Elizabeth, married to Philip the second, King of Spain, by whom she was made the Mother of Isabella, the late Arch-Dutchess, and of Katharine, the Wife of Charles Emanuel, the late Duke of Savoy. Not to say any thing of the pretensions of the House of Lorrein, descending from the Lady Claudè, the second daughter of King Henry the second, and sister of Isabel, or Elizabeth, Queen of Spain. Nor do we find, that the French so stand upon this Law, as not to think, that a Succession by and from the Females, is, in some cases, their best Title. For thus we read, That Pepin having thrust his Master Childerick into a Monastery, to make good his Title to the Crown, (or some colour for it) derived his Pedigree from Plythilda, one of the Daughters of Clotaire the first, married to Anspert the Grandfather of that Arnulphus, who was the first Mayre of the Palace of Pepin's Family. As also, how Hugh Capet, putting aside Charles of Lorrein, the right Heir of this Pepin, to make his lawless Action the more seemingly lawful, drew his descent from some of the Heirs General of Charles the Great; his Mother Adeltheid, being the Daughter of the Emperor Henry the first, surnamed the Fowler; who was the son of Otho Duke of Saxony, by Luitgardis, the daughter of the Emperor Arnulph, the last Emperor of the Romans (or Germans) of the House of Charles. And it is said of Lewis the ninth so renowned for sanctity amongst them, That he never enjoyed the Crown with a quiet Conscience, till it was proved unto him, That by his Grandmother, the Lady Isabel of Hainalt, he was descended from Hermingrade the Daughter of Charles of Lorrein. Add here, that this supposed Salique Law, not only crosseth the received Laws of all Nations else, which admit of Women to the succession in their Kingdoms, where the Crown descends in a succession; and have a great respect both unto their Persons and Posterities in such Kingdoms also where the Kings are said to be Elective, as in Poland, Hungaria, and Bohemia: but, that even France it self hath submitted to the Imperious Command of two Women of the Medices; and at the present, to the Government of a Spanish Princess. So that it is evident, that this Law, by whomsoever made, and how far soever it extended, is of no such force, but that the Labels of it may be easily cut in pieces by an English Sword well whetted, if there were no other bar to the Title of England, than the Authority and Antiquity of the Salique Law.

But for my part (if it be lawful for me to dispute this point) I am not satisfied in the right of the English Title; supposing the Salique Law to be of no such force as the French pretended, and measuring the succession in the Crown of France, to be according to ſucceſſions in the Realm of England, on which King Edward the 3. ſeemed to ground his claim. For if there were no Salique Law to exclude ſucceſſion by the Females, as the Engliſh did pretend there was not: yet could not Edward coming from a Siſter of the three laſt Kings, which reigned ſucceſſively before Philip of Valois, againſt whom he claimed, be ſerved in courſe, before the Daughters of thoſe Kings (or the Males at leaſt deſcending of them) had had their turns in the ſucceſſion of that Kingdom. Of the three Brethren, two left iſſue, viz. Lewis, and Philip. Lewis ſirnamed Hutin, Son of Philip the fair, and Joan Queen of Navarre, had a Daughter named Joan, married to Philip Earl of Eureux, who was King of Navarre in right of his Wife; from which marriage iſſued all the ſucceeding Kings of that Realm, the rights whereof are now in the houſe of Burbon. Philip, the ſecond Brother, ſirnamed the Long, by Joan the daughter of Otbelin Earl of Burgundy, had a daughter named Marguerite, married to Lewis Earl of Flanders; from whom deſcended thoſe great Princes of the race of Burgundy, the rights whereof are now in the houſe of Spain. If then there were no Salick Law to exclude the Women and their Sons, Charles K. of Navarre the ſon of Q. Joan and of Philip de Eureux, deſcended from Lewis Hutin the elder brother; & Lewis de Malarine Earl of Flanders and Burgundy, the ſon of Lewis E. of Flanders, and of Marguerite the daughter of Philip the Long, the ſecond brother, muſt have precedency of title before King Edward the third of England, deſcended from a Siſter of the ſaid two Kings, their iſſue ſeverally and reſpectively, before any claiming or deſcending from the ſaid K. Edward. So that K. Edward the third had ſome other Claim than what is commonly alledged for him in our Engliſh Hiſtories; or elſe he had no claim to that Crown at all: and I conceive, ſo wiſe a King, would not have ventured on a buſineſs of ſo great conſequence, without ſome colourable title; though what this title was is not declared for ought I know, by any Writers of our Nation. I believe therefore, that he went upon ſome other grounds, than that of ordinary ſucceſſion by the Law of England, and claimed that Crown, as the eldeſt heir male and neareſt Kinſman to the laſt King. For being Siſters Son to the King deceaſed, he was a degree nearer to him than either the King of Navar, or the Earl of Flanders, who were the Grand-children of his Brethren: and having priority of either in reſpect of age, had a fair title before either to the Crown of that Kingdom. And on theſe grounds King Edward might the rather go, becauſe he found it a ruled caſe, in the diſpute about the ſucceſſion in the Kingdom of Scotland. For though King Edward the firſt meaſuring the order of ſucceſſion by the Laws of England, and perhaps willing to adjudge the Crown to one who ſhould hold it of him; gave ſentence in behalf of John Baliol, the Grandchild of the eldeſt daughter of the Earl of Huntingdon: yet was this ſentence diſavowed and proteſted againſt by the other Competitors. Rob. Bruce ſon of the 2d. Daughter of the ſaid Earl of Huntingdon, as a degree nearer to the laſt King, though deſcended from the younger Siſter, who not only thought himſelf wronged in it, but had the whole Scottiſh Nation for him to aſſert his right: by whoſe unanimous conſent his ſon was called to the Government of the Realm of Scotland, during the life of Baliol and his Patron both. Proximity in blood to the King deceaſed, was meaſured by nearneſs of degrees, not deſcent of birth, and on this Plea, though different from the Laws of England, as Bruce had formerly poſſeſſed himſelf of the Crown of Scotland; ſo on the ſame, though different from the Laws of Caſtile, did Philip the ſecond ground his claim to the Crown of Portugal. For being eldeſt ſon of Mary, the ſiſter of Henry the laſt King (and this was juſt King Edward's caſe to the Crown of France) he thought himſelf to be preferred before the Prince of Parma, and the Duke of Bragance, deſcended from the daughters of Edward the ſaid Kings brother; becauſe the eldeſt male of the Royal Blood, and nearer to the ſaid King Henry by one degree. In the purſuance of which title, as Philip openly avowed, that the Laws of Portugal were more favourable to him than the Laws of Caſtile: ſo in like caſe, the Laws of France might be more favourable to King Edward, than the Laws of England. In claims to Crowns, the Rules of Regal Succeſſion differ in many Countries; and in few Countries are the ſame with that of the Succeſſion into mean Eſtates: as may be proved by many particulars in the Realm of England, in which the Law of the Crown differeth very much from the Law of the Land; as in the Caſe of Parceners, the whole blood, (as our Lawyers call it) the Tenure of courteſie, and ſome others were this a time and place fit for it. But to return again to France; Whether the Salique Law were in force or not, it made not much unto the prejudice of K. Edward the 3. though it ſerved Philip the Long to exclude the daughter of K. Lewis Hutin; and Charles the fair to do the like with the daughter of Philip; as it did Philip of Valoys, to diſpoſſeſs the whole Linage of K. Philip le Bel.

Crown

Machiavel accounteth this Salique Law to be a great happineſs to the French Nation, not ſo much in relation to the unfitneſs of Women to Govern (for therein ſome of them have gone beyond moſt men) but becauſe thereby the Crown of France is not endangered to fall into the hands of ſtrangers. Such men conſider not how great Dominions may by this means be incorporate to the Crown. They remember not how Maud the Empreſs being married to Geofry Earl of Anjou, Tourain, and Main, conveyed thoſe Countries to the Diadem of England, nor what rich and fertile Provinces were added to Spain, by the Match of the Lady Joan to Arch-Duke Philip: neither do they ſee thoſe great advantages of power and ſtrength which England now enjoyeth by the conjunction of Scotland, proceeding from a like marriage. Yet there is a ſaying in Spain, that as a man ſhall deſire to live in Italy, becauſe of the civility and ingenious natures of the People; and to dye in Spain, becauſe there the Catholick Religion is ſo ſincerely profeſſed: ſo he ſhould wiſh to be born in France, becauſe of the nobleneſs of that Nation, which never had any King but of their own Country.

The chief enemies to the French have been the Engliſh and Spaniards. The former had here great poſſeſſions, divers times plagued them, and took from them their Kingdom; but being called home by civil diſſentions, loſt all. At their departure, the French ſcoffingly asked an Engliſh Captain, When they would return: Who feelingly anſwered, When your ſins be greater than ours. The Spaniards began but of late with them, yet have they taken from them, Navarre, Naples, and Millain: they diſplanted them in Florida; poiſoned the Dauphine of Viennois (as it was generally conceived) murdered their Soldiers in cold blood, being taken priſoners in the Iſle of Tercera; and by their Faction raiſed even in France it ſelf, drave Henry the third out of Paris, and moſt of his other Cities; and at laſt cauſed him to be murdered by Jaques Clement, a Dominican Frier. The like they intended to his Succeſſor K. Henry the 4. whoſe coming to the Crown they oppoſed to their utmoſt power, and held a tedious War againſt him. Concerning which laſt War, when they ſided with the Duke of Mayenne, and the reſt of thoſe Rebels which called themſelves the Holy League (of which the D. of Guiſe was the Author) againſt the two Kings Henry the 3. and 4. a French Gentleman made this excellent alluſion. For being asked the cauſe of theſe civil broils, he replyed they were Spania and Mania; ſeeming by this answer to signifie Σπανία, penury, and Μανία, fury, which are indeed the causes of all intestine tumults: but covertly therein implying the King of Spain, and the Duke of Mayenne: since which time the French, upon the turn of Fortune, (notwithstanding the cross Marriages between the Kings of both Kingdoms, and their several Sisters) have had as great a hand upon the Spaniards; outing them by their plots and practices of the whole Kingdom of Portugal, and the Country of Catalogne in the main land of Spain it self, and of many of the best parts of Artois, Hainalt, and other of the Belgick Provinces, by the force of Arms. So little constancy there is, either in the favours of Fortune, or the affection of great Princes, that no wise man can trust the one, or depend safely on the other. For in the former times, as we read in Comines, there were no Princes more friendly than these two, the Kings of Castile and France being the nearest confederate Princes in Christendom. For their League was between King and King, Realm and Realm, Subject and Subject; which they were all bound under great curses to keep inviolable. But of late times, especially since the beginning of the Wars betwixt Charles the fifth, and Francis the first, for the Dukedom of Millain; there have not been greater animolities, nor more implacable enmities betwixt any Nations, than betwixt France and Spain. Which seconded by the mutual jealousies they have of each other, and the diversity of Constellations under which they live; hath produced such dissimilitude betwixt them in all their ways, that there is not greater contrariety of temper, carriage, and affections, betwixt any two Nations in the world, than is between these Neighbours, parted no otherwise from one another, than by passable Hills. First in the Actions of the Soul, the one Active and Mercurial, the other Speculative and Saturnine; the one sociable and discoursive, the other reserved and full of thought; the one so open, that you cannot hire him to keep a secret; the other so close, that all the Rhetorick in the world cannot get it out of him. Next in their Fashion and Apparel, the French wears his hair long, the Spaniard short; the French goes thin and open to the very shirt, as if there were continual Summer, the Spaniard so wrapt up and close, as if all were Winter; the French begins to button downward, and the Spaniard upwards; the last always constant in his Fashion, the first intent so much on nothing as on new fancies of Apparel. Then for their Gate, the French walk fast, as if pursued on an Arrest, the Spaniard slowly as if newly come out of a Quartane Ague; the French go up and down in clusters, the Spaniards but by two and two at the most; the French Lacqueys march in the Rere, and the Spanish always in the Van; the French sings and danceth as he walks the streets, the Spaniard in a grave and solemn posture, as if he were going a Procession. The like might be observed of their Tune, their Speech, and almost every passage in the life of man: for which I rather chuse to refer the Reader to the ingenious James Howel's Book of Instructions for Travel, than insist longer of it here. Only I add, that of the two so different humours, that of the Spaniards seems to be the more approvable. Insomuch as the Neopolitans, Millanois, and Sicilians, who have had tryal of both Nations, chuse rather to submit themselves to the proud and severe yoke of the Spaniards, than the lusts and insolencies of the French, not sufferable by men of even and well ballanced spirits. And possible enough it is, that such of the Netherlands, as have of late been won to the Crown of France, will find so little comfort in the change of their Masters; as may confirm the residue to the Crown of Spain, to which they naturally belong.

The chief Mountains of this Country, next to the Pyrenees which part France from Spain, the Jour or Jura which separates it from Savoy and Switzerland; and the Vauge or Vogesus, which divides it from Lorrein; are those which Cæsar calleth Gebenna, Ptolomy Cimmeni, being the same which separate Auvergne from Languedoc, called therefore the Mountains of Auvergne; the only ones of note which are peculiar to this Continent of France, which for the most part is plain and champain; the others before mentioned, being common unto this, with the bordering Provinces.

This Country is wonderfully stored with Rivers, the chief whereof, 1. Sequana or Seine, which arising in Burgundy, watering the Cities of Paris and Roan, and receiving into it nine navigable streams, disburdeneth it self into the British Ocean. 2. Some, in Latin called Samona, which rising near the Town of St. Quintin, first cutteth between Picardy and Artoys, afterwards passeth through the fair City of Amiens, and the goodly Town of Abbeville, and finally having received eight lesser streams, loseth it self in the same Sea also. 3. Legeris or Loyre, on which are seated Nantes, and Orleance. It riseth about the Mountains of Auvergne, (being the greatest in France) and having run 600 miles, and augmented his Chanel with the entertainment of 72 lesser Rivulets, mingleth his sweet waters with the brackish Aquitane Ocean. 4. Rhodanus, or the Rhosne, which springeth from the Alpes, three Dutch miles from the head of the Rhene, passeth by Lyons and Avignon; and having taken in thirteen lesser Brooks, falleth into the Mediterranean Sea, not far from Arles. 5. The Soasne, by the old Latins called Araris, which rising out of the Mountain of Vogesus or Vauge, in the borders of Lorrein and Alsatia, divideth the two Burgundies from each other; and falleth into the Rhosne at the City of Lyons. 6. Garumna or the Garond, which issuing out of the Pyrenean Mountains, passing by Tholouse and Burdeaux, and having swallowed up sixteen lesser Rivers (of which the Dordonne is the chief) disburdeneth it self into the Aquitane Ocean, near the Town of Blay: that part hereof which is betwixt the main Ocean, and the influx of the River Dordonne, being called the Giarronne. Of these it is said proverbially, that the Seine is the richest, the Rhosne the swiftest, the Garond the greatest, and the Loyre the sweetest. And by these and many other Rivers this Kingdom is enriched with 34 excellent Havens, having all the properties of a good Harbour; that is to say, 1. Room, 2. Safety, 3. Easiness of defence, 4. Resort of Merchants.

As for so much of the Story hereof as concerneth the whole, it was first peopled, if we may give credit to Annius, (as I think we may not in this point) by Samothes the sixth Son of Japhet (affirmed by them, and such as adhere unto them, to be that Son of his, who in the Scripture is called Mesech) in the year of the world 1806. But those which are better conversant in the course of History, have utterly laid aside this device of Annius. Even Funclius, though a great Berosian, doth confess ingenuously, Quis hic Samothes fuerit, incertum est, that it is unresolved who this Samothes was. And Vignier a French Antiquary doth confess with Funclius, Mais un ne scay quil il estoit, that no body can tell us who he was. They who have better studied this point than Annius, derive the Gauls from Gomer, Japhet's eldest Son, whose offspring were first called Gomerians, afterwards Cimmerians, at last Cimbri: first planted (as before was said) in the Mountainous places of Albania, where the Mountains called Cimmerini long preserved his memory, and after changing that unfruitful and unpleasant dwelling for the Plains of Phrygia, wherein the City Cimmeris did retain somewhat of his name, in the times of Pliny. Afterwards his posterity proceeded further in the leſſer Aſia, and in long tract of time filled Germany, Gaul and Britain, with his numerous iſſues: the Gauls and Cimbri being clearly of the ſame Original, though known amongſt the Romans by two different names. From whence they had the names of Gauls, and Celtes, and Galatæ, hath been ſhewn before. It ſhall ſuffice us now to add, that being originally of the Cimbri, and having ſomewhat in them of the blood of Hercules; they proved a very valiant and warlike Nation, without whoſe love, no King could ſecure himſelf from eminent dangers. They were very ſparing in their diet, and uſed to fine any one that outgrew his Girdle. With theſe men the Romans fought at firſt for their own preſervation, rather than out of any hope by the conqueſt of them to improve either their fame or their Dominions. Inſomuch that when they had invaded Italy with a numerous Army, in favour of the Ciſalpine Galls, under the conduct of Anereſtus and Congelianus, two of their Kings, and pierced as far as Telamon a City of Tuſcany; the Romans thought they had done enough in diſcomfiting their Forces, and clearing their own Provinces of them; not holding it for a point of wiſdom to purſue them, or invade their Country; though by the conqueſt of Liguria: but few years before, they had enlarged their Dominions to the borders of it. But to enumerate more particularly their great atchievements in the Wars, theſe were they who under the conduct of Belloveſus, paſſing over the Alpes, conquered the neareſt parts of Italy, called afterwards Gallia Ciſalpina; and under that of Segoveſus, over-run all Germany, and following their ſucceſſes as far as Scythia, founded the potent Nation of the Celto-Scythæ. Theſe were the men, whoſe iſſue under the command of Brennus, diſcomfited the Romans, at the River Allia; ſacked the City, and beſieged the Capitol, An. M. 3577. V. C. 365. In which action they ſo terrified the Romans, that after their expulſion from Rome by Camillus, there was a Law made, that the Prieſts, though at all other times exempted from Military employments, ſhould be compelled to the War, if ever the Gauls came again. And finally, theſe were the men, who under the command of Belgius, and another Brennus, ranſacked Illyricum, Pannonia, Thrace, and Greece, in which they ſpoiled and plundered the Temple of Delphos; for which Sacriledge they were viſited with the Peſtilence. Such as ſurvived this Plague, went into Aſia, and there gave name to that Country now called Galatia, of whom thus Du Bartas:

> The ancient Gaul in roving every way,
> As far as Phœbus darts his Golden Ray;
> Seiz'd Italy, the World's proud Miſtreſs ſackt,
> Which rather Mars than Romulus compact.
> Then ſpoils Piſidia, Myſia doth enthral;
> And midſt of Aſia plants another Gaul.

Yet at laſt the Romans undertook the War, but not till they had conquered almoſt all the reſidue of the (then know) World. Attempted firſt by Fulvius Flaccus, a Roman Conſul, called in by the Maſſilienſes to aſſiſt them againſt the Salii their unquiet Neighbours, A. V. C. 628, that part hereof which afterwards was called Narbonenſis, being brought into the form of a Roman Province at the concluſion of the War againſt the Allobroges and Arverni, (undertaken on the like complaint of the Hedui) about five years after. Not totally ſubdued until the time of Julius Cæſar, and not eaſily then. For though the War was managed then by the ableſt Captain that ever the State of Rome gave life to; yet was it not more eaſily vanquiſhed by the valour and fortune of the Romans, than by want of good intelligence and correſpondence amongſt themſelves. Nor did they ſell their liberty ſo good cheap, as thoſe other Nations, with whom the Romans had to deal; Cæſar himſelf affirming, That he had ſlain 1192000 of them before they would ſubmit to the Roman yoak. But at the laſt they were brought under the power of Rome, by whom the whole Country was divided into theſe four parts, viz. 1. Narbonenſis, called ſo from the City of Narbon, then a Roman Colony, containing Languedoc, Provence, Daulphine, and ſome part of Savoy, called alſo Braccata at the firſt conqueſt by the Romans, from the uſual habit of the people (reſembling the Mantles uſed by the Wild Iriſh) called in Latin Braccæ: attempted firſt by Fulvius Flaccus, in his War againſt the Salii, as before is ſaid; and finally ſubdued, A. V. C. 633. by Fabius Maximus, and Cn. Domitius Ænobarbus, in their War againſt the Allobroges, and their Confederates, before mentioned, about 70 years before the coming in of Julius Cæſar. 2. Aquitannica, ſo called from the City of Aquæ Auguſtæ (now D'Acqs, in Guienne) lying upon the Pyrenees, and the wide Ocean, which comprehendeth the Provinces of Gaſcoyn, Guienne, Xaintoygne, Limoſin, Quercu, Perigort, Berry, Burbonoys, and Anvergne; extending from the Pyrenees to the River Loyre, and conſequently ſtretching over all the middle of Gaul. 3. Celtica, ſo named from the valiant Nation of the Celtæ; (called alſo Lugdunenſis, from the City of Lyons; and Comata from the long hair worn amongſt this people) extending from the Loyre to the Britiſh Ocean, and comprehending the Provinces of Bretaigne, Normandy, Anjou, Tourin, Main, La Beauſſe, the Iſle of France, part of Champagne, the Dukedom of Burgundy, and the County of Lyonnoys. 4. Belgica, from the Belgæ, a potent Nation of that tract, taking up all the Eaſt parts of Gaul, viz. Picardy, the reſt of Champagne, the County of Burgundy, together with ſo much of Germany and the Netherlands, as lyeth on this ſide of the Rhene, belonging now unto the Empire and the Kings of Spain. In the new modelling of the Empire by Conſtantine the Great, Gaul was appointed for the ſeat of one of the four Præfecti Prætorio, deſigned for the four Quarters of it. His Title Præfectus Prætorio Galliarum; his Government extending over the Dioceſes of Gaul, Spain, and Britain: this Dioceſs of Gaul being caſt into ſeventeen Provinces, that is to ſay, Lugdunenſis Prima, 2. Secunda, 3. Tertia, 4. Quarta, 5. Belgica Prima, 6. Secunda, 7. Germania Prima, 8 Secunda, 9. Narbonenſis Prima, 10. Secunda, 11. Aquitania Prima, 12. Secunda, 13 Novempopulonia, 14. Viennenſis, 15. Maxima Sequanorum 16. Alpes Graiæ & Pœninæ, 17. Alpes Maritimæ. Of theſe ſeventeenth, Germania Prima & Secunda, all Belgica Prima, and a great part of Secunda, all that of the Alpes Graiæ & Pœninæ, and ſo much of Maxima Sequanorum, as lieth in Switzerland, are now diſmembred from the name and accompt of France. What principal Nations of the Gauls and what Provinces of the preſent France, the reſt contained, ſhall be declared in our Survey of the particulars.

But long it ſtood not in this ſtate: For within ſixty years after the death of Conſtantine, during the Reigns of Honorius and Theodoſius, the Burgundians, a great and populous Nation, were called in by Stilico, Lieutenant to Honorius the Weſtern Emperour, to keep the borders of the Empire againſt the French; then ready with ſome other of the Barbarous Nations to invade the ſame. The Goths not long after by agreement with the ſame Honorius, leaving their hold in Italy, were veſted in Gaul Narbonoys, by the gift of that Emperour; with a good part of Tarraconenſis, one of the Provinces of Spain: Aquitain being after added, in regard of the ſervice they had done the Empire, in driving the Alani out of Spain, then likely to have made a great impreſſion on that Country. And in the reign of Valentinian the third, the French who had long hovered on the banks of the Rhene, taking advantage of the distractions of the Empire, ventured over the River; first made themselves Masters of Gaul-Belgick; and after, spread themselves over all the rest of the Provinces which had not been subdued by the Gothes and Burgundians; excepting a small corner of Armorica, then possessed by the Britans. So that the Romans being outed of all the Country, it was divided between the Nations above mentioned, and that with more equality than could be imagined: The Gothes possessing all Aquitain, and Narbonensis, containing now the Provinces of Provence, Languedock, Gascoigne, Guienne, Xantoigne, Poictou, Berry, Limousin, Perigort, Quercu, and Avergne; the Burgundians having for their share, the Alpine Provinces, together with Nivernois, Bourbon, Beau-Jolais, Forrest, the Countries of Lyonois, La Bresse, Daulphine, and both the Burgundies, from them so denominated. The rest (except that part thereof which we now call Bretagne) was possessed by the French, who in short time repulsed the Visigothes, or Western-Gothes, (then busie in the Conquest of Spain) out of all the Provinces of the Roman Aquitain, by the Valour of Clouis the Great, their first Christian King, before they could challenge a Prescription of 60 years. Nor was it long, before Provence also was resigned to Theodorick the French King, of Mets by Amalasunta, Qu. of the Ostro-Gothes, or Gothes of Italy; nothing being left unto that Nation, of all their Gallick Conquests, but Languedock only. In which respect, the Gothish Provinces of Gall, (except Provence only) together with so much of the Burgundians which was after laid to West-France, shall pass in the account of the French part of this Country; the rest of the Burgundian Conquests which lye within the bounds of the Modern France, (having Provence added to them) shall be considered by themselves in the description and affairs of the Kingdom of Burgundy; a distinct Realm from that of France, and not reduced but by piece-meal, and by several Titles, (and yet not wholly so neither) to the Crown thereof. Finally, of the French themselves, and the succession of their Kings, we will speak at last, when we have brought all the chief parts and Provinces of this flourishing Country into their possession. The principal Provinces are, 1. France, specially so called, 2. Champagne, 3. Picardy, 4. Normandy, 5. Bretagne, 6. The Estates of Anjou, with its members, 7. La Beausse, 8. Nivernois, 9. The Dukedom of Bourbon, with the Provinces dependant on it; being all (excepting Bretagne) the first acquests of the French. Then follow the chief Provinces of the Gothish Kingdom; that is to say, 10. Berry, 11. Poictou, 12. Limosin, 13. Perigort, and 14. Quercu, 15. Aquitain, with the members of it; and 16. Languedoc: and last of all, the Burgundian Kingdom; of which there now remain in France, the Counties of 17. Provence, 18. Daulphine, 19. La Bresse, 20. Lionois, 21. The Dutchy, and 22. the County of Burgundy, 23. The Islands in the Aquitain, and Gallick Ocean, in the close of all. Of some of which, La Nove, a French Author, hath passed this censure: The men of Berry are Leachers, they of Tourein, Thieves; they of Languedoc, Traytors; they of Provence, Atheists; they of Rhemes (or Champagne) superstitious; they of Normandy, insolent; they of Picardy proud; & sic de cæteris. But here we are to understand, that all these Provinces (though passing by the name and account of France) are not under the Command of the French King; the Illes of Jarsey and Guernzey, being possessed by the English; the Counties of Burgundy and Charolois, by the King of Spain; the Dutchy of Bar, belonging to the Dukes of Lorrein; the Principality of Orange, to the House of Nassaw; and Avignon, to the Popes of Rome. And on the other side, the French Kings are possessed of some Towns and Cities, not lying within the bounds of France, as the Imperial Cities of Mets, Toul, and Verdun; lying within the Dukedom of Lorrein, the Fort and Pass of Pignerolle, in the Dukedom of Savoy, and the Port of Monaco, in Liguria; Base Navarre, in Spain; not to say any thing of their late acquests in Spain and Flanders, which I look not on as parts of the French Dominions.

FRANCE, specially so called.

THE first place which the Franks, or French, had for their fixt Habitation, was by that People honoured with the name of FRANCE; the first green Turf of Gallick ground, by which they took livery and seisin of all the rest. A Province now bounded on the East with Champagne, on the North with Normandy, on the West and South, with La Beausse. To difference it from the main Continent of France, it is called the Isle of France, as being circled almost round with several Rivers; that is to say, the Oise on the North, the Eure on the West, the Velle on the East, and a Vein-riveret of the Sein, towards the South. A Country not so large as many of the French Provinces; but such as hath given name unto all the rest; it being the Fate of many small, but puissant Provinces, to give their name to others which are greater than they, if conquered and brought under by them. For, thus we see the little Province of Poland, to have mastered and given name to the Mazovii, Pruteni, and other Nations of Sarmatia Europæa, as that of Mosco, to the Provinces of Asiatica. And thus have those of Sweden conquered and denominated almost the great Peninsula of Scandia, whereof it is one of the smallest Provinces. And thus this Island, being the Seat-Royal of the French, in Gallia, gave name to all the residue of it, as they made it theirs. A Country generally so fruitful and delectable, (except in Gastinois) that the very Hills thereof are equal to the Valleys in most places of Europe: but the Vale of Montmorency (wherein Paris standeth) scarce is to be sellowed in the World. An argument whereof may be, That when the Dukes of Berry, Burgundy, and their Confederates, besieged that City with an Army of 100000 men, neither the Assailants without, nor the Citizens within, found any scarcity of Victuals; and yet the Citizens, besides Souldiers, were reckoned at 500000.

It was formerly part of the Province of Belgica secunda, & Lugdunensis quarta; the chief inhabitants thereof being the Parisii, the Bellovaci, and the Silvanectes: and is now divided into four parts; that is to say, the Dukedom of Valois, 2. Gastinois, 3. Henrepoix, and that which is properly called the Isle of France; by some, the Provoste, or County of Paris.

1. Dukedom or County of VALOIS, lyeth under Picardy: the principal Cities of it, 1. Senlis, (in Latin, Silvanectum) a Bishops See. 2. Compeigns, (Compendium) seated on the River Oise, a retiring place of the French Kings for Hunting, and other Country pleasures. 3. Beauvois, the chief City of the Bellovaci, by Ptolomy called Cæsaromagus; a fair, large, well-traded Town; from which the Country round about hath the name of Beauvoisin. The Patrimony, in former times, of Roger, the third Son of Theobald, the second Earl of Blais, and younger Brother of Odon, the first Earl of Champagne, who enjoyed it with the Title of Earl of Beauvois:

vois; and at his death, gave it for ever to the Bishops hereof; for anciently this City was a See Episcopal; the Bishop whereof is one of the twelve Peers of France. Philip, one of the Bishops here in times succeeding, a Military man, and one that had much damnified the English Borders, was fortunately taken by King Richard the First. The Pope being made acquainted with his imprisonment, but not the cause of it, wrote in his behalf unto the King, as for an Ecclesiastical person, and one of his beloved Sons. The King returned unto the Pope the Armour which the Bishop was taken in, and these words engraven on the same, Vide an hæc sit tunica filii tui, vel non; being the words which Jacobs Children spake unto him, when they presented him with the Coat of their Brother Joseph: which the Pope viewing, swore, That it was rather the Coat of a Son of Mars, than a Son of the Church: and so left him wholly to the Kings pleasure. 4. Clermont, a Town of good note in the County of Beauvoisin; memorable for giving the Title of Earl of Clermont, to Robert the fifth Son of the King St. Lewis, before his marriage with the Daughter and Heir of Bourbon: afterwards, to the eldest Sons of that Princely Family: and finally, to Catharine de Medices, created Countess of Clermont and Boulogne, at her marriage with Henry Duke of Orleans, Successor to King Francis the first, in the Realm of France. 5. Luzarch, a Town belonging to the Count of Soissons. 6. Brenonville, 7. St. Loup, on the Confines of Picardy, so called from a Monastery dedicated to St. Lupus, Bishop of Troys in Champagne, sent into Britain with St. Germanus, to suppress the Pelagian Heresies, which were there beginning. But of this part of France, nothing more observable, than that it gave denomination to the Royal Family of the French Kings, (13 in number) from hence entituled de Valois: beginning in Philip de Valois, Anno 1328, and ending in Henry the third, Anno 1589. As for the Earls hereof, (from whom that adjunct or denomination had its first Original) the first who had the Title of Earl of Valois, was Charles, the second Son of Philip the third, in right of his Wife; Earl of Anjou also: after whose death, it descended upon Philip de Valois, his eldest Son, who carried the Crown of France from our Edward the third. On his assuming of the Crown, it fell to Lewis his second Brother; and he deceasing without issue, Anno 1391, to Lewis Duke of Orleans, Son of Charles the Fifth; amongst the Titles of which House, it lay dormant, till the expiring of that Line in King Lewis the twelfth; and lately given unto the Monsieur, or Duke of Orleans, Brother to Lewis the thirteenth, and Uncle to K. Lewis the fourteenth, now reigning, upon the first reconciliation made betwixt him and his Brother; adding thereby to his Estate, no less than 10000 pounds Sterling of yearly Rents, which make up 100000 Franks or Livres, in the French accompt. I only add, that Charles, the first Earl of this Family, as he was the Son of Philip the third, Brother of Philip the fourth, sirnamed the Fair; and Father of Philip de Valois: so was he Uncle to Lewis Hutin, Philip the Long, and Charles the Fair, all in their order Kings of France. In which regard it was said of him, That he was the Son, Brother, Father, and Uncle of Kings; yet no King himself.

2. The second part of this Province, is called HEUREPOIX; beginning at the little Bridge of Paris, on the River of Sein, and going up along the River, as far as the River of Verine; which divides it from Gastinois. The chief Towns of it are, 1. Charenton, three Miles from Paris, where the French Protestants of that City, have their Church for religious exercises, it being not permitted them to hold their Assemblies in any Walled Cities, or Garrison Towns, for fear of any sudden surprize, which so great a multitude might easily make. Which Church (or Temple, as they call it) being burnt down by the hot-headed Parisians, on the news of the Duke of Mayennes death, slain at the Siege of Montalban, Anno 1622, was presently re-edified by the command of the Duke of Mombazon, then Governour of the Isle of France, at the charge of the State: to let those of the Reformed Party understand that it was their Disobedience, and not their Religion, which caused the King to arm against them. 2. Corbeil, seated on the confluence of Sein and Essons. 3. Moret, which gives the Title of an Earl to one of the natural Sons of Henry the Fourth, begotten on the Daughter and Heir of the former Earl. 4. Melun, by Cæsar called Melodunum, the principal of this Heurepoix, and the seat of the Bailiff for this Tract. Here is also in this part the Royal Palace of Fountainbleau, so called from the many fair Springs and Fountains amongst which it standeth; but otherwise seated in a solitary and woody Country, fit for Hunting only; and for that cause, much visited by the French Kings in their times of leisure; and beautified with so much cost by King Henry the Fourth, that it is absolutely the stateliest and most magnificent Pile of Building in all France.

3. GASTINOIS, the most dry and barren part of this Province, but rich enough, if compared with other places; lieth between Paris, and the Country of Orleanoys. The chief places of it are, 1. Estampes, in the middle way betwixt Paris and Orleans, on the very edge of it, towards La Beausse, a fair large Town, having in it five Churches, and one of them a Colledge of Chanoins, with the ruines of an ancient Castle; which, together with the Walls and demolished Fortifications of it, shew it to have been of great importance in the former times. Given, with the Title of an Earl, by Charles Duke of Orleans, then Lord hereof, to Richard, the third Son of John of Montford, Duke of Bretagne, in marriage with his Sister the Lady Marguerette; from which Marriage issued Francis Earl of Estampes, the last Duke of Bretagne. 2. Montleherry, famous for the battel betwixt King Lewis the eleventh, and Charles Earl of Charolois, (after Duke of Burgundy) in which both sides ran out of the field, and each proclaimed it self the Victor. It standeth in the road betwixt Paris and Estampes. And so doth, 3. Castres, of the bigness of an ordinary Market-Town; not to be mentioned in this place, but for a Chamber or Branch of the Court of Parliament, here setled by King Henry the Fourth, for the use and benefit of his Subjects of the Reformed Religion; in Latin called Camera Castrensis. 4. Nemours, upon the River of Loyre, the chief of Gastinoys in name, but not in beauty, (wherein inferiour to Estampes) a Town which hath given the Title of Duke to many eminent persons of France. Here is also in this part, the County of Rochfort, and the Towns of 1. Milly, 2. Montargis, &c. More there occurreth not worth the noting, in this part of the Country, but that being part of the possessions of Hugh the Great Constable of France, and Earl of Paris. It was given by him, together with the Earldom of Anjou, to Geoffry, sirnamed Grysogonelle, a right Noble Warrier, and a great stickler in behalf of the House of Anjou, then aiming at the Crown it self, which at last they carried. Continued in his Line till the time of Fulk the second, (the fifth Earl of Anjou of this Family) who gave it back again to King Philip the first, that by his help he might possess himself of the Earldom of Anjou, from his part wherein he was excluded by his elder Brother. Never since that, dismembred from the Crown of France, in Fact or Title.

4. But

4. But the great glory of this Province, is that which is more properly called the ISLE OF FRANCE, and sometimes κατ' ἐξοχὴν, the Isle, caused by the Circlings and Embracements of the Rivers of Sein and Marn; the abstract of the whole Beauties and Glories of France, which in this rich and pleasant Valley are summed up together.

Chief places in it, 1. S. German, seated on the ascent of an Hill, seven miles from Paris, down the water; a pretty neat and handsom Town, honoured with one of the fairest Palaces of the French Kings; which being built (like Windsor) on the top of a fine Mountainet on the Rivers side; affordeth an excellent prospect over all the Country. The excellent Water-works herein, have been described on occasion of those of Trivoli, a Town of the Popes in Champagna di Roma, so much extolled by the Italians. It was first built by Charles the fifth, sirnamed the Wise; beautified by the English when they were possessed of this Country: but finally, re-edified and enlarged by King Henry the Fourth, who brought it into that Magnificence in which now we see it. It took name from S. German, Bishop of Auxerre, Companion with S. Lupus before mentioned, in the British Journey against Pelagius. 2. Poissie, upon the same River, or rather on the confluence of it, and the Marn which falleth into the Sein; situate not far from S. Germans; a Bailiwick belonging to the Provost of Paris, and one of his seven Daughters, as they use to call them. 3. Chantilly, the chief Seat of the Dukes of Montmorency, the ancientest and most noble Family of all Christendom; whose Ancestors were the first fruits of the Gospel in this part of Gaul, and used to stile themselves, Les primiers Christiens, & plus veilles Barons de la France, i.e. The first Christians, and most ancient Barons of France. A Family that hath yielded unto France more Admirals, Constables, Marshals, and other like Officers of Power, than any three in all the Kingdom; now most unhappily extinct in the person of Henry the last Duke, executed by the command of the late Cardinal of Richlieu, for siding with the Monsieur (now Duke of Orleans) against King Lewis the 13. his Brother. The Arms of which illustrious and most noble Family, (for I cannot let it pass without this honour) were Or, a Cross Gules, cantoned with sixteen Alerions Azure, four in every Canton. What these Allerions are, we shall see in Lorrein: take we notice now, that from the great possessions which this Noble Family had in all this Tract, it was, and is still called the Vale of Montmorency. 4. S. Denis, some three miles from Paris, so called of a Monastery built here by Dagobert, King of France, about the year 640, in memory of S. Denis, or Dionyse, the first Bishop of Paris, martyred (on Mont-martyr, an Hill adjoining) in the time of Domitian. Some of the French Kings, because it lay so near to Paris, bestowed a Wall upon the Town, now not defensible; nor otherwise of any consideration, but for a very fair Abby of Benedictines, and therein the Sepulchres of many of the French Kings and Princes: neither for Workmanship nor Cost, able to hold comparison with those at Westminster. But being the Sepulture of their Kings, the French-men use to say facetiously, that to this place none of their Kings do ever go with a good will. In this Town also is the Church of S. Maclou, where the Kings, with a Fast of Nine days, and other Penances, use to receive the famous Gift of healing the Kings-Evil, with nothing but a Touch: a Priviledge enjoyed only by those Kings, and the Kings of England. 5. St. Cloud, (or the Town of St. Claudus) unfortunately memorable for the Murder of King Henry the third, who lying here at a Siege of Paris, from whence he was compelled to flye by the Guisian Faction, was wretchedly assasinated by Jaques Clement, a Monk; employed in that service by the Heads of the Holy League. 6. PARIS, the chief City not of this Isle alone, but of all the Kingdom. By Cæsar, and Ammianus Marcellinus, called Civitas Parisiorum, from the Parisians, a Nation of Gaul Celtick, whose chief City it was: by Strabo called Lutetia, Lucotetia by Ptolomy, quasi in Luto sita, as some conjecture from the dirtiness of the soil in which it standeth. A soil so dirty, (as commonly all rich Countries are) that though the Streets hereof are paved, (which they affirm to be the work of King Philip Augustus) yet every little dash of rain, makes them very slippery; and worse than so, yields an ill savour to the nose. The Proverb is, Il desteint comme la fange de Paris, it staineth like the Dirt of Paris: but the Author of the Proverb might have changed the word, and turned it to Il peut, &c. It stinketh like the Dirt of Paris: no stink being more offensive than those streets in Summer. It is in compass about eight miles; of an Orbicular form, pleasantly seated on the divisions of the Sein: a fair, large, and capacious City, but far short of the brags which the French make of it. It was thought in the time of King Lewis the Eleventh, to contain 500000 people of all sorts and ages; which must be the least: the same King at the entertainment of the Spanish Ambassadors, shewing 140000 of this City in Arms, all in a Livery of red Cassocks, with white Crosses. A gallant sight, though possibly the one half of them were not fit for service: the Parisians being for the most part an effeminate people, wanton enough, and apt to mutiny upon all occasions; but little addicted to the Wars, as appears plainly by their suffering K. Henry the Fourth, to hold S. Dennis so long against them, with no considerable Garrison, and by that means to shut them up from all relief on that side of their City. And yet their multitudes, which since the time of that King, must needs be very much encreased, are the chief strength of the Town; the Fortifications being weak, and of ill assurance: Insomuch, that when once a Parisian bragged, that their Town was never taken by force; an English man returned this Answer, That it was, because on the least distress it did use to capitulate. It is seated (as before was said) on the River Sein, which serveth it with Boats and Barges, (as the Thames Westward doth London) the River ebbing and flowing no higher than Pont del' Arche, 75 miles distant from the City.

We may divide it into four parts; The Town, the City, the Univerfity, and the Suburbs. La Ville, or that part of it which is called The Town, is situate on the North side of the River; the biggest, but poorest part of the Four; inhabited by Artizans and Tradesmen of the meaner sort. In this part are the Hostel de Ville, or the Guild-Hall, for the use of the Citizens: the Arsenal, or Armory, for the use of the King; and that Magnificent Building called the Place-Royal, new built and beautified at the charges of King Henry the Fourth, for Tilts and Turnaments, and such Solemnities of State. And in this also, near the banks of the River, stands the Kings Palace of the L'ouvre; a place of more Fame than Beauty; and nothing answerable to the report which goes commonly of it. A Building of no elegance or uniformity; nor otherwise remarkable, but for the vast Gallery begun by King Henry the Fourth, and the fine Gardens of the Tuilleries adjoining to it. The City is that part of it which takes up the circumference of a little Island, made by the embracements of the Sein; joined to the other parts on both sides, by several Bridges. The Paris or Lutetia of the old Gauls, was was no more than this, the Town on the one ſide, and the Univerſity on the other, being added ſince. This is the richeſt part, and beſt built of the whole Compoſitum. And herein ſtand the Palace, or Courts of Parliament; the Chappel of the Holy Ghoſt, and the Church of Noſtre-dame, being the Cathedral; of ancient times a Biſhop-See, but of late raiſed unto the dignity of a Metropolitan. On the South-ſide of the River lieth that part which is called the Univerſity, from an Univerſity here founded by Charles the Great, An. 792, at the perſwaſion of Alcuinus an Engliſh-man, the Scholar of Venerable Bede, and the firſt Profeſſor of Divinity here. It conſiſteth of 52 Colledges or places for ſtudy, whereof 40 are of little uſe; and in the reſt, the Students live at their own charges, as in the Halls at Oxon, or Inns of Court or Chancery at London; there being no Endowment laid unto any of them, except the Sorbonne, and the Colledge of Navarre. Which poſſibly may be the reaſon why the Scholars here are generally ſo debauched and inſolent: a ruder rabble than the which, are hardly to be found in the Chriſtian world. Senſible of this miſchief, and the cauſe thereof, Francis the Firſt, whom the French call the Father of the Muſes, at the perſwaſion of Reuchline and Budæus, thoſe great reſtorers of the Greek and Hebrew Languages, intended to have built a Colledge for 600 Students, and therein to have placed Profeſſors for all Arts and Sciences, endowing it with 50000 Crowns of yearly Revenue, for their conſtant maintenance. But it went no further than the purpoſe; prevented by the inevitable ſtroak of death, from purſuance of it. In bigneſs this is little inferiour to the Town of Ville, and not ſuperiour to it for wealth and beauty; few men of any wealth and credit, affecting to inhabit in a place of little Government. The fourth and laſt part, is the Suburbs, (or the Faux-bourgs, as the French call them) the principal whereof is that of S. Germans, (ſo called from an ancient Abby of that name) the beſt part of the whole Body of Paris, for large Streets, ſweet Air, choice of the beſt Company, magnificent Houſes, pleaſant Gardens, and finally, for all thoſe Contentments which are wanting commonly in the throngs of moſt populous Cities.

Here are alſo in this Iſle, the Royal Houſe of Madrit, a retiring-place of the Kings, built by King Francis the Firſt, at his return from his impriſonment in Spain. 2. Ruall, a ſweet Country-houſe of the late Queen-Mothers. And, 3. Boys de Vincennes, remarkable for the untimely death of our Henry the Fifth. I add this only, and ſo end; That this Iſle hath always followed the Fortune of the Crown of France; never diſmembred from the Soveraignty of the ſame, though ſometimes out of the poſſeſſion of the French Kings; as when the Engliſh kept it againſt Charles the 7. and the Leaguers againſt Henry the 4. A thing which hardly can be ſaid of any other of the Provinces of this flouriſhing Country: the French Kings of the race of Merovee, and Charles the Great, alienating from the Crown, many goodly Territories; contented only with a bare and titulary Homage from them. By means whereof, more than three parts of the whole Kingdom was ſhared firſt amongſt the great Princes of the French; which afterwards, by inter-marriages, and other titles, fell into the hands of ſtrangers; moſt of them enemies of this Crown, and jealous of the Grandeur and Power thereof. Which kept the French Kings generally very low and poor, till by Arms, Confiſcations, Marriages, and ſuch other means, they reduced all theſe Rivulets to their firſt and original Chanel; as ſhall be ſhewn in the purſuance of this Work.

2. CHAMPAGNE.

CHAMPAGNE is bounded on the North with Picardie; on the South, with the Dukedom of Burgundie; on the Eaſt, with Lorrein; on the Weſt, with France ſpecially ſo called.

The Country, for the moſt part, very plain, and pleaſant, (whence it had the name) adorned with ſhady Woods, and delectable Meadows; fruitful in Corn, and not deficient in Wines. The Seat, in elder times, of the Tricaſſes, Catalauni, Remi, the Lingones, and Senones, (of which laſt Tribe or Nation, were thoſe Ciſalpine Gauls who ſacked Rome under the Conduct of Brennus) part of them, Celts; and part, Belgians; and ſo accordingly diſpoſed of: the Belgians, into the Province of Belgica ſecunda, the Metropolis whereof was Rhemes: the Celts into Lugdunenſis quarta, of which the Metropolis was Sens; both Cities ſeated in this Country. The chief Rivers of it, 1. Bloiſe, 2. Marne, 3. Yonne, 4. Sault.

Chief places of that part hereof which belonged to Belgica ſecunda, or the Province of Rhemes, are 1. Chalon, on the River Marne, an Epiſcopal See, Suffragan to the Arch-biſhip of Rhemes; called anciently, Civitas Catalaunorum. 2. Joinville, ſituate on the ſame River, belonging to the Houſe of Guiſe; the eldeſt Son of which Family, is called Prince of Joinville: in the Caſtle whereof, ſeated upon an high and inacceſſible Hill, is to be ſeen the Tomb of Claudè, the firſt Duke of Guiſe; the richeſt Monument, of that kind, in all France. The Barony of William Lord Joinville, third Son of Euſtace, Earl of Boulogne, and of Ida his Wife, who brought the Dukedom of Bouillon for her Dower or Portion; and Brother of Godfrey and Baldwin, Dukes of Lorrein, and Kings of Jeruſalem. But, whether it came to him by the gift of his Mother, as part of the Dukedom of Bouillon, or that he had it by his Wife, a daughter of Theobald Earl of Champagne, I am not able to determine. Left by him after his deceaſe, to Godfrey his youngeſt Son (Thierry his eldeſt Son, ſucceeding his Uncle Baldwin in the Dukedom of Lorrein): upon the failure of whoſe line, it fell unto the Dukes of Lorrein, as next heirs thereof, and ſo unto the Dukes of Guiſe, as deſcended from them. 3. St. Urben, a Town of the Territory of Joinville, from which it is about two leagues diſtance. 4. Pierre-Fort, defended with a Caſtle of ſo great ſtrength, that in the Civil-Wars of France, An. 1614, it endured 1100 ſhot of Cannon, and yet was not taken. 5. Vaſſey, upon the River Bloiſe; a Town of as ſweet a ſituation, as moſt in France. Theſe laſt, ſituate in that part of Champagne which is called Vallage: ſo named, as I conceive, from the River Vaſle. 6. Vitrey, upon the confluence of the Sault & Marne, the chief Town and Balliage of that part which is named Parthois (Ager Pertenſis in the Latin); ſo called of 7. Perte, another Town thereof, but now not ſo eminent. 8. Chaumont, upon the Marne, the chief Town of Baſſigni; and ſtrengthned with a Caſtle mounted on a craggy Rock. 9. Dedior, or St. Deſier, (Fanum Sancti Deſiderii) royally fortified after it had been ruined, An. 1544. 10. Rhemes (Durocortorum Rhemorum) an Arch-biſhops See, who is one of the Twelve Peers of France, ſituate on the River of Vaſle. At this City, the Kings of France are moſt commonly crown'd, that ſo they may enjoy the Unction of a ſacred Oyl, kept in the Cathedral Church hereof; which, as they ſay, came down from Heaven, and never decreaſeth. How true this is, may be eaſily ſeen, in that Gregory of Tours, who is ſo prodigal of his Miracles, makes no mention of it, but ſpecially (for

(for Argumentum ab authoritate negativè parum valet) ſince the Legend informeth us, that this holy Oil was ſent from Heaven at the anointing of Clovis, the firſt Chriſtian King of the French. Whereas Du Haillan, one of their moſt judicious Writers, affirmeth Pepin, the Father of Charles the Great, to have been their firſt anointed King; and that there was none de la primiere lignee oinct, ny ſacre â Rhemes, ny allieurs, none of the firſt or Merovignian line of Kings, had been anointed at Rhemes, or elſewhere. But ſure it is (let it be true or falſe, no matter) that the French do wonderfully reverence this (their ſacred) Oil; and fetch it with great ſolemnity from the Church in which it is kept. For it is brought by the Prior, ſitting on a white ambling Palfrey, and attended by his whole Convent; the Arch-biſhop hereof, (who by his place is to perform the Ceremonies of the Coronation) and ſuch Biſhops as are preſent, going to the Church-doors, to meet it, and leaving for it, with the Prior, ſome competent pawn; and on the other ſide, the King, when it is brought unto the Altar, bowing himſelf before it with great humility. But to return unto the Town; it took this name from the Rhemi, once a potent Nation of theſe parts, whoſe chief City it was; and now an Univerſity of no ſmall eſteem: in which, among other Colledges, there is one appointed for the education of young Engliſh Fugitives. The firſt Seminary for which purpoſe, (I note this only by the way) was erected at Doway, An. 1568. A ſecond at Rome, by Pope Gregory the thirteenth. A third at Valladolid in Spain, by K. Philip the ſecond. A fourth in Lovaine, a Town of Brabant: And a fifth, here (ſo much do they affect the gaining of the Engliſh to the Romiſh Church) by the Dukes of Guiſe. 11. Ligni, upon the River Sault.

In that part of it which belonged to Lugdunenſis quarta, or the Province of Sens, the places of chief note are, 1. Sens, Civitas Senonum in Antoninus, anciently the Metropolis of that Province, by conſequence the See of an Archbiſhop alſo. The Country hereabouts called Le Paris Senonis, was part of the habitation of the ancient Senones, ſome of which paſſing over the Alpes, with other Nations of the Gauls, planted thoſe parts which afterwards were for long time called Gallia Ciſalpina. Of which the Senones were the moſt valiant, though far leſs in numbers; as thoſe which had not only the honour of ſacking Rome, but of managing an offenſive War againſt that State, for the ſpace of 100 years and upwards. What afterwards became of them, hath been ſhewn already when we were in Lombardy. 2. Langres, or Civitas Lingonum, (by Ptolomy called Audomaturum (ſituate in the Confines of Burgundy, not far from the fountain or ſpring-head of the Seine: the See of a Biſhop, who is one of the Twelve Peers of France. 3. Troys, Civitas Tricaſſium, ſeated on the Seine; a fair, ſtrong and well-traded City, honoured with the title of the Daughter of Paris; a See Epiſcopal, and counted the chief of Champagne, next Rhemes. A City of great note in our French and Engliſh Hiſtories, for the meeting of Charles the ſixth, and Henry the fifth, Kings of France and England, in which it was agreed, That the ſaid King Henry, eſpouſing Katherine Daughter of that King, ſhould be proclaimed Heir apparent of the Kingdom of France; into which he ſhould ſucceed on the ſaid King's death, and be the Regent of the Realm for the time of his life, with divers other Articles, beſt ſuiting with the will and honour of the Conquerour. 4. Provence, (by Cæſar called Agendicum) ſeated upon the Seine, in a pleaſant Country, abounding in all fragrant flowers, but eſpecially with the ſweeteſt Roſes, which being tranſplanted into other Countries, are called Provence-Roſes. 5. Meaux, ſeated on the River Marne, anciently the chief City of the Meldi, whom Pliny, & others of the old Writers, mention in this Tract; now honoured with a Biſhops See, and neighboured by 6. Monceaux, beautified with a magnificent Palace built by Katharine de Medices, Queen-Mother of the three laſt Kings of the houſe of Valois. 7. Montereau, a ſtrong Town on the confluence of the Seine & the Tonne. 8. Chaſteau-Thierri, (Caſtrum Theodorici, as the Latins call it) ſituate on the River Marne. Theſe five laſt, ſituate in that part of Champagne which lyeth next to France ſpecially ſo called; known of long time by the name of Brie: which being the firſt or chief poſſeſſion of the Earls of Champagne, occationed them to be ſometimes called Earls of Brie, and ſometimes Earls of Brie and Champagne. Add here, 9. Auxerre, in former time a City of the Dukedom of Burgundy, but now part of Champagne; of which more hereafter. And 10. Fontenay, a ſmall Town in Auxerrois, in the very borders of this Province; memorable for the great battel fought near unto it, An. 841, between the Sons and Nephews of Ludovicus Pius, for their Father's Kingdoms: in which ſo many thouſands were ſlain on both ſides, that the Forces of the French Empire were extreamly weakned; and had been utterly deſtroyed in purſuit of this unnatural War, if the Princes of the Empire had not mediated a Peace between them; allotting unto each, ſome part of that vaſt Eſtate, diſmembred by that means into the Kingdoms of Italy, France, Germany, Lorein, & Burgundy, never ſince brought into one hand, as they were before.

Adjoining unto Champagne alſo, where it looks towards Lorrein, lies the Country and Dutchy of BAR; belonging to the Dukes of Lorrein, but held by them in chief of the Kings of France. The Country commonly called BARROIS, environed for the moſt part with the two ſtreams of the River Marne; of which, the one riſing in the edge of Burgundy, and the other in the borders of Lorrein, do meet together at Chalons a City of Champagne. Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Bar le Duc, ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from Bar on the River Seine, and Bar upon the River Albi; a well fortified Town. 2. La Motte, 3. Ligni, 4. Arqu, of which nothing memorable, but that they are the chief of this little Dukedom. Of what antiquity this Dukedom is, and by whom firſt founded and made an abſolute Eſtate, I am yet to ſeek; though probable it is, that it might take its firſt riſe (as many other petit Signeuries did) out of the ruine & diſmembring of the Kingdom of Lorrein; or otherwiſe might be erected by the Earls Palatines of Champagne, out of ſome part of that Eſtate. But whether it were ſo or not, certain it is, that it came firſt to the preſent houſe of Lorrein, by the gift of Rene Duke of Anjou, and titular King of Naples, Sicil, &c. who ſucceed in it in the right of Yoland, or Violant, his Mother, Daughter of Don John the firſt King of Aragon, and of Yoland or Violant, the heir of Bar; and dying gave the ſame, together with the Towns of Lambeſque, and Orgon, to Rene Duke of Lorrein, his Nephew, by the Lady Violant his Daughter. From this Rene, it was taken by Lewis the 11. who having put a Garriſon into Bar, repaired the Walls, and cauſed the Arms of France to be ſet on the Gates thereof. Reſtored again by Charles the 8. at his going to the Conqueſt of Naples: to buy him out by that means, (if I gueſs aright) of his pretenſions to that Kingdom, which were fair and ſpecious; ſince which time quietly enjoyed by the Dukes of Lorrein, till the year 1633, when ſeized on by Lewis the 13. upon a Judgment and Arreſt of the Court of Parliament in Paris, in regard the preſent Duke had not done his Homage to the King as he ought to have done.

The Arms hereof are Azure, two Barbels back to back, Or; Seme of Croſs Croſſets, Fitche, of the ſecond.

But to return again to Champagne; it pleaſed Hugh Capet at his coming to the Crown of France, to give the ſame to Eudes, or Odon, Earl of Blais, whoſe Daughter he he had married in his private Fortunes, before he had attained the Kingdom) with all the Rights and Priviledges of a County Palatine. Which Eudes, or Odon, was the Son of Theobald Earl of Blais, and Nephew of that Gerlon, a noble Dane, to whom Charles the Simple gave the Town and Earldom of Blais, about the year 920, and not long after the time, that he conferred the Country of Neuſtria upon Rollo the Norman, whoſe Kinſman and aſſiſtant this Gerlon was in haraſſing and waſting the coaſts of France. In the perſon of Theobald the third, the Earls hereof became Kings of Navarre, deſcended on him in right of the Lady Blanch his Mother, Siſter and Heir of King Sancho the eighth, Anno 1234. By the Marriage of Joan Queen of Navarre, and Counteſs of Champagne, to Philip the Fourth of France, ſurnamed the Fair, both theſe Eſtates were added to the Crown of France: enjoyed by him and his three Sons one after another, though not without ſome prejudice to the Lady Joan, Daughter and Heir of Lewis Hutin. But the three Brethren being dead, and Philip of Valois ſucceeding in the Crown of France, he reſtored the Kingdom of Navarre to the ſaid Lady Joan: and for the County of Champagne (which lay too near the City of Paris to be truſted in a foreign hand) he gave unto her and her Poſterity, as in the way of exchange, ſome certain Towns and Lands in other places; though not of equal value to ſo rich a Patrimony.

Count Palatines of Champagne.

1320	13	Charles the Fair, Brother of Philip King of France and Navarre, & the laſt Earl of Champagne; united after his deceaſe by Philip de Valois to the Crown of France: the Earldom of March, near Angoleſme, being given for it, in exchange to the Lady Joan, Daughter of King Lewis Hutin, and Queen of Navarre married to Philip Earl of Eureux, in her right honoured with that Crown, from whom deſcend the Kings of France and Navarre of the Houſe of Bourbon.

The Arms of theſe Palatines of Champagé, were Argent, two Bends cotized, potencee and counterpotencee of three pieces, Or.

3. PICARDIE.

PICARDIE hath on the Eaſt, the Dukedom of Luxemburg, and Lorrein; on the Weſt, ſome part of Normandy, and the Engliſh Ocean; on the North, the Counties of Artois and Hainalt; and on the South, Champagne, and France ſtrictly and ſpecially ſo called. A Country ſo well ſtored with Corn, that it is accounted the Granary or Store-houſe of Paris; but the few Wines which it produceth are but harſh, and of no good reliſh, eſpecially in the Northern and colder parts of it.

The ancient Inhabitants of it were the Sueſſiones, Ambiani and Veromandui, conſiderable Nations of the Belgæ; and therefore reckoned into the Province of Belgica ſecunda: but why they had the name of Picards, I am yet to ſeek. Omitting therefore the conjectures of other men, ſome of the which are groundleſs, and the reſt ridiculous; I only ſay, as Robert Biſhop of Auranches, hath affirmed before me, Quos itaq; ætas noſtra Picardos appellat, verè Belgæ dicendi ſunt, qui poſtmodum in Picardorum tranſmigrarunt.

The whole Country as it lieth from Calais to the Borders of Lorrein, is divided into the Higher and the Lower: the Lower ſubdivided into Sainterre, Ponthieu, Boulognois, and Guiſnes: the Higher into the Vidamate of Amiens, Veromandois, Rethelois, and Tieraſche; in every of which there are ſome places of importance and conſideration,

In LOWER PICARDIE & the County of GUISNES, the chief Towns, 1. Calais, by Cæſar called Portus Iecius (as the adjoining Promontory, Promontorium Iecium, by Ptolomy) a ſtrong Town cloſe upon Artois, at the entrance of the Engliſh Chanel: taken by Edward the third after the ſiege of eleven months, Anno 1347, and loſt again by Queen Mary in leſs than a fortnight, Anno 1557. So that had Monſieur de Cordes then lived, he had had his wiſh; who uſed to ſay, That, he would be content to lie ſeven years in Hell, on condition that Calais were taken from the Engliſh. The loſs of which Town was a great blow to our Eſtate, for till that time we had the Keys of France at our Girdles: and as great a grief unto Queen Mary, who ſickning preſently upon it, ſaid to thoſe which attended her, That, if ſhe were opened, they ſhould find Calais next her heart. 2. Hamme, a ſtrong piece, one of the beſt Out-works of Calais. 3. Fiennes, on the borders toward Artois, which with the Country joining to it made an ancient Barony; the Patrimony in times paſt of the Earls of S. Paul, by whom given to Theobald the younger Brother of Lewis Earl of S. Paul and Conſtable of France, (of whom more hereafter) and from that Family conveyed to the houſe of Egmond by the marriage of Francis heir hereof to John Earl of Egmond, who died in the year 1528, and was the Father of that Earl, who after was beheaded by the Duke of Alva, Anno 1568. 4. Andres, more towards the borders of Poulognois, memorable for the interview of Henry the Eighth, and Francis the Firſt; and many meetings of the Engliſh and French Commiſſioners. 5. Guiſnes, which gives name to this Diviſion, called the County of Guiſnes (of which the Land of Oye wherein Calais ſtood (by the French called commonly Pais de Calais) was eſteemed a part). The Earldom anciently of the illuſtrious houſe of Graie, of which more anon.

2. In BOULOGNOIS, neighbouring on the Country of Guiſnes, the places of moſt note, 1. Blackneſs, a ſtrong Fort on the Sea-ſide, betwixt Calice and Boulogne. 2. Chaſtillon, oppoſite to Boulogne, on the other ſide of the water. 3. Boullenberg, more with the Land, an Out-work to Boulogne. 4. Boulogne, by Pliny called Portus Geſſoriacus, part of the Country of the Morini, ſpoken of by Cæſar; divided into the Baſe or Low Town lying on the ſhore ſide, well built, and much frequented by Paſſengers, going to, or coming out of England; and the High Town ſtanding on the riſe of an Hill, well garriſoned for defence of the Port beneath it, and honoured with a a Biſhops See, tranſlated hither from Tourney when that City was taken by the Engliſh. The Town and Country taken by King Henry the eighth, with infinite expence of treaſure, Anno 1544, but yielded not long after by King Edward the Sixth: the French redeeming it at leſs than a fourth part of the money, which the gaining of it had coſt the Crown of England. As for the fortunes of this Country, it was once an Earldom of it ſelf, during which time it gave one King unto Hieruſalem, and another to England. The firſt Earl of it which we meet with, was that Euſtace, who by his marriage with Ida, the Daughter of Geoffry or Godfrey the ſecond, Duke of Lorrein, added the Dutchy of Bovillon in Gaul-Belgick to his Earldom of Boulogne. To him ſucceeded in both theſe Titles and Eſtates, Godfrey, ſirnamed of Bovillon his eldeſt Son: who after the death of Godfrey the third his Couſin-german attained unto the Dukedom of Lorrein, and finally was the firſt and moſt renowned King of the Weſtern Chriſtians reigning in Hieruſalem. Godfrey being dead, Euſtace the youngeſt of his Brethren became Earl of Boulogne: whoſe daughter Maud brought this Eſtate and Title to Steven of Blais, who afterwards was King of England. Euſtace the only Son of Steven dying without iſſue, the rights hereof remained in his Siſter Mary, the Abbeſs of Ramſey, married to Matthew Brother of Philip of Elſats Earl of Flanders. And though Matthew was commanded by the Pope to reſtore her again unto the Abbey out of which he had taken her; yet he kept this Country for her Children. Conveyed by Ida the eldeſt Daughter of this Bed to Reginald of Chaſtris her third husband; by Maud his daughter to Philip ſecond Son of Philip Auguſtus King of France, by another Maud (he dying without iſſue) to Alfonſo of Portugal, who ſucceeding after in that Kingdom, ſent her back to Boulogne: and finally by Joan daughter and heir of William, this Alfonſus Grandchild to Philip Earl of Artois, the Son of Eudes Duke and Earl of Burgundy, to whom ſhe brought Philip their only Son, ſucceſſour to his Grand-father in the ſaid Eſtates, and to his Mother in this Earldom. But he deceaſing without iſſue, Anno 1361, and Joan not leaving any children by King John of France, whom ſhe married after the death of her firſt Husband, it fell by ſome other of the Heirs General to the De la Tours of Avern (the Anceſtors of the now Dukes of Bovillon) continuing in that Family till the year 1477, when bought by Lewis the eleventh of France of Bertrand de la Tour, the better to aſſure his Kingdom on that ſide againſt the Engliſh then poſſeſſed of the Country of Guiſnes. The purchaſe being made, Lewis the now Proprietor, did Homage for it to the Virgin Mary, in the chief Church thereof called Noſtre Dame, bare-headed, on his knees, without Spurs or Girdle: and offered to her Image a maſſie Heart of gold of 2000 ounces; capitulating that from thenceforth he and his Succeſſors would hold that Earldom of her only, in perpetual Homage; and at the change of every Vaſſal preſent her with a golden heart of the ſame weight. Since which time never aliened from the Crown of France; nor giving title unto any but to Katharine de Medices Wife of Henry the Second, created Counteſs of Boulogne and Clermont, when firſt married to him, he being then Duke of Orleans only.

The Arms hereof under the ancient Earls of Boulogne, were Or, a Banner Gules, tuffed Purple: thoſe of De la Tour, being a Tower embattelled Sable; but the colour of the Field I do no where find.

3. PONTHIEV, ſo called from the Bridges, built for conveniency of paſſage over the mooriſh Flats thereof, belonged formerly to the Engliſh; to whom it came by the Marriage of Eleanor, Daughter of Ferdinand of Caſtile, by Joan the Daughter and Heir of Simon the laſt Earl hereof, to King Edward the Firſt. Towns of moſt note in it, 1. Abbeville, ſeated on the Some, well fortified and as ſtrongly garriſoned, as a Frontier Town upon Artois: on one ſide unaſſaultable by reaſon of a deep and mooriſh Fen, which comes up cloſe to it; beautified with a fair Abbey, whence it had the name (Abbatis Villa in the Latin) and the See of a Biſhop. 2. Monſtreville, a well fortified Town, in the way betwixt Abbeville and Boulogne, and a ſtrong out-work unto Paris. 3. Creſſie, where King Edward the third defeated the great Army of Philip de Valois, in the firſt onſets for that Kingdom, Anno 1343. And 4. Treport, a ſmall Haven on the Eaſt of S. Valeries. Some place the Earldom of S. Paul in this Country of Pontbieu, others more rightly in Artois, where we mean to meet with it. The Arms hereof were Or, three Bends Azure.

4. And as for the Country of SAINTERRE, which is the fourth part of the Lower Picardie, the chief Towns of it are 1. Peronne, upon the River Some, where Lewis the eleventh, the greateſt Maſter of State-craft for the times he lived in, put himſelf moſt improvidently into the hands of Charles of Burgundy, who as improvidently diſmiſſed him. 2. Roy, and 3. Mont Didier, (Mons Deſiderii in Latin) both of them ſtrong Towns upon the Frontier; but otherwiſe of little fame in former Stories.

In the Higher Picardie being that part of this Country which lieth furtheſt from the Sea, the firſt diviſion which occurreth, is the Vidamate of AMIENS, ſo called of the fair City of Amiens, and the Vidame or chief Governour of it. Which honour as it is peculiar to the French only; ſo Mills in his Edition of Glovers Catalogue of Honour, will have but four at all in France, viz. this of Amiens, Chalons, Gerberoy, and that of Chartres. But certainly in France there are many more of them; as at Rhemes, Mans, &c. and formerly as many as it had Biſhops; the Vice-dominus or Vice-dame, being to the Biſhop in his Temporals, as the Chancellor in his Spirituals; or as the Vice-comites (Viſcounts) were anciently to the Provincial Earls in their Courts of Judicature; or to give you an example nearer home and of more reſemblance, theſe French Vidames were unto their ſeveral and reſpective Biſhops, as the Temporal Chancellor (in this Realm) of the Biſhoprick of Durham, or the High Steward of the Biſhoprick of Ely, to thoſe ſeveral Biſhops.

Places of moſt note herein, 1. Corbie, a Town of great importance, and ſtrongly Garriſoned, ſituate on the Frontier towards the Netherlands; 2. Chaune, on the ſame Frontier alſo, but of leſs conſideration, the Honorary ſeat and Title of the preſent Vidame; 3. Piquigni, ſituate on a pretty aſcent of ground overlooking the Some, on the left hand of the River betwixt Amiens and Abbeville, the ordinary ſeat of the former Vidames; more famous for the enterview of Edward the Fourth of England, & Lewis the 12. than for giving the name of Picardie to all the Province; which Mercator only of all writers doth aſcribe unto it. 4 Crony an obſcure Village, now but formerly of ſpecial note for a goodly Caſtle, commanding over the adjoining Territory, and giving name to the illuſtrious Family, hence ſurnamed of Crouy, deſcended from the Kings of Hungary, and the Progenitors of the Dukes of Arſchoh, and Princes of Chimay in the Netherlands; before their tranſlating to which Countries by the Dukes of Burgundy, they were entituled Earls of Guiſnes. 5. Amiens it ſelf, ſeated upon the Some above Piquigni, the River being there divided into many Streams for the uſe and ſervice of the Town; well built, with very ſtrong walls and deep ditches: the loſs whereof, when taken by Archduke Albert, much hazarded the affairs and reputation of King Henry the 4. and therefore when he had regained it, he added to the former Works an impregnable Citadel. But the chief glory of this City is in the Cathedral, the faireſt and moſt lovely ſtructure in the Weſt of Europe: ſo beautified within and adorned without, that all the excellencies of Coſt and Architecture, ſeem to be met together in the compoſition. The Fronts of our Cathedrals of Wells and Peterburgh, the rich Glaſs in the Quire at Canterbury, the coſtly Imagery, and arched Butreſſes in the Chappel at Weſtminſter (before the late defacements of thoſe Cathedrals) might ſerve as helps to ſet forth the full beauties of it. The Towns and Territories anciently under the command of the Biſhops of it, whoſe Officers for the Temporal government hereof called Vice-domini or Vidames, were at firſt eligible by the Biſhops, and accomptable to them, but by degrees engroſſing all power unto themſelves, they became Hereditary, and gave the name of the Vidamate of Amiens to this part of Picardy. The preſent Vidame of it is the Duke of Chaune, who being one of the younger Brothers of Monſieur de Luyne (chief favourite to K. Lewis 13.) obtained in marriage the daughter and heir of the former Vidames, with whom he had the Town and Caſtle of Piquigni, the chief command of theſe parts, and a rent of 9000 l. per annum, honoured thereupon by the power and favours of his Brother with the title of the Duke of Chaune and Peer of France, Anno 1620, or thereabouts.

II. But not to dwell on this place too long, paſs we on next to VEROMANDOIS, the ancient habitation of the Veromandui: the faireſt and largeſt part of both Picardies; and not a whit inferiour to the beſt of France, in the number of neat and populous Cities.

The principal Towns hereof are, 1. Soiſſons, called anciently Auguſta Sueſſionum, the chief City of the Sueſſones or Sueſſions: and the laſt Hold which the Romans had in all Gaul; loſt by Siagrius, Governour for the Weſtern Emperor, to Clouis the fifth King of the French. In the diviſion of his Kingdom, made the ſeat Royal of Clotair the Son of this Clouis; and of Aribert, and Chilperick, the Sons of Clotair, from hence entituled Kings of Soiſſons; their Kingdom containing the whole Province of Belgica ſecunda, or the Provinces of Artois, Picardy, and Champagne as we call them now. But Soiſſons having long ſince loſt the honour of a Regal Seat, hath of late times been made the honourary Title of the Counts of Soiſſons, a branch of the Royal ſtock of Bourbon; a Biſhops See, and ſituate on the River of Aiſne. 2. Laon, a Biſhops See alſo, the Biſhop whereof is one of the Twelve Peers of France, and Earl of Laon; the Town in Latin, Laodunum. 3. Noyon, in Latin, Noviodunum, an Epiſcopal See alſo. 4. Chapelle, a ſtrong piece, one of the beſt out-works of Paris againſt the Netherlands. 5. D'Ourlans, 6. La Fere, and Han, places of great ſtrength alſo, but more near the Frontiers. And 7. S. Quintin, anciently the chief City of the Veromandui, then called Auguſta Veromanduorum: called afterwards S. Quintin, from that Saint here worſhipped, as the Patron Deus tutelaris of it. A place of great importance for the Realm of France; and ſo eſteemed in the opinion of the Earl of Charalois, (after Duke of Burgundy) and King Lewis the 11. the firſt of which never digeſted the reſtoring of it to that King, being pawned unto his Father (together with Corbie, Amiens, and Abbeville) for no leſs than 400000 Crowns; the later never would forgive the Earl of St. Paul for detaining it from him, though under colour of his ſervice. A Town of greater note in ſucceeding times, for the famous battel of S. Quintins Anno 1557. wherein King Philip the ſecond of Spain, with the help of the Engliſh, under command of the Earl of Pembroke; overthrew the whole Forces of the French, made themſelves Maſters of the Town, and thereby grew ſo formidable to the French King, that the Duke of Guiſe was in poſt haſte ſent for out of Italy, (where his affairs began to proſper) to look unto the ſafety of France it ſelf. As for the Fortunes of this part it was once an Earldom of it ſelf, and an Earldom of as great Antiquity as the moſt in France; it being one Heribert or Hebert Earl of Veromandois, who in purſuance of the quarrel of the Houſe of Anjou ſurpriſed Charles the Simple, and carried him Priſoner to Peronne, where he after died; for which deſervedly hanged by Lewis ſurnamed Tranſmarine the Son of Charles, when he became poſſeſſed of his Fathers Kingdom; by the Daughter and Heir of another Hebert, conveyed in marriage unto Hugh ſurnamed the Great, one of the younger Sons of King Henry the firſt of France, ſucceeding in her right into the title and eſtate of Earl of Veromandois, and by that name renowned in the firſt wars for the Holy Land. By Elizabeth the Neece of this Hugh, the Daughter of Rodolphus his eldeſt Son married to Philip of Elſatz Earl of Flanders, it was added unto that eſtate; but ſhortly after given by the ſame Philip (having no children of his own) in Dower with Iſabel his Neece, daughter of Baldwin Earl of Hainalt unto Philip Auguſtus King of France, and ſince united to that Crown, not giving ſince that time the title of Earl or Duke to any, for ought I can find.

III. More towards Hainalt and Lorrein lieth the Country of RETHELOIS, ſo called of Rethel the chief Town: well fortified as the reſt of the Frontier places; but of moſt note among the French, in that the eldeſt Sons of the Dukes of Nevers, have uſually been entituled Earls and Dukes of Retbel; united to that Family by the marriage of Lewis of Flanders, Earl of Nevers, with the daughter and heir of James Earl of Rethel, An. 1312, or thereabouts. 2. S. Monhaud, a Town of conſequence and ſtrength. 3. Sygni, a ſtrong piece belonging to the Marqueſs of Vieu ville. 4. Chaſteau-Portion, of more beauty, but of like importance. The Arms of the Earls and Dukes of Rothel were Gules, three Rakes-heads indented Or.

IV. Finally in the Dutchy of TIERASCHE, the laſt part of the higher Picardy, we have the Town of Guiſe, of ſome note for the Caſtle, but of more for the Lords thereof, of the Ducal Family of Lorrein (on the borders whereof it ſtandeth) from hence entituled Dukes of Guiſe. A Family which within a little compaſs of time produced two Cardinals, the one entituled of Guiſe, the other of Lorrein; ſix Dukes, that is to ſay, the D. of Guiſe, Mayenne, Aumal, Elbeuf, Aguitlon, and Cheureuſe; the Earl of Samarive; and beſides many daughters married into the beſt houſes in France, one married to James the fifth King of the Scots. The firſt, and he that gave the riſe unto all the reſt of this potent Family, was Claud, Son to Rene the ſecond Duke of Lorrein, who paſſing into France to take poſſeſſion of the Patrimony allotted to him, followed King Henry the firſt in the War of Italy, where he behaved himſelf ſo valiantly at the Battel of Marignum, in which he had the chief command of the German Auxiliaries, that the King always after held him in a great eſteem, and married him to Anto Reette of Burbon, daughter of Francis, Earl of Vendoſme; in reſpect of which alliance, and his other merits, he was honoured with the title of Duke of Guiſe; The Father (amongſt other children) of Mary Q. of Scots, Wife of James the fifth, and Grandmother of James the ſixth, the firſt Monarch of Britain. The ſecond was Francis, who endangered the Realm of Naples, reſiſted the ſiege of the Emperor Charles at Metz, drove him out of Provence, took Calice from Q. Mary, and was at laſt treacherouſly ſlain at the ſiege of Orleans, by one of the Hugonots named Poltrot, (on the inſtigation of ſome of the chiefs of that faction) An. 1463. The third was Henry that great enemy of the Proteſtants, who contrived the great Maſſacre at Paris, and almoſt diſpoſſeſſed Henry the third of all France: He began the holy league, and was finally ſlain at Blais, by the command of King Henry the third. But we muſt know that this Town did anciently belong to the Dukes of Lorrein: and had given the title of Earl of Guiſe to Frederick the ſecond Son of John, and Charles the third Son of Rene, both the firſt of thoſe names; before Claud of Lorrein was advanced to the title of Duke; as being part of the Eſtate and Patrimony of the Barons of Join-ville, of whom we ſpake before when we were in Champagne. Of moſt note next to Guiſe it ſelf, is 2. Ripemont on the South of Guiſe. 3. Chaſtelet upon the borders towards Luxembourg, a ſtrong Town, and one of the beſt out-works of France. 4. Mazuers, upon the Maes or Meuſe, a place of great ſtrength and like importance; belonging properly to the Dukes of Nevers (as chief Lords thereof) in right of their deſcent from the houſe of Rethel: fortified with a ſtrong Citadel for defence of the place, and that Citadel well garriſoned by the French King, for defence of this border; laid to the Government of Champagne, though a Town of Picardy, and therefore made by ſome to belong to that Province alſo.

As for the ſtate of this whole Province, I do not find that it was ever paſſed over by the French Kings unto any one hand: as almoſt all the reſt of France had been at ſome time or other, but diſtracted unto divers Seigneuries and ſeveral Lordſhips (all of them abſolute in themſelves, and ſcarce affording to the French King the ſlight tribute of Homage) the particulars whereof we have ſeen before: ſome of which fell to the Crown of France by confiſcations, ſome by lawful marriages, and others by conqueſt; ſome held of England, ſome of the Earls of Artois, and others of Flanders, and laſtly of the Dukes of Burgundy, as Lords of thoſe Provinces: thoſe which depended upon England, being ſeized on by Charles the 7. on the loſs of Normandy by the Engliſh; as thoſe which held of Burgundy, were by Lewis his Son, immediately on the death of Duke Charles, at the Battel of Nancy, Anno 1476.

4. NORMANDIE.

NORMANDIE is bounded on the Eaſt with the River Some, and part of Picardy, on the Weſt with Bretagne, and ſome part of the Ocean, on the North, with the Engliſh Chanel, by which divided from England; and on the South, with France ſpecially ſo called, and the County of Main. It made up the whole Province of Lugdunenſis ſecunda, in the time of the Romans; the Metropolis whereof was Roven: and in the greatneſs of the French Empire had the name of Neuſtria, corruptly ſo called for Weſtria; the name of Weſtria or Weſtenrich, being given by ſome to this part of the Realm of Weſt-France, as that of Auſtria or Oſtenrich to a part of Eaſt-France. Afterwards being beſtowed upon the Normans by Charles the Simple, it was called Normandie.

This flouriſhing and rich Dukedom of Normandy, for laregeneſs of Extent, multitudes of People, number and ſtatelineſs of Cities, fertility of Soil, and the commodiouſneſs of the Seas, may worthily be accompted the chief of France. Well watered with the River Seine which runneth quite through it; as do alſo 2. the Orne, and 3. the Aven: not to ſay any thing of 4. Robee, 5. Ante, and 6. Reinelle, and many others of leſs note. In length it reacheth about 170 miles, and about 60 in breadth, where it is narroweſt: containing in that round the largeſt and faireſt Corn-fields that are to be ſeen in all France. Of all other natural commodities it is extream plentiful, excepting Wines; which the Northern coldneſs of the Climate admits not of, or ſparingly at the beſt, and of no perfection. The people of it formerly renowned for feats of Arms, the Conquerors of England, Naples, Sicil, and the Kingdom of Antioch in the Eaſt; at this time thought to be of a more ſharp and ſubtil wit, than the reſt of the French, Scavans au poſſible ed proceces & plaideries (ſaith Orteleus of them) eſpecially in the quillets of Law.

It is divided into the Higher and the Lower: the Lower containing the Sea-coaſts, and the Higher, the more Inland parts. Principal Cities of the whole, 1. Conſtance, a Biſhops See, the Spire or Steeple of whoſe Cathedral, is eaſily diſcernable afar off, both by Sea and Land, and ſerveth Sailers for a Land-mark. From hence the Country hereabouts hath the name of Conſtantine. 2. Auranches ſituate on a Rock with a fair proſpect over the Engliſh Chanel, but more near to Bretagne, than the other; the chief City of the Abrincantes, called Ingena by Ptolomy; now a Biſhops See. 3. Caen (Cadomum in Latin) an Epiſcopal See, as the other; ſtrong, populous, and well built, ſeated upon the River Orne, ſecond in reputation of the whole Province, but more eſpecially famous for the Sepulchre of William the Conquerour, the Univerſity founded here by King Henry the fifth of England, and for the long reſiſtance which it made againſt him, in his Conqueſt of Normandy. 4. Baieux (the Civitas Baiocaſſium of Antoninus) from whence the Country round about hath the name of Belſin. Memorable of a long time for a See Epiſcopal. One of the Biſhops whereof, called Odo, Brother unto William the Conqueror, by the Mothers ſide, was by him created Earl of Kent; and afterwards on ſome juſt diſpleaſure committed priſoner. For which, when quarrelled by the Pope, (the Clergy being then exempted from the Secular Powers) he returned this anſwer, That he had committed the Earl of Kent, not the Biſhop of Bayeux: By which diſtinction he avoided the Popes diſpleaſure. 5. Roven, of old Rotthomagum, pleaſantly ſeated on the Seine, and watered with the two little Riverets of Robee, and Reinelle, which keep it very ſweet and clean. The City for the moſt part well built, of large circuit, and great trading; the ſecond for bigneſs, wealth, and beauty, in all France: anciently the Metropolis of this Province, and an Archbiſhops See; and honoured of late times with a Court of Parliament, erected here by Lewis the twelfth, Anno 1501. In the Cathedral Church hereof (a reverend, but no beautiful Fabrick) is to be ſeen the Sepulchre of John Duke of Bedford, and Regent of France for King Henry the ſixth: which when an envious Courtier perſwaded Charles the 8. to deface; God forbid (ſaid he) that I ſhould wrong him, being dead, whom living all the power of France was not able to withſtand, adding withal, That he deſerved a better Monument than the Engliſh had beſtowed upon him. And to ſay truth, the Tomb is but mean and poor, ſhort of the merits of the man, and carrying no proportion to ſo great a virtue.

6. Falaiſe,

6. Falaise, upon the River Ante, once of strength and note; the dwelling-place of Arlette, a Skinners daughter, and the Mother of William the Conquerour; whom Duke Robert, passing through the Town, took such notice of, (as he beheld her in a Dance amongst other Damosels) that he sent for her to accompany him that night in bed, and begot on her William the Bastard, Duke of Normandy, and King of England. Her immodesty that night said to be so great, that either in regard thereof, or in spight to her Son, the English called all Strumpets by the name of Harlots, the word continuing to this day. 7. Verneville, (Vernolium in Latin) in former times accounted one of the Bulwarks of Normandy, against the French. Of which it is reported, that when news was brought to Richard the first, that Philip sirnamed Augustus, the French King, had laid siege unto it, he should say these words; I will never turn my back, till I have confronted those cowardly Frenchmen. For performance of which Princely word, he caused a passage to be broken through the Palace of Westminster, and came so unexpectedly upon his Enemies, that they raised their siege, and hastned homewards. 8. Alanson, of most note for giving the title of Earl, and Duke, to many Princes of the Royal Family of Valois, beginning in Charles de Valois, the Father of Philip de Valois, French King; and continuing for eight successions, till the death of Charles the Fourth, Duke of this line: conferred occasionally after that, on many of the younger Princes of the Royal Family. 9. Lysieux, on the North east of Alanson, a Bishops See, the chief Town of the Lexovii; as 10. Caux, of the Caletes, both placed by Cæsar in these parts. 11. Eureux, an Episcopal See also, by Ptolomy called Mediolanium, the chief City anciently of the Eburones, and still a rich and flourishing Town; the third in estimation of all this Province, and made an Earldom in the person of Lewis a younger Son of Philip the third; whose Son, called Philip, by his marriage with Joan Daughter of Lewis Hutin, attained unto the Crown of Navarre. But this Town, with many fair Estates in this Country which depend on it, being seized on by the French in the time of Charles the Son of this Philip, for some practices against that Kingdom; there was after given to Charles the third and last King of this house, in compensation for the same, Anno 1406, the title of Duke of Nemours, with a good sum of ready money, and a pension of 1200 l. sterling, yearly, issuing out of the Revenues of Brie and Champagne. 12. Guisors, a strong Frontier Town towards France, whilst Normandy was in the hands of the English, or under its own Dukes and Princes: notable for the many repulses given unto the French. And 13. Pontoyse, another Frontier upon France; so called of the Bridge on the River of Oyse, (which divides France from Normandy) on which the Town is situate, and by which well fortified on that side; but taken at the second coming of Charles the 7. after an ignominious flight hence, upon the noise only of the coming of the Duke of York, Commander at that time of the Province, and the English Forces. 14. Albemarl, contractedly Aumerl, most memorable for giving the Title of Earl to the Noble Family De Fortibus, Lords of Holderness in England; and of Duke, to Edward Earl of Rutland, after Duke of York. More towards the Sea, 15. S. Valeries, seated on a small, but secure Bay, betwixt Dieppe and New-Haven. 16. Dieppe, at the mouth of a little River so named, opening into a large and capacious Bay: a Town of Trade, especially for the New-found-Land: remarkable for its fidelity to Henry the 4. in the midst of his troubles; when the Confederates of the Guisian Faction, called the Holy League, had outed him of almost all the rest of his Cities, compelled him to betake himself hither, (from whence he might more easily hoise sail for England) and called him in derision, The King of Dieppe. 17. New-Haven, the Port-Town to Rouen and Paris, situate at the mouth of the River Seine, from hence by great Ships navigable as far as Rouen; by lesser, unto Pont de l' Arch, 70 miles from Paris: the Bridge of Rouen formerly broken down by the English, to secure the Town, lying unrepaired to this day, by means of the Parisians, for the better trading of their City. By the French it is called Havre de grace, and Franciscopolis by the Latins; repaired and fortified (the better to confront the English) by King Francis the First, and from thence so named. Delivered by the Prince of Conde, and his faction, into the hands of Queen Elizabeth of England, as a Town of caution, for the landing of such Forces as she was to send to their relief, in the first Civil-War of France about Religion: and by the help of the same Faction, taken from her again, as soon as their differences were compounded. By means whereof, the Hugonots were not only weakned for the present, but made uncapable of any succours out of England for the time to come: and the next year were again warred on by their King, with more heat than formerly. 18. Harflew, and 19. Honflew, both situate on the banks of the Seine, but of little notice at the present, because not capable of any great shipping; nor useful in the way of Trade, by reason of the interposition of New-Haven, betwixt them and the Sea: the former, famous notwithstanding in our English Stories; as the first Town which that Victorious Prince King Henry the Fifth, attempted and took in, in France. 20. Churburg, (the Latins call it Cæsaris Burgum) on the Sea-side also, the last Town which the English held in the Dukedom of Normandie: belonging properly and naturally to the Earls of Eureux, advanced unto the Crown of Navarre; till alienated by Charles the third of Navarre, on the composition before mentioned; but being garrisoned by the English for King Henry the Sixth, it held out a siege of seven Months against the Forces of France.

Here are also in this Kingdom, the Towns of 21. Tankerville, and 22. Ewe, which have given the title of Earls, to the noble Family of the Greys, and Bourchiers, in England: as also, those of 23. Harcourt, 24. Longuiville, and 25. Aumal, which have given the title of Duke and Earl, to some of the best Houses in France.

In this Country also is the little Signeury of IVIDOT, heretofore said to be a free and absolute Kingdom; advanced to that high dignity by Clotaire, the seventh King of the French; who having abused the Wife of one Gautier de Ividot, (so called because of his dwelling here) and afterward (to prevent revenge) killed the man himself, to make some satisfaction to his Family for so great an injury, erected the Lordship of Ividot, to the estate of a Kingdom; and gave unto the Heirs of this Gautier (or Walter) all the Prerogatives of a free and absolute Monarch, as, to make Laws, coyn Money, and the like. From hence the French call a man that hath but small demains to maintain a great title, a Roy d' Ividot. At last, but at what time I know not, it fell again to a Lordship, and belongeth now to the house of Bellay in Bretagne.

There belonged also to this Dukedom, but rather as subject to the Dukes of Normandie, than part of Normandie it self; the County of PERCH, situate betwixt it and the Province of La Beausse, of which now reckned for a part: and was divided into the higher and the lower. The chief Towns of it, 1. Nogent le Rotrou, of which little memorable, but that it is the principal of Perch Govet, or the lower Perch, and that it took that adjunct from Rotrou, the second Earl of this County, the Founder or Repairer of it, to difference it from another of that name, called Nogent le Roy, a Town of Champagne. 2. Mortaigne, or Moriton; of moſt note in the higher Perch, eſpecially for giving the title of an Earl to John, the youngeſt Son of K. Henry the ſecond, after King of England; as in the times ſucceeding, to the Lord Edmund Beaufort, after Duke of Somerſet. The whole, firſt made a diſtinct Eſtate, in the perſon of Arnulph of Heſdin the firſt Earl hereof. Whoſe Son and Succeſſor, named Rotrou, (of great note in the Wars of Spain againſt the Moors, in behalf of Alfonſo King of Navarre and Aragon, An. 1110) by Maud the natural daughter of Henry the firſt of England, unfortunately drowned with her Brother William, as they croſſed the Seas; had one only daughter, named Magdalen, (or as ſome ſay, Margarite) the Wife of Garcia, the ſeventh King of Navarre, and Mother of K. Sancho, ſirnamed the Wiſe, from whom all the Kings of Navarre have ſince deſcended. But this Family being extinct in a ſhort time after, the Eſtate fell unto the Engliſh, as Dukes of Normandie; and ſo continued till the ſeizure of Normandy by the French, in the time of K. John. After which time, the title of Earl of Perch was given to Charles Earl of Valois and Alanſo, Father of Philip de Valois, French King, of Lewis Earl of Anjou, and of Charles de Valois, Earl of Alanſon; in which houſe of Alanſon it continued, and was commonly the title of the eldeſt Sons of the Dukes thereof.

But to return again to the Country of Normandie; the ancient Inhabitants thereof were the Caletes, Eburones, Lexovii, Abrimantes, ſpoken of before: the Bellocaſſi, or Venelocaſſi, about Rouen: the Salares and Baiocenſes, about Sees and Baieux: all conquered firſt by the powerful Romans; the Romans after by the French; and the French by the Normans. Theſe laſt, a people of the North, inhabiting thoſe Countries which now make up the Kingdoms of Denmark, Swethland, and Norway, united in the name of Normans, in regard of their Northernly ſituation; as in our Hiſtory and Deſcription of thoſe Kingdoms, we ſhall ſhew more fully. Out of thoſe parts they made their firſt irruption about the year 700, when they ſo ranſacked and plagued the Maritime Towns of France and Belgium, that it was inſerted in the Litany, From Plague, Peſtilence, and the fury of the Normans, good Lord, &c. To quiet theſe people, and to ſecure himſelf, Charles the Simple gave them a part of Neuſtria, (from them ſince called Normannia) or Normandy, together with the Soveraignty of Bretagne; enjoyed by them and their Poſterity for many Ages. Their firſt Duke was Rollo, An. 912; from whom, in a direct Line, the ſixth was William the Baſtard, Conqueror, and King of England, An. 1067. After this, Normandy continued Engliſh till the days of King John; when Philip Auguſtus ſeized on all Eſtates in France, as forfeitures, An. 1202. The Engliſh then poſſeſſing the Dukedoms of Normandy and Aquitain; the Earldoms of Anjou, Tourein, Maine, Poictou, and Limoſin; being in all a far greater and better portion of the Country, than the Kings of France themſelves poſſeſſed. The Engliſh after this recovered this Dukedom, by the Valour of King Henry the Fifth; and having held it 30 years, loſt it again in the unfortunate Reign of King Henry the ſixth: the Engliſh then diſtracted with domeſtick factions. After which double Conqueſt of it from the Crown of England, the French diſtruſting the affections of the Normans, and finding them withall a ſtubborn and untractable people, have miſerably oppreſſed them with Tolls and Taxes, keeping them always poor and in low condition; inſomuch as it may be ſaid of them, that they are the moſt beggarly people that ever had the luck to live in ſo rich a Country. But it is time to look on The Dukes of Normandie.

An. Chr.
912	1	Rollo of Norway, made firſt Duke of Normandie, by Charles the Simple; by whoſe perſwaſion baptized, and called Robert.
917	2	William, ſirnamed Longeſpee, from the length of his Sword.
942	3	Richard, the Son of Longeſpee.
980	4	Richard the II. Son of the former.
1026	5	Richard the III. Son of Richard the Second.
1028	6	Robert the Brother of Richard the Third.
1035	7	William the baſe Son of Robert, ſubdued the Realm of England; from thence called the Conqueror.
1093	8	Robert the II. eldeſt Son of William the Conqueror, put by the Kingdom of England by his two Brothers, William and Henry, in hope whereof he had refuſed the Crown of Hieruſalem, then newly conquered by the Forces of the Chriſtian Princes of the Weſt. Outed at laſt, impriſoned, and deprived of ſight by his Brother Henry; he lived a miſerable life in the Caſtle of Cardiffe, and lieth buried in the Cathedral Church of Gloceſter.
1102	9	Henry the firſt, King of England.
1134	10	Stephen, King of England, and D. of Normandy.
	11	Henry Plantagenet, D. of Normandie, and after King of England; of that Name the ſecond.
1161	12	Henry the III. ſirnamed Court-mantle, Son of Henry the ſecond, made D. of Normandie by his Father.
1189	13	Richard I. ſirnamed Coeur de Lyon, King of England, and D. of Normandy, Son of Henry the ſecond.
1199	14	John the Brother of Richard, King of England, and D. of Normandy, outed of his Eſtates in France, by King Philip Auguſtus, An. 1202, before whom he was accuſed of the Murther of his Nephew Arthur, found dead in the Ditches of the Caſtle of Rouen, where he was impriſoned; but ſentenced cauſa inaudita, for his not appearing. After this Normandy ſtill remained united to the Crown of France, (the title only being born by John de Valois, afterwards King, and Charles the fifth, during the lifetime of his Father) till the Conqueſt of it by the Valour of K. Henry the 5. An. 1420, which was 218 years after it had been ſeized on by King Philip Auguſtus, and having been holden by the Engliſh but 30 years, was loſt again, An. 1450, in the unfortunate reign of King Henry the ſixth. Never ſince that, diſmembred from the Crown of France; ſaving that Lewis the 11. the better to content the Confederate Princes, conferred it, in Appennage, on his Brother Charles Duke of Berry, An. 1465; but within two Months after, took it from him again, and gave him in exchange for it, the Dukedom of Guyenne, which lay further off from his Aſſociates.

What

What the Revenues of this Dukedom were in former times, I can hardly say. That they were very fair and great, appears by that which is affirmed by Philip de Comines; who saith, that he had seen raised in Normandie, 95000 l. sterling, money; which was a vast sum of money in those times. As also by this testimony of the D. of Burgundie, who held King Lewis the 11. to be weakned a whole third part in his Estate, by giving Normandie in portion to the D. of Berry. Now they amount unto as much as the Kings Treasurers and Toll-masters are pleased to draw out of it.

The Arms of Normandie were Gules, two Leopards Or, which with the single Leopard, or Lyon, being added for the Dutchy of Aquitain, make the Arms of England.

5. BRETAGNE.

BRETAGNE is bounded on the East with Normandy, and the County of Maine; on the South with Anjou, and Poictou; on all other parts with the English or Gallick Ocean. Watered upon the South-side with the Loir, which divides it from Anjou; but so, as part of this Dukedom, called the County of Raiz, lyeth on the South-side of that River, betwixt it and Poictou.

It was first called Armorica, from its situation on the Sea, as the word importeth in the old Language of that People. But how it came by this new name, is not well agreed on. The general opinion is, That it took this name from the neighbouring Britans, brought over hither by the Tyrant Maximus, rebelling against the Emperour Gratian, Anno 385, by whom this Province was subdued; and from them named Britannia Minor, Little Britain. An Argument whereof may be, that the Language of this people hath still no small affinity with the Welch or British; there being a Tradition also, that the Britains who first came over hither, and married the Women of this Country, cut out their Tongues, for fear they should corrupt the Language of their Posterity. And to this Conquest by the Britans, these old Verses give this further countenance.

Vicit Aremoricas animosa Britannia Gentes,
Et dedit impositio, nomina prisca, jugo.

That is to say,

Gaul-Armorick, the Britans overcame,
And to the conquered Province gave their name.

Notwithstanding, the most probable opinion seemeth to be, That it took this name from the Britanni, an old Gallick people, mentioned by Pliny in Gaul-Belgick; retiring hither on the Invasions and Incursions of the Barbarous Nations; though possibly those Britanni of Gallia-Belgica, might be as well some Colony of the Island-Britans; as the Belgæ, a great Nation in the Isle of Britan, are said to have been a people of Gallia-Belgica. The reason is, because there was no Author before Geffery of Monmouth, who takes notice of this transporting of the Insular Britans by the Tyrant Maximus; no ancient Author, Greek or Latin, making mention of it. And for the Welch or British words, which are still remaining in the Language, they are conceived to be of no other than a remainder of the old Gallick Tongue, which was originally the same with the ancient British, as is elsewhere proved.

The Province is in compass 200 French Leagues: pleasant and fruitful; beautified with many shady Woods, and spacious Downs; sufficiently well stored with all manner of Grain; but destitute of Wine and the choisest Fruits, by reason of the Northernly situation of it. Divided commonly into Hault or High Bretagne, and Basse or Low Bretagne: the first containing the more Eastern, and the last the Western parts hereof. Neither of the two much furnished with navigable or notable Rivers; the defect of which, the Neighbourhood of the Sea supplieth, affording more capacious Havens, and convenient Ports, than any one Province in this Kingdom.

To begin therefore with the Havens: those of most note in the Higher Bretagne, are 1. S. Malo, built on a Rock within the Sea, wherewith at every high-water it is encompassed. A Bishops-See, and a Port very much frequented by the French and Spanish, who use here to barter their Commodities; oftentimes spoiled by the English, in the Wars with France, especially since the time of K. Henry the 7. 2. Blauet, a safe, but little Haven, on the mouth of a little River of the same name also. Impregnably fortified by the Spaniard, An. 1590; when taking opportunity of the Broil in France, and pretending a good title to this Dukedom, on the expiring of the Male-Issue of King Henry the second, he thought by this door to have entred on the whole Estate; but quitted it again on the general Peace made between the Crowns. 3. S. Brieu, (by the Latins called Fanum Sancti Brioci) a Bishops-See, and a well-traded Port, seated upon the English Chanel. 4. Vannes, a Bishops-See also, situate on a capacious Bay, at the mouth of the Vilain; the chief Town of the Veneti, whom Cæsar placeth in this Tract, and makes them to be the mightiest people of all the Armoricans; strongest in shipping, and best seen in Affairs at Sea. 5. Croisse, a little Haven at the mouth of the Loir, and the only Haven of this part on the Gallick Ocean. Then in Low Bretagne, or the more Western parts thereof, there is, 6. Brest, seated upon a spacious Bay of the Western Ocean: the Key and Bulwark of this Country, and the goodliest Harbour of all France. 7. Morlais, a convenient Port, and well frequented. 8. S. Pol de Leon, and 9. Triguier, both Bishops-Sees, both situate on the Sea-shore, and both the chief Towns of the Ossismi, whom Ptolomy and Strabo place upon this Coast: the first of them neighboured by the Promontory, which they call Le Four, the Gobæum of Ptolomy. 10. Kemper Corentin, a Bishops-See also, the chief Town of that part hereof which is called Cournovaille, (and called so for the same reason as Cornwall in England is) situate not far from the Foreland, which they call Penmarch, opposite to Le Four, spoken of before. A Sea-Town this, but not much talked of for the Haven, for ought I can find. 11. Conquet, a well-frequented Road, not far from Brest.

Chief places in the Midlands, 1. Nantes, the principal City of the Nannetes, (by Ptolomy called Condivincinum) a large, fair, strong, and populous City, seated upon the Loir, a Bishops-See, and the Metropolis of Bretagne. 2. Renes anciently the chief Town of the Rhedones, (called Condate by Ptolomy) now a Bishops-See, and the Parliament-City for this County, established here, An. 1553, which maketh it very populous, and of great resort, though not fully two miles in compass. 3. Del, an Episcopal-City also, but unwholsomly seated amongst Marishes. 4. Dinan, a rich and pleasant Town on the River Nance. 5. L' Amballe, the chief Town of the Ambiliates, spoken of by Cæsar. 6. Roban, the title and inheritance of the Dukes of Roban, descended from a branch of the Ducal Family of Bretagne, by Mary the second Daughter of Duke Francis the first, and Wife of John, then Viscount of Roban. 7. Anscnis, the chief Seat of the now Duke of Vendosme, and and the head of his Estates in Bretagne. Of which possessed in the right of his Wife, the Daughter of the Duke of Mencoeur by the Heir of Martignes, another of this Ducal Family. S. Chasteau-Briant, a strong piece on the borders of Normandie, 9. Clisson, the chief Town of the Dutchy of Raiz, being that part of Bretagne which lieth on the South side of the Loir; a strong Town, and fortified with a very good Castle.

The Britans, whosoever they were in their first Original, were questionless one of the first Nations that possessed any part of Gaul, after the Conquest of the Romans. Governed at first by their own Kings, the most considerable of which, was that Aldroenus, or Auldran, the Son of Solomon; who at the sute of the Insular Britans, then distressed by the Scots and Picts, as Geoffry of Monmouth telleth the story) sent over Constantine his Brother with a compleat Army to their aid; who having valiantly repulsed the Enemy, was made King of Britain, An. 433. Of whose posterity more there. Those of Armorica being broken by the puissance of Charles the Great, abandoned the name of Kings, and satisfied themselves with the title of Earls; assumed first by Alain le Rebre, An. 874, but as some say, An. 859, which was somewhat sooner. By Peter of Dreux, the sixteenth Earl; challenging his Estate in right of Alice his Wife, the half-Sister of Arthur, and Daughter of Constance, by Guy of Thouars, her third Husband, the better to secure his title, this Earldom was made subject to the Vassalage of the Crown of France, in the time of Lewis the ninth; by whom John called the Red, the Son of this Peter, was created the first Duke of Bretagne; as being of the Blood-Royal of France, descended lineally from Robert the first Earl of Dreux, one of the younger Sons of King Lewis the Gross. Yet notwithstanding this subjection to the Kings of France, the Dukes hereof reserved to themselves the Soveraign Power, as to write themselves, By the Grace of God, the priviledge of coining Gold, &c. and stood so high upon their terms, that Francis the last Duke, denied to do his homage to Charles the seventh, either upon his Knees, or without his Sword, according to the former custom. For which, being quarrelled by Lewis the 11. the Son of Charles, who was at better leisure to pursue the business, than his Father was, he joined himself with Charles Duke of Berry, and Charles Duke of Burgundy, in a War against him; and thereby drew upon himself that ruine, which he endeavoured to avoid. For, in conclusion, Charles of Berry, as it was thought, was poisoned; Charles of Burgundy lost his life at the Battel of Nancie, 1476, and a great part of his Estate was conquered by the French King. And Francis, this Duke, having embarqued himself in the same troublous Ocean, must needs suffer shipwrack with his Copartners. The French King invadeth Bretagne: the Duke over-charged with melancholy, dies, 1488, leaving Anne his Daughter and Heir, in the Power of Charles the 8. the Son and Successor of this Lewis; who contracts a marriage with the Orphan, and uniteth Bretagne to France. There were many impediments which might have hindred this Marriage, but Charles breaketh through them all. First, Charles himself had been formerly contracted to the Arch-Duke Maximilian's Daughter; but this he held void, because the young Lady was not of age at the time of the Contract. 2. Anne the Dutchess was also contracted to Maximilian; and this he held invalid also, because that being his Homager, she could not bestow her self without his consent. 3. Maximilian had by proxy married her; which marriage he consummated by a Ceremony in those days unusual. For his Ambassador, attended with a great Train of Lords and Ladies, bared his Leg unto the Knee, and put the same within the Sheets of the Dutchess, taking possession thereby of her Bed and Body. But Charles consulting with his Divines, was told, That this pretended Consummation, was rather an invention of Court, than any way firm by the Laws of the Church; and therefore of no power to hinder his pursuit of this Marriage, so advantagious to his Crown. What else remains touching the union of this Dukedom to the Realm of France, we shall see anon; having first looked over the Succession of those Princes, who under several Titles have governed the Estate thereof, according to the best light we can get from Story.

Kings of the Britans of Gaul-Armorick.

385 1 Conan, placed here by Maximus.
2 Grallon, Son of Conan.
3 Solomon, Son of Grallon.
4 Auldran, or Aldroenus, the Son of Solomon.
5 Bodis, Son of Auldran.
6 Hoel, Son of Bodis.
7 Hoel II. Son of Hoel the first.
8 Alain, Son of Hoel the second.
9 Hoel III. Son of Alain.
10 Solomon II. Son of Hoel the third.
11 Alain II. Grandchild to Solomon the second, the last King of Bretagne, of the Race of Conan: who dying without Issue, left his Kingdom unto many Competitors, by whom distracted into many petit Tyrannies, and at last subdued by Charles the Great. And though they did again recover their Liberty and Kingdom, in the time of Ludovicus Pius, who next succeeded; yet they did not hold it long in quiet. Insomuch, as after the murther of two or three Usurpers of the Royal Title, Alain, sirnamed Le Rebre, laid aside that invidious name of King, and would be called only Earl of Bretagne. His Successors follow.

Earls and Dukes of Bretagne.

874 1 Alain le Rebre.
2 Indicael and Colodock, Sons of Alain.
3 Mathrudon, Son in Law of Alain le Rebre.
4 Alain II. Son of Mathrudon.
5 Conan, descended from King Solomon the third.
6 Geofry, Son of Conan.
7 Alain III. Son of Geofry.
8 Conan II. Son of Alain.
9 Hoel, Sisters Son of Conan the second.
10 Alain IV. called Fergent, Son of Hoel.
11 Conan III. Son of Alain.
12 Eudon, Husband of Bertha, Daughter of Conan.
13 Conan IV. Son of Eudon.
14 Geofry II. Son of Henry the 3. King of England, Husband of Constance, Daughter and Heir of Conan the Fourth.
1186 15 Arthur, Son of Geofry.
1202 16 Peter of Breux, in right of Alice his Wife, the half Sister of Arthur.
1250 17 John, the first Duke of Bretagne.
1287 18 John II. Son of John the first.
1305 19 Arthur II. Son of John the Second.
1312 20 John III. Son of Arthur the Second.
1341 21 John Earl of Montfort, Brothers Son of Arthur
1399 22 John V. Son of John of Montfort.
1442 23 Francis the Son of John the fifth.
1450 24 Peter, the Brother of Duke Francis.
1457 25 Arthur III. 2d. Son of John Earl of Montfort.
1457 26 Francis II. Son of Richard Earl of Estampes, the Brother of Duke Arthur 3. the last Duke of Bretagne, of whom sufficiently before.
1484 27 Charles the 8. French King, succeeded in the Duke-

Dukedom of Bretagne, in right of Anne his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Francis the 2.

1498 28 Lewis the 12. French King, succeeded on the death of Charles, in the right of the said Anne, whom he took to Wife: and, to make a way unto her Bed, divorced himself from the Lady Joan his former Wife, Daughter of Lewis the 11.

1515 29 Francis the III. of Bretagne, and first of France, succeeded in the Dukedom in right of Claude his Wife, the eldest Daughter of Lewis the 12. and of Anne of Bretagne: by whom being made the Father of so many Children, that he had little cause to fear that the Crown would be separated from his House; in the year 1532, being the seventeenth of his Reign and Government, caused an Act to pass, with the consent of the States of Bretagne, for the inseparable uniting of that Dukedom to the Kingdom of France, and by that means divested his posterity of it. For his male-issue failing in King Henry the Third, the rights hereof descended on the Heirs general; that is to say, on Isabel, Daughter of Philip the second of Spain, and of the Lady Isabel or Elizabeth his Wife, the eldest Daughter of Henry the second, and Neece to the said Francis the first; and after her decease (dying without Issue) on the Lady Katharine her Sister, married to Charles Emanuel Duke of Savoy. For whom when Philip of Spain claimed this Estate, the French pretended a Law against it of their own deviling, viz. That no Estate being incorporated into that Crown, could be aliened from it. A proper Law, and Cousin-German to the Salique; but such as served their turn by the help of the English, who desired not to have the Spaniards so near Neighbours to them.

Most of our former Earls of Richmond were Earls and Dukes of this House. Their Arms were Ermin.

6. The Dukedom and Estates of ANJOU.

THE Dukedom and Estates of ANJOU, taking them in the full latitude and extent thereof, are bounded on the East with La Beausse; on the West, with Bretagne; and part of Poictou; on the North, with Normandie; and on the South, with part of Berry, and Poictou. In which circumference are comprehended the three small Provinces of Anjou, Tourein, and Main; most commonly accounted of as parts and members of La Beausse, the ancient Inhabitants whereof, in the times of the Romans, were the Andes, as Cæsar (or the Andegavii as Pliny) calls them, the Turones, and the Cenomani, accounted afterwards a part of the Province of Lugdunensis tertia.

The Country for the most part is very fruitful and pleasant, especially in Tourein; as is the whole tract upon the Loire. Anjou is somewhat the more hilly, but otherwise little inferiour to Tourein, affording plenty of white Wines, the best in France; and yielding from those Hills above 40 Riverets, falling into the Loire from thence: the chief whereof are Mayenne, 2. Vienne, 3. Dive, and 4. Sartre.

1. ANJOU, called Andegavia by the Latins, is situate in the midst betwixt Main and Tourein, so called from the Andegavi, the old Inhabitants of these parts. Principal Cities are, 1. Angiers, (by Ptolomy called Juliomagus) of a large circuit, and well built, the See of a Bishop, reckoning in it 15 Parishes besides the Cathedral. It is seated on the River Sartre in a very good air, and therefore chosen for the Seat of an University, founded here by Lewis the second Duke of Anjou, the Son of King John, Anno 1388. 2. Beaufort, a Town belonging formerly to the Dukes of Lancaster, in which John of Gaunt so much delighted, that he caused all the Children that he had by Katharine Swinford, his third Wife, to be called Beauforts: which Beauforts were afterwards Dukes of Somerset, and Exeter, and Earls of Dorset. This Town came to the house of Lancaster, by the marriage of Blanch of Artoys, unto Edmund surnamed Crouch-back, second Son to our Henry the third; created by his Father, the first Earl of Lancaster. Memorable in these latter times for giving the Title of a Dutchess to Madam Katharine, the beloved Mistress of King Henry the fourth, by whom she was Mother of Cæsar now Duke of Vendosm, and of Alexander, not long since the Grand Prior of France. With reference to which, the second Son of the Duke of Vendosme is honoured at this present with the title of Duke of Beaufort: as the eldest with relation to his Mother was made Duke of Mercœur. 3. Baugie, near which was fought that memorable Battel betwixt the English and the French, wherein the English lost the day; and Thomas Duke of Clarence, Brother to Henry the fifth, was there unfortunately slain, Anno 1422. 4. Saumur, pleasantly situate on the Loire, and for long time one of the Cautionary Towns in the hands of those of the Reformed Religion: of whom it is the only entire University in this Kingdom, especially famous for the learned Philip du Morney, Lord of Plessis, sometimes the Governour hereof. 5. Loches, seated on the River Indre, the Castle whereof being mounted on a steep high Rock, is thought to be one of the strongest pieces of all France. 6. La Flesche, of special name at the present for a Colledge of Jesuites, one of the fairest in this Kingdom. The word in the French tongue signifieth an Arrow (whence those who make Bows and Arrows have the name of Flechers.) At Nola in the Realm of Naples, there is another Colledge of them, called D'Arque, the Bow: on which one wittily composed this ensuing Distich;

Arcum Nola dedit, dedit illis alma Sagittam.
Gallia: quis Funem, quem mernere, dabit?

That is to say,

Nola the Bow, and France the Shaft did bring:
But who shall help them to the Hempen-string?

2. On the South-east of Anjou, lieth the Country of TOUREIN, the ancient Seat of the Turones: which, for the wholsomness of the Air, the pleasantness of the Country, and admirable plenty of all Commodities, is by some called the Garden of France. Principal Cities in it, 1. Amboise, pleasantly seated on the Loire, and beautified with one of the faireſt Castles in France, both for the gallantry of the Building, and beautifulness of the Prospect. 2. Tours, by Ptolomy called Cæsarodunum, and the Turonum Civitas of Antoninus; the Metropolis of Lugdunensis tertia, and an Archbishops See: a fair, rich, and well-traded Town, situate on the banks of the Loire, in a most sweet & pleasing Country. Famous, in that those of the Reformed Religion, from the Gate of S. Hugo, at which they used to issue out to their Assemblies in the fields, had the name of Hugonots. Given to them, as some others think, as the Disciples of the night-walking Spirit (or Robin Goodfellow) which they call S. Hugo, in regard they had their first meetings, for the most part, in the nights; as had the Primitive Christians in the times of their Persecutions. Some, more improbably, (and indeed ridiculously) derive the name from the first words of an Apology which they are fabled to have made to the King; which were, Huc nos venimus:

fancying, that as the Proteſtants did derive that Appellation from the words Proteſtams, and Proteſtamur, ſo often uſed by them in their Apologie to Charles the Fifth; ſo from thoſe words, Huc nos, came the name of Hugonots, or Huc-nots. But more aſſuredly famous for the great Battel fought near it by Charles Martel, Mayre of the Palace, and Father of Pepin King of France, againſt an Army of 400000 Moors, led by Alderamen, Lieutenant General in Spain, for Evelid or Iſcam the great Caliph: of which 370000 loſt their lives in the place, Anno 734. 3. Laudun, 4. Richelieu, pleaſantly ſeated in a rich and flouriſhing Soil, as the name importeth. Of no great note, till the time of the late great Cardinal of Richelieu, who took name from hence, by whom it was made one of the neateſt Towns (for the bigneſs of it) in all this Kingdom, and honoured with the Titles of a Dukedom and Pairrie of France.

As for the Fortunes of this Province (for of Anjou we ſhall ſpeak more at large anon) it had a while its own Proprietary Earls of the Houſe of Blais; conferred by Hugh Capet upon Odon Earl of Blais and Champagne: and by him given, together with the Earldom of Blais, to Theobald, or Thibauld his eldeſt Son, (his ſecond Son named Stephen ſucceeding in Champagne); who in the year 1043, was vanquiſhed and ſlain by Charles Martel E. of Anjou, and this Province ſeized on by the Victor, who afterwards made Tours his ordinary Seat and Reſidence. Part of which Earldom it continued, till the ſeizure of Anjou, and all the reſt of the Engliſh Provinces in France, on the ſentence paſſed upon King John. After which time diſmembred from it, it was conferred on John, the fourth Son of King Charles the ſixth, with the ſtile and title of Duke of Tourein; and he deceaſing without Iſſue, it was beſtowed with the ſame title, on Charles the eldeſt Son of Lewis Duke of Orleans (in the life of his Father); the ſame who afterwards ſucceeding in the Dukedom of Orleans, was taken Priſoner by the Engliſh at the Battel of Agincourt, kept Priſoner 25 years in England, and finally was the Father of King Lewis the twelfth.

3. On the North ſide of Anjou, betwixt it and Normandy, lieth the Province of MAINE; Comitatus Cenomannenſis in our Latin Writers. So called of the Cenomanni the old Inhabitants of this Tract in the time of Cæſar; ſome of which, with the Boii, Senones, and other Nations of the Galls had in the former time paſſed over the Alpes, and there poſſeſſed themſelves of thoſe Countries, which now paſs under the name and accompt of Lombardy. The chief Towns whereof are, 1. Mans, Cenomannenſium Civitas in Antoninus, by Ptolomy called Vindinum; ſeated on the meeting of Huine and Sartre; the principal of the Province, and a Biſhop's See: moſt memorable in the elder times for giving the title of an Earl to that famous Rowland, the Siſters Son of Charlemagne, one of the Twelve Peers of France; (the ſubject of many notable Poems, under the name of Orlando Inamorato, Orlando Furioſo, beſides many of the old Romances) who was Earl of Mans. 2. Mayenne, on the Banks of a River of the ſame name, (Meduana in Latin) the title of the ſecond branch of the houſe of Guiſe: famous for Charles Duke of Mayenne, who held out for the League againſt Henry the 4. A Prince not to be equalled in the Art of War, only unfortunate in employing it in ſo ill a cauſe. 3. Vitrun, upon the edge of Bretagne, of which little memorable. 4. La Val, not far from the head of the River Mayenne; of note for giving both name and title to the Earls of Laval, an ancient Family, allied unto the houſes of Vendoſme, Bretagne, Anjou, and other the beſt of France. Few elſe of any note in this little County; which once ſubſiſting of it ſelf under its own natural Lords and Princes, was at laſt united to the Earldom of Anjou, by the marriage of the Lady Guiburge, Daughter and Heir of Helie, the laſt Earl hereof, to Foulk Earl of Anjou, Anno 1083, or thereabouts. The Fortunes of which great Eſtate it hath always followed, ſince that time.

But as for Anjou it ſelf, the principal part of this goodly Patrimony, it was by Charles the Bald conferred on Robert a Saxon Prince, for his valour ſhewn againſt the Normans, Anno 870. Which Robert was Father of Eudes King of France, of Richard Duke of Burgundy, and of Robert who ſucceeded in the Earldom of Anjou; Competitor with Charles the Simple for the Crown it ſelf, as the next Heir to his Brother Eudes, who died King thereof. Slain in the purſuit of this great quarrel, he left this Earldom, with the title of Earl of Paris, and his pretenſions to the Crown, unto Hugh his Son, ſurnamed the Great: who to make good his claim to the Crown, againſt Lewis the 4. Son of Charles the Simple, conferred the Earldom of Anjou, and the Country of Gaſtinois, on Geofry ſurnamed Gryſogonelle, a renowned Warriour, and a great ſtickler in his cauſe, in whoſe race it continued near 300 years. How the two Countries of Main and Tourein were joined to it, hath been ſhewn before. Geofry the Son of Foulk the third, married Maud, Daughter to Henry the firſt of England, and Widow of Henry the Fourth Emperor: From whom proceeded Henry the ſecond, King of England, and Earl of Anjou. But John his Son, forfeiting his Eſtates in France (as the French pretended) Anjou returned unto the Crown: and afterwards was conferred by King Lewis the ninth on his Brother Charles; who in right of Beatrix his Wife was Earl of Provence, and by Pope Urban the Fourth, was made King of Naples and Sicily. Afterwards it was made a Dukedom by King Charles the Fifth, (Tourein being firſt diſmembred from it) in the perſon of Lewis of France his ſecond Brother, to whom this fair Eſtate was given; as ſecond Son of King John of France, the Son of Philip de Valois, and conſequently the next heir to Charles de Valois, the laſt Earl hereof (the King his Brother yielding up all his right unto him). Finally it returned again unto the Crown in the time of Lewis the 11. The Earls and Dukes hereof having been veſted with the Diadems of ſeveral Countries, following in this order.

The Earls of Anjou of the Line of Saxony.

870	1	Robert of Saxony, the firſt Earl of Anjou.
875	2	Robert II. Competitor for the Crown of France with Charles the Simple, as Brother of Eudes the laſt King.
922	3	Hugh the Great, Lord of Gaſtinois, Earl of Paris, Conſtable of France, and Father of Hugh Capet.
926	4	Geofry Gryſogonelle, by the Donation of Hugh the Great, whoſe party he had followed in the War of France, with great fidelity and courage.
938	5	Foulk, Earl of Anjou, the Son of Geofry.
987	6	Geofry II. ſurnamed Martel, for his great valour.
1047	7	Geofry III. Nephew of Geofry the ſecond by one of his Siſters.
1075	8	Foulk II. Brother of Geofry the third, gave Gaſtinois, (which was his proper inheritance) to King Philip the firſt; that by his help he might recover the Earldom of Anjou, from his part wherein he was excluded by his Brother Geofry.

9 Geofry

1080 9 Geofry IV. Son of Foulk 2d.
1083 10 Foulk III. Brother of Geofry; King of Hieſalem in the right of Meliſend his Wife.
1143 11 Geofry V. ſurnamed Plantagenet.
1150 12 Henry the II. King of England, Son of Earl Geofry and Maud his Wife, Daughter of King Henry the firſt.
1162 13 Geofry VI. third Son of King Henry the ſecond, made Earl of Anjou on his marriage with Conſtance, the Heir of Bretagne.
1186 14 Arthur, Son of Geofry and Conſtance.
1202 15 John, King of England, ſucceeded on the death of Arthur, diſpoſſeſſed of his Eſtates in France by Philip Auguſtus, immediately on the death of Arthur, Anno 1202.

Earls and Dukes of Anjou, of the Line of France.

1262 1 Charles, Brother of King Lewis the ninth, Earl of Anjou, and Provence, King of Naples, and Sicilia, &c.
1315 2 Charles of Valois, Son of Philip the third, Earl of Anjou in right of his Wife, Neece of the former Charles, by his Son and Heir of the ſame name; the Father of Philip de Valois, French King.
1318 3 Lewis of Valois, the ſecond Son of Charles, died without iſſue, Anno 1325.
1376 4 Lewis of France, the ſecond ſon of King John, the Son of Philip de Valois, created the firſt Duke of Anjou by King Charles his Brother; and adopted by Queen Joan of Naples, King of Naples, Sicil, and Hieruſalem, and Earl of Provence.
1385 5 Lewis III. Duke of Anjou, and Earl of Provence, and Main; titulary King of Sicil, Naples, and Hieruſalem.
1416 6 Lewis IV. ſucceſſor to his Father in Eſtate and Titles.
1430 7 Rene, the Brother of Lewis, by the adoption of Queen Joan the ſecond, was for a while poſſeſſed of Naples; but preſently outed by Alfonſo of Aragon, and died the titulary King of Naples, Sicil, and Hieruſalem; the Father of Queen Margarite, Wife of Henry the ſixth, and Duke of Bar, in right of Violant his Mother.
1480 8 Charles Earl of Maine, Nephew to Rene by his third Brother Charles, at his deceaſe left Anjou, and all the reſt of his Eſtates to King Lewis the eleventh, An. 1481. Since which never otherwiſe aliened, than as an honourary Title of the third Son of France.

It is to be obſerved here (according to our method in other places) that Rene King of Sicil, &c. and Duke of Anjou, inſtituted an Order of Knighthood, called of the Croiſſant: the Knights whereof carried a Creſcent, or Half-moon, on their right Arms, with this Motto, L' Os en Croiſſant; encouraging them thereby to ſeek the increaſe of valour and reputation.

The Arms of this Dukedom, were France, a Border Gules.

7. LA BEAUSSE.

LA BEAUSSE (not reckoning in the Provinces laſt before deſcribed) is bounded on the Eaſt, with France ſpecially and primarily ſo called; on the Weſt, with Anjou, Maine, Tourein, and ſome part of Berry; on the North, with Normandy; and on the South with Nivernois, and the reſt of Berry. It is called Belſia in Latin Writers; both names derived from the pleaſantneſs and beauties of it; this Country being not only looked on as the Garden of France, but the Nurſe of the great City of Paris, which from the breaſts thereof receiveth the beſt part of its ſuſtenance.

The principal Nations of the whole in the time of the Romans, were the Carnutes, which inhabited the greateſt part, and the Samnitæ near the Loire, part of Gallia Celtica, and caſt into the Province of Lugdunenſis quarta by the Emperor Conſtantine. Divided by the French into the Higher, the Lower, and the Intermediate.

1. The HIGHER BEAUSSE is that part which lyeth next to Normandy, of which the principal Towns are, 1. Dreux, ſeated upon the River Eureux, ſuppoſed to be the ſeat of the ancient Druides, who held here their Parliaments or Seſſions for adminiſtration of Juſtice. The title and inheritance of Robert, one of the younger Sons of King Lewis the Groſſe, and Grandfather of that Peter of Dreux, who ſucceeded Arthur, the Son of Geofry Plantagenet, in the Earldom of Bretagne. 2. Montfort, an Earldom, the title and Eſtate of John Earl of Montfort, ſurnamed the Valiant, who ſucceeded in the Dukedom of Bretagne, by the aid of the Engliſh An. 1341. 3. Chartres, called anciently Carnutum Civitas, (but by Ptolomy, Atricum) from whence the Country hereabouts was called Le Paris Chartrain: ſeated in an uneven place, varied with fertile riſing Hills, ſo that the Eaſt ſide ſtands upon the top of an Hill, and the Weſt ſpreads it ſelf in the bottom of a Plain, through the midſt whereof runs the River Eure, which as ſoon as it comes to the Walls of the City, on the South ſide, divides it ſelf into three branches, two whereof encompaſs the City round about, and the third running through the midſt thereof, ſerveth the Town with many Mills for the uſe of the people: doth afterwards unite it ſelf with the reſt into one main Chanel. A very fair and goodly City, a Biſhops See, and one of the Vidamates of France; anciently giving the title of an Earldom alſo to the houſe of Blois, from the time that Theobald the ſecond Earl of Blois extorted it by ſtrong hand from the Biſhops hereof, about the year 950, continuing in the poſſeſſion of that Family till the year 1300, or thereabouts, when ſold by Mabeult, or Maud, the Heir Proprietor hereof, Wife of Hugh de Chaſtillon, in her right called Earl of Blois, to King Philip the Fair, for an Annual penſion of 4000 Livres. 4. Anneau, a Town of the territory of Chartres, memorable for the great ſlaughter made here by Henry Duke of Guiſe, of the German Auxiliaries, invading France with a right formidable Army in behalf of the Hugonits, An. 1587.

2. The LOWER BEAUSSE is that which lieth towards Nivernois and Berry; and is ſubdivided into Sologne, and Orleanois. In SOLOGNE, which lieth cloſe to Berry, the chief places of note, are, 1. Romarantin, ſeated on the Souldre, the chief Town of this Tract. 2. Mallenzay. 3. La Ferte, or La Ferte S. Bernard, of which nothing memorable. In ORLEANOIS, which lieth more Northwards upon the River of Loyre, are, 1. Jargeau, a Town once of very great ſtrength, and one of the out-works of Orleans. 2. Cleri, called alſo Cleri of Noſtre dame, from the Church there built unto our Lady. 3. Tury, and 4. Angerville, both in the ordinary Road betwixt Paris & 5. Orleans, the principal City of all Beauſſe, called Cenabum in the time of Cæſar; repaired, or rather new built by the Emperor Aurelius, An. 276, from thence named Aurelia, the Country round about it Aurelianenſis, now Orleans, and Orleanois. The Country generally very fruitful and yielding a moſt excellent and delicious Wine; which for the ſtrength and intoxicating power thereof, is baniſhed the French Kings Cellar by especial Edict. The City very pleasantly seated on the River Loyre, well built, situate in a sweet Air, and planted with a Civil and ingenuous People; who are said to speak the best Language of any in France. For a time it was the chief Seat of a distinct Kingdom, (according to the unprovident humour of the Merovignians) the lot of Clodomire Son of Clouis the Great, and of Guntram Son of Clotaire, both Kings of Orleans; as also was Theodorick, the second Son of Childebert King of Mets, on the death of Guntram. But Sigibert his Son being vanquished by Clotaire the second, this Kingdom extending to the shores of the Aquitain Ocean, was added unto that of France. Orleans since that time, content with a lower title, hath of late oftentimes with greater prudence, been made the honourary title of the second Sons of France called Dukes hereof, the first who had the title being Philip the second, Son of Philip de Valois, from a base Son of whose, the Earls of Dunois, and Dukes of Longeville do derive themselves, and Lewis the second Son of Charles the first, Grandfather of Lewis the 11. French King. It is a See Episcopal, a Bailiwick, or Seige Præsidial, and an University. The See Episcopal founded in the Church of St. Crosse, miserably ruined by the Hugonots in the Civil Wars, out of meer hatred to the name. The Seige Præsidial setled here by King Henry the second, 1551, for the ease of his Subjects of these parts, in suites not worth the troubling of the Courts of Paris. The University erected by King Philip le Bel, Anno 1312, though, to speak properly, it be an Hall only for the reading of the Civil Laws, the only learning there professed, and for that considerable. A Town now not of so great strength as in former times, when for some months it held out against the whole power of the English; rescued from them at last by the valour of Joan the Virgin, whose Statue (like a man of Arms) is still preserved on the Bridge-gate of this City; near which great Montacute Earl of Salisbury had his Fatal blow.

The MIDDLE or intermediate BEAUSSE lieth betwixt the former; in which the places of chief note are, 1. Blois, seated also on the Loir, in a sound Air, and fruitful Country; the Nursery for the most part of the Kings Children, for that cause much resorted to by the Nobility, and honoured sometimes with the residence of the Kings themselves: it being in the Council-Chamber of the Kings house here, that Henry of Lorrein, Duke of Guise, the chief contriver of the terrible Massacre at Paris, and Author of the Holy League, was slain by the command of King Henry the third, An. 1589, 2. Chasteau-Dun, the chief Town of the Earldom of Dunois, (the honour and Estate of John Earl of Dunois, commonly called the Bastard of Orleans, one of the best Soldiers of his time, and so approved by his exploits against the English) mounted upon the top of an high Hill, at the confluence of the Loir, and Aigre. 3. Lavardin, most remarkable for giving name and honour to a noble Family, which depending on the house of Vendosme (to the Signeury whereof it doth belong) brought forth that valiant Commander, Monsieur de Lardin, a faithful and couragious follower of King Henry the fourth, in his long War against the Leaguers. 4. Vendosme (Vindocinum in Latin) the chief Town of the Dukedom of Vendosme, not otherwise of note than for the Earls and Dukes which have born this Title: of which as being the Progenitors of the Kings now regnant, I have thought fit to add the ensuing Catalogue; premising first, that this Earldom came to the house of France by the marriage of Katharine daughter and heir of John, the last Earl of the former Race, to John the first, the Earl of the other Family.

Earls and Dukes of Vendosme.

1386	1	John of Bourbon, Grandchild of Lewis the first Duke of Bourbon, the first Earl of Vendosme of this Family.
1432	2	Lewis of Bourbon, a confederate with Joan the Virgin in her actions against the English.
1446	3	John of Bourbon II. from whom descended the Princes of Roch-Suryon, and the Dukes of Montpensier.
1472	4	Francis of Bourbon.
1495	5	Charles of Bourbon, the first Duke of Vendosme from whose youngest son called Lodowick, or Lewis, descend the now Princes of Conde, and Earls of Soissons.
1532	6	Antony of Bourbon, Duke of Vendosme, and King of Navarre.
1562	7	Henry of Bourbon, Duke of Vendosme, and King of Navarre; afterwards King of France also, by the name of Henry the fourth.
	8	Cæsar de Vendosme, of the Sons of Henry the 4. by the Duchess of Beaufort, created by his Father Duke of Vendosme, and once designed his Successor in the Crown of France. Afterwards by the procuremennt of the King his Father, married to the Daughter and Heir of Philibert Emanuel, D. of Mercoeur, (a younger branch of the house of Lorrein) possessed of a fair and goodly Estate in the Dukedom of Bretagne, in the right of his Wife, a Daughter and Heir of the house of Martignes (a branch of the Family of those Dukes). By means whereof the Duke of Vendosme hath not only a large inheritance, but great authority in that Country.

The Arms of the Earls and Dukes of Vendosme, were and are, Azure, six Flower de Lyces, Or, 3, 2, 1. Those of the former Family affirmed by Bara to have been France, on a Bend Gules, three Lions, Or.

But the great Lords of this Country, were the Earls of Blois, possessed not only of the Earldom of Chartres (a fair and goodly Signeury) in the higher Beausse, but also of the whole Country of Tourein, a better Patrimony and Estate than that; which how they were alienated from this House, we have seen before. And as for the Earldom of Blois it self, it contained a large and gallant Patrimony in the middle-Beausse, thereunto belonging; which being after sold to the Dukes of Orleans, gave the first greatness to that House. As for the Earls of Blois themselves, they fetch their Pedigree from one Gerlon a noble Dane (Companion in Arms unto Rollo the first Duke of Normandy) in his acquiring of that Dukedom, by Charles the Simple created the first Earl hereof, An. 920, or thereabouts, branching it self into the houses of Blois and Champagne; sometimes united in one person, but for the most part, and at last, divided into two great Families; Stephen King of England, commonly called Stephen of Blois, derived both his name and Parentage from the Earls of this house, as being Son of Theobald, the fifth Earl of Blois, by Maud one of the daughters of William Duke of Normandy, and King of England, surnamed the Conqueror. From this Theobald the Earls of Blois continued in the Masculine Line, till the year 1219, under nine Princes in the total, of the house of Gerlon: And then it fell by the Heirs General, to the noble Family of Chastillon, continuing theirs till the year 1391, when sold by Guy de Chastillon the last Earl of that House, to Lewis Duke of Orleans, he being then Childless, and wholly governed by his Wife (a Daughter of the house of Namurre) who could not otherwise maintain her great prodigality, but by ready money. United finally to the Crown, by

Lewis

Lewis the Grand-ſon of this Lewis, on his ſucceſſion to the Kingdom, after Charles the 8.

The Arms of theſe great Earls were, Gules, three Palls, Vaire, a Chief, Or.

8. NIVERNOIS.

NIVERNOIS is bounded on the North with La Beauſſe, on the South with Burbonois, on the Eaſt with Champagne, and on the Weſt with Berry: ſo called from Nivernium, or Nevers, the chief Town thereof.

This is the ſmalleſt Province in all this Continent, but to be handled here apart, becauſe not eaſily reducible unto any other, as all the reſt of the leſſer Provinces may be. The Soil not very fruitful of Corn or Wine, but plentifully ſtored with rich Paſtures, and well ſhaded with Woods, in which are found ſome Mines of Iron, interſperſed with Silver, and many Quarries of good Stone, of much uſe for building. The Territory being but ſmall, we cannot look for many Towns, of note and conſequence. Of thoſe that be, the principal are, 1. Ponſigni, remarkable for an ancient Abby, the burial-place of ſome of the old Earls of Nevers. 2. Nevers it ſelf, upon the Loire, beautified with a Bridge of twenty Arches, but otherwiſe not great or fair, though the chief of this ſmall Country, and the ſeat of the Dukes. The reputation which it hath, proceeding ſpecially from the Antiquity thereof, and the Earls and Dukes from thence denominated.

Once part of the Burgundian Conqueſts, and from them won by the French; it came to have Princes of its own, almoſt as early as any other Country in the Realm of France. Who was the firſt that had the title of Earl of Nevers, and therewithal the Lordſhip of this Eſtate, I can no where find; but ſure I am, that in the year 1001, both the Eſtate and Title were enjoyed by Laudin a Noble man of the Burgundian race, who on the death of Henry the 4. Duke of Burgundy, was like to have ſeized on that Eſtate, in deſpight of Robert King of France, who pretended to it. Paſſing through many Families, it came at laſt to the houſe of Burgogne, in the perſon of Odo, the Son of Hugh the fourth of that name, Duke of Burgundy, by the Heir-General of Nevers; and from that to the houſe of Flanders, by the marriage of Yoland, or Burgogne, to Robert of Bethune, Earl of Flanders, 1 12; whoſe Son, named Lewis, married the Heir of Rethell, uniting, by that marriage, theſe Eſtates under his command. Together with the reſt of the Rights of Flanders, it came again, by marriage, to Philip the Hardy, Duke of Burgundy; who with the liking and conſent of his elder Sons, (otherwiſe well provided for) conferred both it and Rethel, on his third Son Philip, whoſe Neece Elizabeth, daughter and heir of John of Burgogne, brought it in marriage to Adolph of Cleve, her Husband, An. 1484. In the perſon of Francis, the fourth Earl of this Houſe, it was made a Dukedom; and by his Daughter Henrietta, Siſter and Heir of Francis the laſt Prince of this Family, was brought in Dowet to Lewis de Gonzaga, ſecond Son of Frederick, Duke of Mantua, An. 1563, whoſe Son Charles ſucceeded his Father and Mother in the Dukedom of Nevers, and Vincent of Gonzaga, his Couſin-German, in the Dukedom of Mantua. And here it is to be obſerved, that though this Eſtate hath paſſed through ſo many Families; yet the Rights and Regalities thereof, have been ſtill continued; not being hitherto reduced (for ought that I can find) under any of the Parliaments of France, as all the reſt of that Kingdom is, but ſuch parts thereof as are either under other Princes, or elſe enjoy the Priviledges of a free Eſtate.

The Arms hereof are, Azure, within a Border Compone, Gules, and Argent, three Flower de Lyces, Or.

9. The Dukedom of BOURBON.

THE Dukedom of BOURBON, in the full power and extent thereof, comprehended Bourbonois, Forreſt, Beau-jolois, and Auvergne; all now reverted to the Crown.

1. BOURBONOIS hath on the Eaſt the Dukedom of Burgundy, on the Weſt, Berry; on the North, Nivernois, and a corner of Gaſtinois; on the South, Auvergne: ſo called from Bourbon, (for diſtinction ſake, called Bourbon Archenbauld) the chief Town thereof. The Country very well wooded, and of excellent paſturage; which makes the people more intent to grazing and feeding Cattel, than they are to Tillage; and is watered with the Rivers of Loir, Yonne, and Allier, which are counted navigable; beſides Aron, Acolin, Lixentes, Lanbois, and ſome leſſer ſtreams.

It is divided into the Higher and Lower: in the Higher which is more mountainous and hilly, there is no other Town of note, than that of Montaigne, ſituate in the Country of Combraille; the Signeury, as I take it, of Michael de Montagne, the Author of the Book of Eſſays. But in the Lower Bourbonois, are, 1. Molins, eſteemed the Center of all France; ſituate on the Allier, a Baillage, and the chief Town of this Country; the River yielding great plenty of Fiſh, but of Salmons ſpecially; the Town adorned with a fair Caſtle, and that beautified with one of the fineſt Gardens in France; in which are many Trees of Lemmons and Oranges. 2. Bourbon Archenbauld, and 3. Bourbon Ancie: the former of the two, ſeated upon the Loir, and giving name to the whole Province; of great reſort by reaſon of its Medicinal waters. 4. S. Porcin. and 5. Varennes Ganat, upon the Frontiers of Auvergne, 6. Chancelle, 7. Charroux, 8. Paliſſe, 9. Souvigni, 10. Amand.

The ancient Inhabitants were part of the Hedui, who being waſted in their wars againſt the Romans, a great part of their Country was, by Julius Cæſar, conferred on the Boii, a German Nation, who coming with the Helvetians into Gaul, and unwilling upon their defeat to go home again, were by him planted in this Tract, at the requeſt of the Hedui, who deſired it of him: and poſſibly the Hedui might be willing to have theſe Boii dwell amongſt them, not only to fill up their numbers, and manure the waſte Grounds of their Country; but in regard of ſome nearer tye that was between them: it being conceived by many Learned men, that theſe Boii, which together with theſe Cenomanni, Senones, and other Gallick Nations, croſſed over the Alpes, had been originally of theſe parts: and being driven out of Italy by the conquering Romans, fell into Germany, and from thence ſent thoſe Auxiliaries to attend the Helvetians in their journey, ſpoken of before. Made ſubject to the Romans, with the reſt of Gallia; and by them reckoned as a part of Aquitannica: it continued under their command, till the coming of the Burgundians, by whom it was ſubdued, and made a part of their Kingdom; in the ſubverting of which Kingdom, it was (together with Beau-jolois) ſubdued by the more powerful French, and how diſpoſed of afterwards, we ſhall ſee anon, having firſt taken a view of the other Provinces.

2. FORREST, is bounded on the East with Beaujolois, on the West with Avergne, on the North with Bourbonois, and on the South with a part of Languedoc. The Country populous and large, but not very fruitful; hilly and mountainous, much of the nature of the Wood-lands. The Air a little of the coldest to afford good Wines; but that sufficiently recompensed by abundance of Pit-coal; by which they have very good fires at a cheap rate. The people are conceived to be none of the wisest, but withall, very greedy and covetous of gain.

The chief Towns in it, are, 1. Mont brison, seated on the Loir. 2. Feurs, seated on the same River, called anciently, Forum Segusianorum, the chief Town of the Segusiani, or Secusiani, whom Cæsar and others mention in this part of Gaul. 3. St. Stephen, (or Estienne) in Feurian, near the head of that River. 4. St. Germans, 5. St. Rimberg, 6. St. Bennet le Chasteau, 7. St. Guermier, &c. of which little memorable.

This Country of Forrest was anciently a part of the Earldom of Lyons; dismembred from it at or about the same time with Beaujolois; and was held by a long succession of Earls Proprietaries of it, as a State distinct, till Regnaud Lord of Forrest, the Son of Earl Guy, by the marriage of Isabel Daughter and Heir of Humbert Earl of Beaujeu, joined them both together; which was about the year 1265; parted again after his decease, An. 1280; Guy being his eldest Son, succeeding in Forrest, and Lewis his second Son, in Beaujeu. How they became united in the House of Bourbon, we shall see anon.

3. BEAUJOLOIS, so called from Beaujeu, the chief Town hereof, taketh up the tract of ground betwixt the Loir and the Soasne; and betwixt Lionnois and Forrest. A Country of no great extent, but very remarkable for the Lords and Princes of it; who have been men of great eminence in their several times. The chief Town of it, is Beaujeu, beautified with a goodly Castle, pleasantly seated on the brow of a rising-mountain, from whence perhaps it took the name; as the great Keep in Farnham Castle, was in the same sense, and for the same pleasant situation, called Joyeux Guard, in the time of Lancelot du Lake, whose that Castle was. Which appears further by a Tower built at Constantinople, by Guischard the third of that name, Lord hereof, (being then Ambassador to the Emperour, from King Philip Augustus) with this inscription, Turris Belli-jocensis; which there continued to be seen a long time after. 2. Belle-ville, where is an Abby founded by Humbert the second, Anno 1158. 3. Ville Franche, environed with Walls by Humbert the fourth; whose Son Guischard the third, above mentioned, founded here a Convent of Franciscans, called to this day, Minorette. 4. Noironde, 5. St. Maurice, 6. Ulsie, 7. Obches, concerning which, there have been long and many Wars betwixt the Earls of Forrest, and these Lords of Beaujeu.

This Country, as that other of Forrest, was once part of the Earldom of Lyons; in the partage of which Estate, it fell to Omphroy, one of the Brothers of Earl Artaud, Anno 989, whose Successors had no other title than Lords of Beaujeu. They were most of them men of great piety, Founders of many Collegiate and Conventual Churches; some of them men of action also: Humbert the second, and the fifth, Adventurers in the Wars of the Holy Land; Richard the second, in those against the English; Guischard the fourth, made Constable of France, by King Lewis the Ninth. But the house failing in this Guischard, it was united unto that of the Earls of Forrest, as before is said, in the person of Regnaud, Earl thereof, whose Son and Successor, called Lewis was also Constable of France; as Edward, the Grand-child of this Lewis, a Marshal of it. But at the last it fell into the hands of a lewd and wicked Prince, Edward the second; who being imprisoned at Paris for his great offences, and overlaid with Wars by the Dukes of Savoy; made a Douation, or Free-gift, of all his Signeuries, to Lewis Duke of Bourbon, sirnamed the Good; the direct Heir of Guy Earl of Forrest, the eldest Son of Regnaud Earl of Forrest, and Lord of Beaujeu above mentioned, and consequently of next kin to him, An. 1400.

4. AUVERGNE hath on the East, Forrest, and Lyonois; on the West, Limosin, Perigort, and Quercu; on the South, part of Languedoc; and on the North, Berry, and Bourbonois. It is divided into the Higher and Lower. The Lower being called Limaigne, is fruitful in a very eminent degree. The Higher, mountainous and barren. In this last, the Towns of chief note are, 1. St. Flour, a Bishops-See of an impregnable situation. 2. Arilla, on the River Jourdain, defended with a strong Castle on the top of a Rock. 3. Beauregard, on the River Gardon. 4. Carlat, 5. Murat, 6. Billon, of which little observable in ancient stories. In the Lower, called Lemaigne, from a River of that name which falls into the Allier: there is, 1. Clermont, a Bishops-See, fair and pleasing for the situation, and Fountains descending from the Hills of the higher Auvergne, the chief City of the whole Province. Most memorable in these later ages, for the Council here called by Pope Urban the second, An. 1067; in which, by the artifice of the Pope, the Christian Princes of the West engaged themselves in the Wars of the Holy Land; giving thereby the better opportunity to the Popes to enlarge both their Territories and their Power. It was first raised out of the ruines of Gergovia, the head City of the Auverni, in the time of Cæsar; and the Seat-royal of Vercingetorix, King of that Nation, who so long put him to his trumps with an Army of 138000 men: now a small Village called Gergeau. 2. Rion, in which resides the Seneschal, or chief Governour of the Lower Auvergne. 3. Montpensier, of great note for the Princes of the house of Bourbon, once Dukes hereof; beginning in Lewis the first Earl, Son of John Duke of Bourbon, An. 1415; and ending in Henry the last Duke; whose Daughter and Heir was married to the Duke of Orleans, Brother of Lewis the thirteenth. 4. Montferant, 5. Yssoire, 6. Brionde, 7. Aigueperse, 8. Turenne, the ancient Seat and Patrimony of the De la Tours, heretofore Earls of Boulogne, now Soveraigns of Sedan, and Dukes of Bouillon; to whom it hath for some ages since, given the title of Viscount. A Family descended from the Heirs-general of Eustace, Earl of Boulogne in Picardy; Father to Godfry of Bouillon, Duke of Lorrein, and King of Hierusalem.

The Country first inhabited in the times of the Romans, by the potent Nation of the Auverni; whose King Bitnitus, was taken Prisoner, and led in triumph unto Rome, in the War against the Salii, the Allobroges, and others of their Confederates. Not fully conquered, till Cæsar had subdued their King Vercingetorix. They were afterwards part of the Province of Aquitania prima; retaining, in the often changes of the Empire, its old name of Auvergn. Heretofore part of the great Dutchy of Aquitain; remaining subject to those Dukes, till William the eighth Duke, and the fourth of that name, gave it in portion with one of his Daughters, whose name I find not, nor the name of her Husband neither; of whom there is nothing on record, but that he took up Arms against Lewis the sixth, who began his Reign, An. 1110. By the Heir-general of this House, it was conveyed in marriage to John the second Son of Guigne Guigne the 4. and Beatrix, Daulphin of Viennois; in whose Line it continued under the title of the Daulphins of Auvergn, till Berault, the last Earl or Daulphin of it. Who having married the Heir of Guy Earl of Forrest, the Son of Regnaud above-mentioned, had by her a daughter named Anne, Heir of both Estates, married to Lewis the Good, the third Duke of Bourbon; to whom Edward the last Lord of Beau-jeu, made a Donation or surrendry of that Signeury also, uniting in his person, the distinct Estates of Bourbon, Beau-jeu, Forrest, and Auvergne.

And as for Bourbonois it self, in the distractions of the French Empire by the posterity of Charles the Great, who most improvidently cantoned it into many great Estates, and petit Signeuries, it fell unto the share of the potent Family of the Dampierre, descended from the ancient House of Burgogne; who held it till the year 1308. At what time Lewis the ninth, for the advancement of Robert Earl of Clermont, (in Beauvoisin) his fifth Son, married him to Beatrix, Daughter and Heir of Archenbald Dampierre, the last of that House. Lewis the Son of this Robert, was the first Duke of this Line; whose Successors and their Atchievements, follow in this Catalogue of The Lords and Dukes of Bourbon.

1308	1	Robert, Son of King Lewis the 9. Earl of Clermont; the first Lord of Bourbon of the House of France.
1317	2	Lewis, the first Duke of Bourbon; Peer, and Chamberlain of France: from whose second Son Jaques, comes the House of Vendosme.
1341	3	Peter, Peer, and Chamberlain; slain in the Battel of Poictiers, An. 1356.
1356	4	Lewis II. called the Good; in whose person all these Estates were first united: Peer, and Chamberlain of France, and Governour of King Charles the sixth.
1410	5	John, Peer, and Chamberlain; taken Prisoner at the Battel of Agincourt, and dyed in England: the Root of the Family of Montpensier.
1434	6	Charles, Peer, and Chamberlain; General of the Army against the English, in the Isle of France.
1456	7	John II. Peer, Chamberlain, and Constable of France.
1487	8	Peter II. Brother of John; Peer, Chamberlain, and Regent of France, in the absence of Charles the 8.
1503	9	Charles Earl of Montpensier, Duke of Bourbon in the right of Susan his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Peter the second, Duke of Bourbon. After whose death, being slain at the sack of Rome, An. 1527, without Issue, his Estate fell unto the Crown, and so continued, till by the Sentence of Arrest of the Court of Parliament in Paris, Auvergne, Forrest, and Beau-jeu, were adjudged to Madam Louise, Mother of Lewis the first Duke of Montpensier, and Daughter and Heir of Gilbert de Bourbon, Earl of Montpensier, the Nephew of John Duke of Bourbon, (the first of that name) of which House she was the only surviving Heir; from whence descended Henry, the last Duke of that Family, spoken of before. And for the title of Auvergne, it was used customarily, by the eldest Sons of the Earls and Dukes of Montpensier; till given to Charles, natural Son of King Charles the ninth; called from hence, the Count or Earl of Auvergne; who being a Confederate of Charles Duke of Biron, was in the year 1604, made Prisoner by King Henry the 4. released by King Lewis the 13. An. 1616. and within two years after made Duke of Angolesme: in whose Posterity it remaineth.

The Arms of these Dukes were, 1. France, a Baston, Gules, for the Dukedom of Bourbon. 2. Or, a Daulphin Palme, Azure, for the County of Auvergne: 3. Or, a Lion Sable, armed Gules, under a Label of five pieces of the same, for the Signeury of Beau-jeu. The Arms of the Earldom of Forrest, I am yet to seek. But anciently, the Arms of Bourbon, when under the Dampierres, were Or, a Lion Rampant Gules, environed with Cockle shells of Azure.

10. BERRIE.

HAving thus taken a view of those several Provinces which (except Bretagne) were the first purchases of the French in the modern France; and so much of the Burgundian Conquests, as were either laid to the Kingdom of West-France, or else were necessarily to be passed over in the course of our Journey: let us next look on those which were possessed by the Gothes. And first we will begin with BERRIE, (as next in situation with those before described) bounded on the East with Bourbonois and Nivernois; on the West with Poictou, and part of Tourein, on the North with La Beausse; on the South with Limosin; in Latin called Biturgium regio, from the Bituriges, the old Inhabitants of this Tract; by Pliny, Strabo, and some others, called the Bituriges Cubi, to difference them from the Bituriges Ubisci, dwelling about Bourdeaux.

The Country watered in the East with the River Laure; in the South, with the Fage; in the North, with the Cher; and in the Inland parts, with Indre, Arnon, Theo, Eure, and others which we shall meet withal anon: of no great note, but such as much conduce to the fruitfulness of it; affording it the benefit of fat Pastures and flourishing Meadows; which breed great multitudes of Cattel, and such flocks of Sheep, that when they tax a man for lying in excess of numbers, they use to say, Fye, Sir, there are not so many sheep in Berrie.

It containeth in it 33 Walled Towns; the chief whereof are, 1. Bourges, a Town of great strength by Nature, and as well fortified by Art, situate in a low Flat, amongst deep impassable Bogs and Marishes, caused by the overflowing of the Auron, Yeure, Malon, and Aurette; small Riverets, but of great waters when they meet together: by means whereof, it may be easily drowned at the approach of an Enemy: for that cause made the Fastness and Retreat of Charles the seventh, in his long Wars against the English, possessed at that time of Paris, and the greatest part of the Kingdom. The poor Prince in the mean time fain to feast it here with a Rump of Mutton, and a Chick, and that but upon high days neither. From his constant abode here, and that withal he had been Duke of this Country, in the life of his three elder Brethren, by the English in derision called King of Berrie. A large, fair, and rich Town it is, the Seat of an Arch-bishop: a Siege-presidial, and one of the best Universities in France, especially for the study of the Civil-Laws; first founded by King Lewis the ninth, and afterwards restored and perfected by Charles Duke of Berrie, the Brother of King Lewis the eleventh. Some Fabulous Founders, and Ridiculous Originations, have been thought of for it; as, that it was built by Ogyges, a Grand child of Noah; by whom called Bytoniges; which in the corruption of the following

ing times, came (forſooth) unto Bituriges; which Etymologie, were it as dear bought, as it is far fetch'd, might be good for Ladies; and then it would be good for ſomewhat. Others, no leſs abſurdly, will have it called Biturís, quaſi Bi-turris, from two fair Towers which formerly (as they pretend) were erected here: one of the two, in part, ſtill ſtanding: and unto this, they ſay, alludeth an old Grammarian, thus:

Turribus à binis, inde vocor Bituris.

From two Towers which were builded here,
The name of Bituris I bear.

But the truth is, it was thus called from the Bituriges, (the Biturigum Civitas of Antoninus) and by that name, in the diviſion of old Gaul by the Emperour Conſtantine, made the Metropolis of the Province of Aquitania prima; of which this Country was a part. 2. Wiarron, or Viarzon, pleaſantly ſeated amongſt Woods, Vines, and Rivers; the Rivers Arnon, Theo, Cher, and Teure, meeting hereabouts: built in or near the place of the old Avaricum, a Town of great note and ſtrength in the time of Cæſar: the revolt whereof gave ſuch a check to his proceedings, that he was fain to ſtretch his wits and valour on the very tenter-hooks, before it was again recovered. 3. Concreſſant, on the River Souldre, beautified with a ſtrong and magnificent Caſtle. 4. Chaſteau-Roux, on the River Indre: of which little memorable. 5. Iſſaudun, on the River Theo, the Balliage for that part of the Country. 6. Montfulcon, an ancient Barony. 7. Argenton, on the River Creuſe, the Title and Eſtate of Philip de Comines, hence called Signeur de Argenton, who writ the Hiſtory of France under Lewis the 11th; in which he dived ſo far into, and writ ſo largely of, the greateſt affairs of State, that Queen Katharine de Medicis uſed to ſay, That he had made as many Hereticks in State-policy, as Luther had done in Religion. 8. Sancerre, ſeated on a high Hill near the River Loire; by ſome Latin Writers called Xantodorum; but moſt generally ſaid to be ſo called, quaſi ſacrum Cereris, from the Goddeſs Ceres, herein worſhipped in the times of Gentiliſm. A Town of great conſequence and ſtrength; and as ſuch, aſſigned over to the Hugonots, An. 1569, as a Town of Caution for their ſecurity, and the better keeping of the Articles of Peace then agreed upon. Famous not long after, for enduring a moſt deſperate and tedious ſiege under Charles the 9. by whom theſe Articles were almoſt no ſooner made than broken. Before which time, it was not under the command of the French Kings, but under the direct dominion of its own Princes, called the Earls of Sancerre, who had the Soveraignty thereof: but being taken by the Kings Forces upon this occaſion, An. 1573, and the Walls thrown down, a Garriſon was put into the Caſtle, to keep it for the time to come at the Kings devotion, the Rents and Profits of it ſtill remaining to the true Proprietaries.

Here is alſo in this Province, the Town and Seigneury of Aubignie, adorned with many Priviledges, an ample Territory, and a beautiful Caſtle. Beſtowed by Charles the ſixth, on Robert, the ſecond Son of Alan Stewart, Earl of Lennox in Scotland, for his many ſignal ſervices againſt the Engliſh; and is ſtill the honourary Title and Poſſeſſion of the ſecond branch of that Noble and illuſtrious Family, hence called by the name of Lords of Aubignie.

But as for Berry it ſelf, and the Fortunes of it, we may pleaſe to know, that the old Inhabitants of it, were the Bituriges Cubi, (or the Biteriges Liberi, as ſome Writers call them) ſubdued, but not without great difficulty, by the matchleſs Cæſar: in the firſt diviſion of Gallia, made part of Aquitain; and in the new-modelling of that Province, by the Emperour Conſtantine, a part of Aquitania prima, won from the Romans by the Gothes, and from them by the French, it was for long time under the command of Provincial-Governours; one of which, called by the name of Godfrey, obtained that dignity from Hugh Capet; and his Poſterity enjoyed that Office under the Kings of France, till the days of King Henry the firſt; of whom the Inheritance and Eſtate was bought by Harpin, one of the deſcendants of that Godfrey. But long he had not held it as Proprietary, in his own right; when deſirous to make one in the Holy Wars, he ſold it back again to King Philip the firſt, (the better to furniſh himſelf for that expedition) An. 1096, to be united to the Crown after his deceaſe. Since which time, the Soveraignty of it hath been always in the Crown of France; but the Poſſeſſion and Revenue ſometimes given, with the title of Duke, for a portion to ſome of the Kings younger Sons, to be holden of them in Apennage, under the Soveraignty and Command of the Donor, and his Succeſſors. The firſt of thoſe that held this title, was John, a younger Son of John King of France, and Unkle unto Charles the 6th; during whoſe Reign, betwixt this Duke and thoſe of Burgundy and Orleans, the Realm of France was miſerably diſtracted into Broils and Factions. The ſecond was another John, Son of Charles the Sixth, who dying in his minority, was ſucceeded in this title by his Brother Charles, Succeſſor to his Father in the Crown it ſelf. The fourth and laſt, (for it had no more than four Dukes in all) was Charles, the youngeſt Son of King Charles the 7th, who ſiding with the Earl of Charolois, did ſo much trouble the affairs of France under Lewis the 11th, by whom he was made Duke of Normandy, and of Guienny afterwards; but held neither long. After whoſe death, it was united to the Crown; never ſince ſeparated from it: but though it never had Duke ſince, it hath had three Dutcheſſes; firſt giving the title of Dutcheſs to the Lady Joan, Daughter of Lewis the 11th, and Wife to Lewis the 12th, then Duke of Orleans, eſtated herein by her ſaid Husband; when coming to the Crown he divorced her from him, to make room for the Lady Anne, Dutcheſs of Bretagne, the Widow of Charles the 8th, his Predeceſſor. Conferred after her deceaſe, but on more honourable grounds, by King Francis the firſt, on the Lady Margaret his Siſter, firſt married to Charles Duke of Alanſon; and after his deceaſe, to Henry of Albert, King of Navarre, the laſt that had this title, being another Margaret, Daughter of the ſaid King Francis, married to Philibert Emmanuel, Duke of Savoy.

11. POICTOU.

POICTOU is bounded on the Eaſt with Tourein, Berrie, and Limoſin; on the North with Bretagne, and Anjou, on the South with Xaintoigne, a member of the Dukedom of Aquitain; and on the Weſt with the Aquitain Seas.

It is called in Latin, Pictavia, from the Pictones, as Ptolomy, Cæſar, and ſome others; or the Pictavi, as Antoninus calleth them, the old Inhabitants hereof: and is a Country ſo great and plentiful, that there are numbred in it 1200 Pariſhes, and three Biſhopricks. A ſtrong argument of the populouſneſs and largeneſs of it. Beſides the goodneſs of the Soil, it hath many other great helps to enrich it; that is to ſay, a large large Sea coast, some capacious Harbours, not a few Navigable Rivers emptying themselves into the Sea: besides the benefit which redounds to it from the Clin or Clavius, the Crevisi, and Vienne, three Rivers falling into the Loire; which also glides along on the North hereof.

The principal Towns and Cities of it are, 1 Poictiers, in Latin Pictavis, seated upon the Clin, or Clavius; by Ptolemy called Augustoritum: the largest City for compass of ground within the Walls, next to Paris it self, but containing in that circuit, Meadows, Corn-fields, and other waste grounds. It is an University, especially for the study of the Civil-Law; and a See Episcopal: one of the Bishops hereof being St. Hilarie, sirnamed Pictavensis, that renowned Father of the Church, and a stout Champion of the Catholick Faith against the Arians, though countenanced in their Heresie by the Emperor Constantius. 2 Souri, upon the River Charente, near the edge of Xaintoigne. 3 Talmont, upon the shores of the Ocean. 4 Beaumoir, a Sea-Town also, and a reasonable good Port, near the confines of the Bretagne. 5 Roch-sur-yon, so called for its situation on the Yon, or Jon; which gave the title of Prince to one of the Branches of the Royal race of Bourbon. 6 Lusignan, on the River Ion; also denominating the noble Family of Lusignan, sometimes Kings of Hierusalem, and afterwards of Cyprus; which last they had in exchange for the first, by the donation of King Richard the first of England. 7 Lucon, or Lusson, seated upon a Navigable arm of the Sea: sufficiently famous in being the Episcopal See of the renowned Cardinal of Richilieu, who so long managed the affairs of France for King Lewis the thirteenth. 8 Mailesais, a Bishops See also. 9 Thouars, which gives the title of Duke to the ancient Family of Tremovile, from which the Dukes of Bretagne did derive themselves; from the time that Constance the daughter and heir of Conan, after the death of Geofrey Plantagenet, her first Husband, had Guy of Thouars for her second. 10 Chastel Herauld, (or Castrum Heraldi) on the River Vienne; of which James Hamilton, Earl of Arran in Scotland, by the gift of King Henry the second of France, the better to assure him to the French Faction there, against the English, had the title of Duke.

In the Vine-fields of this Country, within two leagues of Poictiers, was fought that memorable Battel between John of France, and Edward the son of King Edward the third, sirnamed the Black Prince. Who being distressed by the number of the French, would willingly have departed on honourable terms: which the French not accepting, instead of Conquest, found a fatal overthrow. The greatness and particulars whereof, we shall hereafter see in the life of King John. For they presuming on their own strength, to their own disadvantage, bereft the Enemy of all opportunity of retiring; whereas ordinary Policy would instruct the Leader of an Army, to make his Enemy, if he would flye, a Bridg of Gold, as Count Petillan used to say. Hereupon Themistocles would not permit the Grecians to break the Bridg made over the Hellespont by Xerxes, lest the Persians should be compelled to fight, and so happen to recover their former losses: and Charles the sixth, lost his Army, by intercepting of our Henry the fifth, in his march to Calice. For, where all way of flight or retreat is stopt, the basest Soldier will rather dye with glory in the front of his Battel, than flye and be killed with ignominy. So true a Mistress of hardy resolutions, is Despair, and no less true this Proverb of ours, Make a Coward fight, and he will kill the Devil. On the Contrary, it hath been the use of divers Politick Captains, to make their own Soldiers fight more resolutely, by taking from them all hope of safety, but by battel. So did William the Conqueror, who at his arrival into England, burnt the Ships which transported his Army: thereby giving the Soldiers to understand, that their lives lay in the strength of their Arms, and courage of their Hearts, not in the nimbleness of their heels. Tariff, the Leader of the Moors into Spain, burnt likewise all his Navy, one only Pinnace excepted; which he reserved to carry tidings of his success. So when Charles Martel encountred that infinite Host of the Saracens, (of which you have already heard) he commanded the people of Tours to open the Gates only to the Victors. Then he led his Army over the Loire, placing on the Banks thereof, certain Troops of Horse-men, to kill all such as fled out of the Field. Hereby informing his men, that there was to them no more France, than what they fought on, unless they were Conquerors. In like manner, the same Themistocles cunningly working the Persians to enclose the Greek Navy on every side, enflamed the Grecians with such courage, by a necessity of fight, that they gave their enemies the most memorable defeat that ever happned on those Seas.

But to proceed, the people of this Province have more in them of the old Gaul, than any in France; as lying so betwixt the borders of the Goths and French, that it was never throughly planted or possessed by either. An argument whereof may be, that they are naturally more rude, subtil, crafty, and contentious, than the rest of their Country-men; and have a Dialect by themselves, much differing from the common French, having many words mixt with it, questionless some remainders of the ancient Gallick which the natural Frenchman understands not. In the division of Gaul by the Emperor Constantine, they were reckoned for a part of Aquitania Secunda; and, as a part thereof, won from the Romans, with Limosin, Perigort, and Quercu, by Euricus King of the Goths in Spain. Of whose Kingdom it continued part, till those Goths were dispossessed of their hold in France, by Clouis the fifth King of the French, sirnamed the Great. After which, it belonged to the Kings of that people; by the posterity of Charles the Great, assigned to some Provincial Governours, with the title of Earls. One of which being named Ebles, (of the old Gothish race, if I guess a-right) by the last Will and Testament of William the Debonaire, Duke of Aquitain, and Earl of Auvergne, succeeded in that fair Estate. Poictou, by this means, made a part of the Dukedom of Aquitain, came with it at the last to the Kings of England, as shall there be shewn; and being theirs, was given with the title of Earl, by King Henry the second, to Richard, sirnamed Coeur de Lyon, who was after King. Seized upon by the French, in the unfortunate Reign of King John, with the rest of the English Provinces, Anno 1202. Alphonso, Brother to Lewis the ninth, is made Earl of Poictou: and being again recovered by King Henry the third, it was by him conferred on his Brother Richard Earl of Cornwall. But Henry being entangled in the Barons Warrs, and Richard wholly taken up with the affairs of Germany, of which by some of the Electors he was chosen Emperor; it was fully conquered by the French, and never since dismembred from that Crown, for ought I can find. For, though in the more active times of King Edward the third, some of the best Towns and pieces of it, were possessed by the English; yet were they lost again soon after, according to the various successes and events of War.

12 LIMOSIN, 13 PERIGROT, 14 QUERCU.

THese Provinces I have joined together, becauſe for the moſt part they have followed the ſame fortune; being ſometimes French, and ſometimes Engliſh, according to the ſucceſſes of either Nation.

1 LIMOSIN, the largeſt of the three, hath on the Eaſt, Bourbonnois; on the Weſt, Perigort; on the North, and North-weſt, Poictou, and Berry; on the South, Auvergne. It is divided into the Higher, properly called Limoſin; and the Lower, commonly called La Marche: both parts, but ſpecially La Marche, which lieth towards Auvergne, being mountainous, and not very fruitful; but of a free and open Air: inhabited by a people of a more ſtaid and ſober nature than the reſt of the French, frugal in expence, and moderate in diet; only ſo great devourers of Bread, that they are grown into a By-word.

The chief Towns in La Marche, or the Lower Limoſin, are 1 Tulles, ſeated in a rough and hilly Country; a Biſhops-See 2 Uzarche, ſeated amongſt the Mountains, on the River Vezere, a very fierce and violent current; with which ſo fortified on all ſides, that it is thought to be a very ſtrong and ſecure dwelling. 3 Treinac, 4 Douſenac, 5 Belmont, 6 Meiſſac, 7 Brive le Gaillard, &c. In the Higher Limoſin, the chief Towns are, 1 Limoges, a Biſhops-See, the principal of the Lemovices, from whom denominated; by Ptolemy called Ratiaſtum. A neat, but no large City; rich, populous, and inhabited by a people of ſo great an Induſtry, that they compel every one to work; and is therefore by the French called the Priſon of Beggers: ſeated on the Vienne. At the taking of it when revolted, Edward the Black-Prince could by no means be allured to pity the diſtreſſed Citizens, till purſuing his Enemies, he ſaw three French Gentlemen make head againſt his Army; the conſideration of whoſe magnanimity, drew him to pity, where before he avowed revenge. 2 Chaluz, at the beſieging of which, our Richard the Firſt was ſlain by a ſhot from an Arbaliſt; the uſe of which War-like Engine, he firſt ſhewed to the French. Whereupon a French Poet made theſe Verſes on the perſon of Atropos:

Hoc volo, non alia Richardum morte perire,
Ut, qui Francigenis Baliſtæ primitùs uſum
Tradidit, ipſe ſuî rem primitùs experiatur:
Quamq; aliis docuit, in ſe vim ſentiat artis.

It is decreed, thus muſt great Richard die,
As he that firſt did teach the French to dart
An Arbaliſt; 'tis juſt he firſt ſhould trie
The ſtrength, and taſte the fruits of his own Art.

The man that ſhot him, was called Bertram de Gurdon; who being brought before the King, (for the King neglecting his wounds, never gave over the Aſſault, till he gained the place) boldly juſtifyed his action, as done in the ſervice of his Country; and for revenge of the death of his Father and Brother, whom the King had cauſed to be ſlain. Which heard, the King not only cauſed him to be ſet at liberty, but gave him an hundred ſhillings ſterling, in reward of his Gallantry, 3 Soubſterrein, on the confines of Berry. 4 Confoulat, 5 Dorat, on the River Vienne. 6 Boiſſon, 7 Birat, of which nothing memorable.

2 PERIGORT, hath on the Eaſt, Anvergne and Quercu; on the Weſt, Xaintoigne; on the North, Limoſin; and on the South, ſome part of Gaſcoigne. The Country and people, are much of the ſame condition with that of Limoſin; ſaving that Perigort is the more woody; and thoſe Woods plentiful of Cheſnuts. The chief Towns of it are, 1 Perigeux, the principal City of the Petrogorii, by Ptolemy called Veſſena; now a Biſhops-See: ſome foot-ſteps of which name, remain in a part of Perigeux, (for the Town, it is divided into two parts) which to this day is called Veſune; in which ſtandeth the Cathedral Church, and the Biſhop's Palace. The whole City ſeated in a very pleaſant Valley environed with Downs, affording a moſt excellent Wine; and having in it, as a mark of the Roman greatneſs, the ruins of a large and ſpacious Amphitheater. 2 Bergerac, ſeated on the great River Dordonne. 3 Sarlat, a Biſhops-See. 4 Nontron, defended with a very ſtrong Caſtle. 5 Miramont, 6 La Roche, 7 Marſac, where is a Well which ebbeth and floweth according to the pulſe of the River of Bourdeaux. And 8 Angoleſme, in the North-weſt towards Xaintoigne, the ſeat of the Engoliſmenſes, in the time of the Romans; now a Biſhops See: ſeated upon the River of Charente, with which it is almoſt encompaſſed: the other ſide being defended by a ſteep and rocky Mountain. A Town of great importance when poſſeſſed by the Engliſh; being one of their beſt out-works for defence of Bourdeaux; one of the Gates hereof being to this day called Chande, ſeems to have been the work of Sir John Chandois, Banneret, one of the firſt Founders of the moſt Noble Order of the Garter; then Governour hereof for King Edward the Third. Being recovered from the Engliſh by Charles the Fifth, it was beſtowed on John, the third Son of Lewis Duke of Orleans, Grand-father of King Francis the Firſt, with the title of an Earldom only, An. 1408. Afterwards made a Dukedom in the perſon of the ſaid King Francis, before his coming to the Crown. And for the greater honor of it, as much of the adjoining Country was laid unto it, as maketh up a Territory of about 24 French Leagues in length; and 15 in breadth: within which circuit are the Towns of Chaſteau-neif, and Coignat, on the River of Charente. 3 Roche Faulcon, 4 Chabannes, 5 Meriville, 6 Villebois, &c. Since that united to the Crown, it hath of late times given the title of Duke to Charles Earl of Auvergne, An. 1618. the baſe ſon of Charles the ninth, conſequently extracted from the Houſe of Angoleſme.

3 QUERCU is encompaſſed about with Limoſin, Perigort, Languedoc, and Auvergne. A populous Country, for the bigneſs, (being one of the leaſt in all France) and very fruitful withal, though ſomewhat mountainous. The principal places in it, 1 Cahors, the chief City of the Cadurci, in the times of the Romans; ſtill a great, ſtrong, and well-traded Town, and the See of a Biſhop, who is alſo the Temporal Lord of it: ſeated upon the River Loch. From hence deſcended and took name the noble Family of Chaworoth de Cadurcis, in Latin: out of which, by a Daughter of Patrick de Cadurcis, Lord of Ogmore and Kidwelly, in the Marches of Wales, married to Henry the third Earl of Lancaſter, come the Kings of England, and moſt of the Royal houſes in Europe. 2 Montalban, a Biſhops-See alſo; built on the top of an high Mountain, and ſo well fortified by all advantages of art, that it is thought to be the moſt defenſible of any in France: of which it gave ſufficient proof in that notable reſiſtance which it made to King Lewis the thirteenth, in his Wars againſt thoſe of the Religion, Anno 1622. 3 Soulac, upon the River Dordonne. 4 Nigrepelliſſe, another of the Towns poſſeſſed by the Proteſtant Party, reduced to the obedience of King Lewis the thirteenth, Anno 1621: but in November following, they murdered the King's Garriſon, and the next year denied admiſſion to the King.

King. Taken at laſt, An. 2622, by the King in Perſon: the Puniſhment did exceed the Crime. For, the men were not only killed and hanged, as they had deſerved; but many of the women alſo; ſome of them having their ſecret parts rammed with Gun-powder, and ſo torn in pieces, by the unpattern'd Barbariſm of the mercileſs and revengeful Soldiers. 5 Chaſteau-Saraſin, a ſtrong Town on the Garond. 6 Nazaret. 7 Burette, &c.

The ancient Inhabitants of theſe three Provinces, were the Lemovices, the Petrocorii, and the Cadurci, beforementioned; of which the Lemovices, and Cadurci, were caſt into the Province of Aquitania Prima; the Petrocorii, and Engoliſmenſes, into Aquitania Secunda. In the declining of that Empire, ſeized on by the Goths; but from them ſpeedily extorted by the conquering-French. Afterwards, when King Henry the third of England, releaſed his right in the Provinces of Normandy, Poictou, Anjou, Tourein, and Main; Lewis the 9th, to whom his Releaſe was made, gave him in ſatisfaction of all former Intereſſes, 300000 l. of Anjorian money, the Dukedom of Guienne, the County of Xaintogne, as far as to the River of Charent, with the Province of Limoſin. And on the Capitulation made betwixt Edward the third of England, and John of France, then Priſoner to him; Perigort and Quercu, (among other conditions) were conſigned over to the Engliſh, diſcharged of all Reſort and Homage to the Crown of France. After which times reſpectively, they remained all three in the poſſeſſion of the Engliſh, until their final expulſion by King Charles the 7th; never ſince that diſmembred from the Crown of France.

15 AQUITAIN.

THE Dukedom of AQUITAIN, the greateſt and goodlieſt of all France, contained the Provinces of 1 Xaintogne, 2 Guienne, 3 Gaſcoigne; with the Iſles of Oleron and Rees, and other Iſlands in the Aquitanick or Weſtern Ocean.

XAINTOGNE is bounded on the Eaſt with Limoſin and Perigort; on the Weſt with the Aquitanick Ocean; on the North with Poictou; and on the South with Guienne. So called from Saintles, one of the principal Cities of it; as that from the Santones, a Nation here inhabiting in the time of the Romans, whoſe chief City it was. The River of Charente running through the middle; and ſo on the North border of it, emptieth it ſelf into the Ocean, juſt oppoſite to the Iſle of Oleron; having firſt taken in the Seugne, and the Boutonne, two leſſer Rivers.

The chief Towns of it are, 1 Saintles; by Ptolemy called Mediolanium; by Antoninus, Civitas Santonum, ſeated upon the Charente; a Biſhops See, and the Seneſchalſie for the County. 2 S. John de Angelie, ſituate on the Boutonne, a Town once impregnably fortified: whereof it hath given ſufficient teſtimony in the Civil Wars of France about Religion, until the fatal time was come, in which the great power of that party was to be diſſolved; at what time (viz. An. 1621.) after a ſiege of forty days, it was taken by King Lewis the thirteenth, the Fortifications demoliſhed, the Town left open, and commanded from that time forwards, to be called by the name of Lewis Bourg. Bourg ſur la Mer, upon the Dordonne; which for the wideneſs of it, is here called a Sea. 4 Retraicte, ſeated near the confluence of the two great Rivers, the Garond, and the Dordonne. 5 Blaye, the moſt Southern Town of all this Country, defended with a ſtrong Caſtle, and a goodly Garriſon for ſecuring, the paſſage unto Bourdeaux; this Town being ſeated on the very mouth of the River which goeth up to it. 6 Rochelle, Rupella in the preſent Latin; but anciently called Santonum Portus, as the chief Haven of the Santones; a well-noted Port in the moſt Northern part of Xaintogne; from whence the Country hereabouts is called ROCHELOIS. The Town ſeated in the inner part of a fair and capacious Bay; the entrance of which is well aſſured by two very ſtrong Forts, betwixt which there is no more ſpace, than for the paſſage of a good Ship: every night cloſed up with a maſſy chain; and the whole Town either environed with deep Mariſhes, or fortified with ſuch Bulwarks, Trenches, and other Works of Modern Fortification, that it was held to be, as indeed it was, the ſafeſt retreat for thoſe of the Reformed Religion, in the time of their troubles; as may be ſeen by the ſtory of it, which in brief is thus. At the end of the ſecond Civil-War, An. 1568, many Towns conſidering how ill the former Peace had been obſerved, refuſed to take in any of the King's Garriſons, or permit any of the Papiſts to bear Arms amongſt them; of which Rochel was one; which alſo, contrary to the King's command, maintained a Navy for their ſafety by Sea, and continued their Fortifications for their defence by Land. So that hither the Queen of Navarre, and her Son, retired, as to a place of ſafety, An. 1570. Rochel alone, of all the French Towns, held good for the Proteſtants, and is by Monſieur Joinville on all ſides blocked up: but the ſiege ſoon raiſed, and Rochel, Montalban, Santerre, with others, made cautionary for the Peace enſuing. An. 1575, beſieged by Biron the elder, with an Army of 50000 men, and 60 pieces of Artillery: Charles the ninth, Henry Duke of Anjou, the Duke of Aumal, &c. being alſo preſent at the ſervice: it held out from the beginning of March, till the 7th of June, and was then freed; the City having in one month endured 13000 ſhot, and the King loſt 20000 men amongſt them, the Duke of Aumal for one, An. 75, and 78, it was attempted by Landereau, the Iſle of Ree taken, but ſoon recovered: the King of Navarre, and Prince of Conde, after that defeat, being received in triumph. Anno 1577, beſieged to Sea-ward by Lanſac; who being alſo beaten back, a Peace was made, and eight cautionary Towns more, added to their former ſtrength. In the troubles of 85, and 88, the Princes above-named made it their retreat; and from thence iſſued to divert the purpoſes of the Duke of Mercoeur. The next year, Henry the third being ſlain, and the King of Navarre ſeated in the Throne, the Proteſtant encreaſed exceedingly in power, and number; and taking advantage of the minority of Lewis the thirteenth, governed themſelves apart as a Feee Eſtate, Rochel being made the Head of their Commonwealth; fortified to that end with 12 Royal Baſtions of Free-ſtone, with double Ditches, deep, and broad, in the bottom, abundantly furniſhed with Powder and Ammunition, 150 pieces of Cannon, beſides Culverins and ſmaller Pieces, with Victuals, and all other neceſſaries, to endure a ſiege; and grown unto ſo great wealth, that there were thought to be an hundred or ſix-ſcore Merchants, worth 100000 Crowns a-piece. This drew upon them the great Wars in the year 1621, and 1622. Which ended in the loſs of all their Garriſons except Rochel and Montalban; thoſe to remain in pledge with the Proteſtant Party, but for three years only. Which time expired, the Rochellers were again beſieged both by Sea and Land, the Iſle of Ree took from them, their Fleet broke at Sea, and the mouth of their Haven ſo barred up with Ships chained together, and ſunk into it, and other Works of ſtupendious greatneſs, in the very Ocean, that no Foreign ſuccours out of England, (howſoever really intended, and bravely followed) had been able to come to their relief. In the end, having endured all the extremities of a tedious ſiege, they yielded themſelves to the King's mercy, An. 1628. Montalban, Niſmes, and other places newly fortified, ſubmitted at the ſame time alſo. 7 Marans, a great Town, and of great importance, ſeated by the Ocean-Sea in a low fenny-place, as it were in a Peninſula, and ſo encompaſſed on every ſide with Mariſh watry grounds, that there is no acceſs to the Works thereof, but by very few, and thoſe narrow paſſages. 8 Chaſtillon, and 9 Saubize, places of good ſtrength alſo, but of greater note: the firſt, for giving a ſirname to a Noble Family, out of which iſſued formerly the Earls of Blois, and of late times, Gaſper de Colligni, and Monſieur D'Andalot, his Brother; much mentioned in the Wars of France about Religion: the latter giving the title of a Duke to a younger Son of the Houſe of Rohan; as great a ſtickler in that Cauſe, as thoſe Brethren were.

II. GUIENNE, the ſecond Province of the Dukedom of Aquitain, is bounded on the North with Xaintoigne, from which parted by the River of Dordonne; on the South with Gaſcoigne, on the Eaſt with Perigort, and on the Weſt with the Aquitanick Ocean, from the Pyrenean Hills, to the River of Bourdeaux. The reaſon of the name I could never learn. Some think it a corruption of the old name Aquitain; but not very probably. The Country generally plentiful of Corn and Wine; the one being vented into Spain, and the other into England. The people, as thoſe of Xaintoigne alſo, tall of ſtature, of able bodies, haters of ſervitude and baſeneſs, and well practiſed in arms; which qualities of the mind, and conſtitution of body, (being therein ſo different from the reſt of France) it is poſſible enough they might have from the Engliſh, who for 300 years were poſſeſſed of the Country, and have left many tracks of their Language in it.

The principal Rivers of this Province, are the Garond, and the Dordonne, meeting together at Retraicte, a Town of Xaintogne; and thence in one Chanel falling into the Ocean: the Country betwixt theſe two Rivers, being called Le Pais entre les deux mers; or, The Country betwixt the two Seas: the Rivers hereabouts reſembling a ſmall Sea in wideneſs. Of leſſer note are, 1 Jearne, 2 Baize, 3 Lot, and 4 Liſle, falling into the Garond in their ſeveral places.

Chief Towns whereof are, 1 Bourdeaux, ſeated on the South-bank of the Garond, not far from the Sea, amongſt the Mariſhes. The chief City of the Bituriges, who poſſeſſed this tract; and for diſtinction's ſake, were called Bituriges Ubiſci; thoſe of Bourges being called Bituriges Cubi. It was after called Burdegala, and Civitas Burdegalenſium; the Metropolis at that time of Aquitania ſecunda; conſequently, an Archbiſhops See, as it ſtill continueth. A fair, rich, and populous City, beautified with many good buildings, an Univerſity founded here by King Lewis the 11th., and a large Cathedral. It was made Parliamentary for Aquitain, and the parts adjoining, by King Charles the 7th, An. 1453, not long after the expulſion of the Engliſh thence; and is one of the moſt noted Empories in all the Kingdom; frequented very much by the Dutch and Engliſh, for Gaſcoigne Wines: over which laſt the French are ſo jealous, that they permit them not to come up the River, till they have unladen all their Ordnance at the Port of Blaye. The Country hereabouts is, from this Town, called Bourdelois. 2 Fronſac, lying in the Country betwixt the two Seas, (as they call it) which gives the title of a Duke to the Noble Family of the Earls of St. Paul, now Dukes of Fronſac; and to the Country round about, the name of Fronſadaze. 3 Libourn, at the confluence of the two great Rivers, oppoſite to Retraicte in Xaintogne. 4 Soulac, at the influx of the Garond, in the Peninſula, or demi-Iſland, called the Country of Medock. 5 Baionne, a Sea-Town, and Epiſcopal See, frontiering on the Coaſt of Spain. 6 S. John de Luz, at the foot of the Pyrenean Mountains; all about which, the people ſpeak the Baſquiſh, or old Gaſcoigne Language, being the ſame with that of Biſcay. 7 D'Acqs, an Epiſcopal See, by Ptolemy called Aquæ Auguſtæ, (Civitas Aquenſium, by Antoninus) from whence this part of Gaul, had the name of Aquitain. Theſe three laſt, being all of them Frontier Towns, are ſtrongly fortified. 8 Bazas, (called Coſſium by Ptolemy) the chief City of the Vaſates, whom Antoninus placeth in this tract: now a Biſhops-See, ſituate on the borders of Gaſcoigne: in the Country from hence called Bazadas. Towns of leſs note, 1 Eſparrez, 2 St. Baſil, 3 Reule, 4 Chaſteau-Moron, 5 Monſeguer, 6 Sainctcrre, &c. Here is alſo in this Province, the Country of Buche, lying along the Sea-Coaſt from Baionne to Medock; a barren, poor, and wretched Country, the worſt piece of France; only remarkable for the Lords or Owners of it, formerly of the Houſe of Foix: of which the moſt remarkable were Gaſton de Foix, for his many ſignal ſervices againſt the French, created Earl of Kendal, and Knight of the Garter, by the ſaid King Henry; but better known in Engliſh ſtories, by the name of Capital, or Capau de Buche; the Lords hereof having no higher title than that of Captain.

III. GASCOIGNE, the third and largeſt part of the Dukedom of Aquitain, hath on the Eaſt, Languedoc; from which parted by the River Garond; on the Weſt, the Pyrenean Mountains, which divide it from Spain; on the North, Perigort, Quercu, and ſome part of Guienne; and on the South, a main tract of the Pyrenees, running on to Languedoc. The Country generally fruitful, but of Wines eſpecially; brought hence to Bourdeaux, as the ſtaple for that Commodity, and thence tranſported into England in great abundance.

The ancient inhabitants hereof, were the Auſcii, Lactoraces, Convenares, Conſerani, &c. making up a great part of the Province of Novempopulonia; united in this name of Gaſcoigne, on the conqueſt of it by the Vaſcones, a Spaniſh Nation, who fell in here during the reign of Dagobert the 11th King of the French. And though ſubdued by Clouis the ſecond, ſon of Dagobert; yet they left their name unto the Country, divided afterwards according to the chief Seigneuries and Eſtates thereof, into 1 the Principality of Bearn, 2 the Earldom of Foix, 3 Comminges, 4 Begorre, 5 Armaignac, 6 Albret, and 7 the Country of Agenois.

1 The Principality of BEARN, is ſituate at the foot of the Pyrenees, where they join to Languedoc; ſo called from Benearnum, a principal City of this tract, mentioned by Antoninus, and others of the ancient Writers. The Country of good paſturage, though amongſt the Mountains; affording plenty of Cattel, Butter, and in ſome places Wines alſo, little inferior in taſte and colour, to the beſt of France; and many Medicinal Springs iſſuing from the Hills adjoining.

The Religion here, as generally in all Gaſcoigne, is that of the Reformed Churches, introduced about the year 1560; or rather, then confirmed by publick Authority of the King and Queen of Navarre: at what time the Maſs, Tythes, Church-lands, and the Prelates Votes in Parliament, (according to the Genevian way of Reformation) were condemned together. And ſo it ſtood till the year 1620, when by the Power and Authority of Lewis the 13. King of France and Navarre, the Prelates were reſtored to their Votes and Lands; the Clergy to their Tithes, and Maſs cauſed alſo to be ſaid in ſome of their Churches:

yet ſo, that thoſe of the Reformed were left unto the free exerciſe of their own Religion, as in former times.

The principal Towns hereof are, 1 Orthes, the ſame which anciently was called Benarnum. 2 Leſcar, a Biſhop's See, the ancient ſeat and habitation of the Princes of Bearn. 3 Oleron, a Biſhop's See alſo, mounted upon a high hill, in the more mountainous parts of the Country. 4 Sainčerra, well garriſoned ſince the reduction of this Country to the King's obedience. 5 Pau, the principal of all the Province, honoured with a Parliament or Court of Judicature for all the Country; and a fair Palace of the Prince, built by Henry of Alber, King of Navarre, and Lord of Bearn; the Seat of him and his Succeſſors, till the coming of Henry the fourth to the Crown of France. 6 Grenade, upon the Frontier towards Begorre.

This Country for a long time followed the fortune of Aquitain; and in the general diſmembring of the French Empire, had its own Proprietaries, who were the abſolute Lords of it, acknowledging no Superior for ought I can find. The principal of which was that Gaſton (a name very frequent in this Family) who in the year 1118 accompanied with many noble perſons of France, aſſiſted Alphonſo King of Navarre & Aragon at the ſiege of Sarageſſa; in the courſe of which action he did ſo good ſervice, that he was not only much honoured, but liberally rewarded for it; both he and his poſterity enjoying many priviledges in the conquered City. By the Heir general of this Gaſton, married to William de Moncada Seneſchal of Catalogne, and of great poſſeſſions in that Country, the Lordſhip and Soveraignty of Bearn fell unto that Family about the year 1220, but long it did not tarry in it. For William being ſlain in the conqueſt of the Iſle of Majorca, An. 1228, left his Eſtates to Gaſton de Moncada his eldeſt ſon: who much increaſed them by the addition of the Earldom of Begorre, and many other goodly pieces, accrewing to him in the right of his Wife Martha, heir hereof; whereof more anon. Grown by this means to ſuch authority and eſteem in the Court of Aragon, that (being without iſſue male) Conſtance his eldeſt daughter was thought a match of great advantge to Alphonſo eldeſt ſon of King James the firſt. But dying without iſſue by her, Anno 1260, the Soveraignty of Bearn with all the Appendixes thereof both in France and Spain, became united to the Earldom of Foix, (an Eſtate equal to it both in power & patrimony) by the marriage of Reger Bernard the ninth Earl of Foix, who ſucceeded in that Earldom, An. 1262, with Margaret de Moncata another daughter of this Gaſton, and Heir of Bearn. Afterwards being much increaſed both in power and honour (by the addition of the Earldom of Comminges, the Viſconty of Narbon, and the Signeury of Buche in Guyenne, to this houſe of Foix) it was added to the Crown of Navarre, by the marriage of Gaſton Earl of Foix, and Soveraign of Bearn, with Eleanor the Heir of that Kingdom, An. 1481, deſcending with that Crown upon Henry of Bourbon, King of Navarre, and afterwards of France, by the name of Henry the fourth; but governed by him always as a State diſtinct, without relation or reſort to the Crown of France. But Lewis the thirteenth his ſon, finding ſome inconvenience in that diſtinction, incorporated it for ever to the reſt of his Dominions, Anno 1620, though not without ſome oppoſition from the ſubjects of Bearn: which he was fain to over-bear by his perſonal preſence, and the advantage of ſuch Forces as he carried with him. Since reckoned as a part of that Kingdom, awed, as the reſt of France, by Forts and Garriſons, and governed in Civil matters by the Parliament eſtabliſhed at Pau: the Judges and Councellors thereof at the King's appointing.

2 The Earldom of FOIX, is ſituate on the Weſt of Languedoc; Commingeois interpoſing betwixt it and Bearn. Chief Towns hereof are, 1 Maſeros, on the Garond, a Biſhops See. 2 Parnieres, a Biſhops See alſo, ſeated on the River Lagiere. 3 Foix, on the ſame River, called in Latin Fuxium, and the Earls hereof Comites Fuxienſes; the chief ſeat of the Fluſſates in the times of the Romans, now giving name to all the Country. 4 Mirande, in the County of Eſterac, and the chief thereof, but otherwiſe of no great account. 5 Savardun, and 6 Monbault, two ſtrong pieces. 7 Mirepoix (oppidum Miropenſe) a Biſhops See alſo, but of no note otherwiſe. The old Inhabitants of this tract, beſides the Fluſſates above mentioned, were called Vaccæi, perhaps of the abundance of Kine, bred in the paſtures hereof: upon which ground, the Earls of Foix have for their Arms, 3 Cows paſſant Gules; horned and hoofed Azure, in a Field Or.

The firſt of theſe Earls was Bernard of Carcaſſone, advanced to this honour by Raimond Earl of Tholouſe, who had then the ſoveraignty hereof, Anno 1062. The Patrimony hereof much increaſed by marriage (no one Family more) many fair Lands in the Mariſſies of Provence being added to it by Eſtmiette, Wife of Roger the ſecond; not a few Signeuries in Catalonia, by Cecil Daughter of Earl Raimond, Wife of Roger the third; the Earldom of Caſtelbon, by Brunicen Wife of Roger Bernard the firſt; the Earldom of Comminges by Eleanor the Wife of Gaſton the ſecond. Beſides all which, in or about the year 1262, Roger Bernard, the ninth Earl, united Bearn to his Eſtate as before is ſaid; whoſe Grand-child Iſabel (the male iſſue failing) conveyed the whole Eſtate to Archembald, Lord or Captain of Buche, in the Province of Guienne. Gaſton, the Nephew of this Archembald by his eldeſt ſon John, was for his many good ſervices to Charles the ſeventh, made a Peer of France: and did not only purchaſe the Viſconty of Narbon, from the Lords whereof he was deſcended by Mainguard, Wife of Roger Bernard the ſecond; but by his marriage with Eleanor or Beanora Daughter and Heir of John King of Navarre, united that Kingdom to his houſe, though he enjoyed it not in his own perſon. By means of which Alliances, and other improvements of Eſtate, his Family grew to ſo great power and reputation, that there were four Queens at one time deſcended from it: viz. Katharine Queen of Navarre, German Queen of Aragon, Anne Queen of France, Anne Queen of Hungary and Bohnmia. Before which time (I mean the Addition of Navarre to their other Eſtates) the Earls of Foix were in ſo high eſteem in the Court of France, that in all publick Ceremonies they took place of the Earls of Vendoſme, though extracted from the Royal Blood, and lived in a condition equal to moſt Kings in Chriſtendom. In which regard, as alſo that the later Kings of Navarre and preſent Kings of France, are deſcended of them, it will not be amiſs to ſubjoin here the Catalogue of

The Earls of Foix.

A.C.
1062	1	Bernard the younger ſon of Roger Earl of Carcaſſon, the firſt Earl of Foix.
1096	2	Roger, the ſon of Bernard, an adventurer in the firſt War for the Holy Land.
1111	3	Roger II. ſon of Roger the firſt.
1144	4	Roger III. ſon of Roger the ſecond.
1188	5	Raymond Roger ſon of Roger the third, a great ſtickler for the Earls of Tholouſe, in favour of the Albigenſes, and their opinions.
1223	6	Roger Bernard, the inheritor of his Fathers opinions, as well as of his Eſtates and Fortunes.

7 Roger

1241 7 Roger IV. ſirnamed Rotfer, a companion of the King S. Lewis in the Holy Land.
1255 8 Roger-Bernard II. ſon of Rotfer.
1262 9 Roger-Bernard III. who added Bearn and its Appendixes unto his Eſtates.
1306 10 Gaſton the ſon of Roger-Bernard the third, and of Margaret de Moncade the Heir of Bearn.
1315 11 Gaſton II. ſon of Gaſton the firſt, a great Enemy to the Engliſh in behalf of Philip de Valois; and as great a friend to the King of Aragon againſt the Moors, in which War he was ſlain.
1344 12 Gaſton III. for his beauty ſirnamed Phœbus, inferior for Revenue and the Port he lived in, to few Kings in Chriſtendom.
1390 13 Matthew Earl of Caſtelbon, Son of Roger-Bernard Earl of Caſtelbon, the ſecond Son of Gaſton the firſt: deſigned ſucceſſor to John King of Aragon, whoſe eldeſt Daughter he had married but diſpoſſeſſed thereof by the Duke of Momlanc.
1399 14 Archembald Captain of Buche, and Iſabel Siſter and Heir of Matthew Earls of Foix.
1413 15 John Son of Archembald, a great Enemy to the Engliſh in behalf of Charles the ſeventh of France: his younger Brother Gaſton, as great a friend unto the Engliſh, ſucceeding in the Eſtate of Buche. From Peter the ſecond Son of this John, deſcended Odet de Foix, Lord of Lautrech, ſo renowned in the Wars of Italy.
1436 16 Gaſton IV. Son of John a principal Agent in the Conqueſt of Guienne from the Engliſh; by his marriage with Eleanor Daughter and Heir of John King of Navarre, advanced his houſe unto that Kingdom; Grandfather by John Viſcount of Narboue his ſecond Son to Gaſton de Foix Duke of Nemours, ſlain at the taking of Ravenna, Anno 1512.
1472 17 Francis Phœbus Nephew of Gaſton the fourth, and of Eleanor of Navarre by their Son Gaſton Prince of Viane, ſucceeded his ſaid Grandfather in the Earldom of Foix, and his Grandmother in the Realm of Navarre about ſeven years after.
1483 18 Katharine the Siſter and Heir of Francis, by her marriage with John Earl of Albert, added that Earldom alſo to the houſe of Foix.
1517 19 Henry of Albert Son of John and Katharine, King of Navarre, Soveraign of Bearn and Earl of Foix, by his marriage with the Lady Margaret, Siſter to King Francis the firſt, added the greateſt part of the Lands of Armaignac unto his Eſtate.
1556 20 Antony of Bourbon Duke of Vendoſme, and Joan his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Henry of Albert, Kings of Navarre, Soveraigns of Bearn, and Earls of Foix.
1572 21 Henry II. Son of Joan and Antony, King of Navarre, Soveraign Lord of Bearn, and Earl of Foix; on the murder of Henry the third of France, ſucceeded alſo in that Kingdom by the name of Henry the fourth, Anno 1589, the Father of Lewis the thirteenth, and Grand-father of King Lewis the fourteenth, now reigning, An. 1648. And ſo having brought the Earls of Foix to the Crown of France, it is time to leave them. The Arms of theſe great Earls we have ſeen before.

3 The Earldom of BEGORRE is ſituate North of Bearn, at the foot of the Pyrenæan Mountains: ſo called from the Bigerrones, the old Inhabitants hereof in the time of Cæſar. Scattered in which, and the adjoining Principality of Bearn, live a leprous and infectious people of noiſom breaths, deformed bodies, and ghaſtly viſages: in which regard, not ſuffered to have any commerce with other people, nor to inherit any Lands; but only to apply themſelves to drudgery, and the baſeſt of mechanick trades. From their great miſhapen heads called Capets or Gabets.

Chief Towns hereof are, 1 Figneres, famous for Medicinal Baths. 2 Lourde, of which nothing memorable. 3 Tarbe, (by Antonine called Turſaubica) ſeated upon the River Adour, honoured with a ſtrong Caſtle, an Epiſcopal See, and the Seneſchalſie for all the Country of Begorre. Which Country having for long time its own Proprietary Earls, under the Soveraignty and Homage of the Crown of Navarre, from the Kings whereof they were extracted, or thoſe Kings from them; was at the laſt, by the marriage of Petronilla, Daughter and Heir of Eſquibat the laſt Earl, to Baſon Viſcount of Marſan and Gabardan, added to that houſe. Whoſe Daughter Matthee, marrying to Gaſton Prince of Bearn, increaſed that Principality with thoſe goodly pieces of Marſan, Gabardan and Begorre; all brought unto the houſe of Foix, by Margaret, Daughter of this Gaſton, married to Roger Bernard, as before is ſaid.

The Arms hereof were Azure, a Croſs Argent; By Inigo Ariſta the ſon of Simon, Earl of this Country called to the Crown of Navarre, made the Arms of that Kingdom; whereas before that time, the Arms thereof had been Argent, on a Tree Vert, a Croſs in chief, Gules. Which Arms are ſaid to be took by Garcia Ximines the firſt King of Navarre, from ſuch a Sign appearing to him in the Sky, before his firſt battel with the Moors.

4 The Earldom of COMMINGES lieth betwixt Bearn and Foix, running betwixt both as far Northward, as to boarder Eaſtward on Begorre. Divided into the Higher, and and more mountainous part, ſituate at the foot of the Pyrenees, and the Lower, which hath ſomewhat more of the valley in it. The old Inhabitants of both, the Convenæ, and Conſerani. The principal places at preſent in the Lower Comminges are, 1 Lombes, a Biſhops See, but of late erection, 2 Moret, upon the River Garronne. 3 Samathan. 4 Lieſle en Dordon. And in the Higher, there is 1 Conſerans, once the chief Town of the Conſerani, now a Biſhops See, ſituate at the foot of the Pyrenean hills. 2 S. Bernard, of old called Civitas Convenarum, a Biſhops See alſo, and the chief City of this Earldom. 3 S. Beat, 4 S. Brogou, 5 Monregeau, or Mons Regius, 6 Silliers, &c.

Of the Eſtate of this Earldom I have little to ſay, but that it was united to the houſe of Foix, by the marriage of Eleanor, the Daughter of an Earl hereof, to Gaſton the ſecond of that name, and the eleventh Earl of this Houſe. Given afterwards notwithſtanding to a Spaniard called Rodrigo de Villandrada, by Charles the ſeventh. But in the end reſtored again to the houſe of Foix, by the proweſs and great ſervices of Gaſton the fourth, who cauſed his Uncle Matthew, the youngeſt Son of Archembald and Iſabel Earls of Foix, to be ſettled in it, according to the will and purpoſe of his Father Archembald, who had given it to him. But falling to the Crown again, it was conferred on John of Leſcon, a Baſtard of the Earl of Armaignac, who was Earl of Comminges, and one of the Marſhals of France in the time of King Lewis the eleventh. The Arms of theſe Earls were Gules, four Orelles in Saltier, Argent.

5 The Earldom of ARMAIGNAC, the greateſt of all theſe Eſtates conſidered ſeverally and apart, lieth on the North of Comminges, and ſo extendeth it ſelf to the banks of the River Garond. Principal Towns are, 1 Aux, upon the River Gez, anciently called Auguſta Auſciorum; the the Metropolis or head City of the Province of Novempopulonia; by consequence an Archbishops See: The Revenues whereof are said to be the greatest of any Prelates in France, computed at no less than 40000 l. per annum. 2 Lectoure, a Bishop's See, called of old Lestoracium, in our modern Latin Lectodurum. A Town so well fortified, when in the power of the Earls of Armaignac, that it held out a siege of three months against the Forces of France; but since it came into the hands of the French Kings, so strengthned and embattelled according to the modern Art of Fortifications, that it is held the strongest Bulwark of the Kingdom on this side, and their surest Fortress against Spain. 3 Lisle de Jourdain, which hath the title of an Earldom, bought at the price of 38000 Crowns, of John Duke of Bourbon, by John the fourth Earl of Armaignac, An. 1421. 4 Auvillar, 5 Auzan. 6 Chastelneau. 7 Malbourquer. 8 Nestes, of which little memorable.

The Earls of Armaignac fetch their Original from the Kings of Navarre: Sancho the great, having subdued some Lands in Gascoigne, which he conferred on Garsias a younger son of his, with the title of Earl of Armaignac, Anno 1014. On which foundation it increased so fast, both in power and honour, that Bernard the fourth Earl hereof, came to be Constable of France. And so did John the fourth of that name, by the favour of King Charles the seventh: who also writ himself, by the grace of God Earl of Armaignac; according to the stile of Soveraign Princes. A man of so considerable power in these parts of France; that the marriage of a Daughter of his to our Henry the sixth, was thought the best means for establishing his Estate in Guienne. And I remember it was charged on the Duke of Suffolk, that by breaking off this alliance for that of Anjou, he had been the cause of the loss of the King's pieces in France. This greatness made him subject to the jealousie of King Lewis the eleventh, who worried him out of his Estate and his life together. Charles, Brother of this John, succeeded by the favour of King Charles the eighth. After whose death this fair Estate was seized on to the use of the Crown; till given again by Francis the first to Charles Duke of Alanson, (whose Grand-father had married with a Sister of the said Earl John) and to the Lady Margaret his Wife, the said Kings Sister: who, after the decease of the Duke of Alanson, brought it to Henry of Albert, and King of Navarre, her second Husband; returning so to the Original from whence first it came.

The Arms of these great Princes, were quarterly 1 Argent, a Lyon Azure; 2 Gules, a Leopard-Lyon Or, the 3, &c.

6 The Earldom of ALBERT is situate on the North-west of Armaignac, bordering upon Guienne. The chief Town whereof is 1 Nerac, seated on the River of Baize; the only place of strength and moment in all this Estate. 2 Chastell-Jalone, well seated to disturb the Trade betwixt Bourdeaux and Gascoigne, but not able to endure a siege; 3 Mont de Marsan, and 4 Tartas, both seated on the River Ladour: and all four formerly Towns of Caution for those of the Reformed Religion; of which this Country is so full, that the Popish Religion had hardly any footing in all this Territory. Which, though the smallest of the six, and of least Antiquity, had yet the fortune to incorporate all the rest into it. For John, the son of Alan Earl of Albert, by his marriage with Katharine, Daughter and sole Heir of Gaston, son of Gaston of Foix, and of Leonora Princes of Navarre, added to his Estate the Signeuries of Bearn, Foix, and Begorre. And Henry of Albert his son, by marrying the Lady Margaret, Sister of King Francis the first, united to it those of Armaignac and Comminges. By Jean the Daughter of this Henry, the whole Estate was brought to Antony of Bourbon, Duke of Vendosme, and Father to King Henry the fourth, becoming so united to the Crown of France, from which it was at first dismembred.

The Arms of these Earls, were Quarterly 1 France; 2 Gules, a Border ingrailed Arg. The third, &c.

7 As for the Country of AGENOIS, the last part of Gascoigne, it never had other hearts (after it left off to be French) than the Dukes of Aquitain. The principal Cities of it, 1 Agen, a rich, populous, and well-traded Town, seated on the Garonne, in a fruitful Country; A Bishops See, a Seneschalsie, and held to be the fairest in Gascoigne. 2 Condon, a Bishops See also, from which the parts adjoining are called Condonnois. 3 Villeneusne, 4 Claerac, 5 Marmand, 6 Foy, &c.

Thus having took a brief view of those several members which make up the great body of the Dukedom of Aquitain; let us next look on the Estate of the whole thus brought together: which in the declination of the Roman Empire, was given unto the Goths, before possessed of all Gallia Narbonensis, by Valentinian the third, as a reward for their service in driving the Alani out of Spain. Long the Goths had not held it, when they were outed of it by Clouis the fifth King of the French, continuing under his Successors, till Ludovicus Pius made it a Kingdom, and gave it unto Pepin his youngest Sons. But Charles and Pepin, the Son of this Pepin, being dispossessed by Charles the Bald; it was by him conferred on Ranulph, of the house of Burgundy, for his many good services against the Normans, Anno 844. Whose Successors take here in this order following.

The Dukes of Aquitain.

844	1	Ranulph of Burgundy, first Duke of Aquitain.
875	2	William, Earl of Auvergne, Nephew of Ranulph.
902	3	Ebles, Earl of Poictou, succeeded in Aquitain and Auvergne, by the Will and Testament of Duke William.
911	4	Ebles II. Son of Ebles the first.
935	5	William II. the Son of Ebles the second.
970	6	William III. Son of William the second.
1019	7	Guy, the Son of William the third.
1021	8	William IV. Son of Guy.
1086	9	William V. Son of William the fourth.
1156	10	Lewis the seventh of France, in right of Eleanor his Wife, sole Heir of William the fifth.
1152	11	Henry, Duke of Normandy, and Earl of Anjou, &c. in right of Eleanor his Wife, divorced from Lewis on pretence of some consanguinity after King of England.
1169	12	Richard, King of England, the Son of Henry.
1199	13	John King of England, the Brother of Richard, who forfeiting his Estates in France, on a judicial sentence pronounced against him for the (supposed) murder of his Nephew Arthur Duke of Bretagne; Aquitain and the rest of the English Provinces were seized on by the French, Anno 1202. But notwithstanding this Arrest, the English still continued their pretensions to it, till at the last it was agreed betwixt King Lewis the ninth of France, and Henry the third of England, An. 1259. that the English should rest satisfied with Guienne, the bounds whereof were to be the Pyrenees on the South, and the River of Charente on the North, comprehending therein also the Country of Limosin; and that on his investiture into this Estate, he should relinquish all his rights in Normandy, Anjou, Tourein, Main, &c. In consideration whereof, he should have 150000 Crowns in ready mony. On this accord, the Kings of England become Homagers to the Crown of France, which ſometimes they omitted, ſometimes did it by Proxie, but never in perſon, till Philip de Valois required it of King Edward the third: and becauſe ſuch duties are not often perſonally done by Sovereign Princes, Du Serres ſhall deſcribe the formality of it. The place deſigned for this exploit was the Church of Amiens, "to which Edward came (ſaith he) with "ſuch a Train, as was intended rather to the honour of "himſelf than the French King. Royally attired he was, "with a long Robe of Crimſon Velvet, powdred with "Leopards of Gold; his Crown upon his head, his Sword "by his ſide, and golden Spurs upon his heels. Philip, at"tended by the chief Officers of the Realm, ſat upon his "Throne, apparelled in a long Robe of Purple Velvet, "powdered with Flower de Lyces of Gold; his Crown "upon his head, and the Scepter in his hand. Viſcount "Melun, the great Chamberlain of France, commanded "Edward to take off his Crown, Sword, and Spurs, and "to kneel down: which he did accordingly. Then ta"king both his hands, and joining them together, he ſaid "unto him; You become a Liege-man to the King my Ma"ſter, who is here preſent, as Duke of Guienne, and Peer "of France, and promiſe to be faithful and loyal to him; "ſay, Yea: and Edward ſaid yea, and aroſe. But the Hiſtorian notes withal, that Philip paid yearly for this Pageant; the young King never forgetting the indignity which was put upon him, till he had made France a field of blood. And here it is to be obſerved, that though the Kings of England by this new inveſtiture, were entituled Dukes of Guienne only, yet they had all the power and priviledges of Dukes of Aquitain, excepting the homage of the great Lords and Earls of Gaſcoigne, which formerly belonged unto them. Inſomuch as Richard the ſecond, though Duke of Guienne only in ſtyle and title, inveſted his Uncle John of Gaunt in that brave eſtate, under the ſtyle and title of Duke of Aquitain; ſummoned to Parliament by that name by the ſaid King Richard. From this Accord betwixt the Kings, the Engliſh had poſſeſſion of the Dukedom of Guienne, according to the order of their Succeſſions, from the fortieth of King Henry the third, Anno 1259, to the twenty-ninth of King Henry the ſixth, An. 1452 (the intercalation of John of Gaunt excepted only): when outed of all their old rights in France, rather by the good fortune, than by the valour of Charles the ſeventh; the Engliſh then, divided in Domeſtick Factions, and not at leiſure to look after the affairs of France. Nor do I find, that Guienne being thus recovered, was ever diſmembred from that Crown, but when King Lewis the eleventh aſſigned it over to his Brother the Duke of Berry, to take him off from joining with the Dukes of Bretagne and Burgundy in a new confederacy; who held it but two years, and died the laſt Duke of Guienne, Anno 1472.

The Arms of this Dukedom were Gules, a Leopard or Lyon Or, which joined to the two Lyons of Normandy, make the Arms of England.

16 LANGUEDOC.

LANGUEDOC is bounded with the Pyrenæan hills, the Land of Rouſſillon, and the Mediterranean, on the South; on the North, with Foreſt, Quercu, and Auvergne; on the Eaſt, with Provence and Daulphine; on the Weſt, with Gaſcoigne. Whereas the other Frenchmen in an affirmation ſay Ouy, theſe of this Country ſay Oc; and therefore Ortelius conjectures it was call'd Langue d'oc. But others think that it took denomination from the Goths, who reigning long in this Country, left behind them a ſmack of their Language; and therefore it was called Languegotia, and now Euphoniæ gratia, termed Langedocia, or Langedoc, that is to ſay, the Country which retaineth the Gothick Language. In reference to one or both of which Etymologies this Province is by Paulus Æmilius promiſcuouſly called Gothicana and Ottilana; and in relation to the reſt, the people hereof in one of Calvin's Epiſtles, are given unto us by the name of Populus Linguæ Ottilanæ.

The Country on thoſe parts which lie next to Auvergne, is like the higher parts thereof, mountainous and not very fruitful; in all the reſt, as rich and pleaſant as the beſt Provinces in France; and having the advantages of Olives, Raiſins, Figs, Orenges, and other fruits not ordinary but here, and in the neigbouring Province; In that participating the Commodities both of France and Spain. The people have ſomewhat in them of the ancient Goths, and draw nearer to the temper of the Spaniards, than any other of the French; as being accounted very devout, great vaunters of themſelves, affecting bravery above their condition and eſtates; not caring how they pinch it on the working days, or at home in private; ſo they may flaunt it in the ſtreet, and be fine on holy-days; The humour alſo of the Women, and in them more pardonable.

Principal Rivers of this Province, are 1 Aurance, 2 Lieran, and 3 Orbe, emptying themſelves into the Rhoſne; and Alby, which disburdeneth it ſelf into the Ocean. Chief Towns hereof are, 1 Niſmes (in Latin Lemauſius) anciently a Colony of the Romans, now a Biſhops See; where there remain ſome marks of the Roman greatneſs, eſpecially the ruins of a ſpacious Palace built by the Emperor Adrian. 2 Mont-pelier (in Latin Mons Peſſulanus) ſituate on a high Mountain, as the name imports, ſome twelve miles diſtant from the Sea; an Univerſity for the ſtudy of Phyſick, and for that very happily ſeated, the Country round about affording great variety of medicinal Herbs. An Earldom of it ſelf in the former times, conveyed by Mary Daughter of William the laſt Lord hereof, to King Peter of Aragon her Husband; next, made a member of the Kingdom of Majorca; and finally by James, the laſt King of Majorca, ſold to King Philip of Valois. Of late one of the ſtrongeſt holds which thoſe of the Reformed Religion had in this Country: and memorable for the notable reſiſtance which it made againſt the whole forces of Lewis the 13. in the laſt Civil Wars about Religion. 3 Aleth, and 4 Carcaſſonne, both Biſhops Sees, both ſeated on the River Aude; the people of both ſpeaking a corrupt French, with an intermixture of ſome Spaniſh. Which intermixture of Spaniſh with that broken French they either have originally from the Goths of Spain, of whoſe Kingdom this was once a part: or from their long ſubjection to the Earls of Barcelone, to whom they were conveyed, with other fair Eſtates in this part of France, by the marriage of Raymond Boreuger the ſeventh Earl thereof, with Almodia the Daughter of ſome of the great Lords who then ruled in Languedoc, about the year 1040. And to theſe Towns as alſo unto thoſe of Niſmes and Alby, the Earls of Barcelone, and the Kings of Aragon (in their right) did pretend a Soveraignty (though they had loſt the poſſeſſion of them) as thoſe of France did to the Earldom of Barcelone: till mutual releaſes made on both ſides of each others claims, by James the firſt of Aragon, and the King S. Lewis Anno 1200, or thereabouts. 5 Alby, commodiouſly ſeated on the River ſo called, the Civitas Albigenſium of Antoninus, the chief of this part of Languedoc, called from hence La Paix Albigeois; remarkable in Church-hiſtory for thoſe great oppoſitions to the corruptions and errours of the Church of Rome, called the Albigenſes. 6. Beziers, upon the River Orbe, the Betiræ of Ptolemy, and Civitas Beterraſium of Antoninus; a Roman Colony of old, now a Biſhops See. 7. Agde, called Agatha by ancient Writers, remarkable for a Council held there in the year 450. and for a well-frequented Port, at the mouth of the River Egbaud. 8. Narbon, ſeated on the mouth of the River Aude, the ſeat of the Phocenſes, and the firſt Roman Colony (next after Carthage) out of Italy. In Italy it ſelf (to obſerve ſo much by the way) were no leſs than 150 Colonies; 57 in Africk, 29 in Spain, 26 in France, 4 in England only, in Syria 20, and in other Countries ſome, but very few in reſpect of the largeneſs of the Territories. Theſe Colonies were inſtituted partly to repreſs Rebellions in the Conquered Countries; partly to reſiſt a foreign Enemy, partly to reward the ancient Souldiers, partly to relieve the poorer ſort, and partly to purge and empty the City of the ſuperfluity and redundance of her people. Now if the queſtion be asked, whether a Colony or a Fortreſs be more behoveful, I anſwer with Boterus in his Raggio de ſtato, that a Fortreſs is more fit for ſudden uſe, and a Colony for continuance; the former are quickly erect, and perhaps as ſoon loſt; the other require ſome time of ſetling, and are after of a good ſufficiency to defend themſelves. As we ſee in our times, the Spaniſh Colonies of Ceuta and Tangier in Africk; and our own of Calais which was the laſt Town we loſt on the firm Land. This Narbon was in the infancy of the Roman Empire, the moſt populous and greateſt Town of all France: inſomuch, as from it all this part of France was called Gallia Narbonenſis. A Province, of which Pliny delivered us this cenſure: Narbonenſis Gallia agrorum cultu, morum virorumq; dignatione, opum amplitudine, nulli Provinciarum poſtponenda; diciturq; Italia potius quàm Provincia; that is to ſay, that for fruitfulneſs of the ſoil, and the civility of the people, it was inferior to no Province in the Roman Empire. But to return unto the Town, being anciently the Metropolis of this Province, it had withal the honour of being an Archbiſhops See, which it ſtill continueth: well fortified at the preſent as a Town of War, frontiering Catalonia and the Land of Rouſſillon. 9. La Puy, the See of a Biſhop, who in Latine is called Podienſis; the chief of that part of Languedoc, which is named Velay, the ancient Seat of the Velauni. 10. Viviers, on the River Rhoſne, (by Pliny named Alba Helviorum) from whence the Country adjoyning hath the name of Vivarets. 11. Rhodes, or Rutena, the principal City of the Ruteni, now a Biſhops See; from whence the Country round about hath the name of Rouvergn; though ſome account this Rouvergn, a diſtinct Province, and no part of Languedoc. 12. Tholouſe, ſeated on the Garonne, anciently the principal City of the Tectoſages and the Toloſates, placed by old Writers in this tract; now the chief of Languedoc, and one of the greateſt in all France. The Seat of an Archbiſhop and an Univerſity; ſo ancient, that ſome report it to be built when Deborah judged Iſrael. Here was a Parliamentary Court erected, for the adminiſtration of Juſtice in theſe parts, 1302. As for the Story of Tholouſe, it was obſerved, that certain Souldiers having ſtole ſacrilegiouſly ſome Gold out of the Temples of Tholouſe, (when it was ſackt by Cepio a Roman Conſul) came all to miſerable and unfortunate ends: hence grew that Adage, Aurum habet Tholoſanum, applied unto unhappy men.

But that which deſerves moſt note in the Hiſtory of it, are large and ſpacious fields about it, called by the Writers of theſe times by the name of Campi Catalaunici, extending in length 100, in breadth 70 French Leagues. In which fields, An. 435. was fought that terrible Battel between Attila King of the Hunnes, and Ætius the Roman Lieutenant in France; Ætius was ſtrengthned by the Goths, Francks, Burgundians, and Germans. Attila's Army conſiſted of Hunnes, Eruli, Scythes, Sarmatians, Suevians, to the number of 500000, of which 180000 that day loſt their lives: Attila himſelf being driven to that deſperate plunge, that making a Funeral pile of Horſe Saddles, he would have burned himſelf. But his Enemies weary of well-doing, or Ætius politickly fearing, that if Attila were quite deſtroyed, the Goths, Francks, and others of the Barbarians then confederate with him, would become too inſolent; gave him leave to retire home through Italy: which he haraſſed with Fire and Sword, murdering the People, and ruining the Towns, ſo that he was then, and long after, called Flagellum Dei. Ætius, notwithſtanding this good ſervice, was by Valentinian the Emperour of the Weſt, rewarded with the loſs of his head: By which act, the Emperor (as one truly told him) had cut off his right hand with his left. And indeed, ſo it happened. For not long after, he himſelf was by Maximus murdered, and the Empire of Rome irrecoverably deſtroyed. Now that theſe Fields lay hereabouts, and not about Chalons in the Province of Champaigne (as ſome learned and induſtrious men have been of opinion) I am aſſured by theſe three reaſons. Firſt, the improbability that Ætius having got the Victory, ſhould ſuffer ſuch a vaſt and numerous Army to paſs through the whole length of France from one end to the other, and having waſted all the Country, to break into Italy. And ſecondly, the teſtimony of Jornandes an ancient Writer, who telleth us, firſt, that before this fight, Attila had beſieged and diſtreſſed the City of Orleans; and therefore was not vanquiſhed in the fields of Chalons: and then, that immediately upon the Victory, Toriſmund the King of the Goths, (his Father Theodorick being ſlain) in Campis Catalaunicis ubi & pugnaverat, Regia Majeſtate ſubvectus Tholoſam ingreditur; being proclaimed King in thoſe very fields, entred with great ſtate and triumph into Tholouſe, the Regal City at that time of the Gothiſh Kingdom. Which plainly proves the places of Battel to be near this City: though poſſibly by the name Campi Catalaunici (the great length and breadth thereof conſidered) we are to underſtand the whole Country of Languedoc.

The old Inhabitants of this Country beſides the Helvii, the Vellauni, the Tectoſages, and Albigenſes, formerly remembred, were the Agatenſes, Beterenſes, Gabales, Volcæ, and the Arecomici; all which, together with ſome others of leſſer note, made the Province of Narbonenſis Prima, whereof the Metropolis was Narbon. In the falling of the Roman Empire aſſigned with the reſt of Narbonenſis, and ſome part of Spain, to Atholfus King of the Goths, whom Honorius by this gift and by beſtowing on him his Siſter Placidia, bought out of Italy. The Goths having got ſo good footing in Gaul, enlarged their bounds by taking in the moſt part of Aquitain, Quercu, and Auvergne: but forced to quit them to the French, who conquered that from them which they got from the Romans; and ſhut them up within the limits of their firſt Donation. After this they declined as faſt in France, as they thrived in Spain; loſing Provence to Theodorick, King of the Oſtro-Goths, or Goths of Italy; whoſe Succeſſor Amalaſunta, fearing a War from Greece, reſigned her intereſt in Provence to Theodobert the French King of Mets. Nothing now left unto the Goths of their Gallick purchaſes, but this Languedoc only; and this they held as long as they had any thing to do in Europe, but loſt it finally to the Moors, with all Spain it ſelf. Recovered from the Moors by Charles Martel, and added to the reſt of the French Empire; it was by Charles the Great given to one Thurſin, of the race of the ancient Kings, with the title of the Earl of Tholouſe, on condition that he would be Chriſtened. But long it continued not in his Race, nor in any other, not being ſetled in a way of Lineal Deſcent, till the time of Raymond the eighth Earl, Brother to another Raymond Earl of St. Giles (a Town of Guyenne) whoſe Grand-child Hugh, being an adventurer in the Wars of the Holy Land, and wanting Money to provide himſelf for that Expedition, ſold his Eſtate herein to his Uncle Raymond, the Earl of St. Giles before mentioned. From this time forward we find theſe Earls to be as often called the Earls of St. Giles, as the Earls of Tholouſe; and by that name frequently remembred in the Eaſtern Stories; as for his great valour in the courſe of the Holy Wars, eſpecially at the taking of the City of Tripoli, given to him (after it became Chriſtian) with the title of Earl. This Raymond, worthily named the Great, Earl of Tholouſe, St. Giles, and Tripoli, had three Sons, all of them ſucceeding; of which the eldeſt was Bertrand, had a Baſe Son called Ponce, who ſucceeded him in the Earldom of Tripoli, the Father of Raymond, and Grand-father of another Raymond, both Earls of Tripoli, and both ſuſpected to be falſe to the Chriſtian Princes in the continuance of thoſe Wars. Alphonſo the third Son was alſo the Father of a Raymond, the Father of another Raymond, who proved a great Maintainer of the Albigenſes: and in purſuance of that cauſe murdered a Legate of the Pope ſent to Excommunicate him, and ſtrangled his own Brother Baldwin, becauſe he found him not inclinable to his opinions. For this cauſe Warred upon, and Vanquiſhed by Simon de Monfort, Father of Simon de Monfort, the great Earl of Leiceſter; and after many troubles and continual Wars, left his Eſtate and Quarrel to his Son named alſo Raymond, the laſt Earl of this Houſe; who proving alſo a ſtrong Patron of theſe Albigenſes, was condemned for a Heretick, curſed by the Pope, and perſecuted by the French Kings, Philip the Second, Lewis the Eighth, and St. Lewis. This laſt willing to make a peaceable compoſition, married his Brother Alphonſo, to Jane Daughter and Heir to Count Raymond, with this condition, That if it ſhould happen theſe two to die without iſſue, then Languedoc ſhould be incorporated to the Crown. Raymond agreed, the Marriage was ſolemnized, An. 1249. They both died without iſſue, 1270. and Languedoc returned to the Crown in the days of Philip the Third.

The Names and Succeſſion of theſe Earls, in regard they were Peers of France, great Princes, and for the moſt men part of action, take in order thus.

The Earls of Tholouſe.

An. Chr.
779	1	Thurſin the firſt Earl of Tholouſe.
803	2	William made Earl by Charlemagne, Peer of France at the firſt foundation of that Order.
828	3	Iſauret Thurſin, Son of Thurſin the firſt Earl.
841	4	Bertrand, Son of Iſauret Thurſin.
894	5	William II. of ſome other Houſe.
919	6	Ponce, a great Juſticiar, but of unknown Race.
963	7	Almaric, of as obſcure Parentage as Ponce.
1003	8	Raymond, the Brother of Raymond Earl of St. Giles, advanced by Robert King of France.
1052	9	William III. Duke of Aquitain, ſucceeded in right of his Wife, the Daughter of Raymond.
1086	10	Hugh Aymon, Son of William the Third, ſold his Eſtate and Earldom to his Uncle Raymond.
1096	11	Raymond II. Earl of St. Giles, Tholouſe, and Tripoli; of great note in the War of the Holy Land.
	12	Bertrand, Son of Raymond the Great.
	13	William IV. Brother of Bertrand.
1101	14	Alphonſo, Brother of William the Fourth.
1146	15	Raymond III. Son of Alphonſo.
1185	16	Raymond IV. Son of Raymond the Third, the great Patron of the Albigenſes.
1222	17	Raymond V. Son of Raymond the Fourth, vanquiſhed and compounded with, by King Lewis the Saint.
1249	18	Alphonſo II. Brother of St. Lewis, and Huſband of Joan, Daughter and Heir of the laſt Raymond: after whoſe death, and the deceaſe of Joan the Counteſs, An. 1270. this Earldom was united to the Crown of France; according to the Capitulations before mentioned.

The Arms of this Earldom were Gules, a Croſs Pommelé, of 12 points, Or.

17. PROVENCE.

PROVENCE is environed with Languedoc on the Weſt; Daulphine on the North; the Mediterranean on the South, and on the Eaſt with the Alpes, and the River Varus; which divide it from Piemont, the neareſt of the Alpine Province.

It took this name from the Romans, who being called in by the Maſſilians, to revenge a private wrong done them by the Salii, the next neighbouring People, wholly poſſeſſed themſelves of this Country, calling it κατ' ἐξοχήν, The Provence. The Country being now divided between ſeveral Princes, we muſt neceſſarily premiſe ſo much of the ſtory of it, as ſerves to ſhew the time and grounds of that diviſion. In order whereunto we are firſt to know, that it long continued part of the Roman Empire, making up the whole Province of Narbonenſis Secunda, and part of Alpes Maritimæ. How it was given unto the Viſigoths, or Goths of Spain, and from them taken by the Oſtrogoths, or Goths of Italy; hath been ſhewn in Languedoc. Being reſigned unto the French, it became a part of the new Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy. Made a diſtinct Eſtate in the perſon of Hugh de Arles, (who afterwards ſucceeded in the Kingdom alſo) by Boſon the firſt. And by this Hugh de Arles upon his reſignation of that Kingdom to Rodolph Duke of Burgundy beyond the Jour; given unto William his Son, with the ſtile and title of Earl of Provence: confirmed therein by the Emperour Conrade the Second, on whom the Rights of that Kingdom had been tranſferred; to be held of him, and his Succeſſors in the Empire. In his poſterity it continued, till conveyed to the Earls of Barcelone, by the Marriage of the Lady Doulce with Earl Raymond Arnold, Anno 1082. Carried, together with that Earldom, to the Crown of Aragon, and finally by Beatrix one of the Daughters of Raymond the Third, the laſt Earl of this Family, conveyed in Marriage to Charles Earl of Anjou, Brother of Lewis the Ninth of France, An. 1262. whom Urban the Fourth, not long after crowned King of Naples. By Joan the the first, the fourth from Charles, driven out of Naples by Lewis of Hungaria, and restored again by the power of Pope Clement the fifth; the City and Territory of Avignon (where the Pope resided at that time) is dismembred from the Earldom of Provence, and given in Fee for ever to the Church of Rome: partly to recompense that favour, and partly for discharge of some old Arrears of Rent or Tribute, pretended to be due to the See of Rome, for the Realm of Naples. A City which had formerly been under the Protection, and by that title in the actual possession of many of the Popes of Rome; ever since the conviction of Raymond Earl of Tholouse, to whom it formerly belonged, but held by them in Fee of the Earls of Provence. Not long after this Donation, the said Joan adopted for her Heir and Successor, Lewis Duke of Anjou, Brother to Charles the Fifth of France, descended lineally from Charles Earl of Anjou, and King of Naples: possessed by this Adoption of the Earldom of Provence, and a title to the Realm of Naples. Rene, the Grandchild of this Lewis, having no issue male surviving, made Lewis of Chalons, the Prince of Orange, (another Signeury in this Country:) and gave him therewithal full power to make Laws, coyn Money, and pardon all Crimes; to write himself Prince of Orange by the grace of God, with all the other Prerogatives of an absolute Prince. This was in the year 1415. So that now the Country stands divided betwixt the French King, the Pope, and the Prince of Orange; each of them absolute and independent in his own Estate: as long at least as the French King is pleased to give way unto it.

The whole is much of the same nature with Languedoc, before described, but in one part thereof, that namely between Marseilles and Arles, different from all the rest of France. By the French commonly called La Croix: by the elder Writers Campi lapidei, because all in a manner overspread with scattered stones; Supposed by Mela to be the place in which Hercules encountred Albion and Bergeon the Sons of Neptune: whom when he could not otherwise vanquish, he was by Jupiter his Father aided with a shower of stones; of which these were feigned to be the Remainders. A Country which takes up a good space of ground, and hath a few poor Towns in it, but not much inhabited.

In that part of it which belongs to the King, the Towns of special note are, 1 Aix, seated on the Rhosne, the Metropolis of Narbonensis secunda, and at that time called Aquæ Sextiæ, from Sextius the Founder of it (by whom the Salii were subdued in the second year of that War) and the hot Baths here. Now, and of long time, an Archbishops See, and the chief City of this Province: and for that reason made the Seat of a Court of Parliament for this Country, An. 1501. Most memorable in old story for the great discomfiture of the Cimbri by C. Marius; Who not willing to venture on the Enemy united (for they were no fewer than 300000 fighting men, and lately fleshed in the overthrow of Manlius and Sepio, (two Romans Consuls;) permitted them quietly to pass by his Camp: The Barbarians who imputed it to fear or cowardise, scornfully asking his Soldiers, What service they would command them to Rome. But when, for their easier passage over the Alpes, they had divided themselves into three Companies; Marius severally setting on them all, put them all to the sword. Ea victoria visus meruisse, ne ejus nati Rempub. pœniteret, By this Victory, and this only, giving cause to the Romans (as Velleius hath it) not to be sorry for his birth. 2 Arles, in Latin, Arelatum, by Ausonius called the Rome of France, and in those times so highly prized, that Constantinus Flavius being chosen Emperour by the British Legions, in the declining times of the Western Empire, intended to have made it the Imperial Seat. And not less memorable in Church-story for a Council here held in the time of Constantine the Great, Anno 313. in which was present Restitutus the Bishop of London, and certain other Bishops of the British Church. It was anciently a Roman Colony, and now the See of an Archbishop; situate on the River Rhosne, in a low and marshy situation: which natural strength, seconded by the new works of King Henry the Fourth, have made it one of the best Bulwarks of France, on that side of the Kingdom. Selected for the Seat Royal of the French Kings of Burgundy, who from hence were called Kings of Arles; as the Kings of Austrasia (or East-France) were called Kings of Metz, because they had made choice of that City for the Regal Seat. Between this City and the Sea, but on the other side of the River, runneth a deep Chanel, cut with infinite charge and industry by C. Marius, for conveyance of Victuals into his Camp, in his War against the Cimbri before named; by Ptolemy called Fossæ Marianæ, by the French, Camargue, a corrupt word made of Caius Marius: the Country about which, called allo by the same name for the space of 24 miles, is of excellent pasturage, and breedeth great abundance of Horses; the chief Town of which is called 3 St. Gilis. 4 Marseilles, a known Port on the Mediterranean, first built by the Phocenses, a Greek Nation of Asia Minor, who being banished their Country, came and planted here, about the reign of Tarquinius Superbus, the last King of Rome. It was first only a Confederate City of the Romans, for whose sake, being molested by the Salii, and others of the neighbouring Nations, the Roman Legions first entred Gaul: afterwards, siding with Pompey in the Civil Wars, or at least desirous to stand neutral, it was forced by Cæsar, and made a Colony. In the prosperity hereof it drove a great Trade on the Mediterranean, and was the Mother of many fair and flourishing Colonies, Emporiæ, Forum Julium, Nicæa, Olbia, dispersed in the adjoyning shores of France, Spain, and Italy. 5 Glandeves, anciently called Glanum, a Bishops See, seated upon the Maritime Alpes. 6 Taulon, by Ptolemy called Tauroentium, and by some Tholone, beautified with a fair and capacious Haven, well stored with Oyl, great quantity of Salt brought hither from the Isle of Eres, about three Leagues off; and a kind of Almonds called Provence Almonds; made by this means one of the most frequented Ports of the Mediterranean. 7 Antibi (in Latine Antipolis) a Sea-coast Town near the River Varo, one of the farthest of this Country towards Italy. 8 Feriols (the Forum Julium of the Ancients) on the Mediterranean, founded by the Massilians, as before was said, after a Colony of the Romans. 9 La Grace, a Bishops See, more within the Continent. 10 Cisteron, on the Borders of Daulphine. 11 Brignols. 12 Merindol, and Chabriers, two little Towns amongst the Mountains, towards Daulphine; not otherwise of note but for the horrid Massacre of the Protestants, before described.

II. The Principality of Orange lieth on the North-West of this Province, watered with the Rivers of 1 Durance, 2 Seile, 3 Meine, and 4 Ecque; all helping to augment the Rhosne. The chief places of it are, 1 Orange, seated on the Meine, an Episcopal See; famous for many rare and wonderful Antiquities, demonstrating the Roman Greatness, of whom once a Colony; but of most note in Church-History for a Council held there against the Semi-Pelagians, in the year 444. called Arausicanum; the Latine name of this City became anciently Arausia, in some Writers Auriacus, and of late Aurangia.

rangia, 2. Estrang, 3. Bois de St. Pol; more properly, St. Paul de Vences, being the Civitas Vencienſium of Antoninus; but not otherwiſe memorable.

As for the Princes hereof, they were anciently of the Noble Family of the Bauſſii, but Homagers and Tributaries to the Earls of Provence. By Mary Daughter and Heir of Reynold the laſt of this Family, it was conveyed in marriage to John de Chalons, one of the moſt Noble Houſes of Burgundy, from the Earls whereof they were extracted. Lewis, the Son of this John, obtained of Rene Duke of Anjou, and Earl of Provence, the Soveraignty hereof, as before was ſaid. By Claude, the Heir-general of this Houſe, beſtowed in marriage by King Francis the firſt, on Count Henry of Naſſaw, Ambaſſador from Maximilian the Emperour of Germany, Anno 1514, it was tranſlated to that Family, where it ſtill remaineth.

The Princes of Orange.

1475 1 Lewis of Chalons, firſt abſolute Prince of Orange.

2 William de Chalons, who ſubmitted his Eſtate to the Parliament of Daulphine, to ſatisfie King Lewis the 11. by whom reſtored again to his former Soveraignty.

3 John de Chalons, a bitter Enemy to King Lewis, in defence of the Rights of Mary, Ducheſs of Burgundy.

1500 4 Philibert de Chalons, ſlain at the Siege of Florence, where he commanded the Forces of Charles the 5th: Claude his only Siſter, and next Heir of that Houſe, being married to Henry Earl of Naſſaw, Anno 1515.

1536 5 Rene of Naſſaw, Son of Henry and Claude, adopted by Philibert his Uncle, whom he ſucceeded in this Eſtate: ſlain at the Siege of Landrecie in the Netherlands.

1584 7 Philip of Naſſaw, kept as an Hoſtage all his life by the King of Spain.

8 Maurice of Naſſaw, Brother of Philip, Commander of the Forces of the United Provinces.

1625 9 Henry of Naſſaw, II. Succeſſor to his Brother Maurice, in his Offices, Eſtates, and Honours.

1648 10 William of Naſſaw II. the Son and Succeſſor of Henry, married the Princeſs Mary, eldeſt Daughter of Charles King of Great Britain, &c. on May-day, 1641.

The Revenues of this Principality are about 30000 Crowns. The Arms are Quarterly Gules, a Bend Or, 2. Or, a Hunters Horn Azure, ſtringed Gules; the third as, &c. Over all, an Eſcotcheon of Pretence Chequie, Or and Azure. More briefly thus; Quarterly Chalons and Aurange, under an Eſcotcheon of Geneva.

Southward of Aurange, lieth the Country of VENASCINE, as the French call it; Comitatus Venieſſinus, in the Latin: ſo called from Avenio, (now Avignon) the chief City of it. Anciently it had Lords of its own, called Earls of Venice, (Veniſſa Comites in the Latin) united to the Houſe of Savoy, by the marriage of Laurencia, a Daughter hereof, with Earl Humbert the Second, Anno 1080, or thereabouts. But this Family of the firſt Lords coming to an end, it fell (but by what Right, I find not) to the Earls of Tholouſe, but held by them as Homagers, (for this Eſtate) of the Earls of Provence: on the conviction of Earl Raymond, condemned for Hereſie, brought under the protection and patronage of the Popes of Rome; the more abſolute Soveraignty hereof, and of the City Avignon, being ſetled on them by Queen Joan, as before is ſaid. The principal Cities of this tract, are, 1. Avignon, the Avenio of Strabo, Pliny, and Mela; a very fair and flouriſhing City, pleaſantly ſeated on both ſides of the River of Rhoſne: famous for being the reſidence of the Popes for ſeventy years; which times the Romans remember till this day, by the name of the Babylonian Captivity: adminiſtring, ever ſince, an Oath unto the Pope at his Coronation, not to remove his Seat to Avignon. The firſt Pope that removed hither, was Clement the 5. An. 1300; when as yet the Popes had no more right in it, than that of Patronage and Protection; and returned again to Rome, by Gregory the 11. An. 1377. In this City are ſaid to be 7 Palaces, 7 Pariſh-Churches, 7 Monaſteries, 7 Nunneries, 7 Inns, and 7 Gates. So that if there be any myſtery in the number of ſeven, or any credit to be given to ſuch Pythagorean divinity; the Arch-biſhop of this City may as well be entituled Antichriſt, as the Pope of Rome; if there be nothing but the myſtery of this number to affix it to him. It was made an Univerſity, at the time of the Popes firſt ſetling here; and ſo ſtill continueth: Alciat the great Emblematiſt, being here Profeſſor. 2. Carpentras, by Ptalomy called Carpentoracte, a Biſhops-See: as is alſo, 3. Cavillon, (of old Caballio) once a Roman Colony on the River Durance: and 4. Taraſcon, on the Rhoſne, oppoſite to Beaucaire in Languedoc; for the Popes dwelling here ſo long, could not be otherwiſe attended than by mitred Prelates. 5. Vaſon, Civitas Vaſionenſium, of Antoninus.

The Revenues of the Pope here, are not very great, and thoſe expended all in keeping of Ports and Garriſons, by reaſon of the ill neighbourhood of the Proteſtants of Orange. So that it is ſuppoſed, that it is rather a charge, than a profit to him: which maketh the people like very well to live under his Government, as bringing more money to them, than he gathereth from them.

The Arms hereof, when under the old Earls of Venice, were Gules, two Keys in Saltire Or, ſtringed Azure. Which ſeems to have in it ſome preſage, (the Popes pretending to the Keys, as we know they do) that it ſhould one day become ſubject to the See of Rome.

The old Inhabitants of the whole Country were, as appeareth, the Salii, Maſſilienſes, Vaſionenſes, and Vencienſes, before mentioned; beſides the Decuates about Antibe, the Senitii, and Sigeſtorii, about Ciſteron; all conquered by the Romans in their firſt War in Gaul, called in to aid thoſe of Marſeilles againſt the Salii. The Fortune of it ſince, hath been ſhewn before. Nothing remains now but the Catalogue of The Earls of Provence.

1 Hugh de Arles, ſuppoſed to be the Son of Lotharius, King of Auſtraſia, and Waldrada his Concubine; made the firſt Earl of Provence, by Boſon the firſt, King of Burgundy. He was after King of Burgundy and Italy alſo.

2 William de Arles, the Son of Hugh.

3 William II. ſirnamed the younger, Son of William.

4 Gilbert Earl of Provence, the Father of the Lady Doulce.

1082 5 Raymond Arnold, Earl of Barcelone, the Husband of the Lady Doulce, of Provence.

7 Raymond II. Son of Berengar Raymond.

1173 8 Alfonso King of Aragon, and Earl of Barcelone; the Son and Heir of Raymond Earl of Barcelone, eldest Son unto Raymond Arnold, and the Lady Doulce.

1196 9 Alfonso II. second Son of Alfonso the first, succeeded in the Earldom of Provence, his eldest Brother Pedro inheriting the Realm of Aragon, and the Earldom of Barcelone.

10 Raymond III. Son of Alfonso, the last Earl of Provence of this Line.

1261 11 Charles of Valois, Earl of Anjou; and in right of Beatrix his Wife, one of the Daughters of Raymond the third, Earl of Provence. He was also King of Naples, Sicil, &c.

1282 12 Charles II. King of Naples, and Earl of Provence.

1310 13 Robert King of Naples, and Earl of Provence.

1342 14 Joan, Queen of Naples, and Countess of Provence.

1371 15 Lewis Duke of Anjou, the adopted Son of Queen Joan; Earl of Provence, and titulary King of Naples, &c. (Of whose descent from Charles de Valois, Earl of Anjou and Provence, we have spoke elsewhere.)

1385 16 Lewis II. Duke of Anjou, Earl of Provence, &c.

1416 17 Lewis III. Duke of Anjou, Earl of Province, &c.

1430 18 René, Brother of Lewis Duke of Anjou, &c.

1480 19 Charles Earl of Main, Son of Charles Earl of Main, the Brother of René, succeeded in all the Estates and Titles of his Uncle; and at his death gave Provence to King Lewis the 11th, his Cousin-german, as being the Son of Charles the 7th, and Mary Daughter of Lewis the second, Duke of Anjou, Sister of Lewis the third, and René, the preceding Dukes, and of Charles Father of this Charles, the last Earl of Provence. Immediately on whose death, Decemb. 19. An. 1481. the King sent a Commission to Palamede de Forban, Lord of Sollier, Chamberlain of Earl Charles, to take possession of the Country in his name, and command therein as Lieutenant-General. Since which time, Provence never was dismembred from the Crown of France, so much as in the way of Apennage, or any Honorary Title amongst the Kings Children.

What the Revenues of it were to the former Earls, I am not able to say, having no good Authority to proceed upon. Only I find, that besides the Lands belonging to the Earls hereof, and other customary and casual Taxes; there was a Tax called, The Royal Impost, being fifteen Florens levied upon every fire: which reckoning 3500 fires, (for such the estimate of them was) amounted yearly unto 56000 Florens. Now it is subject to the rigor and uncertainty of the Kings Taxations, as well as all the rest of France. And so much of those Provinces which properly made up the Kingdoms of the French and Goths, let us next look on those which at the same time were subdued by the Burgundians; whose History, Kingdom, and Estate are to be considered, before we come to the description of their several Provinces.

The Kingdom of BURGUNDY.

THE Kingdom of the BURGUNDIANS at their first setlement in Gaul, contained all those Provinces of the Roman Empire, then called the Alpes Graiæ, and Pœninæ, Maxima Sequanorum, Lugdunensis Prima, and Viennensis; now passing under the names of the Dukedom and County of Burgundy, Switzerland, the Grisons, Wallisland, Savoy, La Bresse, Dauphine, Lionois, Nivernois, and some part of the Dukedom of Bourbon. A fair and large quantity of ground, able at once to tempt and satisfie an ambitious Nation. But the Burgundians came not into Gaul of their own accord, though of their own accord they drew somewhat near it. In their Original, they were a people bordering near the Vandals, if not a Tribe or Sept of them: and dwelling in those parts in which are now the Dukedoms of Meclenburg, and Pomerania. At the time that Drusus and Tiberius warred in Germany, they were utterly barbarous, living in Tents only here and there clapped up. Which being in their own Language called Burgs, gave them the name of Burgundians amongst the Romans: in the same sense as the wild Arabs had the name of Scenitæ, amongst the Greeks, from the like kind of living. In the year 416, at the instigation of the Vandals, they left their own seats, and planted themselves in the Towns and Villages belonging now to the Marquesses of Baden, and Electors of Rhene. About which time they received the Christian Faith, being then miserably oppressed by the Hunnes, breaking upon them out of Pannonia. Not finding any other way to free themselves of that Enemy, they betook themselves to the God of the Christians, and were universally baptized. After which, falling on the Hunnes, they slew no less than 30000 of them in one Battel, from that time forwards, never troubled with that barbarous Nation. Christians then they were, and Orthodox in their profession, before their coming into Gaul: and for that reason called in by Stilico to oppose the French, then threatning an invasion of the Roman Provinces. Upon this invitation they passed over the River with an Army of 80000 fighting men, possessing themselves of all which lay from the farthest shore of the Loyre, to the Alpes of Italy; and from the Mountain Vauge, to the Mediterranean; Provence only excepted, about that same time planted by the Goths. Their Government was under Kings: Many according to their Tribes, when they lived in Germany: Monarchical, when setled in the Realm of France, where they had these five Kings of the Burgundians.

A.Ch.

408 1 Tabica, who first brought the Burgundians into Gaul.

2 Gundioch.

3 Gundebault, who harrassed Italy, then in possession of the Goths, with fire and sword; the Uncle of Clotilda, Wife to Clouis the fifth King of the French, by her perswasion made inclinable to the Christian Faith.

4 Sigismund.

5 Gundomar, the Son of Sigismund, first set upon by Clodomire, the Son of Clouis King of Orleans, whom he slew in Battel near Austun; but afterward outed of his Kingdom by Childebert and Clotaire, Kings of Paris and Soissons, in revenge of the death of their Brother.

Clo-

Clodomire. And ſo the Kingdom of the Burgundians fell unto the French, after it had continued about 120 years: Guntram the Son of Clotaire, and Clouis, one of the Sons of Dagobert the firſt; being, in their times, honoured with the Titles of Kings of Burgundy.

But the firſt time that the Kingdom of Burgundy ſetled amongſt the French, in the way of ſucceſſion, was in the partage of that vaſt Empire of Charlemagne, amongſt the children and poſterity of Ludovicus Pius: in conſtituting of which Kingdom, Provence was added to the reckoning, to make this anſwerable to the other parts of that broken Monarchy. The firſt of theſe French Kings, was Charles, the youngeſt Son of Lotharius Emperor, and King of Italy, eldeſt Son of the ſaid Lewis the Godly. The Succeſſion in this order following.

The French Kings of Burgundy.

A.Ch.

855 1 Charles, youngeſt Son of the Emperor Lotharius, died without iſſue.

858 2 Lotharius, the ſecond King of Mets, and Lewis the ſecond Emperor, Brethren of Charles, ſucceeded in Burgundy; the Mountain Jour dividing and bounding their Eſtates.

876 3 Charles the Bald, King of France, and Emperor, Uncle to the three former Kings, all dying without iſſue, ſucceeded in the whole Eſtate; which he again divided into three Governments or Members: that is to ſay, Burgundy on this ſide of the Soaſne, containing the now Dukedom of Burgundy, with the Earldoms of Lions and Maſcon. 2. Burgundy, beyond the Jour, comprehending the Provinces of Savoy, Switzerland, Walliſland, and the Eſtates of the Griſons: and 3ly, Burgundy, on the other ſide of the Soaſne, lying betwixt the other two, containing the now Counties of Burgundy, Provence, La Breſſe, and Daulphine. This laſt conferred with the Title of Earl, on Boſon Earl of Ardenne, by Charles the Bald, who had married his Siſter Judith; and not long after, in the perſon of the ſaid Earl Boſon, raiſed unto a Kingdom by Charles the Groſs, by the name of the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy. The Kings theſe that follow.

4 Boſon, Earl of Ardenne, Husband of Hermingrade, the Daughter of Lewis the ſecond, Emperor and King of Burgundy, was firſt by Charles the Bald, made Earl of Burgundy, beyond the Soaſne; and afterwards by Charles the Groſs, created the firſt King of Arles and Burgundy, to be held by him and his Succeſſors, of the German Emperours.

5. Lewis II. Son of Boſon, and Hermingrade, choſen King of Italy, but outed by the Faction of Berengarius.

917 6 Hugh de Arles, ſuppoſed to be the Son of Lotharius the ſecond, by Waldrada his Concubine; ſucceeded by the gift of Lewis, and was choſen by his Faction there, King of Italy alſo. For the quiet enjoying of which Kingdom, he reſigned this to Rodolph, Duke of Burgundy beyond the Jour, elected by another Faction, to that broken Title.

926 7 Rodolph Duke of Burgundy beyond the Jour, ſucceeded on the reſignation of Hugh de Arles; his Brother Boſon being ſetled beyond the Jour.

937 8 Rodolph II. Son of Rodolph, a Prince of ſo ſhort a reign, or of ſo little note, that he is by ſome left out of the Catalogue of theſe Kings.

9 Boſon II. the Brother of Rodolph the firſt; by whom the Dukedom of Burgundy beyond the Jour, was united to the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy.

965 10 Conrade Son to Boſon the ſecond.

990 11 Rodolph III. Son to Conrade; who having no iſſue of his body, gave his Eſtate to Conrade the ſecond, Emperor of Germany, and his Son Henry, ſirnamed the Black, whom he had by Gileſa, the Siſter of this Rodolph: by whom it was united to the German Empire, An. 1032. In the diſtractions whereof, following not long after his deceaſe, the Provincial Earls or Governours for the German Emperors, made themſelves Maſters and Proprietaries of their ſeveral Provinces, (the Dukedom of Burgundy excepted, ſetled long before) out of which roſe the great Eſtates of the Duke of Savoy, the Earls of Burgundy and Provence, the Daulphins of Viennois, and Lords of Breſſe, together with the Commonwealths of the Switzers and Griſons: every poor Bird ſnatching alſo ſome Feather or other of this dying Eagle. Yet notwithſtanding the diſmembring and cantoning of this fair Eſtate, the ſucceeding Emperors of Germany claimed not only a ſuper-intendence over, but a diſpoſal of all the Countries that ever were under the command of the King of Burgundy: inſomuch that the Emperour, Henry the ſixth, receiving no ſmall part of the money which our Richard the firſt paid to the Duke of Auſtria, for his ranſom, gave unto the ſaid Richard the Kingdom of Burgundy, the Soveraignty of Provence, Viennois, Marſeilles, Narbon, Arles, and Lions, together with the Homages of the King of Aragon, and of the Earl of Digon and St. Giles. A Royal gift, if either the Emperor had any dominion over thoſe Countries, or if they would have received any Prince or Officer of his appointing.

The Arms of this Kingdom under the old Burgundian Kings, are ſaid to have been Azure, a Cat Arg. armed Gules. Which being ſaid, we will proceed to the deſcription of thoſe Provinces of this broken Kingdom, which lye within the bounds of France; the reſt, which lye beyond the Jour, having been ſpoken of already in the Alpine Countries, which made up the whole Continennt of the Transjouran Burgundy.

18. DAVLPHINE.

NOrth of the Country of Provence, where we left before, lyeth that of DAULPHINE; having on the Eaſt, Savoy, and the Maritime Alpes; on the Weſt, Lionois, and ſome part of Languedoc, from which divided by the Rhoſne; and on the North La Breſſe, and thoſe parts of Savoy which lye towards Piemont, ſo called, as ſome report, from Dauphine, Wife of Guigne the ſecond; in like manner as Flanders is affirmed moſt probably to have took that name from Flandrina, Wife of Liderick the ſecond, then one of the laſt of thoſe Princes who governed in that Country by the name of Forreſters.

It is divided into the Higher and the Lower; the one mountainous, ſtony, and unfruitful, of the ſame nature with the Alpes, with whoſe branches it is over-run: the other tolerably fruitful, but not to be compared with the reſt of France. The people of the Higher, and more mountainous parts, are generally groſs and rude; not capable of Learning, but well enough enclined to Arms and Traffick; and have a cuſtom, that on the coming on of Winter, Winter, they ſend abroad all thoſe which are fit for travel, whom they call Bics, or Biſonards) who ſeldom return back till Eaſter: none ſtaying at home but old men, children, and impotent perſons, which cannot go abroad to get their livings. Thoſe in the Lower are more civil, but not more given to labour, than the Mountainers are; nor very covetous of gain, ſo they may live at eaſe, without want or penury. In both parts generally good Souldiers, and well affected to their Prince.

The Lower Daulphine, together with that part of Provence which lies next to the Rhoſne, and the adjoining parts of Savoy, made up the Province called Viennenſis, from Vienna the Metropolis of it, ſituate on the Rhoſne, honoured with the Seat of the Præfectus Prætorio Galliarum; ſtill the chief City of this Country, an Arch-biſhops See, and a Siege Præſidial. From hence the tract about it is called Viennois, and was the Title of the firſt Proprietaries of this Country, entituled, Daulphins of Viennois. To this Town, Archelaus, the Son of Herod, was baniſhed by Auguſtus Cæſar. 2. Valence, the chief City heretofore of the Valentini, then a Roman Colony; now a Biſhops See, and an Univerſity for the Civil Laws: a rich, ſtrong, and well traded Town, ſeated on the Rhoſne. The Country hereabouts from hence called Valentinois; and hath given Honorary Title to two perſons of more Fame, than Honour: the firſt of which was Cæſar Borgia, the Son of Pope Alexander the ſixth, who caſting off his Cardinals Cap, was made Duke of Valentinois, by Charles the eighth: the other, Madam Diana, the great Minion and Paramour of Henry the ſecond, under whom ſhe much ſwayed the affairs of France, and honoured with the Title of Dutcheſs of it. 3. Grenoble, (in Latin, Gratianopolis) the chief Seat heretofore of the Accuſiani; the moſt populous and beſt built of all this Province; and much reſorted to by the Lords and Nobles, by reaſon of the Court of Parliament here erected, An. 1453. About this, lieth the Country called 3. Griſinaudan. 4. Ternay. 5. Roſſillon. 6. La Roche. 7. Montelimar, all along the Rhoſne. 8. Romons, upon the confluence of the Rhoſne, and the Iſere. 9. Cremien. 10. St. Marceline. 11. S. Andre. 12. Beaurepaire, more within the Country.

The Higher Dauphine, together with thoſe parts of Provence which lye next to Italy, made up the Province of the Alpes Maritimæ; the Metropolis whereof was, 1. Ebrodunum, now called Ambrun, an Arch-biſhops See, and Siege Præſidial, ſeated on an high Rock, in the midſt of a pleaſant Valley, ſurrounded with Mountains, under which runs the River Durance. The Hilly Country hereabouts is the higheſt of France. 2. Brianſon, near the head of the River Durance, called Brigantio by Antoninus. 3. Geppe, now a Biſhops See, formerly the chief City of the Apencenſes; the track of whom is ſtill found in the name of the adjoining Territory, called Le Pais Gapencois: memorable for a Synod or Aſſembly of the French Proteſtants here holden, An. 1603, in which it was determined, and as for an Article of Faith, That the Pope was Antichriſt, and where the Miniſters then aſſembled, gave audience to the Ambaſſadors of Forreign States, as to a Commonwealth diſtinct from the Realm of France: audaciouſly importuning their King by their ſeveral Agents, for liberty of going (whenſoever they liſted) or ſending whenſoever they pleaſed, unto the Councils and Aſſemblies of all Forreign Nations, which profeſſed the ſame Religion with them: the Preamble to thoſe Encroachments on the Royal Authority, which after proved the ruine of their Power and Party. 4. Tricaſſin, ſo called of the Tricaſſini, the old inhabitants of theſe parts. 5. Die, the Dia Vocontiorum of Antoninus; a Biſhops See, ſituate on the River Droſne: from whence comes thoſe ſmall, but good Stomack-Wines, which we call Vin Die. Others affirm, (and perhaps more knowingly) that this Wine is of the growth of Champagne, moſt plentifully growing in the Fields of a Town called Hey; from whence it hath the name of Vin de Hey; and ſo contractedly, Vin Day. 6. Chorges, 7. Mombrum, 8. Eſſiles; of which, little memorable.

The chief Inhabitants hereof, in the time of the Romans, beſides the Tricaſſini, Apencenſes, Vacontii, and Accuſiani, before mentioned; and the Allobroges, ſpoken of in the Alpine Provinces, were the Segulauni, about Valence; the Decenſes about Die, and the Cavari about Grenoble. Firſt conquered by the Romans, then by the Burgundians, and at laſt by the French: under whom made a part of the new Kingdom of Burgundy, till the ſurrender of the ſame to the German Emperors. Under them it continued till the year 1100; when Guigne, ſirnamed the Fat, Earl of Griſinaudan, ſeeing the Emperor Henry the Fourth, over-born by the Popes, and not able to aſſert his own rights, ſeized upon this Province under the title of Earl of Viennois, to which Guigne the ſecond, his Son and Succeſſor, gave the name of Daulphine, either from his Wife ſo called, as ſome; or from the Dolphin which he took for his Arms, as others ſay. In this Family it continued till the year 1349, under the Power and Government of theſe following Princes, entituled,

The Daulphins of Viennois.

A.Ch.
1100	1	Guigne, ſirnamed the Fat, Earl of Albon and Griſinaudan, at the time of the diſſolution of the Kingdom of Burgundy.
1135	2	Guigne II. the firſt and abſolute Proprietary Prince hereof, by the name of the Daulphin of Viennois.
1146	3	Guigne III. Son of Guigne the ſecond.
1152	4	Beatrix, Daughter of Guigne the third, firſt married to Reymond the third, Earl of Tholouſe, next to Hugh the third, Duke of Burgundy; and finally, to Guigne of Albon, of the houſe of the former Earls; all in her right entituled, Daulphins of Viennois.
1208	5	Andrew, the Son of Beatrix and of Guigne the Fourth.
1242	6	Guigne V. Son of Andrew.
1283	7	Humbert the firſt, in the right of Anne his wife, daughter and heir of Guigne the fifth.
1335	8	John the Son of Humbert, exerciſed in continual Wars, as his Father was, was with the Earls of Savoy.
1322	9	Guigne VI. Son of John, taken Priſoner by Edward Earl of Savoy, An. 1329, and at laſt ſlain, An. 1342.
1342	10	Humbert II. the younger Son of John, and the Brother of Guigne the ſixth, the laſt Daulphin of Viennois, who being ſurcharged with Wars by Ame (or Amede) Earl of Savoy, entred into the Order of Dominican Friers, at Lions; ſelling his Country at a ſmall rate, to Philip de Valois, French King, upon condition, that the eldeſt Son of France ſhould be entituled always, Daulphin of Viennois; and quarter the Arms of Daulphin, with thoſe of France. The conditions willingly accepted; and Charles, the Son of King John, the Son of Philip de Valois, admitted by his Grandfather both to the Title and Eſtate, in the very year of the ſurrendry. Since this time, the eldeſt Son of France is called generally, the Daulphin of France; ſometimes, the Daulphin only, by way of eminency; and many times, the the Prince-Daulphin, to difference him from the Daulphin (or Count-Daulphin) of Auvergne, and perhaps some others. A Title so annexed unto them, that it is not usually laid by on the accession of a greater or superiour Dignity: insomuch as Francis the eldest Son of Henry the second, (whom he succeeded in the Crown) being King of Scots in the right of Mary his Wife, was by the French commonly called Le Roy Daulphin, or the King of Daulphin. Nor have they the bare Title of this Country only, but the commands, profits, and possession of it, sending their own Governours thereunto; who by an ancient Indulgence, have the greatest Priviledges (conferring all Offices within the Province) of any Governors of France.

19. LA BRESSE.

LA BRESSE is bounded on the East with Savoy: on the West with Lionois; on the North with Charolois in the Dutchy of Burgundy, and some part of the Franche County; and on the South, with Daulphine. The reason of the name I find not. The Country is very fruitful and pleasant, embraced betwixt the Rivers of Soasne and Rhosne, with which very well watered. Chief Towns herein are, 1. Bellay, a Bishops See. 2. Bourg, (for distinctions sake called Bourgen Bresse) a Town so well fenced, and fortified with so strong a Citadel for command of the Country, that it was thought little inferiour to the two impregnable Fortresses of St. Katherines and Montmelian, in Savoy. The Government of which Town and Citadel, was earnestly laboured for by the Duke of Biron, then Governour of Burgundy, after a repulse on the like suit, for that of St. Katherine: but being suspected to hold intelligence with the Duke of Savoy, at that time in ill terms with King Henry the 4th, it was also denied him: which drew him into discontent, and thereby to his fatal ruine. Afterwards, during the minority of Lewis the 13th, demolished by special Order of the Council of France, for fear of being surprised by the Duke of Savoy, during those confusions. It was of old time called the Forum Secusianorum, from the Secusiani, the ancient Inhabitants of this Tract. 3. Castillon, 4. Mont-Real, 5. Bugey, 6. Veronen, of which nothing observable.

This little Province, being anciently a part of the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy, had its own Earls, Proprietary Lords hereof; who held it till the year 1285: at what time Sibyll, the Daughter and Heir of Ulric Earl of Bresse and Baugie, (or Bassee, as some Writers call it) conveyed the Estate in marriage to Ame, or Amedee, the 4th of that name Earl of Savoy. In which House it continued till the year 1600, and then surrendred by Duke Charles Emanuel, to King Henry the 4th, to silence the pretences which that King made unto the Marquisate of Saluzzes, and put an end unto the War then begun about it: the politick Duke chusing rather to part with an Estate on this side of the Mountains, than to give that active King occasion to look into Italy; to which Savoy must have been a thorow-fare, Piemont an ordinary Pass; and where no end could be expected, but the loss of all. Surrendred then it was on good reason of State, and upon that Surrendry united and incorporated with the Crown of France, and put under the Government of the Parliament of Digon, as it still continueth.

Arms hereof, are Azure, a Lyon Ermins, armed and langued, Or.

THE Country of LIONOIS is bounded on the East with Bresse, on the West with Beau-jolois, Forrest, and Auvergne; on the North, with Burgundy Dutchy; and on the South with Daulphin, and a part of Languedoc. So called from Lions the chief City; and under that Title made an Earldom by Charles the Gross, in the cantoning and dismembring of the Kingdom of Burgundy. The Earldom containing at that time not only Lionois it self, but also Forrest and Beau-jolois, before described. The Earls hereof were at first only Provincial Governours; but under the distractions of the German Empire, they shifted for themselves, and became hereditary: but long it held not in one hand. For first, the Earldom of Forrest, and the Lordship or Signeury of Beau-jeu being taken out of it about the year 990, the rest of the Estate fell in some tract of time to the Bishops and Church of Lions; but under the Soveraignty of the French Kings, as Lords Paramount of it.

The places in it of most note are, 1. Mascon, (Matisconum) a Bishops See, situate on the Soasne, anciently a distinct Earldom from that of Lions, one of the five (as that of Lions was another) which made up the Dukedom of Burgundy on this side of the Soasne: one of the Earls hereof, called William, flourishing in the year 1060, or thereabouts; whose Son and Successor, named Otho, married Elizabeth daughter of Humbert, the first Earl of Maurienne, (a Title afterwards exchanged for that of Savoy). Continuing for some Ages after in this Posterity, it was purchased of William the last Earl hereof, and of Elizabeth his Wife, by King Lewis the 9th; and afterwards subjected to the Jurisdiction and Court of Lions, as it still continueth. 2. Eschalas, on the Rhosne, on the South of Lions, opposite to Vienne, the chief City of the Lower Daulphin. 3. Dandilli, 4. Francheville, 5. Chaumont, and 6. Lebrelle, all somewhat Westward of that River, but not much observable, 7. Lions it self, pleasantly seated on the confluence of the Soasne and the Rhosne, anciently a Roman Colony, (testified by many old Inscriptions) and honoured with a magnificent Temple, dedicated by the Cities of France, to Augustus Cæsar: now the most famous Mart of France, and an University; by our Latin Writers called Lugdunum. These Marts in former times were holden at Geneva, from thence removed hither by King Lewis the 11th, for the enriching of his own Kingdom. When Julio the second had excommunicated Lewis the 12th, he commanded by his Apostolical Authority, that they should be returned to Geneva again: but therein his pleasure was never obeyed; the Marts continuing still at LIONS, as a place more convenient and capacious for that great resort of French, Dutch, and Italian Merchants, which frequent the same. As for the University, questionless it is very ancient, being a seat of Learning in the time of Caius Caligula. For in those times, before an Altar consecrated to Augustus Cæsar in the Temple spoken of before; this Caligula did institute some exercises of the Greek and Roman Eloquence: the Victor to be honoured according to his merit; the Vanquished either to be ferulated, or with their own tongues to blot and expunge their Writings, or to be drowned in the River adjoining. Hence that of Juvenal, Ut Lugdunensem Rhetor dicturus ad aram, applyed to dangerous Undertakings. In the time of the Romans first coming into Gaul, it was the chief City of the Hedui, and Secusiani, afterwards the Metropolis of Lugdunensis Prima. The Archbishop hereof, is the Metropolitan of all France; and was so in the time of S. Irenæus, one of the renowned Fathers in the Primitive Church, who was Bishop here.

In this Town lived Peter Waldo, a wealthy Citizen, about the time of Frederick Barbaroſſa, Emperor of Germany; who being a devout and conscientious man, sensible of the many errors and corruptions in the Church of Rome, distributed the greatest part of his Riches amongst the poor, and betook himself to meditation, and studying of the holy Scriptures. In the carnal eating of CHRIST's Body, the subtraction of the Cup in the blessed Sacrament, in matter of Purgatory, the Supremacy, adoration of Images, invocation of the Saints departed, and many other points of moment, he held opinions contrary to those of Rome, and little different from those of the present Reformed Churches. And yet it may not be denyed, but that amongst some good Wheat, there were many Tares; which gave the juster colour to their Adversaries to exclaim against them. Being much followed in regard of his Piety and Charity, he got unto himself and them the name of Pauperes de Lugduno, or the Poor men of Lions, given in derision and contempt. Afterwards they were called Waldenses, by the name of Waldo, the beginner of this Reformation; and by that name opposed and writ against by Fryer Thomas of Walden. The French, according to their manner of pronunciation, drowning the L, and changing the W into V, call them commonly Vaudois; by which name they occur in the stories of that State and Language. But Lions proving no safe place for them, they retired into the more desart parts of Languedoc; and spreading on the banks of the River Alby, obtained the name of Albigenses, as before was said. Supported by the two last Earls of Tholouse, they became very masterful and insolent: insomuch, that they murdered Trincanel their Viscount in Beziers, and dashed out the teeth of their Bishop, having taken Sanctuary in S. Magdalens Church, one of the Churches of that City. Forty years after which high out-rage, the Divine Providence gave them over to the hand of the Croisadas, under the conduct of the French Kings, and many other noble Adventurers, who sacrificed them in the self same Church, wherein they had spilled the blood of others. About the year 1250, after a long and bloody War, they were almost rooted out of that Country also. The remnants of them, being bettered by this affliction, betook themselves unto the Mountains lying betwixt Daulphine, Provence, Piemont, and Savoy, where they lived a godly and laborious life; painfully tilling the ground, rebuilding Villages, which formerly had been destroyed by War; teaching the very Rocks to yield good pasturage to their Cattel: insomuch as places which before their coming thither, scarce yielded four Crowns yearly, were made worth 350 Crowns a year, by their care and industry. Luscivious ness in speech they used not: Blasphemy they abhorr'd; nor was the name of Devil (in the way of execration) ever heard amongst them; as their very Enemies could not but confess, when they were afterward in troubles. The Crimes alledged against them, were, That when they came into any of the neighbouring Churches, they made no address unto the Saints, nor bowed before such Crosses as were erected in the High-ways, and Streets of Towns. Great crimes assuredly, when greater could not be produced! And so they lived, neither embracing the Pope's Doctrines, nor submitting unto his Supremacy, for the space of 300 years, untouched, unquestioned; even till the latter end of the reign of King Francis the first. But then the Persecution raging against the Lutherans, they were accused, condemned, and barbarously murdered, in the Massacres of Merindol, and Cabriers, before-mentioned. After which time, joining themselves with the rest of the Protestant party, they lost the name of Vaudois, by which called before; and pass in the account of the Reformed Churches of France; enjoying the same priviledges and freedom of Conscience, as others of the Reformed do. And though I look not on these men, and their Congregations, as Founders of the Protestant Church, or of the same Church with them, as I see some do: yet I behold them as Assertors of some Doctrinal Truths, and professed Enemies of the Errors and Corruptions of the Church of Rome, and therein as the Predecessors of the present Protestants.

The old Inhabitants of this Tract, were a part of the Hedui, that Nation overspreading not this Country only, but Bourbonnois, with the whole Dukedom of Burgundy. And of these Hedui, the Insubres are thought by some learned men to have been a Tribe, who passing over the Alpes, together with the Senones, and others of the Gallick Nations, possessed themselves of those parts of Italy which now make up the Dukedoms of Millain, Parma, Mantua, with the parts adjoining. The residue of the story which concerns this Country we have had before.

21. The Dukedom of Burgundy.

THE Dukedom of BURGUNDY hath on the East, the French County, and some part of Savoy; on the West, Bourbonnois; on the North, Champagne; on the South, La Bresse, Lionois; and some part of Beau-joulois. A Provence so well watered with pleasant and profitable Rivers, that as Queen Katharine de Medices used to say of France, That it had more fair Rivers than all Europe; so we may say of this Country, That it hath more fine Riverets than all France: here being the Rivers of 1. Armacan, 2. Serum, 3. Curi, 4. Torney, 5. Valence, 6. Dove, 7. Brune, 8. Sein, 9. Louche, and 10. Soasne, (the Araris of the ancient Writers) this last dividing the two Burgundies from one another. Yet notwithstanding this great plenty of Waters, the Country generally is less fruitful than the rest of France: hardly yielding sufficient for its own Inhabitants, except Wines only.

Chief Cities in it are, 1. Dijon, the birth-place of S. Bernard; seated upon the Soasne and L'ouche, in a Champian Country: the Town large, populous, and of much resort, as being the Seat of the Governour, and Parliamentary for the Province, a Parliament being here erected, An. 1476. Well fortified on all parts, but specially defended by a strong Castle, called Talente, situate on a hill adjoining. It is called Divio in the Latin; the Bishop hereof Divionensis. 2. Chalons, (in Latin, Caballinum) called for distinctions sake, Chalons upon Soasne, to difference it from Chalons upon Marn, in Champagne: a Bishops See also, as the other is: and gives name to that Noble Family of Chalons, (out of which the Princes of Orange are extracted) being one of the four ancient Families of Burgundy, the other three, Vienne, Neufchatel, and Virgie. 3. Autun, by Ptolomy called Augustodunum, the chief City of the Hedui, now a Bishops See, heretofore the chief of all the Country, some marks of the old splendor being still to be seen: now very ordinary and mean, beautified only with some fair Churches, which the ruines of Time have not yet demolished. 4. Beaune, seated on the Bursoize, in the best and richest soil of all Burgundy, and yielding the best Wines in all France; remarkable for an Hospital of so fair a building, that it is thought equal to any Princes Palace in Europe; and an impregnable Castle built by King Lewis XII. 5. Alize, now a small Village, but of great name and power in the time of Cæsar, then called Alexia, the chief Fortress of Vercingetorix, besieged herein by the said Cæsar; but so besieged, that he had 70000 men in the Town for defence of the place, and an Army of 300000 Gauls at the back of Cæsar, to relieve their Fellows. So that he was fain to fortifie his Camp with two Walls, the one against them within the City, and the other against them without: which done, he kept such diligent watch and ward on both sides, that the besieged heard sooner of the discomfiture of their friends, than they did of their coming. Which fatal news being brought unto them, the Town was yielded. And Vercingetorix bravely mounted, rode round about Cæsar; then sitting in his Chair of State, disarmed himself, took off his Horses caparisons; and laying all upon the ground, sate down at Cæsar's feet, and became his Prisoner. 6. Tournus, encompassed with the Soasne. 7. Semur, consisting of three parts, each of them severally walled, and strongly fortified. 8. Verdun. 9. Nayx, 10. St. Ligier, famous for Medicinal Baths. 11. Noyors, on the borders towards Champagne. 12. Auxerre, by Antonine called Antisiodorum, of most note for the Council held here, An. 627. the Country about which, is called Auxerrois; and was an Earldom of it self. The Title and Possession of that Peter Earl of Auxerre, who was the third Emperour of the Latines reigning in Constantinople; to whom it came in Marriage with his first Wife Agnes, the Daughter of the last Earl of the former Race. On the failure of which house, it fell unto that of Chalons, by the Marriage of Isabel, Niece of the said Peter, by his Brother Robert, to John of Chalons, Earl of Burgundy: to whom succeeded John de Chalons, his eldest Son by that Venter, (his second Wife) and finally, was sold by John de Chalons, great Grandchild of the said John Earl of Burgundy, to Charles the Fifth of France, An. 1370. by whom united to the Crown; subjected to the Parliament of Paris, and made part of Champagne. Here is also within this Country, the great and famous Monastery of Cisteaux; the Mother of so many Religious Houses dispersed up and down in Europe; from hence denominated, and subject to the Discipline and Rules hereof.

Within the limits of this Dukedom, (on the South parts of it) stands the Earldom of CHAROLLOIS, heretofore the Title of the eldest Son of the Dukes of Burgundy: so called from Charolles, the chief Town hereof, situate in the borders of it, towards La Bresse: seized upon with the rest of this Dukedom, by Lewis XI. immediately on the death of Duke Charles the Warlike: restored again to Philip the Second, King of Spain, by Henry the Second, of France, on the Peace made at Cambray, and subjected to the Parliament of Dole in the County of Burgundy, as a part or member of that Estate. So that neither the Governour of the Dukedom for the French King, nor the Parliament of Digion, have any thing to do in it. The Arms hereof are Gules, a Lion passant regardant Or, armed Azure.

The ancient Inhabitants of the whole Dukedom, according to the limits before laid down, were the Hedui, one of the most potent Nations of all Gaul: who calling in the Romans to aid them in their quarrels against the Sequani and Arverni, made them all subject unto Rome. In the prosperity whereof, they made up the Province of Lugdunensis Prima, of which Lions was the Metropolis or principal City. Afterwards, in the division of the French Kingdom of Burgundy, by Charles the Bald; this part thereof being called the Dukedom of Burgundy, on this side of the Soasne, was cantoned into the five Earldoms of Dijon, Chalons, Autun, Lions, and Mascon: whereof the three first laid together by Odo or Eudes King of France, during the Minority of Charles the Simple, were given unto his Brother Richard (both Sons of Robert Earl of Anjou) under the stile and title of Duke of Burgundy. The Issue of this Robert failing, it fell unto another Robert, Son of Hugh Capet, King of France: and the Male-issue failing of that Line also, it was devolved (partly by escheat for want of Heirs male; and partly in the Right and Title of the Heir-general) to King John of France, the Son of Philip de Valois, and of Joan his Wife, one of the Daughters of Robert the Third; who with the consent of Charles his eldest Son, sirnamed the Wise, gave it unto his second Son Philip, (more worthily sirnamed the Hardy) together with the Marriage of the Heir of Flanders, Artois, and the County of Burgundy. An Argument of no great Wisdom, as was judiciously observed by King Lewis the Eleventh. For by this means, those great Estates being united in one person, and afterwards these Estates improved by as prosperous Marriages; this House of Burgundy grew formidable to the Kings themselves, who never left practising against it, till they had brought it to ruine; and once again united this Dukedom to their own Estates, from which at first it was dismembred.

The Dukes of Burgundy.

890	1	Richard of Saxony, the second Son of Robert Earl of Anjou, Brother of Eudes, and Father of Rodolph, Kings of France.
938	2	Gilbert, the second Son of Richard.
964	3	Otho, Son of Hugh Earl of Paris, sirnamed the Great, and Brother of Hugh Capet, King of France; was Duke of Burgundy, in right of his Wife the Daughter of Gilbert.
976	4	Henry, the Brother of Otho.
1001	5	Robert, King of France, Son of Hugh Capet, succeeded in the Dukedom, on the death of his Uncle Henry.
1004	6	Robert II. Son of this Robert, and Brother of Henry King of France.
1075	7	Hugh, the Nephew of Robert, by his Son Henry, became afterwards a Monk of Clugny.
1097	8	Odo, or Otho II. Brother of Hugh.
1102	9	Hugh II. Son of Otho the Second.
1124	10	Odes, or Otho III. Son of Hugh the Second.
1165	11	Hugh III. the Companion, but great Enemy of our Richard the First, in the Wars of the Holy Land.
1192	12	Odes, or Otho IV. Son of Hugh the Third.
1218	13	Hugh IV. an Adventurer with King Lewis the Ninth in the Holy Land.
1273	14	Robert III. Son of Hugh IV. which Robert was the Father of Margaret, the Wife of Lewis Hutin, King of France and Navarre; and of Joan, the Wife of Philip de Valois, French King, and Grandmother of Philip the Hardy, after Duke of Burgundy.
1308	15	Hugh V. Son of Robert the Third.
1315	16	Eudes, the Brother of Hugh, was Earl of Burgundy also, in right of his Wife.
1349	17	Philip, the Grandchild of Eudes by his only Son Philip, Duke and Earl of Burgundy, by descent, (who if he had lived, had been also Earl of Flanders and Artois, in right of Margaret his Wife.) But dying young and without without Issue, he was succeeded in all his Titles and Estates, by 1363 18 Philip II. surnamed the Hardy, Son of John King of France, Son of Philip de Valois, and of Joan Daughter of Robert the 3d, by King John his Father, with the consent of Charles the 5th his Brother, (in whom the right of this Dukedom was then pretended to remain) made Duke of Burgundy, and married Margaret Daughter of Lewis de Malain (and consequently Heir of Flanders, and the County of Burgundy) the Widow of his Predecessor.

1404 19 John, surnamed the Proud, Son of Philip the 2d, Duke and Earl of Burgundy, and Earl of Flanders and Artois.

1419 20 Philip III. surnamed the Good, who added most of the Netherlands to his Estate.

1467 21 Charles the Warlike, Earl of Charolois, Son of Philip the Good. After whose death, slain by the Switzers at the battel of Nancie, Lewis the 11th seized upon this Dukedom, An 1476, pretending an Escheat thereof, for want of Heirs males; and so uniting it for ever to the Crown of France: as by like colour of Escheat, King John had formerly entred on it, and given it unto Philip his younger Son, to the prejudice of the Earls of Eureux, descended from the daughter and heir of Lewis Hutin, and of Margaret his Wife, the elder Sister of the Mother of the said King John.

Of the great Wealth and Potency of these last Dukes of Burgundy, we shall speak further when we come to the description of Belgium: the accession whereof to their Estates, made them equal to most Kings in Christendom. But for their Arms, which properly belonged to them as Dukes of Burgundy, they were Bendwise of Or and Azure a Border Gules. Which Coat is usually marshalled in the Scutcheons of the Kings of Spain; that of the Earldom being omitted, though in their possession. The reasons of which are probably (for I go but by guess) partly because this being the older and Paternal Coat, comprehends the other; and partly to keep on foot the memory of this Title to the Dukedom it self, in right of which he holdeth such a great Estate.

22. The County of BURGUNDY.

THE County of BURGUNDIE hath on the East the Mountain Jour, which parts it from Switzerland, on the West the Dutchy of Burgundy, from which divided by the Soasne; on the North a branch of the Mountain Vauge, which runneth betwixt it and Lorrein; on the South La Bresse. It is reckoned to be 90 miles in length, about 60 in breadth: and with the Provinces of Daulphine, La Bresse, and Provence, made up the Dukedom of Burgundy beyond the Soasne; on the Eastern side of which it is wholly situate. This part thereof, now generally called the Frenche Comtè, or the Free County, because not under the command of the French Kings; but living in a more free Estate than any Subjects of that Kingdom.

The County in some parts very Mountainous, but those Mountains yielding excellent Vineyards, and having, in recompence of a little barrenness, an intermixture of most pleasing and fruitful Valleys, swelling with plenty of all natural commodities useful unto the life of man; and for the variety of fresh Streams, and delightful Riverets, inferior only to the Dutchy.

The principal Towns and Cities of it, are, 1. Besanson, called by Cæsar, Vesontio, then the chief City of the Sequani, as afterwards the Metropolis of the Province entituled, Maxima Sequanorum; by consequence an Archbishops See. Seated betwixt two Mountains on the banks of the River Doux, by which it is almost encompassed; such artificial Fortifications being added to it, as make it very strong both by Art and Nature. But this is an Imperial City, not subject to the Government and Command of the Earls of Burgundy; honoured with a small University founded here, An. 1540, by Pope Julio the second, and Charles the fifth. 2. Dole, seated on the same River Doux, for riches, strength, and beauty, to be preferred before any in all the County; of which, it is the Parliament-City, and consequently of most resort for dispatch of business. Anciently it was an University for the study of the Civil Laws; but now the University is devoured by a Colledge of Jesuits: who fearing lest the Doctrine of the Reformed Churches might creep in amongst the people, not only have debarr'd them the use of the Protestants Books; but have expresly forbid them to talk of GOD, either in a good sort or in a bad. 3. Salins, so called from its salt Fountains; out of which came the greatest part of the Earls Revenue: in which respect, or that it was the title of Otho the Son of Frederick Barbarossa, before he did attain the Earldom; the Earls of Burgundy since that time, and the Emperors of Germany, in their right, retain the name of Lords of Salines, in their usual stile. A City honoured for a while with the Seat of the Parliament, removed hither from Dole by King Lewis the 11th, at such time as he held this Country, beholding to him (being a wise and politick Prince) for many wholsom Ordinances, still observed amongst them. 4. Poligni, the Bailliage of the Lower; as 5. Vesoal is of the Higher Burgundy. 6. Arbois, noted for the best Wines, and 7. Luxoal, for medicinal Baths. 8. Nazareth, on the borders of Switzerland, fortified with a very strong Castle, the ordinary seat and retreat from business, of the first Prince of Orange, of the House of Chalons, who had great possessions in this Country. 9. Gray, and 10. Chastel Chalon, 11. Quingey, 12. Orgelet. Here is also the great and famous Abbey of Clugny, near the Town of Bruin; out of which so many Monasteries in the Western Church, had their first Original.

The old Inhabitants of this County, were the Sequani, a potent Nation, contending with the Hedui and Averni, for the Soveraignty of Gaul, till the strife was ended by the Romans, under whom it made, together with Switzerland, the Province of Maxima Sequanorum. In the declining of which Empire, it fell to the Burgundians; and by Rodolph the last, King of the French, the Kingdom of Burgundy was given to Conrade the second Emperor of Germany. After that, reckoned as a part of the German Empire, and governed by such Earls or Provincial Officers, as those Emperors sent hither. Otho of Flanders, Son to a Sister of the Emperor Conrade, was the first that held it as Proprietary; the other three whom Paradine sets before him in his Catalogue of the Earls of Burgundy, being meerly Official. It was first united to the Dutchy, by the marriage of D. Eudes, with Joan the Countess. But no issue coming out of this bed, it fell into the House of Flanders; and with the Heir of Flanders, unto Philip the Hardy, the first Duke hereof, of the Royal Race of Valois, An. 1369. Philip the Grandchild of this Philip, united most of the Belgick Provinces unto his Estate: after whose death, and the death of Charles his Son, at the Battel of Nancie, the Dutchy was surprised by King Lewis the eleventh, as holden of the Crown of France, eſcheated to him for want of Heirs-males. But the County, holden of the Empire, though ſubdued alſo by this Lewis, was reſtored again to Mary the Daughter and Heir of Charles, continuing hitherto in her Iſſue; as appears evidently by this Catalogue of The Earls of Burgundy.

1101 1 Otho Guilliaume, the firſt Earl of Burgundy, by the power and aid of Robert King of France.
1118 2 Reinald, Couſin and Heir of Otho.
1157 3 Frederick Barbaroſſa, Emperor, in right of Beatrix his Wife, Daughter of Earl Reinald, was Earl of Burgundy.
1183 4 Otho, the youngeſt Son of Frederick.
1200 5 Otho II. Duke of Meranie, part of the Province of Tirol in Germany, was Earl of Burgundy in right of Beatrix his Wife, the Daughter of Otho the firſt.
1208 6 Stephen, Earl of Chalone, next Heir of Gerard of Vienne, and Joan his Wife, the ſecond Daughter of Otho the firſt, and Siſter of Beatrix; acknowledged by his Faction there, for Earl of Burgundy, in the life of Otho the ſecond, whom he diſpoſſeſſed, and left the ſame unto his Son, to the prejudice of Alice the Daughter of Otho.
1234 7 John, Son of Stephen de Chalons.
1269 8 Hugh, the Son of John, married to Alice Daughter of Otho of Meranie; ſo getting in that pretenſion alſo.
1279 9 Othelin, the Son of Hugh, Earl of Artois in right of Maud his Wife, Daughter of Robert Earl of Artois.
1315 10 Philip the Long, King of France; Earl of Burgundy and Artois, in right of Joan his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Othelin.
1331 11 Eudes, Duke of Burgundy, Husband of Joan of France, the eldeſt Daughter of King Philip the Long, and of Joan the Counteſs.
1349 12 Philip, Duke and Earl of Burgundy, Grandchild of Eudes, and of Joan his Wife, by their Son Philip.
14 Lewis de Malain, Earl of Flanders by his Father, and of Burgundy and Artois, by his Mother.
1383 15 Philip II. called the Hardy, Duke of Burgundy, by the gift of King John his Father, with the conſent and approbation of his Brother Charles the fifth, was Earl of Burgundy, Flanders, and Artois; as alſo, Duke of Nevers and Rethel, in right of Margarite his Wife, ſole Daughter of Lewis de Malain.
1404 16 Antony the Proud, Duke and Earl of Burgundy, his younger Brother Philip, ſucceeding in the Earldoms of Nevers and Rethel.
1419 17 Philip III. called the Good, Duke and Earl of Burgundy.
1467 18 Charles the Warlike, Duke and Earl of Burgundy.
1476 19 Mary, the Daughter of Charles, married to Maximilian of Auſtria, Son of Frederick the third, Emperour of Germany; in which honour he ſucceeded his Father.
1482 20 Philip IV. Son of Mary and Maximilian, King of Caſtile, in right of his Wife Joan, daughter to Ferdinand and Iſabel, King of Caſtile, &c.
1506 21 Charles, the Son of Philip, King of Spain, and Emperour of Germany, by the name of Charles the fifth.
1558 22 Philip V. of Burgundy, and the IId. of Spain.
23 Philip VI. of Burgundy, and the IIId. of Spain.
24 Philip VII. of Burgundy, and the IV. of Spain; in whom reſteth the poſſeſſion of the Country of Burgundy, and the Earldom of Charollois; herein not troubled by the French, upon the death of Charles the Warlike; partly, becauſe it was accounted as a Fief of the Empire; but principally, for fear of giving offence to the Cantons of Switzerland, upon whom it bordereth: jealous enough already of the greatneſs and power of France, and ſo not willing to admit ſuch a potent Neighbour.

The Arms of this Earldom are Azure, a Lion rampant Or, Seme of Billets Argent.

23. The Iſlands in the Aquitain and Gallick Ocean.

HAving thus took a view of the ſeveral Provinces within the Continent of France; let us next look upon the ISLANDS which belong unto it, diſperſed in the Mediterranean Sea, and the Weſtern Ocean. Thoſe in the Mediterranean Sea, are of little note; as 1. the Iſles of Eres, and 2. Pomegues, lying againſt Provence: 3. Maguelone, lying againſt Languedoc: and 4. L'Anguellade, betwixt both, at the mouth of the Rhoſne: of which there is nothing to be ſaid, but that thoſe of Eres are thought to be the Stoechades of Ptolomy; and his Blaſcon, to be Anguellade. And if the Iſles of Eres be the ſame with the Stoechades, then one of them muſt be the Lerina which we find in Pliny: of moſt note afterwards for a Monaſtery founded in it, which gave name to Vincentius Lerinenſis, or rather Lirinenſis, as moſt Writers call him: the Iſland now called Inſula Sancti Honorati, or Saint Honorates, as Maſſonus telleth us. And of as little note in the Weſtern Ocean, are Belle Iſle, againſt Vannes in Bretagne; the Iſle de Dieu, having in it two or three good Villages: and Marmoſtier, plentiful in Salt, and beautified with a Monaſtery called the White Abby. Of which three laſt, that of Belle Iſle hath been of late ſo fortified by Art, as of old by Nature, that it is thought to be impregnable: the Abbey of the laſt endowed with ſo plentiful a Revenue, that it was thought a competent preferment for Anthonine of Bourbon, baſe Brother to King Henry the Fourth, to be made Lord Abbot of the ſame. Thoſe of moſt note are, 1. Oleron, and 2. Ree, on the Coaſt of Aquitain; and thoſe of 3. Jarſey, 4. Gernſey, 5. Sarke, and 6. Alderney, on the ſhores of Normandie: Of which, the four laſt are under the Kings of England;

England, the reſt poſſeſſed by the French.

1. OLERON is an Iſland ſituate over againſt the Province of Xaintoigne, and South unto the Iſle of Ree, from which little diſtant. It is the biggeſt of the two, and makes yearly a very great quantity of Salt, wherewith moſt of the Provinces on the Weſtern Ocean uſe to be furniſhed. But it is eaſie of acceſs, and not very defenſible; which makes it of leſs note both in ancient and modern ſtories. The principal Town of it is called Oleron, by the name of the Iſland. One thing there is for which indeed this Iſland is of ſpecial fame, & that is, that the Maritime Laws, which for near 500 years have generally been received by all the States of the Chriſtian World which frequent the Ocean, (the Rhodian Laws being antiquated and worn out of uſe) for regulating of Sea-affairs, and deciding of Maritime Controverſies, were declared and eſtabliſhed here, and from thence called the Laws of Oleron. And here they were declared and eſtabliſhed by King Richard the Firſt of England, as Lord Paramont of the Seas, immediately on his return from the Holy Land: this Iſland being then in his poſſeſſion, as a Member of his Dukedom of Aquitain: Quæ quidem Leges & Statuta per Dominum Richardum quondam Regem Angliæ, in reditu à Terra Sancta, correcta fuerunt, interpretata, declarata, & in Inſula de Oleron publicata & nominata in Gallica Lingua La Loy d'Oleron &c. ſaith an old Record which I find cited in a M. S. Diſcourſe of my late learned Friend Sir John Burroughs, (once Keeper of the Records in the Tower of London, but afterwards Principal King of Arms, by the name of Garter) entituled, The Soveraignty of the Britiſh Seas. So powerful were the Kings of England in the former times, as to give Laws to all that traded on the Ocean.

2. The Iſle of REE is ſituate over-againſt Rochel: to which it ſerved for an Out-work on that ſide thereof. It is in length ten Engliſh miles, and about half as much in breadth, well fortified with deep Mariſhes at the entries of it; to which the many Salt-pits every where intermingled, add a very great ſtrength. Chief places in it are, 1. La Butte de Mont, 2. St. John de Mont, 3. St. Hillary, 4. St. Martins, the largeſt and ſtrongeſt of them all; from whence the whole Iſland hath ſometimes been called St. Martins. After the taking of this Town by Lewis XIII. An. 1622. (the Duke of Soubize then commanding in it for thoſe of Rochel) it was very well fortified; and ſince made unfortunately famous for the defeat of the Engliſh Forces under the Command of George Duke of Buckingham, ſent thither to recover the Town and Iſland, on the inſtigation of Soubize, who before had loſt it, An. 1628.

5. JARSEY, by Antonine called Cæſarea; ſituate about ten miles from the Coaſt of Normandy, within the view and proſpect of the Church of Conſtance, part of which Dioceſs it was: in length containing 11 miles, 6 in breadth, and in circuit about 33. It is generally very fruitful of Corn, whereof they have not only enough for themſelves, but ſome over-plus to barter at St. Malos, with the Spaniſh Merchants: and of an Air not very much diſpoſed to Diſeaſes, unleſs it be an Ague in the end of Harveſt, which they call Les Settembres. The Country ſtands much upon Incloſures, the hedges of the ground well ſtored with Apples, and thoſe Apples making ſtore of Sider, which is their ordinary drink: watered with many pleaſant Rivulets, and good ſtore of Fiſh-ponds, yielding a Carp for taſte and largeneſs inferiour unto none in Europe, excepting thoſe of Gernſey, which generally are ſomewhat bigger, but not better reliſhed. The people, for the moſt part, more inclinable to Husbandry, than to Trades or Merchandize; and therein differing very little from thoſe of Gernſey, who are more for Merchandize than Tillage. It containeth in it 12 Pariſhes or Villages, having Churches in them, beſides the Manſions of the Seigneurs, and the chief men of the Country. The principal is St. Hillaries, where is the Cohu, or Court of Juſtice for all the Iſland. It is about the bigneſs of an ordinary Market-Town in England: ſituate on the edge of a little Bay, fortified on the one ſide with a ſmall Block-houſe called Mont St. Aubin; but on that ſide which is next the Town, with a very ſtrong Caſtle, called Fort Elizabeth, ſituate upon craggy Rocks, and encompaſſed with two arms of the Sea: ſo named from Queen Elizabeth, who built it to aſſure the Iſland againſt the French, and furniſhed it with thirty pieces of Ordnance, and all other neceſſaries. There is alſo on the Eaſt-ſide, oppoſite to the City of Conſtance, high mounted on ſteep and craggy Rocks, the ſtrong Caſtle of Mount Orgueile; of great antiquity, repaired by King Henry the Fifth; now furniſhed with forty pieces of Cannon, and made the ordinary reſidence of the Governours for the Kings of England.

4. On the North-Weſt of Jarſey, lyeth the Iſland of GERNSEY, called Sarnia by Antoninus; in form Triangular, each ſide of nine miles in length. The Country is of as rich a ſoil as the other of Jarſey, but not ſo well cultivated and manured; the poorer people here, being more given to Manufactures, (eſpecially to the knitting of Stockings and Waſtcoats) and the rich to Merchandize; many of which, are Maſters of good ſtout Barques, with which they traffick into England, and other places. The whole Iſland contains ten Villages with Churches; the principal of which, Saint Peter's Port; a very neat and well built Town, with a ſafe Peer for the benefit of Merchants, and the ſecuring of the Haven, capable of handſom Barques: a Market-Town, beautified with a very fair Church, and honoured with the Plaiderie, or Court of Juſtice. Oppoſite whereto, in a little Iſlet, ſtandeth the Caſtle of Cornet, taking up the whole circuit and dimenſions of it; environed on all ſides with the Sea, having one entrance only, and that very narrow: well fortified with Works of Art, and furniſhed with no leſs than 80 pieces of Ordnance for the defence of the Iſland; but chiefly, to command the adjoyning Harbour, capable of 500 as good Ships as any ſail on the Ocean. A piece of great importance to the Realm of England, and might prove utterly deſtructive of the Trade hereof, if in the hands of any Nation that were ſtrong in ſhipping. For that cauſe made the Ordinary Seat of the Engliſh Governours, though of late times not ſo much honoured with the preſence of thoſe Governours, as a place of that conſequence ought to be. Pertaining unto Gernſey, are two little Iſlets, the one called Jet-how, the Governours Park, wherein are ſome few fallow-Deer, and good plenty of Conies: the other named Arme, ſome three miles in compaſs; a dwelling heretofore of Franciſcan Friers; now not inhabited, but by Pheſants; of which, amongſt the ſhrubs and buſhes, there is very good ſtore.

5. ALDERNEY, by Antonine called Arica, by the French, Aurigni, and Aurney; is ſituate over-againſt the Cape of the Lexobii, in the Dukedom of Normandy which the Mariners at this day call the Hagge: diſtant from which, but ſix miles only. Beſides many dwelling-houſes ſcattered up and down, there is one pretty Town or Village of the ſame name with the Iſland, conſiſting of about an hundred Families; and having, not far off, an Harbour made in the faſhion of a Semi-circle, which they call La Crabbie. The whole about 8 miles in compaſs; of very difficult acceſs, by reaſon of the high Rocks and Precipices which encompaſs it on every ſide, and with a small force easily defensible, if thought worth attempting.

6. And so is also SARK, the adjoyning Island, being in compass six miles; not known by any special name unto the Ancients, and, to say truth, not peopled till the fifth year of Q. Elizabeth: who then granted it in Fee-farm to Helier de Carteret, the Seigneur of St. Oen, in the Isle of Jarsey, who from thence planted it, and made Estates out of it to several Occupants, so that it may contain now about 50 Housholds. Before which time it served only for a Common, or Beasts Pasture, to those of Gernsey: save that there was an Hermitage, and a little Chappel, for the use of such as the solitarines of the place invited to those retirements.

These two last Islands are subject to the Governour of Gernsey; all four, to the Crown of England: holden in right of the Dukedom of Normandy; to which they anciently belonged; and of which now the sole remainder is in the power of the English. Attempted often by the French, (the two first I mean) since they seized on Normandy, but always with repulse and loss: the people being very affectionate to the English Government, under which they enjoy very ample Priviledges, which from the French they could not hope for. Their Language is the Norman French, (though the better sort of them speak the English also) their Law, the Grand Customaire of Normandy, attempted and applied to the use of this people in their suits and business, by the Bailiffs and Justiciars of the two chief Islands. Their Religion, for the main, is that of the Reformed Churches: the Government in Jarsey, by the Dean thereof, Suffragan heretofore to the Bishop of Constance, now to the Bishop of Winchester; in Gernsey, by a mixt Consistory of Clergie and Lay Elders, according to the New-Model of Geneva: a Government first introduced in both Islands, An. 1565. being the eighth year of Queen Elizabeth, and abolished again in Jarsey, An. 1619. being the seventeenth of King James.

But to return again to the story of France, thorow which we have now made our progress both by Sea and Land: It took this name from the Franks or French, a German people, who in the wane of the Roman Empire possessed themselves of it: not mentioned by that name by Cæsar, Strabo, Ptolemy, or any of the more ancient Writers. Nor was it taken up by them, for ought appeareth, till an hundred years after the death of Ptolemy: the first express mention of them, occurring in the Reign of Gallienus; then ransacking the Coasts of Gaul, and joyning with Posthumus the Rebel, against that Emperour. Afterwards often spoken of in the course of the Roman stories, under the Empire of Claudius, Probus, Diocletian, and the Sons of Constantine: though only in the way of pillage and depredation. Their habitation in those times, was from the meeting of the Rhene with the River Moenus, not far from Frankford, where they confined upon the Almans, to the German Ocean: containing the particular Nations of the Bructeri, Sicambri, Salii, Cherusci, Frisii, and Teucteri, besides some others of less note: and taking up the Countries of Westphalen, Bergen, Marck, and so much of Cleve as lieth on the Dutch side of the Rhene, the Lantgravedom of Hessia, the Dutchy of Gueldres, the Provinces of Zutphen, Utrecht, Over-yssel, both *Friesland*s, and so much of Holland as lieth on the same side of the Rhene. United in the name of Franks, to shew that liberty or freedom from the yoke of servitude which the Romans had endeavoured to impose upon them; and wherewith all the Nations on the other side of the River were supposed to suffer: Governed by Dukes, till the year 420. when Pharamond first took upon himself the name of King. Meroveus their third King, having dispossessed the Sons of Clodion, the Son and Successor of Pharamond, was the first that fixed his seat in Gaul: when seeing the Romans on the one side put to the worst by Theoderick and the Goths; and on the other side by the Burgundians, they passed over the Rhene, and possessed themselves of the Province of Germania Secunda, containing all the Belgick Provinces on the French side of that River, together with the District of Colen, Gulick, and the rest of Cleve, then passing in the account of Gaul. His Victories and Fortunes were inherited by Chilperic, his Son and Successor, who added Picardy, Champaine, and the Isle of France, to the former Conquest; took Paris, and made it the seat of his Kingdom. Afterwards, when they had fully seated themselves here, and thereby opened a free passage to the rest of the Country, they quickly made themselves Masters of all that which formerly had been possessed by the Romans; whom they outed of their last hold in Soissons, under Clouis their fifth King, who also took Aquitain, and the parts adjoyning, from the Visi-Goths, or Goths of Spain: for these and many signal Victories against the Almans, deservedly sirnamed the Great: but greater in submitting to the Faith of CHRIST, and receiving Baptism, than by all his Victories. Childebert and Clotaire, the Sons of this Clouis, vanquished the Burgundians, adding that Kingdom to their own: as Theodebert his Grandchild, King of Mets, or Austrasia, did the Country of Provence, resigned unto him by Amalasunta, Queen of the Ostro-Goths, or Goths of Italy, by whom it had been wrested from the Goths of Spain. In the person of Clotaire the Second, the Realm of France improvidently dismembred into many Kingdoms, amongst the Children of Clouis the First; that is to say, the Kingdoms of France, Soissons, Orleans, and Austrasia, (of which, Orleans and Austrasia were of long continuance) were again united: whose Successor, Dagobert the First, was the last considerable Prince of the Meravignians. After this time, the reputation of the French Kings of this Line, began to diminish, scarce doing any thing that might ennoble and commend them to succeeding Ages; or leaving any Monument behind them, but their empty Names: which I shall represent in the following Catalogue, according to their several times: first taking notice, that though the Kings of this first Race did many times divide the Kingdom, as before was said; yet none of them were called Kings of France, but those that had their Royal Seat in the City of Paris, the rest being called only Kings of Soissons, Mets, or Orleans, according to the name of their principal Cities. And therefore, leaving those to their proper places, we will here only take a survey of those who passed in the common estimate for the Kings of France.

The Kings of France, of the French or Meravignian Line.

An. Chr.
449	1	Meroveus, Master of the Horse to Clodion the Son of Pharamond; from whom this Line of Kings were called Merovignians. 10.
459	2	Chilperic, the Son of Merove. 26.
485	3	Clouis, the first Christian King of the French. 30.
515	4	Childebert, eldest Son of Clouis, his other Brethren reigning in their several places. 45.
360	5	Clotaire, Brother of Childebert, first King of the Soissons, afterwards sole King of the French.

565 6 Cherebert, Son of Clotaire.
574 7 Chilperic II. King of Soiſſons, and Brother of Cherebert, whom he ſucceeded in the Kingdom. 14.
588 8 Clotaire II. Son of Chilperic the ſecond. 44.
632 9 Dagobert, Son of Clotaire the ſecond. 14.
645 10 Clouis II. Son of Dagobert. 17.
663 11 Clotaire III. Son of Clotaire the ſecond. 4.
667 12 Chilperic III. Brother of Clotaire the third, and Son of Clouis the ſecond.
680 13 Theodorick, Brother of Chilperick. 14.
694 14 Clouis III. Son to Theodorick. 5.
698 15 Childebert II. Brother to Clouis the third. 15.
716 16 Dagobert II. Son of Childebert the ſecond. 5.
722 17 Chilperic IV. Son of Childebert the ſecond, and Brother of Dagobert the ſecond, oppoſed by Charles Martel, in behalf of Clotaire the fourth Son of Theodorick, and Brother of Childebert the ſecond. 5.
727 18 Theodorick II. Son of Dagobert the ſecond. 15.
742 19 Chilperic V. Son of Theodorick the ſecond, the laſt of the Merovignian Family; depoſed by Pepin, Son to Charles Martel; the Pope giving approbation to his proceedings.

This Pepin and his Father Martel, were Mayres of the Palace to the former Kings; which Mayres were originally Controllers of the Kings Houſe, and had nothing to do with the affairs of State. But Clotaire the third, to eaſe himſelf and his Succeſſors of a burden ſo weighty, made the Mayres Vicars-general of his Empire. From henceforward the Kings followed their pleaſures, ſhewing themſelves only on May-day; and then ſeated in a Chariot, adorned with Flowers, and drawn by four Oxen. As for the Mayre, he openeth Pacquets, heareth and diſpatcheth Foreign Ambaſſadors, giveth remedy to the Complaints of the Subjects, maketh Laws, and repealeth them. An Authority ſomewhat like that of the Præfecti Prætorio, in the declining times of the Roman Empire; or that of the Sultans under the Mahometan Caliphs, and the Vice-Roys of the old Egyptian Pharoahs. An Office which had been long born by the Anceſtors of this Martel, ever ſince the reign of Clotaire the ſecond: in whoſe time the Palatine or Mayre was one Arnulphus, deſcended lineally from Utilo, the ſecond Son of Theodon the firſt Duke, and Nephew of Aldagerius the laſt King of the Boiarians, or Bavarians. Which Utilo being a Military Prince, and having done good ſervice to Theoderick the firſt King of Auſtraſia, or Metz, againſt the Danes, then grievouſly infeſting the Coaſts of the Lower Germany; was by him made Warden of thoſe Marches, honoured with the Marriage of his Daughter Plithilda, and liberally endowed with fair poſſeſſions in that Tract. The fourth from Utilo was this Arnulph, the firſt Mayre of this Houſe; which Office having long enjoyed, he reſigned it to Anſegiſus his eldeſt Son, (the firſt who drew unto himſelf the managery of the whole Eſtate) and bidding farewel to the affairs of the world, became a Prieſt, and dyed Biſhop of Metz, Anno 641. Afterwards Canonized a Saint. Anſegiſus dying in the year 679, left his Authority and Office to his Nephew Martin, Son of Ferdulphus his younger Brother. But he being ſlain by Ebroinus, one of the Competitors, who a while enjoyed it: Pepin ſirnamed the Fat, Son of Anſegiſus, revenging his Couſins death upon Ebroinus, and cruſhing all the oppoſite Factions which were raiſed againſt him, obtained that honour for himſelf. And having much advanced the affairs of France, by the conqueſt of the Sueves and Friſons, dyed in the year 714. Succeeded to in this great Office, after his deceaſe, (for Grimold his only lawful Son, and Theobaldus the Son of Grimold, whom he had ſucceſſively ſubſtituted in the ſame, dyed not long before him) by Charles his natural Son, begotten on Albeida his Concubine: from his Martial Proweſs called Martil. Who in his time did to the Kings of France great ſervice, eſpecially in routing that vaſt Army of the Moors and Saracens, in the Battel of Tours before mentioned: thereby not only freeing France from the preſent danger, but adding Languedoc to the Crown, formerly in poſſeſſion of the Goths and Moors: for which he was created Duke or Prince of the French: yet would he not uſurp the Kingdom, or the Title of King, though both at his diſpoſal wholly; it being his ordinary ſaying, that he had rather rule a King, than be one.

To him ſucceeded Caroloman his eldeſt Son, An. 741, who held the Office but a year, and then left it to his Brother Pepin, Who being of leſs moderation than his Father was, made ſuch uſe of his Power, that partly by that means, and partly under colour of an election, confirmed by Pope Zachary the firſt, he took the Kingdom to himſelf; and the unfortunate King Chilperick had his Poll ſhaven, and was thruſt into a Monaſtery. For this inveſtiture, both Pepin and Charles his Son, did many good ſervices for the Popes, deſtroying, on their quarrel, the Kingdom of the Lombards, and giving them moſt of the Lands which formerly belonged unto the Exarchs of Ravenna. And on the other ſide, the Popes to requite theſe courteſies, confirmed the former in this Kingdom, by their Papal Power (which then began to bear ſome ſway in the Chriſtian World:) and gave the laſt (beſides the opportunity of attaining the Weſtern Empire) the Title of Moſt Chriſtian King, continued ever ſince unto his Succeſſors. And, to ſay truth, he well deſerved thoſe honours, had they been far greater, by many Victories obtained againſt the Enemies of the Goſpel; the ſeveral Heathens by his means converted to the Faith of CHRIST, the great abilities he had of Eſtate and Judgment, enabling him to ſupport the Majeſty of the Roman Empire. For he not only was ſole Monarch of the Kingdom of France, not parcelled out as formerly, and in times ſucceeding, into ſeveral petit Kingdoms and Principalities, but had added thereunto, by his own proper virtue, the greateſt part of Italy, the beſt part of Germany, all Belgium, the two Pannonia's, and a great part of Spain.

But this vaſt Empire falling into weak hands, which were not able enough to manage it, decayed in as little time as it was in raiſing: partly by the unnatural ambition of the Sons of King Lewis the Godly, the next Succeſſor of this Charles; who to make themſelves all Kings, firſt depoſed their Father, and then divided his Eſtate amongſt them, into the Kingdoms of Italy, Burgundy, France, Lorrein, and Germany: four of which falling at laſt into the hands of ſtrangers, ceaſed to be French, and paſſed into ſuch Families as proved the greateſt Enemies of the Crown of France: partly by alienating the beſt and goodlieſt Provinces of France it ſelf, never again united till theſe latter days; which made the French Kings leſs conſiderable both at home and abroad; which we have touched upon before: and partly by the weakneſs and unworthineſs of the Kings of his Race, there being no queſtion to be made, but Lewis the Stammering, Charles the Bald, the Groſs, and the Simple, would have found better Attributes, if they had deſerved them. For by this means, the iſſue of this brave Prince grew ſo deſpicable in the eyes of their ſubjects, that firſt Eudes, the Son of Robert Duke of Anjou; and after, Rodolph Duke of Burgundy, the Uncle of Eudes (both of the Race of Witikundus, the laſt Prince of the Saxons, (and consequently, both aliens to the House of Charles) possessed themselves severally of the Kingdom. And though they did not hold it long, being depressed and over-born by their opposite Factions: yet did they lay a fair ground for Hugh Capet to build his hopes on: Who being Son of Hugh the Great Constable of France, and Earl of Paris, the Son of Robert Duke of Anjou, younger Brother of Eudes, and near Kinsman of Rodolph; never left practising his party in the Realm of France, till he had got possession of the Regal Diadem, wherewith two Princes of this House had been invested formerly by the like Elections. But for the Kings of this second Race, founded by two brave Princes, but on the unjust grounds of an Usurpation; they are these that follow.

The second Race of the Kings of France, of the Carolovinian or Boiarian Line.

A. Ch.
751	1	Pepin, the Son of Charles Martel, succeeded in the Office of Mayre, An. 742; and having got the Regal Crown, vanquished the Lombards, made the Boiarians tributary, and crushed the Saxons. 18.
769	2	Charles, sirnamed the Great, the Son of Pepin subdued the Kingdom of the Lombards and Saxons; conquered the Boiarians & Avares, and vanquished the Saracens of Spain: Crowned Emperor of the West, upon Christmass-day, by Pope Leo the 3. An. 800. 46.
815	3	Lewis the Godly, son of Charles King of France, and Emperor, the last sole Monarch of the French, deposed by his ambitious and unnatural Sons: the Empire of the French, after his decease, being divided into the Kingdoms of Italy, Burgundy, Germany, France, & Lorrein; and France it self distracted into many Soveraign Estates and Principalities. 26.
841	4	Charles II. sirnamed Calvus, or the Bald, youngest Son of Lewis, King of France, and Emperor; vanquished by Charles the Gross, in the War of Italy. 38.
879	5	Lewis II. sirnamed Balbus, or the Stammering, Son of Charles the Bald, King of France and Emperor.
881	6	Lewis III. with Caroloman his Brother, the base Sons of Lewis the Stammering, Usurpers of the Throne, in the intancy of Charles the Simple.
886	7	Charles III. sirnamed Crassus, or the Gross, King of Germany, and Emperor; called into France, and elected King, during the Minority of Charles the Simple. 5.
891	8	Odo, or Eudes, Son of Robert Earl of Anjou, of the Race of Witikindus, the last King of the Saxons; elected by an opposite Faction, outed Charles the Gross. 9.
900	9	Charles IV. sirnamed Simplex, or the Simple, the Posthumus Son of Lewis the Stammerer, restored unto the Throne of his Fathers; which after many troubles raised against him by Robert the second, Earl of Anjou, (whom he slew in Battel) he was forced to resign. 27.
927	10	Rodolph of Burgundy, Son of Richard Duke of Burgundy, the Brother of Eudes, succeeded on the resignation of Charles the Simple. 2.
929	11	Lewis IV. Son of Charles the Simple, sirnamed Transmarine, in regard that during his Fathers troubles he had lived in England, restored unto the Regal Throne on the death of Rodolph: opposed therein by Hugh Earl of Paris and Anjou, the Nephew of King Eudes by his Brother Robert before mentioned.
958	12	Lotharius, Son of Lewis the 4. disturbed in his possession by Hugh Capet, the eldest Son of the said Hugh, on the pretension of that House, by which at last he got the Kingdom.
977	13	Lewis V. Son of Lotharius, the last King of the House of Charles the Great. After whose death, (being King only for a year) the Crown was seized on by Hugh Capet; Charles Duke of Lorrein, Brother of Lotharius, and Uncle unto Lewis the fifth, being pretermitted.

And now we are come to the present Race of the Kings of France, founded in Hugh Capet; so called from the greatness of his head; Son of Hugh the Great, Earl of Paris and Anjou, and Grandchild of Robert the second, Earl of Anjou: which Robert was the Brother of Eudes, and Cousin-german of Rodolph, Kings of France. Who partly by his own wits, but chiefly by the weakness of the Mungrel-Issue of Charles the Great, having got the Diadem, transmitted it unto his posterity; the Crown descending in a direct Line from Father to Son, till the death of Lewis the tenth, sirnamed Hutin. But here we are to understand, that the Realm of France was at that time shut up within narrower bounds than it is at the present: the large and rich Countries of Champagne, Normandy, Bretagne, Anjou, Poictou, Languedoc, and the great Dukedom of Aquitain; besides those Provinces which constituted and made up the Kingdom of Burgundy, being aliened and dismembred from it. How they became reduced to the Crown again, will be discerned in the ensuing History, and Succession of

The third Race of the Kings of France, of the Capetine or Saxon Line.

A. Ch.
988	1	Hugh Capet, of whom sufficiently before. 9.
997	2	Robert, the Son of Hugh Capet, Duke of Burgundy also. 34.
1031	3	Henry, the eldest Son of Robert, his younger Brother Robert being setled in the Dukedom of Burgundy. 39.
1061	4	Philip, the Son of Henry, who added Berry to the Crown. 49.
1110	5	Lewis VI. Son of Philip, sirnamed the Gross. 28.
1138	6	Lewis VII. Son of Lewis the Sixth, an Adventurer in the War of the Holy Land; as also was his Son and Successor.
1181	7	Philip II. sirnamed Augustus, by whom Normandy, Aquitain, and Anjou, with their several Appendixes, were taken from King John of England. 43.
1224	8	Lewis VIII. Son of Philip Augustus. 3.
1227	9	Lewis IX. sirnamed the Saint, renowned for his Wars in Egypt, and the Holy Land. He restored Guienne to the English, and added the Earldoms of Thoulouse and Mascon, to the Crown of France. 44.
1271	10	Philip III. Son of Lewis the ninth. 15.

1314 12 Lewis X. ſirnamed Hutin, King of Navarre in right of his Mother, whom he ſucceeded in that Kingdom, An. 1305. after whoſe death the Kingdom of France was to have deſcended to Joan his Daughter. 2.

1315 13 Philip V. called the Long, Brother of Lewis Hutin, partly by threats, promiſes, and other practices, cauſed a Law to paſs to which he gave the name of the Salique Law, for diſabling Women from the ſucceſſion to the Crown; and thereby quite excluded his Brother's Daughter: ſerved in the ſame kind himſelf, by his Brother Charles, who following his example, excluded, on the ſame pretence, his Neeces, Joan, and Margaret, the Daughters of Philip. 5.

1320 14 Charles IV. but in true accompt the fifth of that name, moſt commonly called Charles the Fair, Brother of Philip and Lewis, the two laſt Kings. After whoſe death began the Wars of the Engliſh for the Crown of France; challenged by King Edward the third, as Son and Heir of Iſabel, the Daughter of King Philip the Fair, and Siſter to the three laſt Kings. 7.

1328 15 Philip VI. ſirnamed de Valois, Son of Charles Earl of Valois, the ſecond Son of King Philip the third, and Uncle to the three laſt Kings; ſucceeded under colour of the Salique Law: of which Charles it is ſaid, that he was Son to a King, Brother to a King, Uncle to a King, and Father to a King; yet himſelf was no King. In this King's days was fought the famous Battel of Creſſie, An. 1343, in which the French Army conſiſted of about 70000 Soldiers; the Engliſh of 11800 only: yet the victory fell unto the Engliſh: by whoſe valour fell that day John K. of Bohemia, 11 Princes, 80 Barons, 1200 Knights, and 30000 of the common Souldiers. He added unto his Eſtate, the County Palatine of Champagne, the County of Dauphine, and the City and Earldom of Montpelier. 22.

1350 16 John, the Son of Philip de Valois; in whoſe reign was fought the Battel of Poictiers, wherein Edward the Black Prince, (ſo called for his black acts upon the French) with an handful of wearied Soldiers, (but 8000 in all) overcame the French army, conſiſting of 40000; of which they ſlew beſides the Nobles, 10000 of the common Soldiers, and took Priſoners K. John himſelf, and Philip his Son, 70 Earls, 50 Barons, & 12000 Gentlemen. 14.

1364 17 Charles V. the Son of John, recovered all thoſe pieces (except only Calice) which the Engliſh had before gotten from his Father and Grandfather. He is called commonly Charles the Wiſe; but Lewis the 11. would by no means allow him that attribute: affirming, that it was but a fooliſh part to give his younger Brother Philip the Dukedom of Burgundy, and withall, the Heir of Flanders to Wife. And ſo it proved in the event.

18 Charles VI. a weak and diſtracted Prince; in whoſe reign, Henry the fifth of England, called in by the Faction of Burgundy, againſt that of Orleans; married the Lady Katherine, daughter of this King; and was thereupon made Regent of France during the Kings life, and Heir apparent of the Kingdom. But he had firſt won the great Battel of Agincourt, Anno 1415, in which the Engliſh having an Army but of 15000 vanquiſhed an Army of the French conſiſting of 52000 men; of which were ſlain 5 Dukes, 8 Earls, 25 Lords, 8000 Knights and Gentlemen of note, and 25000 of the Commons, the Engliſh loſing but one Duke, one Earl, and 600 Souldiers. This unfortunate Prince loſt what his Predeceſſor, Philip the ſecond, had taken from King John of England, and had not been reſtored by King Lewis the ninth.

1423 19 Charles VII. Son of Charles the Sixth, after a long and bloody War, recovered from the Engliſh (then divided by domeſtick diſſention) all their Lands and Signiories in France, except Calice only.

1461 20 Lewis XI. Son of Charles the Seventh, added unto his Crown the Dukedom of Burgundy, the Earldom of Provence, (and therewithall a Title unto Naples and Sicil) and a great part of Picardy. A Prince of ſo great wants, or ſuch ſordid parſimony, that there is found a reckoning in the Chamber of Accompts in Paris, of two ſhillings for new ſleeves to his old Doublet; and three half pence for liquor to greaſe his Boots.

1484 21 Charles VIII. Son of Lewis the 11th, who quickly won, and as ſoon loſt the Kingdom of Naples; which he laid claim to in the right of the Houſe of Anjou. By the marriage of Anne the Heir of Bretagne, he added that Dukedom to his Crown.

1515 23 Francis, Duke of Angoleſme, Grand-ſon of John of Angoleſme, one of the younger Sons of the ſaid Lewis Duke of Orleans, ſucceeded on the death of Lewis the 12th, without Iſſue male. Took Priſoner at the Battel of Pavie, by Charles the fifth, with whom he held perpetual Wars; he being as unwilling to endure a Superiour, as the Emperour was to admit an Equal. 32.

1547 24 Henry II. Son of Francis, recovered Calice from the Engliſh, and drove Charles out of Germany, and took from him Metz, Toul, and Verdun, three Imperial Cities, ever ſince members of this Kingdom.

1559 25 Francis II. Son of Henry the 2d, King of the Scots alſo, in the right of Mary his Wife.

1560 26 Charles IX. Brother of Francis the ſecond, the Author of the Maſſacre at Paris. 14.

1574 27 Henry III. elected King of Poland, in the life of his Brother, whom he ſucceeded at his death. The laſt King of the Houſe of Valois; ſtripped of his life and Kingdom by the Guiſian Faction, called the Holy League. 15.

1589 28 Henry IV. King of Navarre, and Duke of Vendoſme, ſucceeded as the next heir-male, to Henry the 3d, in the right of the Houſe of Bourbon, deſcended from Robert Earl of Clermont, a younger Son of Lewis the ninth. He ruined the Holy League, cleared France of the Spaniards, into which they had been called by that potent and rebellious Faction; and laid La Breſs unto the Crown, together with the Eſtates of Bearn, and Baſe Nivarre: and after a ten years time of Peace, was villanouſly murdered by Ravillac, in the Streets of Paris. 21.

1610 29 Lewis XIII. Son of Henry the Fourth; the moſt abſolute King of France, ſince the death of Charles the Great. For to the reduction of the ſcattered and diſmembred Provinces, (the work of his many Predeceſſors) he added the reduction of all the Forts and Garriſons held by the Hugonots in that Kingdom, (three hundred at the leaſt in number) ſeized on the Dukedom of Bar, and ſurpriſed that of Lorrein; both which he held until his death. 32.

1642 30 Lewis XIV. Son of Lewis the 13th, and of the Lady Anne, eldeſt daughter of Philip the third of Spain; ſucceeded at the age of four years, under the Government of his Mother: the 30th King of the Line of Capet, the 43d from Charles the Great, and the 64th King of France, (or rather of the French) now living.

As for the Government of theſe Kings, it is meerly Regal; or, to give it the true name, Deſpotical; ſuch as that of a Maſter over his Servants: the King's Will going for a Law; and his Edicts as valid as a Sentence of the Court of Parliament. Quod principi placuerit, Legis habet vigorem, was a Prerogative belonging to the Roman Emperours, as Juſtinian tells us in his Inſtitutes: and the French Kings deſcending from Charles the Great, claim it as their own. The Kings Edicts always ending with theſe binding words, Car tel eſt noſtre plaiſir, For ſuch is Our pleaſure. And though he ſometimes ſends his Edicts to be verified, or approved, in the Parliament of Paris; and his Grants and Patents to be ratified in the Chamber of Accompts, there holden: yet this is nothing but a meer formality, and point of circumſtance, thoſe Courts not daring to refuſe what the King propoſeth. It is Car tel eſt noſtre Plaiſir, which there goeth for Law. And by this intimation of his Royal Pleaſure, doth he require ſuch Taxes, as the neceſſity of his affairs, the greedineſs of his Officers, or the importunity of Suiters, do ſuggeſt unto him: the Patrimony of the Crown being ſo exhauſted by the riot and improvidence of former Princes, that the King hath no other way to maintain his State, defray his Garriſons, reward ſuch as deſerve well of him, and ſupport thoſe that depend upon him, but only by laying what he pleaſeth on the backs of his Subjects; againſt which there is no diſpute by the Common People, though many times the Great Princes have demurred upon it. And therefore to make them alſo inſtrumental to the publick Slavery, the Kings are willing to admit them to ſome part of their ſpoil, to give them ſome exemption from thoſe common burdens; and to connive at the oppreſſing of their Tenants, againſt all good conſcience: that being ſo priviledged themſelves, they may not interrupt the King in his Regal Courſes.

As for the French Parliaments, or Aſſembly of the three Eſtates, which heretofore were of great credit and renown, and looked on as the principal Bulwark of the Publick Liberty, being firſt diſcontinued by reaſon of the ſharp & continual Wars which the Engliſh made in this Kingdom for the ſpace of 100 years and upwards, they afterward became much weakned by the Policy of K. Lewis the 11. and the Kings ſucceeding; and finally, by K. Lewis the 13. were laid by for ever. For, finding them to retain ſomething ſtill of their ancient ſtomach, and apt enough to claſh with that abſolute Soveraignty which his Predeceſſors had attained to, he reſolved to make no more uſe of them for the times to come; inſtead whereof, he ordained another kind of meeting, which he called La Aſſemble des Nattables; that is to ſay, the Aſſembly of ſome principal men, compoſed of ſome ſelected perſons out of every Order or Eſtate, (of his own nomination) whereunto ſhould be added ſome Counſellor out of every one of the eight Courts of Parliament; which, being fewer in number, would not breed ſuch a confuſion as the others did, and he withal more pliant and conformable to the Kings deſires. Now the eight Courts of Parliament before mentioned, being but as ſo many Courts of Judicature, (like to ours in Weſtminſter) are theſe that follow; that is to ſay, The Parliament 1. of Paris, comprehending the Countries of France ſpecial, Champagne, Picardy, the Provinces and Eſtates of Anjou, La Beauſſe, Berry, Poictou, the Provinces which make up the Dukedom of Bourbon, with the County of Lionois. 2. Of Rouen, for the Dukedom of Normandy. 3. Of Renes for the Dukedom of Bretagne. 4. Of Bourdeaux, for the whole Dukedom of Aquitain, (except only Bearn) with the Countries of Limouſin, and Perigort. 5. Of Tholouſe, for the Earldom of Languedoc, and Quercu. 6. Of Aix, for the Earldom of Provence. 7. Of Gremble, for the Country of Daulphin. And 8. of Biajou, for the Dukedom of Burgundy, and the ſmall Country of La Breſs; to which is added of late times by King Lewis the 13th, the little Parliament of Pau, for the Country of Bearn. Beſides which Parliaments, there are certain other Courts in ſome principal Cities, called Courts Preſidial, reſembling thoſe with us at York, and the Marches of Wales, whilſt they continued in that Power and Juriſdiction which at firſt they had. And for the better ordering of the whole Eſtate, (with reference eſpecially to matters military) it is divided into 12 ſeveral and diſtinct Governments; that is to ſay, 1. Of the Iſle of France, 2. Burgundy, 3. Normandy, 4. Guien, 5. Bretagne, 6. Champagne, 7. Picardy, 8. Languedoc, 9. Provence, 10. Daulphine, 11. Lionois, and 12. Orleanois for in this order they were ranked by the laſt King: over every one of which is placed a Governour, with ſuch authority as the Lords Lieutenants had in England in their ſeveral Counties; all of them carrying matters with a very high hand on the common people, and ſometimes ſtanding on terms alſo with the Kings themſelves, but inſtrumental notwithſtanding to the common ſervitude, which hath been laid upon this Nation generally, as before is ſaid.

The Power of the French King over his Subjects, being ſo tranſcendent, it cannot be, but that his Forces muſt be very great, and would be greater than they are, but that they dare not truſt the common people with the uſe of Arms, for fear they ſhould refuſe to pay the accuſtomed Taxes, or forſake their Trades, or turn their Farms back upon their Landlords. But for an Eſſay of what a French King is able to do in this kind, it is ſaid, that Charles the 9th, in Garriſons and ſeveral Armies in the field, had 15000 Horſe, and 100000 Foot, of his own Nation; beſides 50000 Horſe, and Foot of Swiſſes, Germans, and others. Nor was this more than what was done by Lewis the 13, within few years paſt, who had at once five Royal Armies in the field, in Italy, Spain, Germany, and the Belgick Provinces; and kept no fewer than 120000 fighting-men in pay and action, for ſome years together. Nor did this laſt King keep up the Military Power of France for Land-ſervice only, at ſo high a pitch, but he also brought the Naval Power thereof into estimation. For whereas the French Kings before his time, were very weak and inconsiderable on the Seas, and had scarce any men of War, but what they either hired or borrowed from more Seafaring Nations: this King became so strong in shipping in a little space, (I doubt some neighbouring Princes in the mean time looked not well about them) that he was able to rigg and arm 10000 sail of good Ships, and upwards, fit for any service. But to return again to the power at Land, in which the force of these Kings doth consist especially; it is conceived by some, and affirmed by others, that he is able to bring into the field for a sudden service, no less than 60 Companies of Men of Arms, 20 Cornets of Light-Horse, and 5 Companies of Harquebusiers on Horseback, which amount to 10000 in the total; together with 20 Ensigns of French Foot, and 40 of Swisses; and yet leave his Garrisons well manned, and his Forts and Frontiers well and sufficiently defended.

What the Revenues are in a State so subject to the will and pleasure of the King, is hard to say; being also more or less, as the times and their occasions vary: according unto which, the Revenues of this Crown have much altered. Lewis the 11. gathered one million and a half of Crowns; Francis the first brought them to 3 millions; his successor, Henry the second, to six; Charles the ninth, to seven; Henry the third, to ten; afterwards they were inhanced to fifteen. And in the time of Henry the fourth, the Treasurer of the Duke of Mayenne did not shame to say, That his Master had more improved the Revenue of France, than any King had done before him, advancing it from two to five millions sterling. A fair Intrado, but far short of those infinite sums which are extorted from the people; whereof a tenth part comes not clearly to the Kings Exchequer. But what need more be said, than that of Lewis the 11: who used to say, That France was a Meadow which he mowed every year, and as often as he listed: and indeed their Impositions cannot but be great, since there are no less than 30000 Under Officers employed to gather them. Hence I believe sprung that wish of Maximilian the Emperor, which was that he (if it were possible) might be a God; and, that having two Sons, the eldest might be a God after him; and the second, King of France. And this was also the cause, that in the Wars between Charles the fifth, and Francis the first, when the Emperors Herald had bid defiance to the King, from Charles Emperor of Germany, King of Castile, Leon, Aragon, and Naples, Arch-Duke of Austria, &c. with the rest of his Titles; the King commanded the Herald to return the Challenge from Francis King of France; commanding him to repeat France as many times as the other had petty Earldoms in his stile. And on the other side of no less bravery and fansie was the saying of the Duke of Alva, who being disswaded by one of his Commanders, from the War with the Netherlands, in regard of the great support they were like to have from the Queen of England, the King of Denmark, the Dukes of Saxony and Brunswick, the Earls of Nassaw, &c. Tush man! (said he) there will be more Kings and Princes on our side, than theirs; that is to say, the Emperor of Mexico and Peru; the Kings of Naples, Sicily, and Sardinia, the Dukes of Burgundy and Milain, the Earls of Habspurg, Charolois, &c. But letting pass these flashes and conceits of wit; certain it is, (to say the truth) considering the compactedness thereof within it self, the admirable fertility of the soil, the incredible multitudes of people, and the conveniency of situation betwixt Spain, Italy, and Germany; the name of France might ballance all the other's Titles.

The chief Orders of Knighthood in this Kingdom, were first of the Gennet, founded by Charles Martel, Mayre of the French Palace: and so called either from Jane his Wife, as Haillan would have it, or from the Gennets of Spain, over whom he triumphed at the Battel of Tours, as Bellay writeth: It ended in the days of S. Lewis. The Knights of the Order wore a Ring, wherein was engraven the form of a Gennet.

2. Of the Pairrie, or twelve Peers, so called, quasi pares inter se; said to be instituted by Charles the Great, in his Wars against the Saracens. Six of these were of the Clergie. 1. The Arch-bishop and Duke of Rhemes, 2. the Bishop and Duke of Laon, 3. the Bishop and Duke of Langres, 4. the Bishop and Earl of Beuvois, 5. the Bishop and Earl of Noyon, and 6. the Bishop and Earl of Chalons. And six others of the Temporality: 1. the Duke of Burgundy, 2. Duke of Normandy, 3. Duke of Guienne, 4. Earl of Tholouse, 5. Earl of Champagne, 6. Earl of Flanders. These are they so much memorized in the Legends of the old French Writers, but falsly, and on no ground: it being impossible that those should be of the foundation of Charles the Great, in whose time there were none of those Dukes and Earls, except the Earl of Tholouse only. Therefore with better reason it may be thus concluded on, that the Twelve Peers were instituted by Charles the Great, though that honour not by him appropriated unto any particular Estates and Titles; but left at large to be disposed of according to the personal merit of the best deservers: it being most sure, that neither Rowland, nor Oliver, nor Duke Naimes, nor Ogier the Dane, had any of the Titles above mentioned. But for the fixing of this Dignity in the Dukedoms and Earldoms before named, it is said, by some, to have been done by Hugh Capet; others refer it to Lewis the 7th. in whose times all those Dukes and Earls were in Rerum Natura. But by whomsoever first ordained, the Temporal Pairries are extinct; and others, of no definite number, created by the Kings, as they see occasion, to gratifie a well deserver. Only at Coronations, and such publick Triumphs, the custom is, to chuse some principal persons out of the Nobility, to represent those Temporal Peers; as at the Coronation of Lewis the 13th, the places of the Temporal Peers were supplied by the Princes of Conde and Conty, the Earl of Soissons, the Dukes of Nevers, Elbeuf, and Espernon: the Ecclesiastical Peers remaining as at first they were. So that though Charles the Great might devise this Order, and institute the first Twelve Peers, as is commonly said; yet was not that high honour fixed in any of those Temporal Princes, till the times succeeding; but given to men of several Houses, according to the Kings pleasure, and their well deservings.

3. Of the Star, begun by John King of France, Anno 1352. They wore about their necks a Collar of Gold, at the which hanged a Star: the word, Monstrant Regibus astra viam. This Order was disgraced by his Son Charles, in communicating it to his Guard: and so it ended.

4. Of St. Michael, instituted by King Lewis the eleveth, An. 1409. It consisted first of 36 Knights; which afterwards were augmented to 300. The Habit of the Order was a long Cloak of white Damask, down to the ground, with a border interwoven with Cockle-shells of Gold, interlaced and furred with Ermines; with an Hood of crimson Velvet, and a long tippet. About their necks they wore a Collar woven with Cockle-shells: the word, Immensi tremor Oceani. It took the name from the Picture of St. Michael conquering the Devil, which was annexed to the Collar. Some think, that the invocation of St. Michael, was in allusion to the tenth of Daniel. Others say, he took St. Michael, in regard of an apparition of that Saint, to his Father Charles the Seventh, on Orleans Bridge, in his Wars againſt the Engliſh. The Seat thereof was firſt at St. Michael's Mount, in Normandy, a place which had held longeſt for the French Kings, againſt the Engliſh: but it was afterwards removed to Bois de Vincennes, not far from Paris. St. Michael's day, the time of the Solemnity; and Mount St. Michael, the name of the Herald which did attend upon the Order; which in moſt things was precedented by that of the Garter.

5. Of the Holy Ghoſt; ordained by Henry the third, An. 1579, to rectifie the abuſes which had crept into that of St. Michael, having been of late times given to unworthy perſons: to reduce which to its firſt eſteem, he ordered that the Collar of St. Michael ſhould be given to none who had not firſt been dignified with this of the Holy Ghoſt, into which none to be admitted, but ſuch as can prove their Nobility by three deſcents. Their Oath is, to maintain the Romiſh Catholick Religion, and perſecute all Opponents to it. Their Robe, a black Velvet Mantle, powdered with Lillies and Flames of Gold: the Collar of Flower de Lyces, and Flames of Gold, with a Croſs and a Dove appendant to it. And hereunto he gave the name of the Holy Ghoſt, becauſe he was on Whitſunday, choſen King of Poland.

I omit the other petit Orders, as thoſe of the Cock and Dog, by them of Montmorency; of the Porcupine, by them of Orleans; and of the Thiſtle, by them of Bourbon.

The Arms of the French Kings in the days of Pharamond, and his three firſt Succeſſors, were Gules, three Crowns, Or. Clouis the Great, altered them to Azure, Seme of Flower de Lyces, Or; and Charles the ſixth to Azure, three Flower de Lyces, Or. In which laſt changes, they were followed by the Kings of England, varying the Coat of France, which they enquartered with their own, as the French Kings did; and by the Princes of the blood, who bare the Arms of France, with ſome difference only, for the diſtinction of their Houſes.

THE

The Pyrenean Hills.

BEtwixt France and Spain, are the Mountains called Pyrenæi, the reaſon of which name is very differently reported. Some fetch the original thereof from Pyrene, a Nymph, the Daughter of one Bebrix; ſaid by old Fablers to have been here raviſhed by Hercules: others conceive they were ſo called, becauſe much ſtriken with Lightnings, thoſe Cæleſtial Flames. But being the name doth moſt undoubtedly proceed from a Greek word which ſignifieth Fire. The more probable opinion is, that they took this name from being fired once by Shepherds, (theſe Hills being then extreamly overgrown with Woods:) the Flame whereof raged ſo extreamly, that the Mines of Gold and Silver being melted by the heat thereof, ran ſtreaming down the Mountains many days together, the fame of which invited many Foreign Nations to invade the Country. Which accident they place 880 years before the birth of our Saviour. Hereunto Diodorus Siculus, an old Greek Writer, adds no ſmall authority; who ſpeaking of this Conflagration, (as Ariſtotle and Strabo alſo do) addeth withall, τὰ μὲν ὄρη διὰ τὸ συμβεβηκὸς κληθῆναι Πυρηναῖα ἀπὸ τῆς πυρὸς συχνὰς ἡμέρας συνεχῶς ἐπισλέγοντος: that is to ſay, theſe Mountains had the name of Pyrenees, from the fire, which many days together ſo extreamly raged. And this Tradition backed by ſo good authority, I ſhould rather credit, than fetch the derivation (as Bochartus doth) from Purani, a Phœnician word, ſignifying dark or ſhady: though true it is, that theſe Mountains anciently were very much over-grown with woods, as before was noted.

But whatſoever was the reaſon why they had this name, certain it is, that they have been of long time the natural bound betwixt the great and puiſſant Monarchs of France and Spain; terminating (as it were) their deſires and purpoſes againſt each other, as well as their Dominions: if any thing could put a bound to the deſigns of ambitious Princes. Yet not more ſeparated by theſe Mountains, than by thoſe jealouſies and fears which they have long ſince harboured of one another; each of them manifeſtly affecting the Supreme Command. So that we may affirm of them, as the Hiſtorian doth of others on the like occaſion, Aut montibus, aut mutuo metu ſeparantur. The Mountains alſo make that Iſthmus, or neck of Land, which conjoins Spain to the reſt of Europe: the Cantabrian Ocean fiercely beating on the North-weſt, the Mediterranean Sea more gently waſhing the South-eaſt thereof. Their beginning at the Promontory now called Oiarcho, (the Ocaſo of Ptolomy) not far from the City of Bayonne in France, bordering on the Sea Cantabrick: from thence continued South-eaſtwards, betwixt both Kingdoms, to Cabo de Creux, (by the Ancients called Templum Veneris) on the Mediterranean, not far from the City of Rhoda, now Roſas, one of the Port-Towns of Catalonia.

The whole length, not reckoning in the windings and turnings, affirmed to be 80 Spaniſh Leagues, at 3 miles to a League. The higheſt part thereof, by the Spaniards called Canigo, and by the Latins named Canus: from which (as it is ſaid by ſome) there is a proſpect in a clear day, into both the Seas. But whether this be true or not, (for I dare not build any belief upon it) it is no doubt the higheſt part of all theſe Mountains; and took this name from the whiteneſs and hoarineſs thereof, as having on its top or ſummit, a Cap of Snow for moſt part of the year. In which reſpect, as the Alpes took their name, ab Albo; that, in the Sabine Dialect, being termed Alpum, which by the Latins was called Album, which before we noted: ſo did Mount Lebanon, in Syria, take its name from Leban, which in the Phœnician Language ſignifieth White; and Lebanah, Whiteneſs. Such people as inhabit in this Mountainous tract, have been, and ſhall be mentioned in their proper places. I only add, and ſo go forwards towards Spain, that the barbarous people of theſe Mountains compelled Sertorius, in his haſty paſſage into Spain, when he fled from the power of Sylla's Faction, to pay them Tribute for his paſs: at which when ſome of his Souldiers murmured, as thinking it diſhonourable to a Proconſul of Rome, to pay tribute to the barbarous Nations: the prudent General replyed, that he bought only Time, a Commodity which they that deal in haughty Enterpriſes, muſt needs take up at any rate.

SPAIN.

HAving thus crossed the Pyrenees, we are come to Spain, the most Western part of all the Continent of Europe; environed on all sides with the Sea, except towards France; from which separated by the said Mountains: but more particularly, bounded upon the North with the Cantabrian, on the West with the Atlantick Ocean, on the South with the Straits of Gibralter, on the East with the Mediterranean, and on the North-east with those of Pyrenees. The Figure of it compared, by Strabo, to an Ox's Hide spread upon the ground; the neck whereof being that Isthmus which unites it to France.

This Country hath in divers Ages been as diversly named. 1. Hesperia, either from Hesperus, a supposed King hereof; or from Hesperus the Evening-Star, under which it was supposed to be situate, as being the furthest Country Westward: to difference it from Italy, which many of the Greek Authors termed Hesperia also, named Hesperia minor. 2. It was called Iberia, either from the famous River Iberus; or from the Iberi, inhabiting that Country of Asia which we now call Georgia: as Celtiberia, from the mixture of those Asian Iberi, and the Celts of Gaul; by which name it occurreth often in Appian of Alexandria, and sometimes in Strabo. 3. Hispania, as the soundest judgments agree, from Panus the Iberian Captain. For the Græcians call it Σπανία, Spania, as may be proved in many places, that especially of the 15 to the Romans, vers. 28. Ἀπελευσομαι δι ὑμῶν εἰς τὴν Σπανίαν, I will come by you into Spain. No doubt but from the Græcians, the old Romans borrowed the name of Spania, which they often used: to which the Spaniards, according to their custom adding E, (as in Escola, Escuda, &c.) made it Espania, and now Hispania. In like manner as the famous City of Sevil, called at first, Spalis, (according hereunto, the Bishop hereof, in the Council of Eliberis, subscribed himself by the name of Sabinus Spalensis) in tract of time was called Hispalis. And yet I must not pretermit the Fancy of Bochartus, who fetching the names of most places from the Punick Language, will have it to be called Spanija, or Sphanija, by the Carthaginians, or Phœnicians, at their first discovery, from Saphan, which in the Punick Tongue signifies a Conie, with which that Country much abounded in the former times, the Romans being hence furnished with them. Let the Reader like it as he list.

The greatest length hereof, is reckoned at 800 miles; the breadth, where it is broadest at 500; the whole circumference, 2480 Italian miles. But Mariana measuring the compass of it by the bendings of the Pyrenees, and the creeks and windings of the Sea, makes the full circuit of it to be 2816 miles of Italian measure. And though, according to the smallest computation, it be above 460 miles in compass, more than France; yet is it far short thereof in numbers of people: France being thought to contain in it 15 millions of living souls; whereas Spain is reckoned to contain but 8 millions only, which is little more than half the number of the French. The reasons of which disproportions, are, 1. The continual Wars which they had for 900 years together against the Moors, in their own Country, by which they were consumed in the very growth. 2. The Expulsion of so many thousand Families of Jews and Moors, 124000 Families of the one, in the time of Ferdinand the Catholick; and 110000 of the other, by King Philip the third: which was as the lopping off of a main Limb from the Body Politick, though without any loss to the Ecclesiastical. 3. The unnecessary Wars maintained against all the rest of Christendom, ever since the time of Charles the fifth, out of meer ambition, before they were well cured of their former wounds. 4. The infinite Plantations made by them in the East and Western Indies, and all along the Sea-coasts of Africa; and those great Garrisons maintained in Milain, Naples, Sicil, the Low-Countries, and their Towns in Africk; consisting, for the most part, of natural Spaniards. 5. The barrenness of the Country in many places, unable to sustain great multitudes, but made more barren than it would be, for want of men to labour and manure the Land. And 6. and last of all; the Impotency of both Sexes for Generation; the men being generally more hot upon their lusts, than able for Generation; and the Women, for the most part, beginning to be Mothers so extreamly young, that Nature is decayed and spent in them, before they have run half their course. And 'tis a most true and undoubted Maxime, That the greatness of Cities, and populousness of Kingdoms and Commonwealths, do much depend on the generative virtue of the men, and the nutritive virtue of the Soil in which they live.

It is situate in the more Southernly part of the Northern temperate Zone, and almost in the midst of the fourth and six h Climates: the longest day being fifteen hours and a quarter in length, in the most Northern parts hereof; but in the extream South, near to Gibraltar, not above fourteen. Which situation of this Country, rendreth the Air here very clear and calm, seldom obscured with Mists and Vapours; and not so much subject to diseases, as more Northern Regions.

They

They are a mixt People, descending from the Goths, Moors, Jews, and the ancient Spaniards. From the Jews they borrow Superstition; from the Moors, Melancholy; Pride from the Goths; and from the old Spaniards, the desire of Liberty. The Jews first planted here by the Emperour Adrian; who having totally banished them their native Country, sent them hither to dwell: the total number of which plantation is said to amount to 500000 men, women, and children; and yet their numbers much increased in the time of Vlidor Vlet, the great Caliph of the Sarazens; who having made a Conquest of Spain, sent hither 50000 Families of Moors and Jews, the better to assure it to him. And so we have the coming in of the Moors and Jews; the Conquest of it by the Goths, and their setling here, shall be shewn hereafter: which several Nations, by long time, and intermarriages together, were at last incorporated into one. For their condition, it is said that they are highly conceited of themselves, great Braggards, and extreamly proud, even in the lowest ebb of Fortune. Which last appeareth by the tale of a poor Cobler on his death-bed; who (as Barklaie in his Icon Animorum, reporteth the story) commanded his eldest Son, coming to him for his last blessing, to endeavour to retain the majesty worthy so great a Family; Memineris (said he) in majestatem assurgere familiæ tuæ dignam. The same Author relateth another story to the like purpose. A Woman of this Country attended on by three of her Brats, went a begging from door to door. Some French Merchants travelling that way, and pitying her case, offered her to take into their service the bigger of her Boys: but she proud, though poor, scorning, as she said, that any of her lineage should endure a Prentiship, returned this answer: Qui aut tu, aut ego, sciamus, in quæ fata sit genitus? For ought she or any knew, her Son (simply as he stood there) might live to be King of Spain. Not much unlike to these, is that tale of a Spanish Cavaliero; who being for some faults by him committed, whipped through the principal streets of Paris, and keeping a sober pace, was advised by a Friend, to make more haste, that he might the sooner be out of his pain. But he, half in choler, replyed, That he would not lose the least step of his pace, for all the whipping in Paris. For indeed, their gate is Gennet-wise, very stately and majestical.

Of temperature they are hot and dry, which makes them very much given to women, and yet not very able for Generation. And this strong inclination unto women which they find in themselves, makes them so jealous of their Wives, that they permit them not to walk abroad, but when they go to Church; and then too veiled and so hooded, one can hardly see them; and not that neither only, but attended with their Damosels, and some trusty she-friend, that is to give an account of them at their coming back. Mendoza, an Ambassador from Spain in Queen Elizabeths time, used to find fault with the promiscuous sitting of men and women in the Church, used here in England, accounting it to be a very great incentive unto lasciviousness. To whom Doctor Dale, one of the Masters of the Requests, is said to have replied, That indeed in Spain, where the people even in the time of Divine Service, could not abstain from impure thoughts, and unclean gestures, that mingled kind of sitting was not so allowable: but the English were of another temper, and did not find any inconvenience in it. And it is possible, this humour of jealousie might be derived on them from the Moors, who in the strict guarding of their women, were the Spaniards Tutors; it being death in Barbary, to this very day, for any man to see one of the Xeriffes Concubines; and for them too, if when they see a man, though but through a Casement, they do not presently cry out. A frenzie which much rageth in most Southern people, but not predominant in the Northern; who do not only suffer their Wives to sit with other men in the Church, but even in the open and common Bathes also, two things which a true Spaniard would rather dye an hundred deaths, than give consent to. But though the Women are not permitted to stir abroad, the men take liberty enough, and are as good smell-Feasts as in any Country: it being observed of them by a very good Writer, that howsoever in their own houses they are temperate and content with little, yet when they go unto a Feast, they are as gluttonous, dainty, and desirous to eat good chear, as any people whatsoever.

But not to conceal their virtues, and make our selves merry at their follies, (wherein all other Nations have a share with them) they are questionless a people very grave in their carriages, in offices of piety very devout, and to their King very obedient; whose Greatness they affect more cordially, than any Subjects in the World: exact in doing Justice upon all Offenders, which commonly they administer without partiality: indulgent unto one another, and of their duties to their betters not unmindful. But that which deserveth the greatest commendation in them, is an unwearied patience in suffering adversities, accompanied with a resolution to overcome them. A noble quality, of the which in their Indian Discoveries they shewed excellent proofs, and received as glorious rewards: withall, of very daring spirits, great undertakers for the most part; and to say truth, the greatest enlargers of their Dominions, (according to the advantage of their situation) of any Nation under Heaven. For having first either exterminated or subdued the Moors, which for many hundreds of years were possessed of this Continent, the Aragonians lying on the Mediterranean, added to their Estate the Islands of Majorca, and Minorca; the Kingdoms of Sicilie, and Sardinia, and the Realm of Naples; the Castilians lying on both sides of the Straights, first took in some of the opposite Towns on the Coast of Africk; next, conquered the Canaries, or Fortunate Islands; and finally, discovered and subdued the most part of America: the Portugals lying with a long Sea-coast on the Western Ocean, possessed themselves of the Azores, most of the Sea-Towns of Morocco, and the Land of Guinnia; and doubling the Cape of good Hope, made themselves Masters of many Ports and Islands of great consequence in the East Indies; adding thereto, in fine, the large Country of Brazill, in that part of America which lay fittest for them; and the Navarrois (to conclude, though locked up by their greater neighbours from all Trade at Sea, and consequently enlarging their Dominions that way) adding to their Estates the most part of Gascoigne, the Palatinate of Champagne, the Earldom of Evreux, with many fair and large possessions in the Realm of France thereupon depending.

In reference to the French, it is said, that the French are wiser than they seem; and the Spaniards seem wiser than they are: wherein they agree with many particular men of other Nations, who according to the Philosopher, Sapientes potius cupiunt videri & non esse, quam esse & non videri.

In matters of War, the Spaniards are observed to be generally too heavy, slow, and dull; the French too heady and precipitate; the one losing as many fair occasions by delays, as the other overthroweth by too much haste: but between them both, they make one good Souldier; who according to the present opportunities, is to make use of the spur of Courage, or the bit of Respite. But of the strange and many differences in temper, humour, and affections, between the Spaniards and the French, we have ſpoke more at large already when we were in France.

The Women are ſober, loving their Husbands or Friends; wonderful delicate, curious in painting or perfuming: and though they have Wine in abundance, yet are they not permitted to drink it; verifying therein the old Engliſh Proverb, that none are worſe ſhod than the Shoo-makers Wife. Herein in worſe condition than the Women of France; who though they are reſtrained from Wine before their marriage; yet, after that, they take what liberty they liſt, and are no more reſtrained from it, than the other Sex. But this is the leaſt liberty which the French Women have above the Spaniſh: theſe being ſo watched and over-looked, that it is hardly poſſible for them to hold ſpeech with any man, in buſineſs of moſt importance, and much leſs in matters of civilities only, thoſe having liberty to be courted at all times and places, even in the preſence of their Husbands, without any diſtruſt or interruption. Heretofore they were wondrous ſtrong; and, beyond belief, patient of the throws of Child bed: Strabo relating how one of theſe women being hired for Harveſt-work, and finding her travel come upon her; becauſe ſhe would not loſe her days wages, withdrew her ſelf into a Buſh; where, being eaſed of her burden, ſhe returned from one Labour to another. And many of them at this day uſe not to keep their Chambers above three days after their delivery, and then apply themſelves to their Houſhold-buſineſs, without either danger or delay.

The language is not the ſame in all places, though all called the Spaniſh. In Portugal, Catalogne, and ſome parts of Valentia, it hath a great mixture of the French; who in theſe parts have had much trade and negotiation. In Granada, and ſome parts of Andaluzia, it partakes much of the Moor; and in the Mountains of Alpuxarras, the Arabick or Mooriſh language ſtill remains in uſe. The Countries bordering on the Pyrenees, and Cantabrian Ocean, (but Biſcay ſpecially) have much in them of the Language of the ancient Spaniards, before made ſubject to the Romans. That which is common to them all, is the vulgar Spaniſh or Caſtilian, and hath much affinity with the Latin; Breerword in his Enquiries, reporting, that he hath ſeen a Letter, every word whereof was both good Latin and good Spaniſh. Merula ſhews a Copy of the like, pag. 300. By reaſon of which conſonancy with the Latin, the Spaniards call their Language, Romance. The other ingredients of this Tongue, are generally the Gothiſh, Arabick, and old Spaniſh, and in ſome places the French alſo, as before is ſaid; thoſe people having made great conqueſts, and having had great negotiations in this Country. It is ſaid to be a very lofty ſwelling ſpeech, as if it were faſhioned to command.

And as their Language, ſo their Laws do owe a great part of themſelves to the Laws of Rome: the Civil or Imperial Laws being generally uſed amongſt them, but intermixt with many cuſtoms of the Goths, and the Edicts or Conſtitutions of their ſeveral Kings. Thoſe of the Goths being firſt committed unto writing, and reduced to order by Euricus the firſt King of the Goths in Spain: thoſe of Caſtile digeſted by the command of Ferdinand the third, Anno 1296, into ſeven Books, called the Partidas; not finiſhed till the time of his Son Alfonſo. Leges Hiſpaniarum quas partitas vocant, in volumen redegit, as Tarapha hath told us of him in his Spaniſh Hiſtory. The like done by King James the firſt, for the Realm of Aragon, An. 1248. reſpectively confirmed and ratified by the Kings ſucceeding. Authoriſed to be read and diſputed on in the publick Schools, as well as the Decretals the Code, the Pandect, or any other part of the Civil or Canon Laws.

The Soil hereof, where it is fertile and productive of the Fruits of Nature, yields not to any part of Europe, for delight, pleaſures, and Commodities; which here appear in greater ripeneſs and perfection, than in other places. But, for the moſt part, it is either overgrown with Woods, cumbred with wild and rocky Mountains, or of ſo hot a nature, and ſo ſandy withal, that it is not very fit for tillage; and ſo deficient in Water, as not good for Paſturage. So that we may affirm thereof, as of the Figs in the Prophet Jeremy; where it is good, no Country better; where bad and barren, few ſo inconvenient, and not any worſe. But this defect of outward Beauty and Commodities, is recompenſed by thoſe within; affording great plenty of Mines, both of Steel and Iron, and ſome Mines of Silver; of which laſt ſo abundant in preceding times, that it was never free from the Rovers of all Nations: and it is ſaid of Annibal, that out of one Mine only in the Country of the Turdetani, (now part of Andaluzia) he received 3000 pound weight daily, for a long time together. The principal Commodities which they vend into other Countries, are Wines, Oyl, Sugars, Metals, Rice, Silk, Licoras, a fine ſort of Wool, Cork, Roſin, Limmons, Raiſins, Oranges, and Fruits of the like nature. In Corn, which is the ſtaff of life, they are ſo defective, that they receive the greateſt part of what they ſpend, from Italy, Sicily, and France. Their Cattel neither fair, nor many; the Country being not able to breed them; ſo that their Diet is on Salads, and fruits of the Earth; every Gentleman being limited what fleſh he ſhall buy for himſelf and his Family, which if he ſend for to the Butcher, or Poulterer, by the ſmalleſt Child, able to do the Errand for him, he is ſure not to be defrauded in price, or quality. And yet they talk as highly of their gallant fare, as if they ſurfeited with the plenty of all proviſions: handſomly checked in that fond humour, by that worthy Souldier, Sir Roger Williams; of whom it is ſaid, that hearing once a Spaniard thus fooliſhly bragging of his Country Salads, he gave him this anſwer, You have indeed good ſawce in Spain; but we have dainty Beefs, Veals, and Muttons, to eat with that ſawce, and as God made beaſts to live upon the grais of the earth; ſo he made men to live upon them. And it is obſerved, that if a Spaniard have a Capon, or the like good Diſh to his Supper, you ſhall find all the Feathers ſcattered before his door, by the next morning.

And as it is in private Houſes, ſo for travelling alſo, the Inns and Vents of this Country are very ill provided: inſomuch, that moſt men that would not go ſupperleſs to ſleep, carry their proviſion at their Saddle-bows, and men of worth their bedding alſo. So poor and mean is the entertainment in theſe places.

Here lived in ancient times, the Giants Geryon, and Cacus, which were quelled by Hercules: and in the flouriſhing of the Roman Empire, 1. Seneca the Tragedian, and 2. the Philoſopher of the ſame name; a man of that happy memory, that he could repeat 2000 names in the ſame order that they were rehearſed: as alſo 3. Quintilian the Orator, 4. Lucan, and 5. Martial, excellent in their kinds: 6. Pomponius Mela the Geographer, 7. Trogus Pompeius, with his Epitomator: 8. Juſtin, and 9. Paulus Oroſius the Hiſtorian, this laſt a Chriſtian. In the middle times, 10. Iſidore Biſhop of Sevil, 11. Julian, and 12. Hildephonſus, Biſhops of Toledo, and after them, Eulogius the Saint and Martyr; men learned for the times they lived in. Then for the later Ages, 1. The renowned Cardinal Francis Ximines, and 2. Arius Montanus, famous for the Editions ditions of the holy Bible. 3. Masius, a learned Commentator. 4. Osorius, well seen in the Latin Elegancies; and before all, as well in industry as time, 5. Tostatus Bishop of Avila; a man so copious and industrious in his writings, that it is thought he writ more sheets than he lived days. But of late times we find but few of their Works which have passed the Mountains; the Latin which they write, being very coarse, and savouring too much of the School-man, (wherein their excellency consists) and therefore they set out their Works most commonly in their own Tongue only. The chief for Souldiery amongst them, were formerly Viriathus, who held out so long against the Romans. Trajan and Theodosius, both Roman Emperors. Theodorick the second, King of the Goths, the victorious Conqueror of the Swevians. Bernardo del Carpio, and Cid Ruis Diaz, famous for their atchievements against the Moors: and in late times, Gonsalvo the Great Captain, who subdued Naples. Ferdinand Duke of Alva, who conquered Portugal, &c.

The Christian Faith, if we may believe the old Spanish Tradition, was first here planted by St. James the Apostle, within four years after the death of our Redeemer. To which Tradition, though they held very constant a long time together; yet of late days, Baronius, and other learned men of the Church of Rome, do most deservedly reject it. That St. Paul had a purpose of coming hither, is evident in his 15. Chapter to the Romans: and that he did come hither accordingly, is positively affirmed by St. Chrysostom, Theodoret, and divers others of the Fathers; which was in Anno 61. as Baronius thinketh. Nor did St. Peter want his part in this great service, but joyned with St. Paul; though not in the journey, yet in the sending of Bishops, and other Presbyters, to second the beginnings made by that Apostle. For it is said expresly in the Martyrologies, that Ctesiphon, Torquatus, Secundus, Cecilius, Judaletius, Hesychius, and Euphrasius, being at Rome, ordained Bishops by the two Apostles, ad prædicandum verbum Dei in Hispanias directi, were dispatched into Spain to preach the Gospel. Bishops, most likely, of those Cities where they suffered death; the names of which occurr in the Martyrology. Under the Empire of the Goths, the Faith of CHRIST, which at their coming hither they found right and Orthodox, was defiled with Arianism: not ejurated till the year 588, when that whole Nation did submit to more Catholick tendries. But Spain being conquered by the Moors under the conduct of Musa, Lieutenant-General to Ulidor Ulit, the Arabian Caliph; and Mahometanism over-spreading the whole face of the Country; such Christians as remained under their obedience, but few and inconsiderable both for power and quality, had the name of Musarabes. Encreasing in estate and numbers, by the fortunate successes of the King of Leon and Navarre, and other Christian Principalities growing up apace; they still retained their old name, and their ancient service, distinct from that observed in the Church of Rome; this being called the Musarabique, the other the Gregorian Missal: the one pretending S. Isidore Archbishop of Sevil, the other S. Gregory Pope of Rome, for the Author of it. And it continued in this state, till the taking of the City and Kingdom of Toledo, by Alfonso King of Castile and Leon, Anno 1083. At what time Bernard a French-man, being made Arch-bishop of that City, and Primate of Spain, endeavoured the introduction of the Roman or Gregorian Service, but therein was opposed by the other Prelates, and generally by all the people, sufficiently tenacious of their ancient Forms. At last it was concluded (as the story telleth us) to commit the decision of the Controversie to a fiery tryal: both Books being cast into the fire, the Gregorian leaping presently out, and the Musarabique remaining unhurt in the midst of the flames. Convinced by this experiment, that both Forms were pleasing to Almighty God, they yielded so far to the desires of the King, (who was zealous in it) that the Musarabique being retained in six of the Churches of Toledo, (where it is sung to this day in a Chappel of the Great Church, called Corpus Domini) the Gregorian or Roman Service, should be entertained in the rest of Spain. According unto which Decree, the Musarabique (but not until some tract of time) came to be disused; and the Gregorian Service first admitted in the Cathedral of Toledo, May 29. An. 1091. And after, by degrees, in the rest of the Country.

Since that, they have been constant to the Rites of the Roman Church, and of the Faith and Doctrine therein professed, notwithstanding the great intermixture of Jews and Moors, especially since the setting up of the Inquisition: devised at first about the year 1478, by Pedro Gonsales de Mendoza, Arch-bishop of Toledo, against such converted Jews and Moors, as did return again to their superstition. But he, and those that had the first execution of it, being found so cruel, that, in the compass of nine years, no fewer than 3000 Families had been destroyed in that Diocese only. In the year 1481, it was thought fit to moderate the rigour of it, and to commit the managing thereof to some Jacobins or Dominical Fryers; who in the first place were to have an eye unto such Apostates, and to Hereticks, Magicians, Sodomites, Blasphemers of the name of God, &c. confirmed in this Authority, by Pope Sixtus the 4. This Institution in it self was not only necessary, (as the condition of Affairs then was) but exceeding laudable, had it been kept within the bounds at first intended. But of late, instead of being used on the Jews and Moors it hath been turned upon the Protestants, and that with such violence and extremity, of torture, that it is counted the greatest tyranny, and severest kind of persecution, under Heaven: insomuch that many Papists, who would willingly dye for their Religion, abhor the very name and mention of it, and to the death withstand the bringing in of this slavery among them. This is it that made the people of Aragon and Naples rebel, Countries where the people are all of the Papal side: and this was it which caused the irremediable revolt of the Low Countries; the greatest part of that Nation, at the time of their taking Arms, being Romish Catholicks: yet it is planted and established in Spain and all Italy, (Naples and Venice excepted) the managing thereof committed to the most zealous and rigorous Friers in the whole Pack: the least suspition of Heresie, affinity, or commerce with Hereticks, reproving the lives of the Clergy, keeping any Books, or Editions of Books, prohibited, or discoursing in matters of Religion, are offences sufficient. Nay, they will charge mens Consciences under the pain of damnation, to detect their nearest and dearest Friends, if they do but suspect them to be herein culpable. Their proceedings are with great secresie and severity: for first, the parties accused shall never know their accuser, but shall be constrained to reveal their own thoughts and affections. 2. If they be but convinced of any error in any of their opinions, or be gain-sayed by two Witnesses, they are immediately condemned. 3. If nothing can be proved against them, yet shall they with infinite tortures and miseries, be kept in the house divers years, for a terror unto others. And fourthly, if they escape the first brunt with many torments, and much anguish; yet the second questioning or suspition, brings death remediless. And as for torments, and kinds of death, Phalaris and his fellow-Tyrants, come far ſhort of theſe Blood-hounds.

The adminiſtration of this Office, for the more orderly reglement and diſpatch thereof, diſtributed into twelve Courts, or ſupreme Tribunals, for the ſeveral Provinces of Spain; no one depending on another, but in ſome ſort ſubordinate to the general Inquiſition, remaining in the Court near the King's Perſon, which hath a kind of ſuperintendency over thoſe Tribunals: in all of which, thoſe of the Secular Clergy ſit as Judges, the Friers being only uſed as Promoters to inform the Court, and bring more Griſt unto the Mill. Of theſe Inquiſitors, every one hath the title of Lord, and are a great terror to the neighbouring Peaſants. There goeth a Tale, how one of their Lordſhips deſirous to eat of the Pears which grew in a poor man's Orchard not far off, ſent for the man to come unto him; which put the poor ſoul into ſuch a fright, that he fell ſick upon it, and kept his bed: being afterwards informed, that all his Lodſhip's buſineſs with him, was to requeſt a diſh of Pears; he pulled up the Tree by the Rooots, and carried it unto him with the fruit upon it. And when he was demanded the reaſon of that raſh and improvident action, he returned this anſwer, That he would never keep that thing in his houſe, which ſhould give any of their Lordſhips cauſe to ſend further after him. Certain it is that by this means the people of this Kingdom are ſo kept under, that they dare not hearken after any other Religion: than what their Prieſts and Friers ſhall be pleaſed to teach them; or entertain the truth if it come amongſt them; or call in queſtion any of thoſe palpable and groſs impoſtures, which every day are put upon them.

For by this means, the people of this Kingdom have been, and ſtill are punctual followers of the Church of Rome, and that too in the very errors and corruptions of it; taking up their Religion on the Pope's Authority: and therein ſo tenacious or pertinacious, that the King doth ſuffer none to live in his Dominions, which profeſs not the Roman Catholick Religion. Of which they have been, ſince the times of Luther, ſuch avowed Patrons, that one of the late Popes being ſick, and hearing divers men to moan his approaching end, uttered ſome words to this effect: My life (ſaid he) can nothing benefit the Church; but pray for the proſperity of the King of Spain, as its chief Supporter. And though he ſpoke theſe words of King Philip the 2d, yet they hold good in his Succeſſors ever ſince; being eſteemed the greateſt Patrons and Protectors of the Catholick Cauſe; which is indeed the proper intereſs of this King. For ſeeing that they have framed to themſelves an hope of the Weſtern Monarchy; and finding no fitter means of enlarging their own Temporal, than by concurring with the Pope in upholding his Spiritual Empire, they have linked themſelves moſt faſt to that See. To which end, they have taken upon them to be the Executioners of the Pope's Excommunications; by which Office, Ferdinand the Catholick ſurpriſed Navarre, not without hope of working the like effect, in ſome courſe of time, on the reſt of the interdicted Eſtates of Europe; as may be ſeen by the eager following of the French War againſt Henry the 4. till he had reconciled himſelf to the Church of Rome; and the like War managed for many years together againſt Q. Elizabeth of England. And the purſuit of this Spaniſh Monarchy is ſo hotly followed by the Jeſuits, who in all their perſwaſions ſpeak not more of one God, or of one Pope, than they do of one King; that they hold it forth for the only means to unite the differences of the Church, and ſubdue that great enemy of Religion, the Turk. Nor is this only a Conjecture, or a project of the Jeſuits only, but a deſign avowed and declared in Print, that all the world may take notice of it: and that too in a Book not only licenſed by the Provincial of the Dominicans, and the Supreme Council of the Inquiſition; but by order from the Lords of the Council, with the King's Priviledg and commendation prefixt before it. The Book entituled, La Convenientia de los dos Monarquias Catolicas, &c. The agreement of the two Catholick Monarchies of Rome and Spain, ſet out in the year 1612, by one John de Puente. In the Frontiſpiece whereof are ſet two Scutcheons, the one bearing the Croſs-Keys of Rome, the other the Arms of Caſtile and Leon; In vinculo pacis, for the Motto. On the one ſide of this, there is a Portraicture repreſenting Rome, with the Sun ſhining over it, and darting his Beams upon the Keys, with this Inſcription, Luminare majus ut præſit Orbi & Urbi, the greater Light to govern the City and the World. On the other ſide, another Image deſigning Spain, with the Moon ſhining over that, and darting her Rays on the Spaniſh Scutcheon, with this Impreſs; Luminare minus ut ſubdatur Urbi & dominetur Orbi, i.e. The leſſer Light made to be ſubject to the City, (underſtand of Rome) but to govern all the World beſides. Over all in the top of the Front or Title-page, in Capital Letters, Fecit Deus duo Luminaria magna, God made two great Lights. The whole Book being an indifferent large Folio, is but a Comment on this Text, which for ſubſtance is contained wholly in the Frontiſpiece, but more at large diſcourſed of in the Volume it ſelf; and plainly ſhews what is intended, and by whom. And yet perhaps the Pope and the Jeſuits both, may fail in that which is the main of their expectation; and if the project take effect, the Spaniard will then write himſelf Luminare majus, and make the Pope content with Luminare minus, for his part of the ſpoil; and glad to borrow all his light from the Sun of Spain. For, though the Kingdom of Spain, and Popedom of Rome, be thus ſtraitly combined, yet herein the Popes have over-ſhot themſelves; in that leaning ſo much to the Spaniard, and ſo immoderately encreaſing his dominion, they do in a manner ſtand at his devotion, and may peradventure, in the end, be forced to caſt themſelves into his arms, as their good Lord and Maſter. For certain it is, that the Spaniſh Agents have openly braved the Cardinals, and told them, That they hoped to ſee the day, wherein the King ſhould offer the Pope half a dozen to be made Cardinals, and he not dare to refuſe any; and that they themſelves ſhould choſe no Pope, but one of their Maſter's naming. So great an inconvenience it is, more than poſſible it may be to the Popes, in making this Prince the one and only ſtring to their bow; and faſtning the dependancies of his Roman Catholicks upon him alone, excluding France and all the other Kings in Chriſtendom, of the Romiſh Party, from the honour of it. And yet ſo firm they are to their Spaniſh Principles, that no favours either granted to their perſons, or Religion, are of value with them, or thought worthy of their acceptation, if it come from any other Fountain of Grace, than the Court of Spain. Inſomuch as I have heard from a great Miniſter of State, that when ſome favours were obtained for the Engliſh Papiſts, on the treaty of the Match with Spain, they were ready with great greedineſs to embrace the ſame. But when the ſame favours were obtained for them on the Treaty with France, not a man of them would accept them. For which ſome of their Chiefs being asked the reaſon, returned this anſwer, That by applying themſelves to the French, they might loſe the Spaniard; and it were great improvidence in them, to change an old and conſtant Friend, who had never failed them, for one of whoſe affections they had no aſſurance; and ſuch a one as by tolerating Hereticks in his own Dominions, ſhewed that he was no fit Patron for the Catholicks to rely upon.

The

The chief Rivers are, 1. Tagus, celebrated for his Golden Sands; of which the Scepter of the old Kings of Portugal is affirmed (by some Writers) to be made: but I have not Faith enough to believe the same. The head of it is in the Mountain Scira Molina, near to Cuenca; from the which it runneth by the City Toledo; and then smoothly gliding by the Walls of Lisbon, doth pay his tribute to the Western Ocean. 2. Ana, (now Guadiana) which arising about the same place, runneth afterward under the ground the space of 15 miles: and hence the Spaniards use to brag, that they have a Bridg whereon 10000 Cattel dayly feed. An accident common to many other Rivers; as to Mole a small River in Surrey; Erasinus in Greece; and Lycus in Anatolia, of which last, thus Ovid:

Sic ubi terreno Lycus est epotus hiatu,
Exiſtit procul hinc, alioque renaſcitur ore.

So Lycus, swallowed by the gaping ground,
At a new mouth, far off, is rising found.

But having gotten up again, it loseth it self without recovery in the Western Ocean, on the South of Portugal, which is separated from Extremadura. 3. Bætis, now called Guadalquior, (which in the Arabick Language signifieth a great River) ariseth out of the Mountains of Sierra Morena; and passing by Corduba and Sevil, disburdeneth it self into the Southern Ocean, at the Haven of S. Lucars de Barameda. 4. Iberus, which having its head amongst the Mountins of Biscay, passeth on Eastwards by Suragossa and Tortosa, into the Mediterranean; the whole course thereof being 460 miles, of which it is navigable 200. A River of such note in the time of the Romans that it divided this whole Country into Citeriorem, and Ulteriorem; of which more anon. 5. Duerus, which rising in the same Mountains, passeth through Portugal, and so unto the Western or Atlantick Ocean. 6. Minius, of which more in Portugal.

Chief Mountains next unto the Pyrenees spoken of before. 1. The Cantabrian Mountains, called by Pliny, Juga Asturum; which rising out of a spur or branch of the Pyrenees, overspread the Provinces of Biscay, Asturia, and Gallicia, (coasting along the shores of the Cantabrian Ocean) where at last they end. 2. Idubeda, Jubalda, or Aurantius Saltus, so called by Ptolemy, and others of the ancient Writers: which beginning not far from the head of the River Iberus followeth the course of that River, by the City of Burgos, and endeth not far from the influx of it into the Mediterranean. 3. Sierra Morena, by Cæsar called Saltus Castulonensis, and Mons Marianus by Ptolemy; which beginning about the Town Alcoraz, coasteth along the right-hand shores of the River Bætis, to the South Seas. 4. Sierra Nevada, by Ptolemy called Mons Illipulus, and Orospeda by Strabo; but by the Moors, the Mountains of Alpuxaras. A chain of hills which thwart the Kingdom of Granada, from East to West; and amongst which the people to this day speak the Arabick Tongue.

The Country is said to have been inhabited by Tubal, the Son of Japhet. Of whom it is affirmed in the Berosus of Frier Annius, and by such Chronologers as he hath imposed on by the name of that Author; that in the twelfth year of Nimrod, which was 140 years after the Flood, he seated himself in the Asturia's, a part of Spain, and there built the Town of S. Uval. A device so fooliſh and absurd, that it is not to be honoured with a confutation: for either Tubal must come hither by Sea or by Land: if by Land, then must he in the compass of a year or two, travel not less than 4000 miles (for so far it is, at least, from Biscay, to the valley of Shinar) with women and children, through most unpassable Woods and Mountains, which no understanding man can give belief to. If by Sea, besides the short time he had to provide shipping for so great a company, and so long a voyage, nothing is more improbable to a sober man than that he should leave Italy and Africk upon either hand; or pretermit the opportunity of possessing Valentia, Andaluzia, Portugal, being fruitful Countries; to fix himself in the most mountainous, woody, and barren Province of all this Continent. Yet most of our Berosians are so confident in it, that they make him the first King of Spain; from whom to Gargarus Melicola, they numbered 25 Kings more, who lasted 988 years: the chief of which are said to be, 1. Hesperus, who subduing also Italy, named both Countries Hesperia; but so that Italy was called Hesperia the greater; and Spain Hesperia the less. 2. Hispanus, whence they conceit the name of Hispania to be derived. 3. Tagus, 4. Bætus, and 5. Anus, whence the three Rivers in Spain, so called must by all means derive their names. 6. Idubeda, Godfather, no doubt, to the great Mountain so named. 7. Sicileus, from whom the Isle of Sicily is said to take denomination. 8. Hespalis, who is reported to have built the City Sevel, or Hispalis. 9. Brigus, the Founder of Flavio Briga, and other Towns ending in Briga. 10. Lusus, who gave name to Lusitania, now Portugal. The Catalogue of which Kings, I desire no man to believe farther, than that of our own State from Brutus to Cassibeline. A Catalogue so ill contrived, that whereas Justin speaks of Habis, and Herodotus of Argunthonius, Macrobius of Heron, and Plutarch of Indibilis, all Kings of Spain; none of all these are mentioned in it. So that the coming of Tubal (in person) hither, is a silly vanity; though we deny not but the Spaniards, or some Nations of them, may derive their Pedigree from Tubal, as being the descendants of the Iberi, whom Josephus saith to have been anciently called Thobelos: a name in which are all the Radical Letters of Tubal, and which differeth not much from it in sound. For somewhat before the supposed time of Gargarus Melicola, the Iberians are said to come in under Panus: divided after his decease, amongst many petit Kings and Princes, for the space of 900 and odd years, even till the first attempt which the Carthaginians made upon it; who found here no such Universal or Supream Monarch, as the Berosian Fablers dream of. During which time, we find nothing more observable and certain in the story of it, than the planting of Colonies on the Sea-coasts, by divers Nations, according to the Custom of those elder times. Of which sort were the Towns of Emporia and Dianium, founded by the Massilians; Saguntum, by the Zacynthi, or people of Zant, Rhode, by the Rhodians, as some think; the City and Isle of Gades, planted by the Tyrians, who after spread themselves over all the Coasts of Andaluzia. The first that came in bodies hither, in the way of Conquest, were the Celtæ, a great and potent Nation of Gaul; who mixing themselves with the Iberis, caused the whole Country to be called Celtiberia: but the time when they came into it, is very uncertain. Of the invasion of it by the Carthaginians, there is greater certainty. Who being beaten out of Sicil by the conquering Romans, An. V. C. 512, and not daring to look any more that way, bended their Forces to the West; and passing through the Straights of Gibralter, by the Isle of Gades, (their own long before) landed in Spain, under the conduct of Amilcar, the Father of Annibal, four years after the loss of Sicily. In less than twenty years following, Amilcar, (Asdrubal his Son in law), and Annibal the Son of Amilcar, had made almoſt all Spain ſubject to the Carthaginians, even from the Weſtern Ocean to the Pyrenees; deſtroyed Saguntum, built new Carthage, and ſtruck ſo great a terror into all the Country, that had not Annibal's deſign carried him to Italy, the State of Carthage had been abſolute Maſters of it, without further oppoſition or reſiſtance. But Annibal having taken all his Souldiers with him; and thoſe that came from Carthage to command in chief, not being men of parts ſufficient to go through with it; they loſt it piece-meal to the Romans, but in leſs time than they had been getting it from the Spaniards; the valour and good fortune of Corn. Scipio, over-ruling the declining-power of that mighty State. The laſt that here commanded for the State of Carthage was Aſdrubal the Son of Giſco; who being beaten by Scipio into the Iſland of Gades, left that alſo to the keeping of Mago, one of his Commanders; by whom being pillaged and deſerted, it forthwith yielded to the Romans, the Carthaginians, after this never poſſeſſing foot of ground in all this Continent.

The Romans thus becoming Maſters of a great part of it, divided it into Ulteriorem, lying from the River Iberus, Weſtward, becauſe furtheſt off from them; and Citeriorem, between the ſaid River, and the Pyrenees. But having totally ſubdued it, they divided it into three main parts; 1. Tarraconenſem, ſo called of Tarragon, the chief City of it, containing Aragon, Navarre, Biſcay, Gallicia, &c. 2. Bæticam, ſo named of the River Bætis, which runneth through it; comprehendeth the now Countries of Granada, Andaluzia, and part of Extremadura. 3. Luſitanicam, denominated from the Luſitani, the moſt potent people of that part, differing in extent from the preſent Portugal, (though this called Luſitania, by our modern Latiniſts.) For the old Luſitania comprehended part of Extremadura, and ſome part of the two Caſtiles; and no more of the preſent Portugal, than what lieth betwixt the two Rivers, Ana and Duero: that on the South of Ana, being laid to Bætica; and that on the North of Duero, unto Tarraconenſis. Of theſe three parts, Bætica was in moſt eſteem under the Romans; inſomuch that it contained 8 Roman Colonies, 8 Municipal Cities, and 29 other Towns, endued with the rights and priviledges of the Latins. The reaſon thereof was, that the people of this Country having been formerly broken by the Carthaginians, with more quiet endured the yoke of the Romans; whereas the reſt, for a long time reſiſted the entry and Empire of that prevailing City. But to proceed to the affairs of Rome in Spain, Scipio Africanus laid the firſt foundation of the Roman Government in this Country: which building, though undertaken by many excellent workmen, was not throughly finiſhed till the days of Auguſtus, being almoſt 200 years ſince the firſt attempt. He rooſed it, ſtrengthened it, and made it a principal building in his Monarchical City. For the old Incolæ were exceeding valiant and reſolute, ſometimes diſgracing, ſometimes endangering the Roman reputation; inſomuch that there were more Commanders loſt in thoſe Wars, than any other. At firſt the Romans fought not with the Spaniards, but with the Carthaginians in Spain: then periſhed both the Scipio's, viz. the Father and the Uncle of Africanus. Viriathus held War for 20 years, Numantia held out almoſt 15, the Aſtures remained unconquered till the time of Auguſtus; and alſo reſolutely maintained their particular liberties, Ut dijudicari non potuerit (ſaith Paterculus) Hiſpanis an Romanis plus eſſet in armis roboris, & uter populus alteri pariturus foret. Such manner of men were the ancient Spaniards under Rome and Carthage; the firſt people of the Continent of Europe, (excepting Italy) on which the Romans did begin to enlarge their Empire, and the laſt that wholly were ſubdued and conquered by them. But being conquered at the laſt, and brought under the form of a Province by Auguſtus Cæſar; it was governed by their Proconſuls, Prætors, and other Magiſtrates, according to the diviſion before-mentioned. But Conſtantine the Great in his new modelling of the Empire, laying ſome part of Africk to it, made it a Dioceſe of the Empire; and ſubject to the Præfectus Prætorio for Gaul, by whoſe Vicarius it was governed: the whole being then divided into theſe ſeven Provinces, viz. 1. Bætica, 2. Luſitania, bounded as before; 3. Gallicia, containing the modern Gallicia, Leon, and Oviedo, the greateſt part of the Old Caſtile, and ſo much of Portugal as lieth betwixt the two Rivers of Minio and Duero, 4. Carthaginenſis, ſo called from the City of New Carthage, comprehending New Caſtile, Murcia, and Valentia with part of the Old Caſtile, Aragon, and Andaluſia. 5. Tarraconenſis, embracing all Biſcay, Navarre, and Catalogne, with the greateſt part of the Kingdom of Aragon. 6. Tingitana, ſo called from Tingis, (now Tangier) a Town in Africk, on the oppoſite Coaſt, in which are now the great Kingdoms of Feſſe and Morocco. And 7. the Province of the Iſlands, containing Majorca, Minorca, Ebuſa, and Frumentaria. Of which ſeven Provinces, the three firſt were Conſulares, governed by Proconſuls; the other four, from their being under Preſidents, were called Preſidiarie. Being thus ſetled, it continued a Roman Dioceſe till about the year 400, when it was ſubdued by Gundericus, King of the Vandals; of which people, their beginning, atchievements, and final period, we will ſpeak more when we come to Africk, where they fixed themſelves: invited thereunto, partly to eſchew the ill neighbourhood of the Goths, who began to grow too potent for them; and partly to ſatisfie the deſire of Boniface, Governour of that Province for the Emperor Valentinian the third, againſt whom he had then rebelled, and wanted ſuch ſupport to make good his action. Thoſe being gone, the Suevi and Alani, who entred with them, could not long ſubſiſt; but were finally broken by the Goths, and afterwards diſpoſſeſſed of their Kingdoms alſo, (though ſuffered to remain in the Country ſtill) as ſhall be ſhewn hereafter in its proper place. As for the Goths, (of whom we ſhall ſpeak more in Sweden, and have already made ſome mention when we were in Gaul) having ſacked Rome, and waſted Italy, under the conduct of Alaric; they were bought out of that Country by the gift of Narbonenſis in Gaul, and ſo much of Tarroconenſis in Spain, as now makes up the Province of Catalogne: the compoſition being ratified by the marriage of Athaulfus, the Succeſſor of Alarick, with Placidia, Siſter to Honorius the Weſtern Emperor. Vallia, or Wallia, the next of name and note, (for Sigeric who interpoſed, reigned but one year only, and did nothing in it) Succeſſor of Athaulfus, having beaten the Alani out of Luſitania and Carthaginenſis, added thoſe Provinces alſo unto his Eſtates, and confining the Vandals within Bætica, was the firſt of the Goths which entituled himſelf King of the Goths in Spain. By their agreement with the Romans, they were to keep thoſe Provinces for the uſe of the Empire, which they did conquer and recover from the barbarous Nations; but contrary to all Faith, and the Articles of their Agreement having once beaten the Alani out of Luſitania, by the Prowеſs of Vallia, and the Swevi out of Bætica, under the conduct of Theodorick, the Brother of Toriſmund, they fell upon the Romans themſelves; whom Euricus, and his Succeſſors, by little and little, diſpoſſeſſed of all Spain on this ſide of the Streights. Tingitana held out longeſt, as furtheſt off, unfortunately attempted tempted by Theudes the ninth King of Goths, whose Souldiers being set upon by the Romans on the Lord's day, or Sunday, refused to fight in their own defence, and were so miserably defeated, that there was never a man of them left to carry news of the overthrow. So early did the Superstition of a Lord's day Sabbath prevail upon this melancholick and devout people. But what this Theudes could not do, was performed by Suintilla; who in the short time of this reign, An. 642, made the Conquest absolute.

Let us next look upon the Goths as Lords of Spain, and we shall find them to have been Christians in Religion, and somewhat civilized by their long neighbourhood and conversations with the Graecians, before they turned their Forces into the West. Their company more desired in this respect, than that of the Vandals; who were not only Pagans, but far more barbarous. But these Goths, being for long time of the Arian Faction, did grievously afflict and persecute the Orthodox Prelates: continuing in this error till the death of Leonigild (or Leutigildis as some call him) the last Patron and Assertor of it. Their Government Monarchical, but the Kings Elective, (though for the most part they kept themselves to the Regal Family:) an Excommunication being laid on such, by the fifth Council of Toledo, as went about to alter that established course. Their Rule or Government was Custom, and that not left in writing, but committed to Memory and Tradition: written, Laws being first made by Euricus; which the ensuing Princes confirmed and perfected. What else concerneth them, we shall find in the close of this Catalogue of

The Kings of the Goths in Spain.

716	31	Roderick, the last King of the Goths in Spain, elected to the prejudice of the Sons of Vitiza, which after proved the ruin and overthrow of the Kingdom.

For though the Kingdom went, for the most part, by Election, and that they had respect to the next of blood, (as at this time in Poland and Bohemia) very few interlopers being here admitted: yet some there were, who either by their merit, or some opportunity, got the possession of the Kingdom, though not at all relating to the Royal Family. Of which kind were Theudes, an Ostro-Goth, sometimes the Governour hereof for Theodorick King of the Goths in Italy, Protector of this Kingdom in the minority of Amalaric; and Theudeselus, or Theudegisdus, Nephew to Totilus, one of the Successors to Theodorick. The rest of principal note were, 1. Theodorick the first, slain in the battel near Tholouze, against Attila the Hunn; in defence of his own Country, and the Roman Empire. 2. Theodorick the second, who beat the Nation of the Suevi out of Betica; and 3. Leonigild, or Leutigilde, who deprived them of Gallicia also. 4. Reccaredus the first, who first imbraced the Catholick Doctrine of the Church, and rejected Arianism; and for that cause first honoured with the title of the Catholick King; afterwards resumed by Alfonsus the first King of Leon, and made hereditary by Ferdinand the King of Castile, Aragon, &c. Grandfather unto Charles the fifth. 5. Euricus, or Henricus as some call him, as remarkable for Civil Polity, as Reccaredus for Piety: as being the Lycurgus or Ligislator of this people; not governed till his time by a written Law, but either by uncertain customs, or at the pleasure of such Officers as the Kings set over them. 6. Suintilla, Son of Reccaredus the second, who having in the short time of his reign expelled the Roman Forces out of Tingitana, An. 642, was the first Monarch of all Spain, whereof Tingitana (though on the other side of the Sea) had been made a Province by the Emperor Constantine, as before was said. And of this Province was Julianus Governour in the time of Roderick, who being of the Faction of the sons of Vitiza, stomacked his advancement to the Kingdom; and thereby got the greater portion of the King's displeasure; who sending him upon an Embassie to the Moors of Africa, in the mean time defloured his daughter, named Cava: which the Father took in such indignation, that he procured the Moors (amongst whom he had gotten much credit) to come over into Spain. This request they performed under the conduct of Musa and Tariff, and having made a full Conquest, subjected it to the great Caliphs, or Mahometan Emperors. It is recorded in a MS. History of the Saracens, that at the first coming of Tariff into Spain, a poor woman of the Country being willingly taken Prisoner, fell down at his feet, kissed them, and told him, that she had heard her Father (who was Letter'd) say, that Spain should be conquered by a people whose General should have a Mole on his right shoulder, and in whom one of his hands should be longer than the other. He, to animate his Souldiers against the next encounter, uncloathed himself, and shewed the mark; which so encouraged them, that they now doubted not the Victory. Roderick had in his Army 130000 Foot, and 35000 Horse. Tariff had 30000 Horse and 180000 Foot. The Battel continued seven days together, from morning to night; at last the Moors were victorious. What became of King Roderick, was never known. His Souldiers took one arrayed in their King's Apparel, whom upon examination they found to be a Shepherd; with whom the King, after the discomfiture, had changed clothes. It is written also in Rodericus Toletanus, that before the coming of those Saracens, King Roderick, upon hope of some treasure, did open a part of the Palace, of long time forbidden to be touched; but found nothing but Pictures which resembled the Moors, with a Prophesie, that whenwhensoever the Palace was there opened, the people there resembled, should overcome Spain; and so it happned, An. 724.

The Moors, now Lords of Spain by the treason of Julian, (who having seen the miserable death of his wife and children, was starved in Prison by the Africans) permitted the free use of Religion to the old Inhabitants; lest they seeking new dwellings fot the Liberty of Conscience, should leave their native Soyl desolate. The Moors finished their Conquest in five years say some; others, in two; and some again in eight Months. To keep the new-conquered Country in subjection, no way was so convenient, as to plant Colonies: but the Morisco women would not abandon their old seats. Hereupon Musa and Tariff, by gifts, pardons, and perswasions, drew many Christian women to forsake their Religion, whom they married to the Souldiers. Not long after Ulidor Ulit, the great Caliph, sent over about 50000 Families of Moors and Jews, assigning them a convenient portion of Lands, to be held with great Immunities, and upon small Rents. These politick courses notwithstanding, the Moors long enjoyed not the sole Soveraignty herein: for the Christians having now recovered breath, chose themselves Kings; and the Authority of the Caliphs declining, gave the Moors liberty to erect divers petit Royalties; many of which, by little and little, were brought under the command of greater and more powerful Princes. So that at last, Spain fell into a fifteenfold division, viz. into the Kingdoms and proprietary Estates of 1. Navarre, 2. Biscay, and 3. Guipuscoa, 4. Leon and Oviedo, 5. Gallicia, 6. Corduba, 7. Granada, 8. Murcia, 9. Toledo, 10. Castile, 11. Portugal, and the Members of it, 12. Valentia, 13. Catalonia, 14. the Kingdom of Majorca, and 15. that of Aragon: not to say any thing of the petit Kingdoms of Jaen, Algozire, and Sevil, besides others of like nature to them, erected by the factious and divided Moors; but of short continuance all of them, and of little note. All now reduced at this day, under the three Governments of Castile, Portugal, and Aragon; the Kingdoms and Estates of Leon, Navarre Corduba, Granada, Gallicia, Biscay, Murcia, and Toledo, being under Castile; Portugal with Algarve, and the Isles of Azores, an entire Government of it self; Valentia, Catalonia, and Marjorca, under that of Aragon.

1. NAVARRE.

NAVARRE, the second Kingdom for antiquity in Spain, is bounded on the East with the Principality of Bearn, in the Kingdom of France; on the West, first with the River Ebro, or Iberus; and after, with a little River falling into it, near Calaborra, by which divided from Castile; on the North, with the Cantabrian Mountains, by which parted from Guipuscoa, and on the South, with the River Aragon, by which divided from that Kingdom. Of larger extent anciently, than it is at the present; the little Province of Alava, lying toward Guipuscoa, and the whole Country of Rioye, (on the West-side of the River Ebro) being taken from it, and reckoned members of Castile, by Alfonso the 4th. Howsoever, we shall look upon it in its ancient bounds, and shall accordingly take notice of the chief Cities and Towns therof.

It was called at first, the Kingdom of Sobrarbe, from a Town of that name, situate in the most inaccessible part of the Pyrenees; and therefore chose by Garcia Ximines, the first King hereof, for the seat of his Kingdom, as most defensible against the fury of the Moors. Afterwards it took the name of Navarre, either from Navois, signifying a plain and Champagn Country, (first used by Inigo Arista, the sixth King, who having taken Pampelune, abandoned the Hill-Countries, and betook himself unto the Plains) or from Navarriere, the chief of the three parts into which that City was divided, not only at the taking thereof, but a long time after.

The Country, though environed on all sides with mighty Mountains, yet of it self is said to be reasonably fruitful, well watered, and for the most part plain and level, as before is said. It taketh up also some parts of both sides of the Pyrenees: the Spanish side being fertile, and adorned with Trees; the French side generally very bare and naked. That on the Spanish side, and on the summits of the Mountains, now possessed by the Spaniard, is called High Navarre: that on the the French side, now called Base or Low Navarre, estimated at a sixth part of the whole Kingdom, is enjoyed by the French; incorporated by King Lewis the 13, to the Realm of France, An. 1620.

Places of most importance in Base Navarre, 1. S. Palai, formerly the place of Judicature for this part of the Kingdom; but in the year 1620, removed to Pau in the Principality of Bearn: both Bearn and Base Navarre, which hath before been governed as distinct Estates from the Realm of France, being then incorporate to that Crown. 2. Navareux, a Town of great importance, seven Leagues from Pau, well fortified, and as well munitioned: King Lewis the 13, finding in it at his coming thither, An. 1620, no fewer than 45 Cannons all mounted; besides 40 Culverins and smaller Pieces; with Powder, Bullet, and Victuals, answerable thereunto. 3. Piede Port, or St. John de Pied de Port, bordering on the edg of France, against which formerly a piece of especial strength. 4. Roncevalis, or Roncevaux, situate in the most pleasant Country of all Navarre, in the entrance of a small but delightful Valley: famous for the great Battel fought near unto it; in the Straights or entrances of the Mountains leading to this Valley; betwixt the French under Charlemagne, and a great Army of Moors and natural Spaniards, confederate together in defence of their common Liberty. In which Battel, by the treachery of Ganelon, 40000 of the French were slain; and amongst them, Rowland Earl of Mans, the Nephew of Charles, and others of the Peers of France; of whom so many Fables are reported in the old Romances; the first Author of which Fables, passeth under the name of Arch-bishop Turpin, said to be one of those twelve Peers, who taking on him to record the Acts of Charles the Great, hath interlaced his Story with a number of ridiculous vanities: by means whereof, the noble acts of that puissant Emperor, and his gallant Followers, are much obscured and blemished by those very Pens, which in the times succeeding did employ themselves to advance the same.

Of special note in High Navarre, 1. Victoria, first built, or rather re-edified by Sancho the 4. King of Navarre, An. 1181, by whom thus named in memory of some victory obtained thereabouts against thet Castilians; whereas before his time it was called Gasteiz: as in like case there had been many Towns built by Greeks and Romans, by the name of Nicopolis, or the City of Victory, which we shall meet withal hereafter. Situate in the place of the ancient Vellica, but graced with the priviledges and name of a City, by John the second of Castile, after it came under the Command of that Crown, An. 1432. A Town belonging properly to the little

Pro-

Province of Olava, and the chief thereof. Which Province being wholly in and amongſt the Cantabrian Mountains, was of old a member of Navarre: but being extorted from it, An. 1200, by Alphonſo the 4. of Caſtile, it was in the year 1332, incorporated into that Crown as a part thereof; as were ſome other Towns and Members of this Kingdom alſo, won by the Caſtilians. 2. Viane, on the Eaſt of the River Ebro, well fortified, after the taking of Logrogno on the other ſide of the water, (from which diſtant not above a League) as the Frontier Town againſt Caſtile. Of greateſt note for being the title of the eldeſt Son of Navarre, who was called Prince of Viane; advanced unto this honour by King Charles the third, An. 1421, in imitation of the like cuſtom in Caſtile, where the eldeſt Son was called Prince of the Aſturia's: but not leſs memorable for the death of Cæſar Borgia, ſlain near unto it in an ambuſh, after all his wanderings, and interchangeableneſs of fortunes. For being Son of Pope Alexander the ſixth, by birth a Spaniard, he was by his Father made a Cardinal; but relinquiſhing that Title, by Charles the eighth of France, created Duke of Valentinois, in the Province of Daulphine: during his Father's life, he had reduced under his obedience, diverſe of the Eſtates which anciently had belonged to the Church of Rome, but after his deceaſe, impriſoned by Pope Julio the ſecond, who was jealous (not without good cauſe) of his plots and practices. From Rome he ſtole unto Gonſalvo, then Vice-Roy of Naples for Ferdinando the Catholick; who notwithſtanding his ſafe conduct, ſent him priſoner to Spain: but breaking Priſon (deſperately ſliding down a Window) he came at laſt into this Kingdom, and was here ſlain in an Ambuſcado, as before was ſaid. So many times was Machiavel's great Polititian over-reached by Bookmen and Souldiers! 3. Sobrarbe, in the moſt inacceſſible parts of the Pyrenees, for that cauſe made the firſt Seat of the Kings of Navarre, entituled from thence the Kings of Sobrarbe. Made afterwards a diſtinct Kingdom from Navarre, by Sancho the great, who gave it to Gonſales his youngeſt Son: after whoſe death (not having iſſue) it was ſeized on by Don Raymir, the firſt King of Aragon, and made a member of that Crown. 4. Sangueſſa, a Town of a large Territory and Juriſdiction, priviledged with a Suffrage in the Convention of Eſtates, and a ſtrong Fortreſs on the borders towards Aragon: for which cauſe formerly aimed at by the Kings thereof, who have had it ſometimes in their hands. 5. Pampelun, in the Champagn Country, on the banks of the River Arga, the Metropolis of this Kingdom; and the Seat-Royal of its Kings, ſince the Conqueſt of it from the Moors by Inigo Ariſta, the 6. King of Navarre. Of old divided into three parts; that is to ſay, Bourg, Peuplement, and Navarriere; each having ſeveral Officers and Juriſdictions, (the cauſe of many quarrels and much blood amongſt them) till all united into one body, and reduced under the command of one chief Magiſtrate, by King Charles the third. An ancient Town firſt built by Pompey at the end of his Wars againſt Sertorius; in memory of whom called Pompeiopolis by our modern Latiniſts; but Pampelun, more near unto the preſent name, by Ptolomy and Antoninus: now an Epiſcopal See, the ſeat of the Vice-Roy, and one of the beſt fortified Towns of all Spain. 6. Moia, not far from the borders of France, were it joyneth on Guipuſcoa; a place of principal importance: the Caſtle whereof was one of the laſt pieces on this ſide of the Mountains, which held out for King John of Albert, againſt Ferdinand the Catholick, in his ſurpriſal of this Kingdom. 7. Montreal, 8. Olite, and 9. Tafalla; all yielded with the reſt of this Kingdom, to Frederick of Toledo, Duke of Alva: who had the happineſs to ſubdue this Realm to the Crown of Caſtile, as his Son Ferdinand had to conquer the Realm of Portugal. 10. Tudele, on the Eaſtern bank of the River Ebro, took from the Moors, by a ſurpriſe by Rotrou Earl of Perch, (a French-man) coming with many other noble perſons to the aid of Alfonſo, King of Navarre, and Aragon, at the ſiege of Saragoſſo, An. 1110. Given by that King unto him, for the reward of his ſervice; and afterwards united to the Crown of Navarre, by the marriage of Magdalen daughter of Earl Rotrou, with Garcia the ſeventh King of Navarre, Succeſſor in that Kingdom to the ſaid Alfonſo. Of late times honoured with a little Univerſity there founded by Ferdinand the Catholick, on his ſurpriſal of that Kingdom. 11. Calaborra, ſituate on the Weſtern banks of the Iberus, or Ibro, by Ptolemy called Calagorina; by Strabo, Calaguris; now a Biſhops-See: taken from Sancho the 8. of Navarre, by Alfonſo the fourth of Caſtile, and made a Member of that Kingdom. As alſo was 12. Logrogno, in the Country of Rioye, on the ſame banks of the River alſo. 13. Eſtellia, bordering on Caſtile, to which adjudged (though on the Eaſtern ſide of the River) by Lewis the 11. of France, made Umpire for the atonement of ſome differences betwixt Henry King of Caſtile, and John King of Navarre and Aragon; to ſatisfie that King for his charges in the former Quarrel.

The old Inhabitants thereof, were the Vaſcones, poſſeſſed not only of this tract, but of Biſcay and Guipuſcoa alſo, from them denominated: who paſſing over the Pyrenees, made themſelves Maſters of that Province which is now called Gaſcoigne by the French, and Vaſconia in Latin. Won from the Romans by the Goths, and from them by the Moors; it began to be a Kingdom under Garcia Ximines, a noble man of the Gothiſh blood; who with 600 men only began to make head againſt the Saracens, An. 716. firſt under the title of the Kingdom of Sobrarbe; and after that, of Navarre, for the reaſon, formerly delivered. The ſixth from Garcia Ximines, was Inigo, ſirnamed Ariſta, (ſo named from his vehemency and heat in War) the Son of Simon Earl of Bigorre in Gaſcoigne; elected to this Kingdom on the death of Ximines the fifth King, An. 840. or thereabouts, as the next Heir (but in the collateral Line) of Don Garcia Ximines; the firſt King of Sobrabe. To him the taking of Pampelune is aſcribed moſt generally, though Turquet in his Hiſtory refer the ſame to Garcia the ſecond King. But certainly the Town was in the hands of the Moors, till forced from them by the proweſs of Charlemagne; by them again recovered after the defeat of Roncevals, and held till the time of this King, who poſſeſſed himſelf of it. To this King alſo is aſcribed the firſt beginning of the ceremony of Crowning and Anointing, after the manner uſed by the Kings of France. But the old Roman Provincial cited in the Titles of Honour, acknowledgeth no ſuch honour to theſe petit Kings, communicated only, in that time, to the Emperors of the Eaſt and Weſt, the Kings of Hieruſalem, England, France, and Sicil. And therefore probable it is, that the cuſtom came into Navarre with the Houſe of Champagne. Other Kings of moſt note in the courſe of Story, were 3. Fortun, the ſecond Nephew of Inigo Ariſta, by his Son Garcia the third; who added unto his Eſtate, the Earldom of Aragon, deſcended to him by his Mother, the Daughter and Heir of Aſnarius, or Aznario, the laſt Earl thereof. 4. Sancho the fourth, ſirnamed the Great, who firſt aſſumed unto himſelf the title of King of Spain: his Predeceſſors uſing no other title than Kings of Sobrarbe and Navarre; his Co-temporaries calling themſelves Kings of Leon, Toledo, Sevil, Coduba, according to the names of their ſeveral Kingdoms; the Goths, Kings of the Goths in Spain; and ſo the Vandals, and the Suevi. Only the Earls of Barcellone, at their firſt erection by the French, entituled themſelves the Dukes and Marqueſſes of Spain, as if all were theirs, with brag and vanity enough. But this Prince had ſome good ground for it, as being by inheritance poſſeſſed of Navarre and Aragon; of Caſtile, in the right of his Wife Donna Nugna, or Elvira, Siſter and Heir of Sancho the laſt Earl thereof; and by conqueſt of a great part of the Realm of Leon: ſo that almoſt all Spain, not poſſeſſed by the Moors, was become his own. Had theſe Eſtates remained entire to his Succeſſors, the Moors, no doubt, had ſooner loſt their hold in Spain; and the whole Continent been brought under the obedience of one ſole Monarch. But this King either loving all his Sons alike, or elſe offended with the eldeſt, who moſt unnaturally had accuſed his own innocent Mother of the crime of Adultery, divided his Eſtates amongſt them; giving to Garcia his eldeſt Son, the Realm of Navarre, with that part of Leon which he held by Conqueſt; to Ferdinand his ſecond Son, Caſtile, and Aragon to his baſe Son Raymer; both which he erected into Kingdoms: and finally, to Gonſales his third Son, the Realm of Sobrarbe, then firſt diſmembred from Navarre. By means of which impolitick courſe, his Sons being all of equal Title and Eſtates, inſtead of oppoſing the common Foe, quarrelled with each other, and left the Quarrel as a Legacy to their ſeveral Succeſſors: which miſchief might have been avoided, if he had not dignified them all with the title of Kings, or left the reſt as Homagers unto one Supreme. 5. Sancho the fifth, Nephew of Sancho the Great, by his Son Garcia de Nagera; unnaturaly and traiterouſly ſlain by his Brother Raymer. After whoſe death, and the ſhort interpoſition of his Murtherer, this Kingdom was ſeized on by the Kings of Aragon; three of which, viz Sancho Ramires, Pedro, and Alfonſo, did ſeverally and ſucceſſively enjoy the ſame. 6. Alfonſo, the laſt of the three Kings of Aragon reigning in Navarre, ſirnamed the Warrier; who for a time was King of Caſtile alſo in right of Urraca his Wife; in which reſpect he took unto himſelf the title of Emperor of Spain, though not acknowledged ſo by others. But finally, dying without iſſue, and his Brother Raymir, or Raymond, called the Monk, ſucceeding in Aragon, the Kingdom of Navarre reverted to Garcia Raymir, Lord of Monſon, the direct Heir of Garcia de Nagera, by Raymir Lord of Calaborra, his younger Son. 7. Sancho the 8. the Nephew of this Garcias Raymir, by his Son Sancho the 7. ſirnamed the Wiſe, the laſt King of the Maſculine and direct Line of the Kings of Navarre; the Kingdom, after his deceaſe paſſing by the Females, or Heirs general, to the Earls of Champagne, and ſo unto the Kings of France, the Houſes of Eureux, Foix, Albert, and Vendoſme; but never holding above three deſcents in any one Family. By means whereof, theſe Kings being barred from gainning any thing on the Moors, by the interpoſition of the Kings of Caſtile and Aragon; and having no way to enlarge their Revenue or Dominions, by any undertakings or adventures at Sea, as the Portugals did: incorporated to their Crown as fair and large poſſeſſion in the Realm of France; as any of the others did in the Spaniſh Continent. The Principality of Bearn, the Earldoms of Foix and Begorre, united in the perſon of Gaſton of Foix, as thoſe of Armaignac and Albert, in the perſon of John Earl of Albert; all lying together on the other ſide of the Pyrenees; all added to this Crown by marriage with the Heirs hereof: made up a fairer and wealthier Eſtate than Navarre it ſelf; inferior to few Provinces in the Realms of Spain. Not to ſay any thing of the acceſſion of the County-Palantine of Champagne, exchanged afterwards for ſome Lands in the Country of La March in Limoſin; or of the Earldoms of Eureux, and the Dutchy of Vendoſme, as lying further off, and of leſs importance: Nor of the great Kingdom of France, now herewith incorporate, as to the Perſon of the King, though not in the poſſeſſion of this Kingdom alſo. With ſo much judgment and ſucceſs did the enſuing Kings (not otherwiſe able to enlarge their Territories) beſtow their Daughters, that the Diſtaff proved as happy to this little Kingdom, as the Sword to others. 8. Charles, the ſecond of that name, and the 30 King of Navarre; whom I mention not for any glorious Actions atchieved in his life, (for that was full enough of ignominy) but for the ſtrangeneſs and hideouſneſs of his death. He was a Prince much given to voluptuouſneſs, and ſenſual pleaſures, which ſo waſted his ſpirits, that in his old age he fell into a kind of Lethargy. To comfort his benummed joynts, he was bound and ſewed up naked in a ſheet, ſteeped in boyling Aqua-vitæ. The Chirurgion having made an end of ſewing the ſheet, and wanting a knife to cut off the thread, took a Wax-Candle that ſtood lighted by him; but the flame running down by the thread, caught hold on the ſheet; which (according to the nature of Aqua-vitæ) burned with that vehemency, that the miſerable King ended his days in the fire. 9. John of Aragon, the ſecond Son of Ferdinand the firſt, in the life of his Brother Alfonſo, was made King of Navarre, in right of Blanche his Wife, Daughter of Charles the third; and on the death of his Brother, King of Aragon alſo. And though his Queen dyed long before him, in whoſe right he reigned; yet he kept poſſeſſion of the Kingdom till his death, (reigning fifty four years in all) notwithſtanding the oppoſition made againſt him by Charles Prince of Viana, his only ſon by that marriage, and Heir apparent of that Crown; whom he vanquiſhed, impriſoned, and at laſt poyſoned. 10. John, Earl of Albert in Gaſcoigne, King of Navarre in right of Katharine his Wife: in whoſe reign the Kingdom of Navarre was ſeized on by Ferdinand the Catholick, Son of the ſaid John King of Aragon and Navarre, by a ſecond Wife. The manner of it we ſhall relate with more particulars, when we have ſummed the whole Succeſſion of

The Kings of Navarre.

A. Ch.
716	1	Garcia Ximines. 42.
758	2	Garcia II. Son of Garcia Ximines.

1315 28 Philip the Long, King of France. 5.
1320 29 Charles the Fair, King of France. 8.
1328 28 Joan II. Queen of Navarre, the Daughter of Lewis Hutin. Philip II. Earl of Eureux.
1349 31 Charles II. Son of Joan and Philip of Enreux. 37.
1386 32 Charles III. Earl of Eureux. 39.
1425 33 John, Prince of Aragon, after the death of his elder Brother, King of Aragon alſo; the Husband of Blanch, the Daughter of Charles the third. 54.
1479 34 Leonora, Daughter of John and Blanch, the Widow of Gaſton Earl of Foix; a Queen of 15 days only.
1479 35 Francis Phœbus, Grandchild of Leonora and Gaſton of Foix, by their Son Gaſton, Prince of Viane.
1483 36 Katharine, Siſter of Francis. John, Earl of Albret.
1517 37 Henry II. Earl of Albret, Son of John and Katharine.
1556 38 Joan III. Daughter of Henry of Albret. Antony of Burbon, Duke of Vendoſme in France.
1572 39 Henry III. the Son of Antony and Joan, after the death of Henry the third of France, ſucceeded alſo in that Realm, by the name of Henry the fourth.
1610 40 Lewis II. of Navarre, and XIII. of France.
41 Lewis III. of Navarre, and XIV. of France, now living; with whom remain the rights, but not the poſſeſſion of this Kingdom. For in the reign of Katharine and John of Albret, Ferdinand gathered an Army under the pretence of rooting out the Moors, and ſurpriſed this Kingdom, altogether unprovided, and deſtitute of means to make the ſmalleſt reſiſtance, Anno 1512. The pretended reaſon of this ſurpriſal, was an Excommunication laid on theſe Princes by the Pope, of which this King took upon him to be Executioner; but the true cauſe was an ancient deſire which this King had to poſſeſs this frontier Kingdom, it being a ſtrong Bulwark againſt France. It hapned then, that Lewis the 12th, having incurred the diſpleaſure of Pope Julio the ſecond, was (together with all his adherents) excommunicated, and his and their Eſtates given to ſuch as could or would ſubdue them. The King and Queen of Navarre were, at this time, both French Subjects: he, in reſpect of Albret, his Paternal Inheritance; and ſhe, of her Eſtates of Foix and Bearn: and therefore ſided with the French King. Ferdinand having (as we ſaid) levied an Army under colour of extirpating the Moors, turneth upon the French King, and demanded of theſe Princes not only a free paſſage through their Country, but alſo to have certain places of ſtrength put into his hand, for his better aſſurance. Theſe unjuſt demands the Navarrois denyed. Whereupon Ferdinand with all expedition invadeth the Kingdom, the greateſt part of which he took without a blow given; the French King being as backward in affording due aſſiſtance, as the other was unprovided of means for defence. The French netled with this loſs, divers times attempted the recovery of it, but in vain: for the Spaniard ſtill keepeth thoſe parts of it which lye on that ſide of the Pyrenees; leaving the reſt, which lyeth on the French ſide of thoſe Mountains (being about a ſixth part of the whole) to the Deſcendents of thoſe Princes whom he had diſſeized.

The chief Order of Knighthood was of the Lilly, begun by Garcia the ſixth; their Blazen, a Pot of Lillies, with the Portraiture of our Lady engraven upon it, their duty, to defend the Faith, and daily to repeat certain Ave-Maries.

The Arms of Navarre, are Gules, a Carbuncle nowed Or. Which Carbuncle having a reſemblance unto chains of Gold, is ſaid to have been firſt taken by Sancho the 8th, in memory that he and his Forces had firſt broken the Fortification made with Chains, about the Pavilion of Mahomet Enaſer, the Meramomolin of Morocco, at the great fight in Sierra Morena; before which time the Arms of this Kingdom had been Azure, a Croſs Argent.

3. BISCAY and GUIPUSCOA.

OF theſe two we ſhall ſpeak together, becauſe of the ſimilitude and reſemblances which are between them, both in the Country and the People: the names being alſo forged from the ſame Original; Bounded on the Weſt, with the Kingdom of Leon, on the Eaſt with the Pyrenees, and Guyenne in the Realm of France; on the North, with the Cantabrian Ocean; and on the South, with Navarre and old Caſtile. Thus named from the Vaſcones, inhabiting the neighbouring Kingdom of Navarre, in the time of the Romans: part of which people, in the year 640, or thereabouts, paſſed over unto the further ſide of the Pyrenees, where they took up thoſe parts of France, ſince from them called Gaſcoigne. The reſt continuing in their old Seat, or ſpreading more into the Weſt, towards the Cantabrians, gave to thoſe parts the name of Guipuſcoa, and Viſcaia, (for ſo the Spaniards write and ſpeak it) now by us called Biſcay; their language alſo (which is much different from the reſt of Spain) being called the Baſquiſh, more near in ſound to that of Vaſcons, the original name.

The whole Country is very Mountainous and Woody, yielding but little ſtore of Corn, and leſs of Wine; the defect of the firſt being ſupplied from other Countries; of the laſt, by Sider; for which end they plant Apples here in great abundance. But from thoſe Woods they draw continually great ſtore of Timber for the building of Ships: and from thoſe Hills there do not only iſſue pleaſant Rivers, (ſome ſay 150 in number) of which Iberus and Duero are ſaid to be two; but ſuch infinite ſtore of Iron and Steel, that no Country yieldeth better, or in greater plenty. Called and accounted for this cauſe, the Armory of Spain, and giving occaſion unto Pliny to report, that there was in this Country a whole Mountain of Iron: Maritima Cantabriæ parte, Mons præruptè altus (incredibile dictu) totus ex ea materia est. lib. 33. cap. 45. Nor do they only furnish all Spain with Iron, which they make into Instruments of War, and others for domestick uses: but with Timber also for their shipping, with which so stored, that whole Fleets may be built and armed from this Country only.

It is divided commonly into two parts; the Eastern bordering on the Pyrenees, and the Realm of France, which is called GUIPUSCOA; and the Western, bordering on the Kingdom of Leon, which properly is called BISCAY: the Town of Montrico standing in the Confines of both. Both of them heretofore of the same Original, though by several means united to the Crown of Castile: both speak the same Cantabrian language, now called the Basquish; the people of both, being more rude and simple, than the rest of Spain; but standing much upon their Gentry, according to the custom of most mountainous and unconquered Nations. The difference is, that those of Guipuscoa, by reason of their traffick and commerce with other Countries, savour a little more of Christianity than the others do: in which the common Biscains are so far to seek, that though they have some general notions of God and CHRIST, yet very few of them are able to render an account of their Faith, in any tolerable measure. And thus a view being taken of those general notions in which both Countries are concerned; let us next look upon them in their several and distinct capacities, with reference to their chief Towns and Stories.

And first for GUIPUSCOA. The places of chiefest note in it are, 1. S. Sebastians, (Don Bastia, as the Vulgar call it) a noted and well traded Port, at the mouth of the River Gurvineo; beautified with a fair and capacious Haven, defended at the entrances with two strong Castles founded upon the opposite Rocks, and honoured with an Episcopal See. 2. Tolosa, (commonly called Tolosette at the confluence of the Rivers Oria and Duarzo. 3. Placenza, on the River Denia, inhabited by none but Black-smiths, who do attend their Hammers with such endless diligence, that Vulcan's Forge may seem to be translated hither out of the Isle of Lemnos. 4. Guetaria, beautified with a safe and convenient Haven; defended from all Winds by a little Island lying before it: the birth-place of Sebastian del Cabo, that famous Pilot, the first that sailed about the World: Magellanus who went chief in that expedition, perishing in the Action. 5. Fonterabia, at the mouth of the River Vidosa, which divides this Country from Guyenne in France: for that cause very well fortified, and as strongly garrisoned. 6. Renteria, situate near a Brook abounding with most excellent Salmons. 7. Montrico, at the mouth of the River Denia; the farthest Town hereof on the edge of Biscay. Most of which stand upon or near the Sea; there being but few Towns of note within the Land, (though store enough of scattered Villages, as in Biscay also) because of the roughness of the Mountains.

As for the Fortunes and Affairs of this part of the Country, after the subversion of the Kingdom of the Goths in Spain, (for till that time they followed the same Fortunes with the rest of this Continent) it was at first a member of the Crown of Navarre; afterwards wrested from K. Sancho the sixth, by Alfonso the first of Castile, An. 1079; by whom committed to the Government of Lopes Diaz de Haro, Lord of Biscay. Restored again to the Kings of Navarre, upon some following Capitulations: It so continued till the year 1200; when having experience of the Government of both Kingdoms, and liking better that of Castile, they offered themselves to the subjection of Alfonso the 4th; who without so much as one blow struck, became Master of all the Country, and left it setled and confirmed unto his Successors, as it hath ever since remained.

2. For BISCAY next; the principal Towns thereof are, 1. Larrabechia, the chief Town of this Province in elder times; in the chief Church whereof, the Kings of Spain, as Lords of Biscay, use to be solemnly inaugurated, here making Oath to maintain the Liberties of the Country, and receiving the Homage and Allegiance of the people of it. 2. Berneo, an old Town also, and amply priviledged; the Franchises whereof, the Kings are solemnly sworn to keep, in the Church dedicated to the honour of S. Euphemia. 3. Guernica, the third Town for antiquity in this part of these Countries. Then of a later date, we have 4. Bilbo, or Bilbao, situate some two Leagues from the Sea, but on a fair and deep Creek thereof; on the other side surrounded with Mountains: built out of the ruines of the old Flaviobriga by Diego de Haro, Lord of Biscay, An. 1300; and situate the best of any Town in this Country, for plenty of Victuals, especially for flesh, and most excellent bread. Exceedingly enriched by making of Armour, and all sorts of Weapons, (their chiefest Manufacture) the Bilbo-blades in such request being brought from hence. Besides which trade of Arms and Iron, they deal also in Wool; by the vent of which Commodities they are grown so wealthy, that here are many private Merchants which build yearly three or four good Ships for their own trade only. 5. Laredo, a Sea Town also, with a capable Port. The landing-place of Charles the fifth, when he had relinquished the Empire, and all his other Estates, with resolution to spend the rest of his life in Spain, in a private manner: it being observable, that he was no sooner landed, but the Admiral-ship in which he came, and the greatest part of the Navy which came with him, perished in the Haven; to shew him (as it were) that there was no receding from this resolution. 6. Portogalette, commodiously seated on an Arm of the Sea, which floweth up to their very houses, and serveth them exceeding fitly for the lading and unlading of their Commodities.

The old Inhabitants of this Tract, before the coming in of the Vascones, were the Cantabri; these subdivided into the several Nations of the Marbogi, the Caristi, the Antrigones, the Varduli, and the Cantabri properly so called. From these descend the modern Biscains. An argument whereof may be their Language, different from the rest of Spain; and said by some to have continued in this Country ever since the confusion at Babel. And though they over-shoot themselves, that go as far as Babel for the Pedigree and Antiquity of it: yet that it was the ancient Language of Spain, is more than probable; because this people have ever continued without any mixture of Foreign Nations, as being never throughly subdued either by Romans, Carthiginians, Goths, or Moors; and so they remained, as in their Liberties not mastered, so in their Language not altered. In like manner the Arabick continueth uncorrupt, in the hilly parts of Granada, the Tongue of the old Britans, in our Wales; and the ancient Epirotick, in the high, woody, and more mountainous parts of that Country. And though those of Guipuscoa speak the same Language also, yet is it with a greater mixture of other words, (by reason of their neighbourhood with France, and commerce with Strangers) than it is in Biscay; where the old natural Language, whatsoever it was, is in far more purity.

Nor do the Biscains differ from the rest of Spain in Language only, but in Customs also; four of which I will here set down as a light to the rest. First, they account themselves free from Taxes and Contributions to the Kings of Spain; yielding them obedience with their Bodies, but not with their Purses. And when any of the Spanish Kings, in their Progresses, come to the Frontiers of this Country, he bareth one of his Legs, and in that manner entreth into it. There he is met by the Lords and Gentlemen there dwelling, who proffer him some few small Brass pieces (Marevides they call them, whereof 600 go to a Crown) in a Leathern Bag, hanged at the end of a Lance: but withall they tell him, that he must not take them. Which Ceremony performed, they all attend the King in his journey. Secondly, They admit no Bishops to come amongst them; and when Ferdinand the Catholick came in Progress hither, accompanied, amongst others, by the Bishop of Pampelune, the people arose in Arms, drave back the Bishop; and gathering all the dust on which they thought he had trodden, cast it into the Sea. Which averseness unto Bishops, as they first took up, in all probability, on some hard usage which they found at the hands of their Prelates; and still retain it out of a stubbornness of nature, most peculiar to them: so possible enough it is, that the want of Bishops, and of Episcopal Visitations amongst the Biscains, is not the least cause of that ignorance and rudeness (spoken of before) which is found amongst them. Thirdly, they allow not any Priests to live in their Villages, except he bring his Concubine with him: conceiving it impossible for them to keep their Wives unto themselves, if the Curate hath not a Woman of his own. Fourthly, The Women, at all meetings, do first taste of the Cup, and so dispose of it to the men; which custom they have had amongst them ever since Ogno, the Countess of Castile, attempted to have poysoned her Son Sancho, in a Cup of Wine.

But to return again to the old Inhabitants; they were a people of that courage, that they defended the liberty of their Country against the Romans, when the residue of Spain was subdued; and were at last, not without great effusion of blood, and manifest tokens of manly resolution, and heroick spirits on their parts, vanquished by the Darling of Fortune, Augustus. Such hilly and mountainous people, are always the last that are conquered, and the first that stand on their own guard: as besides these Biscans, the Navarrois and Asturians, here in Spain, in respect of the Moors; and our Britains, in relation to the Saxons. Whether it be, that living in a sharp air, and being inured to labour, they prove on occasion good and able men; or that the Forts of Nature's own building are not so easily won, as defended; or that the unpleasantness of the Country, and unfruitfulness of the Soil, yield no occasion to strangers to desire an Adventure for it; I take not on me to determine. But being overcome at last, they were first cast into the Province of Tarraconensis; and so continued after the new modelling of Spain, by the Emperour Constantine. Under the Romans they continued, till that Empire fell; and then not conquered by the Goths, but resigned over to them by the Romans, with the rest of that Province. Nor lost they any thing of their ancient and natural courage, by the intermixture of the Vascons; continuing still good Souldiers both for Sea and Land; a stubborn, fierce, and couragious people; impatient of servitude, and not easie to be forced to any thing which they like not of. The last of all the Spaniards that submitted to the fury of the Moors, (excepting those of the Asturia's, never conquered by them) and one of the first Provinces which shook off that yoak: animated and conducted in that undertaking, by Soria, descended of the Blood-Royal of Scotland, Anno 870. made upon that good service, the first Lord of Biscay. After this, they continued a free and distinct Estate, under their own Proprietary Lords and Princes of the Noble Family of Haro; till that Nero of Spain, Don Pedro the Cruel, violently took it from Donna Jeanne, the right Heir of it, Anno 1358. From which Donna Jeanne, the eldest Daughter, married to Ferdinand the younger Son of Ferdinand de la Cerde, the right heir of Castile, issued the Lady Jeanne Manuel, the Wife of Henry the second, and Mother of John the first, both Kings of Castile: by which last, this Country was united to that Crown for ever, Anno 1379. The names of the Proprietary Lords of this Estate, we have in this following Catalogue of

The Lords of Biscay.

A.Chr.
870	1	Soria, the Son of Lopes of Biscay, but Nephew by the Mother's side to a King of Scotland; the first Lord of Biscay.
	2	Manso Lopes, the Son of Soria.
	3	Inigo the Deaf, Son of Manso Lopes.
	4	Lopes Diaz, the Son of Inigo.
	5	Sancho Lopes, the Son of Lopes Diaz.
	6	Inigo II. the base Son of Lopes Diaz; the two Sons of Sancho Lopes, by reason of their tender years, being set aside.
	7	Lopes Diaz II. Son of Inigo the second.
	8	Diego Lopes, firnamed the White, Son of Lopes Diaz the second.
	9	Lopes Diaz III. Son of Diego Lopes; the first who took unto himself the firname of Haro, from a Town of that name, of his foundation.
	10	Diego Lopes Diaz de Haro, Son of Lopes Diaz the third.
	11	Lopes Diaz IV. Son of Diego Lopes Diaz de Haro.
1257	12	Diego Lopes Diaz II. assisted Sancho the second son of K. Alfonso the fifth of Castile, in excluding the Children of Don Ferdinand de la Cerde, his elder Brother; by which Sancho he was after slain. A reward not unsuitable to his bold attempt.
1289	13	Diego Lopes de Haro, the son of Diego.
1290	14	Diego Lopes III. the Brother of Diego Lopes Diaz the second, the Founder of the Town of Bilbo.
1309	15	John of Castile, Brother to King Sancho, and Husband of Mary Diaz de Haro, Daughter of Diego Lopes the second.
1319	16	John the Blind; so called, because he had lost an Eye; Son of John of Castile, and Mary Diaz of Haro; slain by King Alfonso.
1329	17	John Nugnes of Lara, in right of his Wife, Daughter and Heir of John the Blind, (whose name I find not) succeeded after the decease of Donna Maria Diaz.
1350	18	Nugno de Lara, an Infant of two years old, succeeded John Nugnes of Lara, his Father.
1351	15	Jean and Isabel, the Sisters and Heirs of Nugno de Lara, seized upon by Don Pedro; and the whole Signeury of Biscay subjected by strong hand to the Crown of Castile, with many other fair Estates which depended on it.

The Arms of these Lords of Biscay, were Argent, two Wolves Sable, each of them in his mouth a Lamb of the second.

4. LEON and OVIEDO.

THE Kingdom of LEON and OVIEDO, hath on the East, the Country of Biſcay: on the North, the main Cantabrian Ocean: on the South, Caſtile: on the Weſt, Gallicia. So called from Leon and Oviedo, the chief Cities of it, and firſt Seat of their Kings; the ancienteſt Kingdom in all Spain. By a more ancient name it was called Aſturia, from the Aſtures; who poſſeſſed it in the time of the Romans: divided into the two general names of Auguſtani, and Tranſmontani; but comprehending the particular Tribes or Nations of the Peſici, Gigari, Zoelæ, and Lancienſes.

The Country mountainous and woody, but formerly of ſome eſteem for thoſe ſmall, though ſwift Horſes, which the Romans (from hence) called Aſturcones; we may read it, Hobbies; which afterwards became a common name for all Nags or Geldings: Aſturco Macedonicus, being uſed for a Macedonian Nag, by Petronius Arbiter.

It is divided commonly into two parts; that is to ſay, 1. Aſturia de Oviedo, bordering on Galicia, towards the Weſt: and 2. Aſturia Santillana, confining on Biſcay, towards the Eaſt. From which diviſion of the Country, the eldeſt Son of Caſtile is called Prince of the Aſturia's in the plural number; which title ſome ſuppoſe to be given unto them, becauſe it was the firſt Country which held up againſt the Moors. But indeed, the true Original hereof, is referred by the beſt Spaniſh Writers, to the time of the marriage of Catharine Daughter of John of Gaunt, and in right of her Mother Conſtance, the right Heir of Caſtile, unto Henry Son of John the firſt, then in poſſeſſion of that Kingdom. For to this new-married Couple it was granted, ſaith Mariana, that after the manner of England, where the Heir apparent is called Prince of Wales, they ſhould be called Princes of the Aſturia's. In times ſucceeding, the Towns of Jaen, Ubeda, Biatia, or Bacca, and Andujar, all ſituate near together in Andaluſia, and each of them inveſted with a goodly Territory, were added to the Patrimony and Eſtate hereof; and ſo continue to this day.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Sublanco, now a ſmall Village, but once a Town of ſo great ſtrength, that it was deſtroyed by the command of the Emperour Nerva, leſt it might animate theſe Mountainers unto a revolt, 2. LEON, ſituate at the foot of the Mountain, not far from the place of the old Sublanco, (as it was then called.) The Town but mean, were it not beautified by a fair and large Cathedral; the Biſhop whereof acknowledgeth no Metropolitan but the Pope alone. Recovered from the Moors, An. 722. Afterwards made the Regal Seat of the Kings of Leon: by ſome called Legio, becauſe the ſeventh Legion was here lodged: by Ptolomy called Legio Germanica; and by others, Gemina. 3. S. Andera, ſo named from a Church there built to the honour of S. Andrew; by Ptolomy called Flavionavie; now a well traded Port on the Cantabrian Ocean. 4. Santillana, which gives name to the Eaſtern part of Aſturia. 5. Llanes, where the two Aſturia's meet together. 6. Cividad Real, in the Weſtern part of Aſturia, called Aſturia de Oviedo. 7. Villa Vicioſa, the only noted Port in this part of the Country. 8. Aviles, on the borders of Gallicia, near the Sea, and not far from the Promontory called of old Promontorium Sythicum, but now Cabo de Pinus. 9. OVIEDO, called for a time, the City of Biſhops, becauſe many of the Biſhops of Spain, diſpoſſeſſed of their Churches by the Moors, had retired thither; and there preſerved the line of Epiſcopal Succeſſion, till their Sees were filled again with Biſhops in more happy times. Anciently it was called Lucus Aſturum, and was of old a Biſhops See; re-edified by King Froila the firſt, in the year 757. Famous enough in giving the Title of a Kingdom to the firſt Chriſtian Princes, after the Conqueſt by the Moors; called from hence, Kings of Oviedo. Afterwards, An. 896, in the time of K. Ordogno the firſt, they began to be ſtiled Kings of Oviedo and Leon; and at laſt, Kings of Leon only; Oviedo being quite left out of the Regal ſtile, by Raymir the ſecond, Anno 940. More towards the Inlands of this Kingdom, (now reckoned part of old Caſtile) are 10. Palenza, the Palantia of Ptolomy and Antoninus, ſeated on the River Carrion, once a ſmall Univerſity, till the tranſlation of it unto Salamanca, by King Ferdinand the third. This Town firſt felt the fury of the Suevians, when they maſtered theſe parts of Spain. 11. Aſtorga, anciently called Auguſta Aſturica, whence the Aſtures of this Tract were called Auguſtani; a Biſhops See, frontiering on Gallicia: happy in this, that it felt not the fury of the luſtful King Vitiza; who to ſecure himſelf in his unlawful pleaſures, and to weaken his Subjects if they ſhould attempt any thing againſt him, diſmantled all the Towns in his Dominions, except Leon, Toledo, and this Aſtorga. 12. Benevent, on the South-eaſt of Aſtorga, which gave the title of Duke to Frederick the baſe Son of King Henry the 2d, of Caſtile, the ſtem of the potent Family of Spain, for the times they lived in. 13. Toro, the moſt Southern Town of all this Kingdom: and for that cauſe well fortified againſt the encroachments of the Caſtilians, till the uniting of the Kingdoms: made afterwards, (as lying neareſt to Caſtile, and the Court of the King) the ordinary place of conference with the States of Leon.

Who were the old Inhabitants of this Country, hath been ſhewn already. When conquered by Auguſtus Cæſar, they were made part of the Province of Tarraconenſis; part, afterwards, of the Province of Gallicia, by the Emperor Conſtantine. Won from the Romans, by the Goths; and from them, by the Moors; though long they did not lye under their command. For as the luſt of Roderick, the laſt King of the Goths in Spain, occaſioned the coming in of the Moors; ſo the luſt of Magnutza, a Mooriſh Vice-Roy, occaſioned (though in long courſe of time) their expulſion thence. For Magnutza having employed Pelagius, a young Prince of the Aſturia's, on an Embaſſie to Muſa the Lieutenant-General of the Moors, then reſiding at Corduba, in his abſence raviſhed his Siſter, and at his return died by the edge of his Sword. Deſpairing of pardon for this act, he was fain to ſtand upon his guard, and fortifie himſelf in the Mountainous places of this Country, to which many of the old Inhabitants reſorted, put themſelves under his command, and elected him to be their King: firſt by the name of King of the Aſturia's; and after by the title of King of Leon, when he had got that City into his hands; as being the City of moſt note, and the ſtrongeſt Hold that he was poſſeſſed of. The Kingdom at the firſt beginning, contained only the more mountainous parts of the two Aſturia's; enlarged a little further South, on the taking of Leon by this firſt Pelagius. Afterwards, by the valour of Ordogno the ſecond, it extended over both Aſturia's, Gallicia, and the Old Caſtile: divided from the Moors by the Mountains of Avila, and Segovia; but more defended by the valour of the people, and Gallantry of their Princes, than it was by thoſe Mountains. Kings of moſt note, beſides the two before remembred, were 1. Mauregate, the baſe Son of Alfonſo the firſt; who having by the help of Abderamen, King of the Moors, obtained the Kingdom, came to a baſe agreement with them; in which he bound himſelf to pay them, as a yearly Tribute, 50 Virgins of Noble Families, and as many of inferiour birth: for which he dyed hated and deteſted of all men. 2. Raymir the firſt, who ſo diſcomfited the Moors at the Battel of Clavigio, near Calaborra in Navarre, An. 836, that from that time the Power and reputation of the Kings of Corduba began to languiſh. 3. Alfonſo the third, who refuſed to pay unto the Moors the ſaid tribute of Virgins; and for his many Victories againſt the Moors, was ſirnamed, The Great: who being outed of the Kingdom by his Son Garcia, not only patiently digeſted ſo great a wrong, but willingly became his Son's Lieutenant againſt the Moors. 4. Veramund the ſecond, choſen King in the minority of Raymir the third; in whoſe time the Moors took Leon, and ſpoiled the Church of S. James in Gallicia; but were after beaten to their homes with the loſs of many of their own places. 5. Veramund the third, who making War againſt Ferdinand the firſt, King of Caſtile, was by him ſlain in Battel; the Conqueror ſeizing on his Kingdom in right of Sancha his Wife, the Siſter of Veramund; the three Kings next ſucceeding, being Kings of both. 6. Ferdinand the third, Son of Alfonſo the 9th, and of Berengaria, the younger Siſter of Henry King of Caſtile; by the Power and Policy of his Mother, ſeized on the Caſtiles, of right belonging to Blanch the elder Siſter, Wife of Lewis, Son to Philip the ſecond, King of France: and after the death of his Father, ſucceeded in Leon. Of whom we ſhall hear more when we come to Caſtile. After this time, theſe Kingdoms never were divided, but incorporate into one Eſtate, called for a long time the Kingdom of Caſtile and Leon: though afterwards Leon was left out of the Regal ſtyle, and only that of Caſtile mentioned; except in Legal Inſtruments, Letters Patents, and Inſtruments of Negotiation with Foreign Princes. The whole ſucceſſion of theſe Kings, the Hiſtories of Spain thus preſent unto us.

The Kings of Oviedo and Leon.

Which Lewis the ninth, on the marriage of Blanch his eldeſt Daughter, with Ferdinand eldeſt Son of Alfonſo the fifth, ſurrendred all rights in the Crown of Caſtile, and ſo confirmed the ſame more abſolutely to the houſe of Leon, Anno 1267; though neither this Ferdinand, nor Blanch, nor any of their Heirs, did attain that Kingdom; diſſeized thereof by Sancho a younger Son. The Kingdoms never ſince that time disjoined, as they had been twice before ſince the firſt uniting.

The Arms of this Kingdom are Argent, a Lyon Paſſant, crowned Or. Which Arms when it was joined to the Kingdom of Caſtile, were quartered with the Coat thereof: that being the firſt time (as Cambden notes) that ever Arms were born Quartered. Followed herein by Edward the third of England, who not only took unto himſelf the title of King of France, but (to ſhew his right unto that Crown) quartered the Flower de Lyces with his Engliſh Lions.

5. GALLICIA.

GALLICIA, or GALÆCIA, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Aſturia's, from which parted by the River Mearo; on the South with Portugal, from which divided by the River Minio; on the North with the Cantabrian; and on the Weſt with the Atlantick Oceans. The ancient Inhabitants of it, were the Gallaici, (whence it had the name) diſtinguiſhed into the ſeveral Tribes of the Bedyi, Sueri, Cilini, Capori, and Lemavi, ſpoken of by Ptolomy.

The Country, like that of the Aſturia's, mountainous, and almoſt inacceſſible, overſpread with the Cantabrian Hills; and ſo the fitter to hold out againſt Foreign Invaſions, in defence of Liberty and Religion: in that regard choſen for a retiring-place by the diſtreſſed and vanquiſhed Chriſtians, in their firſt Wars againſt the Moors: Not well inhabited to this day; not ſo much for the hilliness of the Country, as for want of Water; which defect makes the people generally draw more towards the Sea, where they improve their Fortunes by trade and fishing. The barrenness of the Country recompensed heretofore by the rich Mines of Gold and Silver, which in this Country, and the Astures, and some part of Lusitania, afforded yearly 20000 pound weight of Gold unto the Romans, amounting in our money to two millions of Crowns: but now no such Mines found in it of any value. Instead of which, it yieldeth the best Mines for Iron, of any Province of Spain: for which their Waters are so proper, that they are said to fortifie and improve the metal.

for

Places of principal importance are, 1. Compostella, an University and Arch-bishops See, vulgarly called St. Jage, in honour of St. James, the Son of Zebedee, whom they pretend to be buried here, and of whom there is denominated an Order of Knights: his Relicks said to be kept in the chief Church of it, worshipped by the Romanists with great devotion: and drawing to this place a wondertul concourse of people, coming thither on pilgrimage. 2. Baiona, not far from the mouth of the River Minio. 3. Corunna, by Ptolomy called Flavium Brigantium; by us English, the Groyn: often mentioned in the story of our Wars with the Spaniard, in Queen Elizabeth's time; then taken by the English: but since, very well fortified to avoid the like surprisal. Divided then, as now, into the High Town, and the Low; situate on the Cantabrian Sea, betwixt the Promontory Trilencum, now Cabo Ortegal, lying towards the East; and that of old called Nerium, now Cabo Finis terræ; as being the most Western end of the then known World. 4. Orenus, upon the Minius, a Bishops-See, by Ptolomy called Aquæ Calidæ, from the Bathes here being, now much commended for the best Wines. 5. Tui, on the River, frontiering upon Portugal: a Bishops See, in ancient Writers called Tude. 6. Ponte-vedre, 7. Ribadeo: both upon the Sea, both fitted with convenient Harbours.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof, as before is said, were the Gallaici, one of the last Nations which submitted to the Power of the Romans: by whom first made a part of Tarraconensis; after, a Province of it self, by the name of Gallicia; the Asturia's, and some part of the old Castile and Portugal, being added to it. In the declining of that Empire, the Suevi, a potent Nation of Germany, accompanying the Vandals and Alani in their transmigrations, invaded Spain, and first possessed themselves of this Country. But not content with their Estate, they warred on the Silinges, (a Vandal-Tribe) then possessing Bætica, whom they vanquished, and took that Province from them, under the conduct of Rechila their second King. They added, shortly after, Lusitania, to their former Conquest: stopped in their career, by Theodorick the second, King of the Goths: by whom vanquished, and confined again within Gallicia, which they enjoyed till the final ruine of their Kingdom by Leutigild the Goth, Anno 858: reduced then to a Province of the Gothish Kingdom. Their habitation before their coming into Spain, was in the Eastern part of Germany, beyond the Elb. Their Religion at the first, under Recciarius their third King, was very Orthodox, and sound. But vanquished by the Goths, and obliged unto them for the restoring of their Kingdom, they fell off to Arianism: persisting in that Heresie for the space of an hundred years, and then again returning to the Catholick Faith, under Theodmire their King; therein continuing constant till their final overthrow. The Kings hereof (as many as are upon Record) are these that follow.

The Kings of the Suevi in Gallicia.

1 Hermenericus; who first brought the Suevians into Spain, and possessed Gallicia, Arcadius and Honorius, then Emperors of the East and West.
2 Reobila, who conquered the Siliges, and subdued Bætica.
3 Recciarius, the first Christian King who won Lusitania; afterwards vanquished and slain by Theodorick, King of the Goths; the Suevians for a time becoming subject to that King.
4 Masdras, restored unto the Kingdom by Theodorick.
5 Frumarius, the Son of Masdras.
6 Remismundus, Brother of Frumarius, recovered some part of Lusitania, and fell off to Arianism.
7 Theodomirus, the Restorer of the Catholick Faith amongst the Suevians.
8 Ariamirus, Son to Theodmire.
9 Eboricus, the Son of Ariamirus, deposed and shorn Monk by Andeca.
10 Andeca, the last King of the Suevi in Gallicia, or rather the Usurper of the Regal Title, served in the same kind by Leutigildis, King of the Goths, as he had served Eboricus his Lord and Master. After which time, Gallicia was made a Province of the Gothish Monarchy, and the name of Suevians no more heard of in Spain. In times ensuing, it became a part of the Kingdom of Leon, by the Kings whereof it was won piece-meal from the Moors, as their fortunes favoured them. Erected to a Kingdom by Alfonso the third, sirnamed the Great, Anno 886; and given unto Ordogno his second Son: by whose succession to the Crown on the death of his elder Brother Garcia, it was again united to the Kingdom of Leon; but so as to continue a Realm distinct. In the year 955, the Gallicians not brooking the ill qualities of Raymir the third, elected Veramund for their King, the Son of Ordogno the third, and right Heir of the Kingdom: who, coming to the Crown of Leon on the death of Raymir, did once again unite it unto that Estate. Dismembred from it once more by Ferdinand the first King of Castile and Leon, who gave it unto Garcia his youngest Son, Anno 1067; but conquered shortly after by Sancho the eldest Son of Ferdinand; by whom Garcia was discomfited and imprisoned, Anno 1081. Never since separated from the Crown of Castile and Leon: but when Leon was severed from Castile; going along with Leon in those separations, till the union of those Kingdoms in the person of Ferdinand the second, Anno 1230; the Castilians being then grown better Statesmen, than to canton Kingdoms.

The Arms hereof were Azure, semee of Crossets Pitchee, a Chalice crowned Or.

6. The Kingdom of CORDUBA.

HAving thus surveyed those Provinces under the Government of Castile, which lye at the foot of the Pyrenees, and on the shores of the Northern or Cantabrian Ocean; we will next look on those which lye more towards the Straights of Gibralter, and the Mediterranean, and so come round at last to Castile it self. And first, we will begin with the Kingdom of CORDUBA

DUBA, which at first erection of it, contained all those parts of Spain conquered by the Moors, and not again recovered by the King of Leon and Navarre: contracted within narrower bounds, when subdued by the King of Castile; at that time comprehending only the Provinces of Andalusia, Extramadura, Granada, and the Isle of Gades. We will consider it, notwithstanding, in both capacities: in the first and largest notion, as unto the story and affairs thereof, till distracted by the Moors, into many Kingdoms: in the last and strictest, as to the Chorographie, and description of it.

The Kingdom of CORDUBA, as it stood when subdued by the Spaniards, was bounded on the East with Murcia, and the Mediterranean; on the West with Portugal, and the Ocean; on the North with the Mountains of Sierra Morena, and Castile; and on the South with the Ocean, the Straights of Gibraltar, and the Midland Seas: so called from Corduba, the chief City of it, and the Seat-Royal of their Kings.

It contained, as before was said, the Provinces of 1. Andalusia, 2. Gades, 3. Extramadura, and 4. Granada. But because Granada had the fortune to continue a Kingdom, when the rest were conquered, we will consider it by it self; and here proceed to the description of the other three.

1. ANDALUSIA is bounded on the East with Granada; on the West with the Atlantick Ocean, and Algarve in Portugal; on the North, with Sierra Morena, and Extremadura: on the South, with the Ocean, the Straights, and the Mediterranean. By Pliny it is called Conventus Cordubensis, from Corduba, at that time the chief City of it: and after, Andalusia, quasi Vandalusia from the Vandals; who having won it from the Romans, had for some time (and till their expulsion into Africa) possessed themselves of it.

This is the most rich and fertile Country of all Spain; extreamly fruitful of Wine, Oyl, Oranges, (which last being shipped at Sevil, and so brought for England, are by us called by the name of Sevil Oranges) and better furnished with Corn than most part of this Continent; watred with the Rivers, 1. Anas, 2. Odier, 3. Betis, and 4. Tenot: which makes it flourish with a continual greenness of Olives, Vines, and other Fruits; of which the Hills, though watered only with the dew of Heaven, do partake also in reasonable measure. The Air hereof, by reason of its Southernly situation, is exceeding hot, insomuch that their Corn there is ripe in April: but those excessive heats, much moderated by those constant refreshings which the cool winds, breathing from the North, do bestow upon it. In which respect King Ferdinand the Catholick did use to say, that it was best living in the Summer at Sevil, (one of the chief Cities of this Province) by reason of these cool refreshings; and in the winter-time at Burgos in old Castile, which though situate more Northernly, in a very sharp Air, had yet many notable defences against the cold.

The principal Cities and Towns hereof, are 1. Corduba, seated at the foot of Sierra Morena, on the left shore of Guadalquiver, overlooking towards the South, a spacious and fruitful Plain. First founded by Marcellus a Roman Consul, An. V. C. 601, employed at that time in the Wars of Spain: the first Colony planted in this Province by the Romans, and the chief City of Betica. For a long time the Seat of the Mooriſh Vice-Roys, Lieutenants to the great Caliph of the Saracens; after, of its own Kings of that Nation, who built here for their Palace, a magnificent Castle. Reduced by Ferdinand of Castile, it was restored unto the honour of an Episcopal See; which anciently it had, and doth now enjoy. A City of great circuit, but of very few Houses, by reason of the multitude of Gardens in it. Famous in former times for the birth of Lucan, and both the Seneca's.

Duoſque Senecas, unicumque Lucanum, Fœcunda loquitur Corduba: ſaith Martial.

Corduba glorying in her fruitful field.
One Lucan, and two Seneca's did yield.

Nor was it less fruitful of good wits in the times succeeding. For not to say any thing of Hosius that renowned Confessor, who was Bishop here in the times of Constantine, and before: it was a flourishing University in the time of the Moors: Avicen, Averroes, Rhasis, Almansor, Messahalah, those famous Philosophers and Physicians, being Students or Professors in it. It is now vulgarly called Cordova; and hence cometh our true Cordovan Leather, made of the Skin of a Sardinian Beast. Near unto this City, is a Wood of 30 miles in length, having nothing but Olive-trees. 2. Jaen, a Bishops See; remarkable for nothing more, than that the Kings of Spain, ever since the first recovery of it, have stiled themselves Kings of Jaen, and use it to this day amongst the rest of their Titles: it having been, before that time, the seat and title of some petit Kings amongst the Moors. Not far hence stood the famous Town of Iliturgis, (by Ptolomy, Ilurgis) mentioned so often in the Wars betwixt Rome and Carthage. 3. Ossuna, of most note for the Dukes hereof, and a small University founded here, Anno 1549. 4. Eccia, on the River Chenil; of more esteem formerly, than at the present: by Ptolomy and Antoninus called Astigi, by Pliny, Augusta Firma; a Roman Colony, and one of the four Juridical Resorts of Betica. 5. Marchena, situate on an Hill, where is said to be the best breed of Gennets, (a swift race of Horses) not of this Province alone, but of all Spain: the River Betis (as it was thought) conveying some secret virtue into them. Of this Race was the Horse which Cæsar so loved, that he erected his Statue (when dead) in the Temple of Venus: and the ancient Lusitani thought they were begotten by the Wind. 6. Xerxes, situate more within the Mid-lands, towards the borders of Granada, and therefore called Xeres de la Frontera, (the Asta of Ptolomy and Antoninus) famous for plenty of that Wine which we call Xeres-Sack: but more for that great and fatal Battel fought near unto it, betwixt K. Roderick and the Moors; the loss of which, drew along with it the loss of Spain. 7. Medina Sedonia, (so called to distinguish it from a Town of Castile, called Medina Cœli) the Duke whereof was General of all the Forces both by Sea and Land, intended for the Conquest of England, Anno 1588. The Town called anciently Asinda, and Asido Cæsariana; the Duke whereof is of the Family of the Guzmans, and the greatest Prince, for Revenue, in all Spain; his Intrado being estimated at 130000 Crowns per annum. 8. Algezire, on the Sea-side; a Town of such strength and consequence, that it held out a Siege 19 months, for the Moors of Africk, against Alfonso the fifth of Castile; to whom surrendred at the last upon Composition, Anno 1343. Since which, the Kings of Castile have stiled themselves Kings of Algezire; not yet discomfited. 9. Conil, a Town on the Sea-coast, beyond the Isle of Gades, part of the Patrimony of the D. of Medina Sidonia. 10. Gibralter, a strong Town, seated at the mouth of the Straights from hence denominated, lying at the foot of the Mountain of Gaipe, supposed to be one of Hercules Pillars; the furthest point Southwards of all Europe. 11. S. Lucar de Barameda, (the Luciferi forum of the Ancients) the Port-

Port-Town to Sevill, ſituate at the mouth of the River Bætis, or Guadalquiver: where the Ships of that rich City ride, either for a fair wind to put to Sea, or for a tide to carry them up the River, as they come from America. 12. Tariffa, ſeated at the end of the Promontory which looks towards Africk; and ſo called, becauſe Tariff, Leader of the Moors into Spain, here landed: recovered from the Moors by Sancho the third of Caſtile, Anno 1292, or thereabouts; the firſt Governour thereof being Alfonſo Peres de Guzman, the firſt Founder of the now potent Family of Medina Sidonia. Suppoſed by ſome to be the Carteia of the Ancients. And if ſo, then a Colony of the Libertines (begotten on ſome unmarried Spaniſh Women, by the Roman Souldiers) placed here, and indulged the Priviledges of the Latins, by Decree of the Senate, An. V. C. 600. Not far from theſe laſt Towns, in a little Iſland made by two branches of the Bætis, where it falleth into the Sea, ſtood the famous 13. Tarteſſus, celebrated in moſt ancient Writers, for the abundance of Silver which the Mines of it did produce. Which was ſo great, that (as we read in Ariſtotle's Book de Mirabilibus) when the Tyrians or Phœnicians firſt came thither, ὥστε μηκέτι ἔχειν δύνασθαι, μήτε ἐπιδέξασθαι τὸν ἄργυρον, that their Ships were neither able to contain or tranſport it thence: inſomuch that they were fain to make their Anchors, and other Utenſils, of Silver. The like commodity the Græcians found in their Voyages hither, of which Herodotus maketh mention, Lib. IV. Hereupon ſome have been perſwaded, that the Ships which Solomon built to go for Tarſhiſh, (whereof we read 1 Kings 10. 22.) were bound no further than this place. As for the ſituation of it, that it was neither Tariff, as ſome, or Carteia, as others do conjecture, (though where Carteia was, be alike uncertain, if it were not the ſame with Tariff) but in a ſmall Iſland, at the mouth of the River Bætis, as before is ſaid, doth appear by Strabo; who telleth us, that Bætis falls into the Sea with two mouths or chanels, πόλιν ἐν τῷ μεταξὺ χώρῳ κατοικῆσθαι, ἣν καλεῖσθαι Τάρτησσον, &c. and that in the midſt thereof there is a City called Tarteſſus, of the ſame name with the River, (for Bætis anciently was ſo named) from whence the whole Country thereabouts is called Tarteſſus. The like Pauſanias ſaith expreſly in his Eliaca. Which ſituation of this Town in an Iſland, at the mouth of Bætis, occaſioned Pliny, and ſome others of the ancient Writers, to give the name of Tarteſſus to the Iſle of Gades; whereof more anon.

In the mean time go we on to 14. Sevil, (in Latin, Hiſpalis) the faireſt City, not only of Andaluzia, but of all Spain. It is in compaſs ſix miles, divided into two parts by the Bætis; but joined together by a ſtrong and beautiful Bridge; the whole environed with beautiful Walls, and adorned with many magnificent and ſtately Buildings, as Palaces, Churches, and Monaſteries; amongſt which, that of the Gertoſins, or Carthuſians, is endowed with 25000 Crowns of yearly Revenue. It is alſo the See of an Arch-biſhop, under whoſe Juriſdiction are ſaid to be 20000 Villages; and a moſt flouriſhing Univerſity, wherein ſtudied Avicen the Moor, that excellent and learned Scholar: Pope Sylveſter the ſecond, and Leander, who was Arch-biſhop hereof, about the year 580; a ſtout defender of the Catholick tendries of the Church againſt the Arians. The Univerſity adorned with one of the greateſt and goodlieſt Libraries in the Chriſtian World; furniſhed by Diego, the Son of Chriſtopher Columbus, the firſt Founder of it, with no fewer than 12000 Volumes, in ſeveral Languages, gathered together with extraordinary charge and care: and endowed with a very fair Revenue for the maintenance and enlargement of it. Famous in former times, for two Provincial Councils holden here; the firſt, Anno 584; the laſt, Anno 636; and at the preſent, for that here are continually maintained 30000 Gennets for the ſervice of the King; but moſt of all, for the great traffick of the place. For from this Town the Caſtilians ſet forwards towards America; and here they do diſcharge the Fleets of Gold and Silver, which they bring from thence. To this Town come the Pearls of Cubagna, and the Emeralds of S. Martha, the Cochineile of Mexico, the Corals of Hiſpaniola, and, in a word, the whole treaſure of the New-found-World. Here is the publick Emporie of all Spain, for her Wines, Oranges, and Oyls; ſent from hence in ſo great abundance into all parts of Europe, that the people uſe to ſay, in the way of a By-word, That if there enter not into Sevil 4000 Pipes of Wine every day in the year, the Farmer of the Cuſtoms is ſure to break: inſomuch as the Revenues coming out of this City only, are worth a very good Realm to the Catholick King: Maginus reckoning it at no leſs than a Million of Crowns yearly. Laſtly, here reſteth the body of Chriſtopher Columbus, the fortunate diſcoverer of the New-World, with a Latin Epitaph upon his Tomb; but ſhort (God knoweth) of the great merit of the Man: of which more hereafter.

As for the Fortunes of this City, as they relate to Eccleſiaſtical or Spiritual matters, it hath been long the See of an Arch-biſhop, (as before is ſaid) next in revenue and degree unto him, of Toledo; his revenue eſtimated at 100000 Crowns per annum; his Juriſdiction reaching over all Andaluſia, and the Fortunate Iſlands; in which are ſaid to be contained 20000 Villages; the very Dioceſes of which, being ſaid to comprehend 2000 Benefices, beſides Frieries, Nunneries, and Hoſpitals, which may make the former computation of the Villages, ſubject to his Power, as a Metropolitan of more eaſie credit Yet not ſo much conſiderable for its Wealth and Revenue, as for being once the See of Iſidore, ſo much renowned (conſidering the time he lived in) for the univerſality of his learning; who was Biſhop here, called uſually Iſidorus Hiſpalenſis, to diſtinguiſh him from another of that name in Egypt, called Peluſiota. As for the civil Fortunes of it, in the declining of the Moors, when their Eſtate was broken into many Realms and Principalities, it became a Kingdom of it ſelf under a noble Moor named Allcorrexi, An. 966. One of the Kings whereof called Almuneamuz, was of ſo great power, that he had the Regal City of Corduba, and the greateſt part of Andaluſia, under his command, made ſubject with the reſt of the Moors in Spain, to the Miramolines of Morocco, An. 1091, till the retreat of Mahomet Enaſer unto Africk, An. 1214. After which, once more made a Kingdom in the perſon of Aben Lalle, a great Prince of the Moors; but no longer continuing in that Royal Dignity and Eſtate, than till the year 1248, when taken and ſubdued by Ferdinand the ſecond of Caſtile, and made a part of his Eſtate: but ſo, that it remaineth a Realm diſtinct in the Regal ſtile; in which the Kings of Spain are called Kings of Sevil.

2. South of Andaluſia, at the mouth of Guadalquiver, ſtands the Iſle of GADES, diſtant from the main land 700 paces, and joined unto it with a Bridge called Puento de Suaco. It is in length 13 miles, of a very fruitful ſoil; beſides the riches which it gets by Fiſhing, and making of Salt. Firſt peopled by the Tyrians 562 years before the Birth of CHRIST; ſubdued by the Carthaginians, An. V. C. 236, being invited by the Tyrians to aid them in a defenſive War againſt the Spaniards: and was the laſt hold which the Carthaginians had in Spain; out of which beaten by the valour and good fortune of Scipio Africanus. Here ſtood in ancient times a Temple conſecrated crated to the honour of Hercules; in which all Seafaring-men (at their being here) uſed to pay their vows, and offer ſacrifice, as being arrived at the furtheſt parts of all the World.

Places of moſt importance in it, are, 1 Porto Real, a fair and capacious Haven, between the Town of Cadiz, and the main Land of Andaluſia. 2 Santa Maria, another Port more towards the North. 3 Cadis, or Gades, the chief Town of the Iſland, and giving name unto the whole. Situate on the Weſtern part of the whole Iſle, on a large Bay, ſerving as a Road for the Indian Fleet; by the reſort and trade whereof, it is much enriched. Firſt founded by the Tyrians, afterwards made a Municipal City, by the Romans; and one of the Juridical Reſorts for the Province of Bætica: in whoſe times it was held to be the nobleſt and richeſt in all Spain, not yielding to any in the Empire, for greatneſs, magnificence, or number of Inhabitants of account and quality. In ſo much, that here lived, at one time, 500 Roman Knights; which number was not equalled in any one place, except Padua only: beſides the great concourſe of Merchants from all parts of the World. Which great reſort, occaſioned Cornelius Balbus, a Native of it, to add a new Town to the old, the whole circumference of both being 20 Furlongs. By the Moors, at their conqueſt of Spain, it was utterly ruined, but ſince repaired, well fortified, and made the Magazin for the Ammunition of the Spaniſh Navies. Taken, notwithſtanding, in one day by the Engliſh, under the command of Charles Lord Effingham, Robert Earl of Eſſex, and Sir Walter Raleigh; in which they burned the Indian Fleet, conſiſting of 40 Ships, whoſe Lading was worth 8 Millions of Crowns; overcame the Spaniſh Navy, conſiſting of 57 Men of War; took the St. Michael, and the St. Andrew, two great Galleons, and their luggage; ſpoiled and carried away more Martial Furniture, than could be ſupplied in many years; and forced the Town, in which they ſlew, and took Priſoners, 4000 Foot, and 600 Horſe, and brought thence a very great booty in the ſackage of it, Anno 1596. The fortunacy of which enterpriſe, gave occaſion to one of the Wits then living, to frame this excellent Anagram on the name of the Earl of Eſſex, (who was looked on as the greateſt Adventurer in it) viz. Devereux. Vere dux. Which he afterwards caſt into this Diſtich.

Vere dux De'vreux, & verior Hercule; GADES
Nam ſemel hic vidit, vicit at ille ſimul.

Alcides yields to Devereux; he did ſee
Thy beauties (Cales) but Devereux conquer'd thee.

Near to this Iſle, is that ſo celebrated Straight, called by ſome, Fretum Gaditanum, for the nearneſs of it to this Iſland; by others, Fretum Herculeum, not becauſe Hercules did there break out a paſſage to let the Ocean into the Mediterranean, as the Poets fable; but becauſe of the two Pillars which he cauſed to be erected on each ſide of it, with the inſcription of Nil Ultra, this being ſuppoſed to be the furtheſt Country Weſtward. But when that ſuppoſition was proved untrue by the diſcovery of America, Charles the fifth being in thoſe parts, cauſed two new Pillars to be placed where the old ones ſtood, or rather, where he thought they ſtood, and Plus Ultra to be written on them. As for thoſe Pillars ſo much memorized in the ancient Writers, ſome place them in the Temple of Hercules, within this Iſland; others, on the Promontory of Calpe in Spain, and that of Abila in Africk: and ſome again in two little Iſlands near thoſe Promontories. This therefore being a matter doubtful, and not worth the looking after, let us return unto the Straight, called now the Straight of Gibraltar, from the Town and Caſtle of Gabraltar, ſituate on the brink hereof; the Straight being in length fifteen miles; and in breadth, where it is narroweſt, ſeven.

EXTREMADURA hath on the Eaſt and North, Caſtile; on the Weſt, Portugal; and on the South Andaluſia. It was firſt called Bæturia, from the River Bætis, which runneth through it; and for diſtinction's ſake, Beturia Celtica, from the Celtici, then the Inhabitants of this Tract; to difference it from Bæturia Turdulorum, containing thoſe parts of Granada, and Andaluſia, which lye neareſt unto Tarraconenſis. And when firſt it had the name of Extremadura, it was of larger extent than now it is, reaching unto the Banks of the River Duero, the bounds, at that time, of the Kingdom of the Moriſco's, ſo called by the Chriſtians, as lying on the extremities, or furtheſt ſide of that River.

Principal places in it, are, 1 Alcantara, on the banks of the River Tagus, ſituate near the ruins of Norba Cæſarea, deſtroyed by Petronius and Afranius, two of Pompey's Captains, for adhering faithfully to Cæſar: now of moſt note for an Order of Knights here ſeated, and from hence denominated; whereof more hereafter. 2 Gundalcanal, famous for its Mines of Silver and Gold. 3 Merida, ſituate alſo on the Tagus; firſt called Auguſta Emerita, founded and made a Colony by Auguſtus Cæſar, who placed herein his old Soldiers, whom the Romans called Emeriti; hence it had the name. The chief City, after that, of Luſitania; and, by Auſonius, preferred before any in Spain: now ruinous, meanly built, and but ill inhabited: Famous for nothing, but the Bridge upon the River Tagus, a Monument of the Roman greatneſs. Nigh to this Town was fought that memorable battel betwixt Wallia, the firſt King of the Goths in Spain; and Attace, King of the Alani and Silinges, (this laſt a people of the Vandals) the victory whereof falling to the Goths, cauſed the whole Nation of the Vandals to draw forth out of Spain. 4 Medelino, near which the River Guadiana hideth it ſelf under the ground, for the ſpace of ten leagues; but more famous for the birth of Ferdinand Cortez, the fortunate Diſcoverer and Conqueror of the Realm of Mexico. 5 Badaios, a Biſhops See on the borders of Portugal. 6 Guadalupe, on a River of the ſame name; renowned amongſt thoſe of the Church of Rome, for the Miracles and Image of our Lady of Guadalupe; as much reſorted to in Spain, as our Lady of Loretto in Italy. 7 Placenza, a Biſhops See, near the Hills of Caſtile; amongſt which Hills, (by reaſon of their ſtrength and ſafety) Sertorius made his laſt retreat, when perſecuted by the Romans of the contray Faction; and where he was moſt wickedly ſlain by Perpenna, and ſome other of his own Aſſociates. Not far from hence, if it be not in the ſelf-ſame place, in a retired and ſolitary Valley, ſtandeth the Monaſtery of Saint Juſtus, remarkable for a greater Miracle than any the Lady of Guadalupe is able to boaſt of: which is, that Charles the fifth, that moſt puiſſant Monarch, having reſigned his Empire to his Brother Ferdinand, and all the reſt of his Dominions to his Son Philip the ſecond, did here bid farewel unto the World; ſpending the reſidue of his time in Prayers and devout Meditations. The greateſt Monument and Example of Self-denial, which theſe later Ages have afforded. Far beyond any abnegation of the World by our Cloyſtered-Monks, or any quitting of their Crowns by ſome Kings and Emperors in the darker Ages of the Church; who living in the time of Ignorance and Superſtition, ſaw not ſo clearly what they did, (or did it out of weakneſs, and want of ſpirit) as this Maſculine and Heroick Emperor.

The old Inhabitants of these Countries, were the Turduli, the Bastuli, and the Turditani, of Andalusia, and Granada; the Celtici, and some part of the Lusitani, in Extremadura, all vanquished by the Romans, during the second Punick War, under the fortunate command of Scipio Africanus. From them extorted by the Vandals, who passing over into Africk, left it to the Suevians; lost by them to Theodorick the fourth King of the Goths, who hereby added all Betica to his other Dominions. Under the Goths it remained subject till their fatal overthrow by the Moors, who having made almost an entire Conquest of all the Continent of Spain, were at first subject to the Great Caliphs, Lords of the Saracenical Empire; governing here by their Lieutenants, from Ulidor Ulit, under whom they first made this Conquest, Anno 714, to Abdalla, of the House of Alaveci, Anno 757. At what time Abderamen, of the Line of Mahomet the Impostor, and first Emperor of the Saracens, flying the fury of Abdalla, by whom the old Line of the Caliphs, of the Race of Humeia (of which Race this Abderamen was) had been dispossessed of that Empire; came into Spain, and was with great joy entertained by the Spanish Moors, cordially affected to his House: whose Government he took upon him, discharged of all subjection and subordination to the Caliphs, or Mahometan Emperors, and making it an absolute Kingdom of it self. In his Race it continued without any fraction or subdivision, till the time of Hizen the second, the tenth King of these Spanish Moors: after whose death, distracted amongst many petit Tyrants, till they were all brought under by the Moors of Africk; of which more anon. In the mean time, take here the Catalogue of the Kings of these Moors of Spain, called commonly, from Corduba, their Royal Seat,

The Kings of Corduba.

A. C.
757	1	Abderamen, the first Soveraign-Prince of the Moors in Spain. 31.
787	2	Hizen, the second son of Abderamen, by whom Zuleima, his elder Brother, was put by his Throne. 7.
794	3	Hali Hatan, the Son of Hizen. 24.
819	4	Abderamen II. Son of Hali Hatan, discomfited by the Christians in the memorable battel of Clavigio, Anno 836.
839	5	Mahomet, Son of Abderamen the second, who reduced Toledo, then revolted, under his Command. 35.
874	6	Almundie, the Son of Mahomet. 2.
876	7	Abdalla, Brother to Almundie, and as little memorable.
889	8	Abderamen III. sirnamed Almansor, too fortunate in his Wars against the Christians. 50.
939	9	Hali Hatan II. Son of Abderamen the second.
959	10	Hizen II. Son of Hali Hatan; in the 33 year of his reign, deposed for his sloth and negligence, by
989	11	Zuleima, an African Moor, of the Family of Alaveci; and he expelled by
993	12	Mahomet II. sirnamed Almohadi, of the old House of Humeia; outed again by Zuleima, and made King of Toledo. Betwixt these three, and their several Factions, the Kingdom wretchedly torn in pieces, never restored again to its ancient lustre; and finally, made a prey to
1001	13	Hali, another African Moor. 2.
1003	14	Cacin, the Brother of Hali. 4.
1007	15	Hiaia, the Son of Mahomet. Mens. 4.
1007	16	Abderamen IV. a King of 4 weeks only.
1008	17	Mahomet III. poysoned by his own Servants. 1.
1010	18	Hizen III. deposed by the Moors, grown weary of the House of Humeia, of which House he was.
1011	19	Ioar of Algezire. 3.
1014	20	Mahomet IV. the son of Ioar, the last King of the Moors in Corduba, before the second

Conquest of these parts of Spain by the Moors of Africa. Concerning which, we are to know, that after the great Victory obtained at Clavigio, against Abderamen the second, by Raymir King of Leon Anno 836, in which the Moors lost 60000 of his men; the power and reputation of the Spanish Moors began to decline: brought utterly to nothing, by the sloath and negligence of Hizen the second; after a long and unprofitable reign, deposed by Zuleimea, who succeeded. But the Moors not easily brooking the command of a new Usurper, fell into many Fractions and Divisions amongst themselves: every great man seizing on some part of the Kingdom, which he retained unto himself with the name of King; from whence we have a King of Sevil, another of Toledo, a third of Valentia, a fourth of Cordova, &c. the names of which last only, do occur in the former Catalogue; as they which did pretend a Sovereignty over all the rest. And 'twas a sign the Kingdom was in the exspiring, when so many Kings succeeded in so few years, after one another: there passing from the deposing of Hizen the second, to the beginning of Mahomet the fourth, not above 34 years in all; during which time, we find no fewer than ten Kings. The often change of Princes, and short lives of Kings, are the apparent signs of a ruinous State, approaching very near to its exspiration; as may be seen by the short lives and reigns of the last Western Emperors, nine of them hardly reigning 20 years: as also, of the Kings of the Goths in Italy, of which the six last held the Throne no longer than the nine Western Emperors had done before them. But to proceed: Mahomet the last King of this first Rank, having left the stage in the 13th year of his reign, Anno 1027, we find no good constat of his Successors in the Kingdom of Corduba; made inconsiderable by the withdrawing so many Provinces from the body of it: the pride and insolency of which Roytelets and petit Tyrants, forced them at last to call unto their aid the Kings or Miramomolins of Morocco, by whom themselves, and all the rest of their Corrivals, were in fine subdued. Under seven Princes of Morocco, the Spanish Moors continued subject about 120 years; that is to say, from the first coming in of Joseph Telephin, the Miramomoline, Anno 1091; unto the going out of Mahomet, sirnamed the Green, An. 1214. During which time, the affairs of thee Moors in Spain were so well conducted, that they lost nothing to the Christians, but Extremadura, taken from them by Alfonso the second, in the accompt of Castile; the seventh, in accompt of Leon, An. 1147: and the City of Lisbon taken from them in the same year also, by Alfonso the first King of Portugal. But Mahomet the Green being vanquished in the great Fight at Sierra Morena, by the joint Forces of the confederated Christians, Anno 1214, left off all further care of the Moors in Spain; after his going thence, distracted once again into many Kingdoms, almost as many as great Towns, all of them swallowed up, in a little time, by the Kings of Castile, Arragon, and Portugal. And amongst them, the Kingdom of Corduba, not able to stand long on this new Foundation, was ruinated and brought under the command of the Castilians, by their their King, Ferdinand the second, Anno 1236. Since that time there no more mention of the Kingdom of Cordubа.

The Arms whereof were Or, a Lion Gules, armed and crowned of the first, a Border Azure charged with 8 Towers Argent.

7. GRANADA.

GRANADA is bounded on the West, with Andalusia; on the East, with Murcia, and the Mediterranean; on the North, with New Castile; on the South, with the Mediterranean only. So called from Granada, the chief City, and Seat-Royal of it.

It is in length 200 miles, 100 miles in breadth, and about 700 miles in compass: a Kingdom of no great extent; but such as contained in it more fair Towns, strong Fortresses, and defensible places, than the like quantity of Ground in the World besides. The North part of the Country plain; the South parts overspread with the Alpuxarra's, and other spurs and branches of the Orospeda. In the time of the Moors, wonderfully well inhabited, and full of all sorts of Commodities, the Hills planted with Vines and Fruits, the Plains and Valleys swelling with Corn and Gardens: since their expulsion, neither much peopled, nor very fruitful, for want of men to dress and manure the Land.

The principal Cities of it, are 1 Granada, situate on two Hills, divided by a Valley, through which runneth the River Darien; consisting of four several parts, called Alhambre, Sierre de Sol, Granada, and Antequerula: the two first standing on the Hills, the two last in the valley; the whole circuit being about 7 miles, and containing in the time of the Mooriſh Kingdom, about 200000 of souls. Fenced with strong Walls, fortified with 130 Turrets, and repleniſhed with abundance of wholsome and pleasant Springs. The Merchants and Gentry of the best sort, do dwell in that part which is called Granada: the houses of which, are for the most part built of Free-stone, with delicate and artificial Masonry, shewing great magnificence. Herein standeth the Cathedral Church, a work of admirable structure: of Figure round, as having sometimes been a Mahometan Mosquet. Here is also the place which they call Alcazar, representing a little Town, to which are ten Gates. In the Alhambre is the Palace of the Mooriſh Kings, covered with Gold, indented with Mosaical work; and which, by reason of the structure, and multitude of Fountains which are about it, may be put amongst the Wonders of the world; having withal a goodly prospect over all the Town, lying under it upon the East; a spacious Champian towards the North, and the snowy tops of Sierra Novado, towards the South. This City is the ordinary Parliament, and Court of Justice, for all the Southern parts of Spain, as Valladolit is for the Northern: Madrid, which is the highest Court, having Jurisdiction over, and receiving Appeals from both. A Town first raised out of the ruins of Iliberis, situate not far off the Hill Elvire, much mentioned in the stories of Rome and Carthage. In the two other parts of the Town, there is nothing remarkable, inhabited only by Mechanicks of the poorer sort. 2 Alhama, seated amongst steep and craggy Rocks, out of which issue Medicinal Waters, occasioning a great resort of the Spaniſh Gentry: the first Town taken by the Spaniards in their last long War against the Moors, for the recovery of this Kingdom, Anno 1482; and looked on, by the Moors, as a sad presage of a ruinated and expiring Empire. 3 Guadix, an Episcopal See, about nine leagues from Granada. 4 Vilas Malaga, by Ptolemy called Cex; by Antoninus, Sexicanum; situate at the foot of the Mountains called Alpuxarra's; a large branch of the Orospeda over-spreading a great part of this Country: heretofore planted with incredible numbers of Moors, who chose to dwell there for the strength and safety of the situation: since their expulsion, desolate and unfrequented; nothing remaining of them now, but the Arabick Language; which is still spoke by those few people which inhabit in it. The Mountains in this Tract so high, that from the tops hereof a man may easily discern the whole course of the Straights of Gibraltar, together with the Towns of Seuta, and Tangier, in Africk, 5 Ronda, at the foot of another branch of the Crospeda, called from this Town, Sierra de Ronda: not far from which, by Munda, now a very small Village, was fought that memorable battel betwixt Cæsar and the Sons of Pompey; the honour of which, fell to Cæsar, who then made an end of the Civil Wars, which that very day, four years before, were begun by Pompey the Father. In this fight was Cn. Pompeius slain, and his Forces broken: Cæsar himself being so put to it, that seeing his Souldiers give back, he was fain to maintain the fight by his own great courage, bidding them Remember, that at Munda they forsook their General. The shame of which reproach, and his noble example, encouraged them to a new onset, which was honoured with a signal and remarkable Victory: this being the last fight that Cæsar was in; murdered not long after in the Senate-house. And of this fight he used to say, That in all other places he fought for his Honour, in this for his life. 6 Antequera, heretofore a well-fortified Town, bordering close upon Castile. 7 Maxacra, on the shore of the Mediterranean, supposed to be the Murgis of Ptolemy. 8 Vera on the same shore; the furthest Town of Batica, and of this Country, towards Murcia: supposed to be the Virgao of Pliny, from whence the neighbouring Creek or Bay was called Virgitanus. 9 Loxa, on the River Darien, enjoying a situation both strong and pleasant. 10 Malaga, or Malaca, situate at the mouth of Guadalquiver, once sacked by Crassus the rich Roman; who flying out of Spain, to avoid the Fury of Marius and Cinna, who had slain his Father and Uncle, hid himself, and his Companions, in a Cave hereabouts, for eight Months together: but after hearing of their deaths, issued out, and ransacked, amongst many other Cities, this Malaga. A Town of great Traffick, and much Resort, especially for Raisins, Almonds, Malaga Sacks: well fortified, and of great importance, as a Town of War; and, to the great prejudice of the Moors, taken by Ferdinand the Catholick, Anno 1487: the Conquest of the whole Kingdom of Granada, following not long after. It was since made a Bishops-See, or restored rather to that dignity which it had of old. 11 Almeria, a noted Haven on the Mediterranean, the Abdera of Mela; a Colony of the Carthaginians, and anciently a Bishops See. 12 Carthema, 13 Coim, and 14 Basa, more within the Land: this last, the strongest Bulwark of the City of Granada, on the North-east whereof it standeth. A place of great strength both by Art and Nature; and by the Moors defended with so great a gallantry, that it held out a siege of 7 Months against an Army of 13000 Horse, and 24000 Foot, King Ferdinand the Catholick, being there in person: and yielded at the last, Decemb. 4. 1489, upon better conditions than any Town had done before it.

As for the Fortunes of this Country, after the Conquest of it by the Moors and Saracens, it was a part or member of the Kingdom of Cordubа, and so continued till that Kingdom was subdued by the Spaniards.

But the Moors were too ſtout to yield all at once. Having yet ground enough both to ſecure themſelves in, and endow their King: they are reſolved, though they had loſt one Kingdom, to erect another. And therefore Corduba being taken, and that Kingdom ruinated, the Moors, with Mahomet Aben Alhamar, their unfortunate, but valiant King, removed themſelves unto Granada, and there renewed their ſtrength and Kingdom, which laſted 256 years, under 20 Kings; whoſe names here follow in this Catalogue of

The Kings of Granada.

A. C.
1236	1	Mahomet Alhamar, the laſt King of Corduba, and the firſt King of Granada. 36.
1272	2	Mahomet Mir Almir. 30.
1302	3	Mahomet Aben Ezar. 7.
1309	4	Mahomet Aben Evar. 10.
1319	5	Iſmael. 3.
1322	6	Mahomet. 12.
1334	7	Joſeph Aben Amet. 20.
1354	8	Mahomet Lagus. 23.
1377	9	Mahomet Vermeil. 2.
1379	10	Mahomet Guadix. 13.
1392	11	Joſeph II. 4.
1396	12	Mahomet Aben Balva. 11.
1407	13	Joſeph III. 16.
1423	14	Mahomet Aben Azar. 4.
1427	15	Mahomet the little. 5.
1432	16	Joſeph Abud Almud. 13.
1445	17	Mahomet Oſmen. 8.
1453	18	Imael II. 9.
1462	19	Muley Alboacen. 20.
1482	20	Mahomet Boabdelin, the laſt King of the Moors in Spain.

Of all which, there is little left upon Record: their whole time being ſpent in defending their borders againſt the encroachments of Caſtile; or elſe in Civil-Wars and diſcords amongſt themſelves: in which they were ſo frequent, and ſometimes ſo violent, as if they had no Enemy near them. Mahomet Aben Evar, the fourth King, depoſed by Mahomet Aben Levin; and he again thruſt out by Iſmael the ſon of Ferrachen, before he could enjoy the fruits of his treaſon. Mahomet, ſon of Iſmael, murdered by his Subjects. Joſeph the ſon of Mahomet, ſlain by Mahomet Lagus; and he again depoſed by Mahomet Vermeil; who in the end was miſerably ſlain by Pedro the Cruel, of Caſtile, to whom he had fled for help and ſuccour. After this time, they ruined and depoſed one another, to the end of their Kingdom; the Succeſſor never ſtaying till the death of his Predeceſſor, but violently making way for himſelf to enter on the Government: even Mahomet Boabdelin, the laſt King hereof, not having patience to expect the death of his Father; but ſetting him beſides the Throne, as he himſelf was for a time, by Muley Moabdelin his Uncle; and thereby opening a fair Gate for Ferdinand, King of Caſtile and Aragon, to bring in his Forces to the ſubduing of them all. Such was the fortune of this Kingdom, that as it began under a Mahomet, a Ferdinand being King of Caſtile; ſo it ended under a Mahomet, a Ferdinand being King of Caſtile alſo. In the firſt year, then, of this man's Reign, did the War begin, or rather in the laſt year of his Father, who by taking Zahara from the Chriſtians, gave the firſt occaſion: and in the tenth year of the War, (for ſo long it laſted) Anno 1492, the Empire of the Moors ended in Spain, by the valour of Ferdinand the Catholick, and Iſabel his Wife, afer their firſt entrance into it, more than 760 years.

Such of them as, after the decay of their Kingdom, had a deſire to ſtay in Spain, which had for ſo long time been their native Country, were ſuffered ſo to do by the prudent Victors, (fearing a deſolation of the Country, if they ſhould abandon it) conditioned, that they would be Chriſtened. And that they might be known to be as they profeſſed, the Inquiſition was eſtabliſhed in the City of Granada, conſiſting of a certain number of Secular Prieſts, and Dominican Friers; who finding any counterfeit or Apoſtate Chriſtians, were firſt gently to reprove and exhort them; and after, if no amendment followed, to inflict ſuch puniſhment on them, as was accuſtomed in like caſes. By the terror of which Inquiſition, many profeſſed, in ſhew, the Chriſtian Faith. But being Chriſtians only in the outward ſhew, and practiſing on all occaſions againſt the State, the Kings of Spain reſolved long ago on their Extermination; but never had opportunity to effect it, till the year 1609. At what time Philip the third having made a Peace with England, and a Truce with Holland; and finding the Moors of Africk ſo embroiled in Wars, that they were not able to diſturb him; put that extream rigour in execution, which had before been thought of in their conſultations; 1100000 of them being forced to quit this Country, and provide new dwellings; under colour that they went about to free themſelves from the Inquiſition, and to recover their old Liberty loſt ſo long before.

The Forces which the Kings of Granada, in the times of their greateſt power, were able to raiſe, were far beyond the ameaſurement and extent of their Kingdom; not above 700 miles in compaſs, as before is ſaid: but ſo exceeding populous, and well accommodated with all manner of neceſſaries, that within two days ſpace, the King hereof was ſaid to have been able to draw together 50000 Horſe, and 200000 Foot, for defence of his Kingdom. Turquet reports it ſo, in his Spaniſh Hiſtory. But this proved more than they were able to do in their greateſt need; when this Kingdom was finally invaded, and at laſt ſubdued by Ferdinand and Iſabel, Kings of Spain: though poſſibly by reaſon of their diviſions at that time, (ſome following the Party of Mahomet Boadolin; and others, that of his Uncle Muley, choſen King againſt him) they might not join together in a common intereſs, for the defence of their Eſtate.

The Arms whereof were Or, a Pomgranate (or Apple of Granada) ſlipped, Vert.

8 MURCIA.

MURCIA is bounded on the Weſt, with Granada; on the Eaſt & North, with Valentia, and a part of Granada, and on the South, with the Mediterranean Sea. So called from Murcia the chief City. In former times eſteemed a rich and wealthy Country, ſtored with all ſorts of fruits; and ſo abounding in Silver Mines, that when the Romans were Lords of it, they kept continually four hundred men at work, and received 2500 Drachma's of of daily profit: now for the moſt part barren, and but ill-inhabited.

Cities of note there are not many in ſo ſmall a Country. The principal, 1 Murcia, by Ptolemy called Menralio, ſeated upon the River Segura, a Biſhops See, ſituate in a pleaſant and delightful Plain, planted with Pomgranates, and other excellent fruits: from this, the Country had the name of the Kingdom of Murcia. 2 Carthagena, or Nova Carthago, firſt built by Aſdrubal of Carthage, the brother of Annibal, for the better receiving of of such aids, both of men and money, as should come from Africa. Situate in a Demi-Island, in the very jaws of the Mediterranean: by which, and by a deep Marish on the West side of it, so impregnably fortified, that if Scipio, afterwards called Africanus, who then lay at the siege thereof, had not been shewed a way over that Marish, at a dead low water, by poor Fisher-men of Tarragon, who knew the Secret, he had there lost both his time and his honour. Nothing more memorable, in the sackage and spoil thereof, (though there was found abundance of Arms and Treasure) than the vertue of Scipio, who finding there many Spanish Ladies of great birth and beauties, left there as Hostages for the Spaniards, with the Carthaginians, would not permit any of them to be brought before him, for fear it should betray him to some inconvenience. Being re-edified, it was made a Roman Colony, and one of the seven Juridical Resorts of Tarraconensis: by Constantine made the chief City of the new Province of Carthaginensis, which was hence denominated. Afterwards, twice sacked by the Goths and Vandals, it lay for a long time buried in its own ruins. And though again new built and peopled, it is still but small, containing at the most but 600 housholds: and would be utterly abandoned, but for the safety of the place, and the strength thereof, garrisoned, and fortified very strongly by King Philip the second, for fear of surprisal by the Turks: and the security of the Haven (which is withal very large and capacious) coming from a little Island, lying at the mouth thereof; by which assured from tempestuous winds, and the violent ragings of the Sea. Hence the occasion of that saying of Andreas Doria, Admiral unto Charles the fifth, That there were but three safe Ports in the Mediterranean; that is to say, August, July, and this Carthagena: meaning, as I conceive, that those two Months being commonly free from tempestuous weather, were of as great safety to the Mariners, as this famous Port. 3 Lorca, another Port-Town, situate on a Creek more within the Land. 4 Almanca, 5 Sarazel, two strong Towns bordering on Valentia; well fortified, when Murcia and Valentia were in several hands. 6 Cervillan, 7 Alhama, 8 Rus, &c.

This County, being part of the Province of Carthaginensis, was by the Alani taken from the Romans, at their first entrance into Spain: from them recovered by Wallia, the first King of the Goths, in this part of Europe. Together with the rest of Spain, it was subdued by the Moors of Africk, in the distractions of whose Empire; after the going hence of the Moors of Africk, it was made a distinct Kingdom by Aben Hut, of the Race of the Kings of Saragossa, who had seised upon it, Anno 1228; and for a time was the most puissant King of the Moors in Spain, commanding over this Country, Granada, and a part of Andalusia. Invited to a Feast, made Drunk, and then basely Murdered by Aben Arramin, a false servant of his, An. 1236. One Aben Hudiel seized on the Realm of Murcia, disturbed in his possession by Alboaquis, the last King hereof. But he not able to defend himself against his Competitor, surrendred it to Ferdinand the second of Castile, whom he put into possession of the Fort of Murcia, and many other places of great importance; conditioned, that Alboaquis should enjoy the title of King of Murcia, as long as he lived, under the Soveraignty of Castile: and that Ferdinand should enjoy one half of the profits of it. This was in the year 1241, after it had continued in the state of a Kingdom but 12 years only, united to Castile without blood or trouble, and so remains ever since.

9 TOLEDO.

THE Kingdom of TOLEDO, so called from Toledo the chief City of it; contained once the greatest part of that Country which is now called New-Castile: of which it is now reckoned only for a part or member. The Country lying next unto it, was anciently the Seat of Carpentani, the nature of the Soil we shall find elsewhere.

Principal Cities of this Kingdom, 1 Toledo, of great antiquity, as being taken by Fulvius a Roman Prætor, in the time of Scipio Africanus; and then a City of good note. Pleasantly seated on the Tagus, beautified with many pieces of rare and excellent Architecture; and fortified with thirty Towers standing on the Walls. By reason of the situation of it in the very midst, almost, of Spain, it is passing well inhabited; as well by the Nobility, who reside there for pleasure; and by Scholars, who abide in it for their Studies; as by Merchants, who resort thither for their profit: besides such Soldiers and their Officers, who are continually garrisoned in it for defence thereof. The private buildings generally are but mean and ordinary; though, by far, more handsom in the inside, than the outside promiseth: most of them being furnished with water from the River Tagus, conveyed into them by the admirable invention of one James, a native of Cremona, in the Dukedom of Millain. The Streets narrow, close, hilly, and uneven, exceeding troublesom to walk or go upon, especially in slippery or dirty weather, by reason of its steep and uneven situation on the side of a Rocky Hill: by which, and by the River which almost surrounds it, it is naturally very strong, and well helped by Art. For that cause made the Seat of the Gothish Kings: by one of which, called Bamba, so repaired and beautified, (besides the addition of a strong Wall for defence of the place) that he is by some accounted for the Founder of it. For so we find it in these old Verses:

Erexit (fautore Deo) Rex inclytus Urbem
Bamba, suæ celebrem protendens Gentis honorem.

That is to say,

King Bamba (God assisting) rais'd this Town,
Extending so the ancient Goths renown.

When the Goths fell, it was in chief estimation amongst the Moors, and by them advanced unto the honour of a Kingdom; whereof more anon: but under both, (as it continueth to this day) the See of an Arch-bishop, who is the Metropolitan of Spain, and President, for the most part, of the Inquisition. His Revenue answerable to his Place, the greatest of any Clergy man in the Christian World, next to the Popes of Rome; as being estimated at 300000 Crowns per annum. Finally, this City hath been honoured with no fewer than 18 National Councils, here holden in the time of the Goths; and is now a famous University for the study of the Civil and Canon Laws, and hath to this day the Temporal Jurisdiction over 17 Walled Towns, besides Villages. 2 Calatrava, the next Town of note, is situate on the River Ana; of most fame in these later times, for an Order of Knights, called the Knights of Calatrava; of which more when we come to Castile. Neighboured by the ruins of the strong and famous City Castulo, which being under the command of the Romans, was by the Gyresoeni, a people that that dwelt on the other ſide of the River, ſuddenly entred and taken. But Sertorius following after them by the ſame Gate, put them all to the Sword: and cauſing his men to apparel themſelves in the clothes of the Enemy, led them to the chief City of the Gyriſconi; who ſuppoſing them to be their own Party, opened their Gates, and were all either ſlain, or ſold for Slaves. More of this Town anon, when we come to Caſtile, to which now belonging. 3 Talbora, commonly called Talvera de la Reyna, or the Queen's Talvera; and called ſo on occaſion of an execrable Murder committed there by the command of Queen Mary, the Widow of Alfonſo the ſixth, on the Lady Leonore de Guſman, her Husband's Paramour. A proper and neat Town it is, pleaſantly ſeated on the Tagus; ſuppoſed to be the Libora of Ptolemy, and now belonging to the Arch-biſhop of Toledo, as chief Lord thereof. Medina Zelim, commonly called Medina Celi; of great importance when poſſeſſed or neighboured by the Moors. Now of moſt note for giving the title of Dukes to the illuſtrious Family De la Cerde, deſcended from Ferdinand, the eldeſt Son of Alfonſo the fifth; claiming, by that deſcent, a title to the Crown of Caſtile. What other Towns belonged unto it, we ſhall ſee anon.

As for Toledo it ſelf, in the time of the Romans it was the Metropolis of the Province of Tarraconenſis; after that, the Seat-Royal of the Gothiſh Kings; removed hither from Tholouſe in Languedoc: forced by the Moors, at their firſt entrance into Spain, An. 716; more prudently aiming at the Head, than the Goths poſſibly expected from ſuch Barbarians. In the Confuſions of that Kingdom, betwixt the beginning of the reign of Mahomet the fourth, and the ſecond coming in of the Moors of Africk, made a diſtinct Kingdom of it ſelf; continuing in that eſtate, till taken from Haia Alchaduchir, the laſt King hereof, by Alfonſo the firſt, King of Caſtile, An. 1083. This Alfonſo being the younger Son of Ferdinand, the firſt King of Caſtile and Leon, had the Kingdom of Leon for his part. Ejected out of that, by his Brother Sancho King of Caſtile, he lived in exile with the Moors; kindly received and entertained by Almenon the Father of this Haia, King of Toledo, till the death of his Brother. After which, coming to the Crowns of Caſtile and Leon, Anno 1073, he picked a quarrel with his Hoſt, and beſieged Toledo; his long abode there, making him acquainted with all advantages that might facilitate his deſigns; which notwithſtanding held him a ſiege of five years, before he could make himſelf maſter of it, by him incorporated preſently on the taking of it, with the reſt of that Kingdom, and made the head of New-Caſtile. But for the Kings hereof, as well thoſe who held it but for life, as thoſe who left the ſame unto their Poſterity, they are theſe that follow:

The Mooriſh Kings reigning in Toledo.

A. C.

1 Galafroy, King of Toledo, in the time of Charlemagne, under the Vaſſalage of the great Caliphs of Damaſcus: ſubdued by Abderamen the firſt, King or Miramomolin of the Moors in Corduba, of the Houſe of Humeia.

787 2 Zuleima, the eldeſt ſon of Abderamen King of Corduba, being diſpoſſeſſed of the Realm of Corduba, and the reſt of his Eſtates in Spain, by Hizen his younger Brother, reigned a while in Toledo; of which outed not long after: Toledo from that time continuing a Member of the Kingdom of Corduba, till the latter end of the reign of Abderamen the ſecond. At what time, 833 3 Aben Lope, (the ſon of Muſa Aben Cacia, a Goth by Nation and deſcent; but a Moor by profeſſion: who had cauſed the Toledans, and others of the Moors of Spain, to rebel againſt Abderamen) aſſumed unto himſelf the title of King of Toledo: a ſtrict confederate of Ordogno the 11th, King of Leon; by whom ſupported in his Wars againſt thoſe of Corduba; but at laſt vanquiſhed and diſſeized by Mahomet, the ſon of Abderamen, Anno 848.

990 4 Abdalla, a great man among the Moors, during the contentions betwixt Zuleima and Hizen the ſecond, for the realm of Corduba, ſeized on the City of Toledo; which he held as King: and kindly entertained Mahomet Almohadi, made King of Corduba during thoſe contentions; by whom ſucceeded in this Kingdom.

995 5 Mahomet, ſirnamed Almohadi, of the Regal Family of Humeya, King of Corduba; and diſpoſſeſſed thereof by the Faction of Zuleima, retired to Toledo; and was kindly entertained by King Abdalla, whom he ſucceeded in this Kingdom.

999 6 Obeydalla, the Son of Mahomet, ſlain in his Wars with Hizen, the King of Corduba, in the firſt or ſecond year of his reign.

1000 7 Hairam, of the ſame houſe of Aben Humeya, and, probably, the next Kinſman of Obeydalla; ſucceeded him in this Eſtate, and left the ſame unto his Poſterity, till ſubdued by the Spaniards.

1010 8 Hizen, the Son of Hairan, of whom nothing memorable.

1045 9 Ali Maynon; or Almenon, as the Spaniards call him, the Son of Hizen, who entertained Alfonſo the ſixth of Leon, when diſpoſſeſſed of his Eſtate by his brother Sancho.

1076 10 Hizen II. Son of Ali Maynon.

1078 11 Haya, ſirnamed Alcadarbile, the Son of Ali Maynon, and Brother of Hizen; a cruel Prince, and ill beloved of his Subjects; which gave occaſion unto Alfonſo King of Caſtile and Leon, ſpoken of before, to invade this Kingdom; by whom at laſt it was ſubdued, and Toledo, with its Territories, added unto Caſtile, as before is ſaid, Anno 1083. By which means there accrued to the Realm of Caſtile, beſides Toledo it ſelf, and the Towns ſpoken of already, thoſe of Illeſcus, Eſcallona, Maqueda, Canales, Coria, Conſuerga, Berlanga, Guadalaiara, Arienca, and divers others, now paſſing in the eſtimate of New-Caſtile.

But to conclude, Toledo thus reduced under the command of the Chriſtians, was forthwith made the Metropolitan City of Spain, (in regard of Eccleſiaſtical or Spiritual matters) as it had been before in the time of the Goths: and ſhortly after honoured by Alfonſo with the title of the Imperial City; that King, upon the conqueſt hereof, having aſſumed unto himſelf the ſtile of Emperor of Spain, but ſomewhat too affectedly, as the caſe then ſtood, there being other Kings in Spain as well as he. In which reſpects he gave unto this City for the Arms hereof, in a Field Azure, a Crown Mitral Imperial Or, garniſhed with ſundry precious Gems Proper; changed afterwards by Alfonſo the third of Caſtile, and eighth of Leon, affecting the ſame title of Emperor, to an Emperor ſitting on his Throne in a Robe of Gold, with a Globe in his left hand, and a Sword in his right.

But

But the Blazon of these Arms I find not, nor much worth the searching: the old Coat being worn again after his decease.

10. CASTILE.

CASTILE is bounded on the East, with Navarre, Arragon, and part of Valentia; on the West, with Portugal; on the North, with Biscay, Guipuscoa, and the Asturia's; on the South, with Extremadura, Andalusia, and Granada. The reason of the name we shall have anon.

This was the most prevailing Kingdom of all this Continent; to which the rest are all united either by Marriages or Conquest. Divided commonly into the New and Old, parted from one another by the Hills of Segovia: the one being called the Old Castile, because it was the Ancient Patrimony of the Earls hereof; and the other named the New, from that addition which was made to the first Inheritance, by the Conquest of the Realm of Toledo, and other pieces, from the Moors. The Old Castile is the less fruitful of the two; more fit for Pasturage, than Corn; but better stored with that, and all sorts of Fruits, than the neighbouring Countries, which lye betwixt it and the Northern or Cantabrian Ocean: the New more plain and Champian, better stored with Fruits, and furnished with sufficient plenty of Corn, and other Provisions necessary for the life of man. The Old Castile watered with the Rivers of 1 Relaunos, rising not far from Burgos. 2 Tormes, passing by Salamanca. 3 Duero, the Receptacle of the others. The New with Guadarama, honoured with the neighbourhood of Madrid. 5 Tavina, and 6 Tagus, the most famous River of all Spain.

The OLD CASTILE is situate on the North of the New; and hath for the chief Cities of it. 1 Soria, of great note in the ancient Story, by the name of Numantia; which for the space of 14 years, withstood the whole Forces of Rome: during which time, they valiantly repulsed their Enemies, and forced them to dishonourable Compositions. But finding, at least, no hope of holding longer out, they gathered together all their Armour, Money, and Goods, laid them in an heap, then set fire on them, and, finally burnt themselves in the midst of the flame; leaving Scipio (who had brought them to that extremity) nothing but the bare name of Numantia, to adore his triumph. 2 Avilla, situate under the great Mountains, which are called from hence, the Mountains of Avila. Known anciently by the name of Abule; and by that name giving the title of Abulensis to the renowned Tostatus, who was Bishop of it. A Man, who in his time was President of the Council to John King of Arragon; yet could find leisure enough not only to attend his Episcopal Charge, but to compose those learned and painful Commentaries on a great part of the Bible. Of which, and his other Abilities, (besides that which hath before been noted of him) we may take that Elogie which Casaubon hath given him, in his Book against Baronius, saying, Laudo acumen viri, si in meliora incidisset Tempora, longe maximi. 3 Valodolid, a fine neat Town, and one of the ancientest Universities of Spain: discontinued for a time, by Students, and then restored again by King Philip the second, whose birth-place it was; and who erected here a Colledge (among others) for the education only of young English Fugitives. Seated upon the River Pisuerga, and one of the Chanceries of the Kingdoms of Castile and Leon. By means whereof, and of the King's Court here residing in the Summer-times, it became, in little space, a fair, large, populous City, and of great resort, not yielding unto any in Spain, except Lisbone, and Sevil. It is called in Latin, Vallis Oletum, and Vallis Oletana, from the abundance of Olives growing near it: but by Ptolemy, Pintia. 4 Segovia, a Bishops See, of great trade in Clothing; situate under a branch of the Mountain Idubeda, called from hence, the Hills of Segovia. 5 Burgos, near the head of the River Relaunos or Relanzon, at the foot of the great Mountain d' Oca, part of the Idubeda: built out of certain Villages lying hereabouts, by Nugno Bellides, a German, Son-in-law unto one of the first Earls of Castile. For a long time the seat of those Kings, since of the Archbishops hereof; the Cathedral being one of the fairest in Spain; built with such art, that Mass may be sung aloud in five several Chappels, without disturbing one another. This City doth contend for Primacy and Precedency, (in Civil matters) with that of Toledo, of which it hath the first place or vote in all Parliaments or Assemblies of the States of Castile. But yet to satisfie Toledo, the Controversie is still undecided, and was once finely taken up by one of the Ferdinands, saying, that he would first speak for Toledo, and then Burgos should speak for it self. Without the Walls of this City, is a famous Nunnery, called De las Huelgas, consisting of 150 Religious Women, all of Noble Houses. 6 Cividad Rodrigo, a Bishops-See, on the River Gada. 7 Zamomora, a strong and well-built City, and a Bishops-See, the Semica of Ptolemy: situate on the River Drnero, and now famous for the best Bag-pipes. 8 Tordesillas, the Segisana of the Ancients. 9 Lerma, not far from Burgos, the chief Seat of the Dukes so called; a Prince of great Possessions, and the chief of the Family of Roias, and Sandoval. 10 Salamanca, the most Famous University of Spain especially for the study of the Civil and Canon Laws: first instituted by Ferdinand the second of Castile, Anno 1240; and by an Order of the Pope's, together with Paris, Oxford, and Bononia in Italy, created a Generale Studium; wherein there were to be Professors of the Greek, Hebrew, Chaldee, and Abrabick Tongues, besides those of the Arts. It was of old called Salmantica; is now a Bishops-See, situate on the River Tormes, as before was said.

Not far from this City, about the times of our Grand-Fathers, was discovered in a Valley situate amongst high and impassable Mountains, a kind of Patoecos, or Savage people, never heard of in Spain before. The occasion, this: An Hawk of the Duke of Alva's, which he very much valued, flew over those Mountains; and his men not being able to find her at first, they were sent back by the Duke to seek her. Clambring from one Hill to another, they hapned at last upon a large and pleasant Valley, where they spied a company of naked Savage people, hemmed in amongst many craggy Rocks. The Salvages gazing a while upon them, ran into their Caves, made in the hollows of the Rocks, the best Houses they had: which being observed by the Falconers, they returned again unto their Lord, telling him, that instead of a Falcon, they had brought him news of a New-world in the midst of Spain, and of a race of People which came in with Tubal. Strongly affirming what they said, they obtained belief. And the Duke shortly after went with a Company of Musquetiers, and subdued them easily; they having no offensive Weapons, but only Slings. They worshipped the Sun and Moon, fed upon nothing that had life; but had good store of excellent Fruits, Roots, and Springs of Water, wherewith Nature was well contented. And though their Language was not altogether understood by any; yet many of their words were found to be purely Basquish. Reduced, on this discovery, to Christianity, but easily discernable from all other Spaniards, by their tawny complexions, occasioned by the reverberation of the Sun-beams, from those Rocky Mountains wherewith on all sides they are encompassed.

compaſſed. The truth hereof, beſides the credit of James Howel, in his Inſtructions for Foreign Travel; I have upon enquiry found to be atteſted by men of gravity and great place in this Realm of England; employed there in affairs of publick intereſt. Satisfied therefore in the truth of the Relation, I am partly ſatisfied in the men: whom I conceive to be ſome remnant of the Ancient Spaniards, who hid themſelves amongſt theſe Mountains for fear of the Romans. Their Language and Idolatry ſpeak them to be ſuch. For had they either fled from the Goths or Moors, there had been found ſome Croſs, or other Monument of Chriſtianity, as in other places; or ſome ſuch mixture in their ſpeech, as would have ſavoured ſomewhat of the Goths or Romans. But it is time I ſhould proceed.

NEW CASTILE is ſituate on the South of the Old. The chief Cities there, 1 Siguenca, a City heretofore of the Celtiberi, now a Biſhops-See, beautified with a fair Cathedral, ſuppoſed to be the Condabora of Ptolemy. 2 Madrid, upon the Guadarama, the Mantua of the ancient Writers, now the Seat of the Kings: whoſe reſidence there, though the Country be neither rich nor pleaſant, hath made it, of a Village, the moſt populous City in all Spain. It is a cuſtom in this Town, that all the upper Rooms in their Houſes do belong to the King, except ſome compoſition be made with him for them. And of this Town the Spaniards do uſe to brag to ſtrangers, that they have a City walled with fire; and then make good the boaſt, by ſaying, That it is ſituate in the midſt of Quarries of Flint. 3 Alcala de Henares, (of old called Complutum) renowned for an Univerſity of Divines, founded here in the time of Ferdinand the Catholick, by Franciſco de Ximines, Cardinal and Arch-biſhop of Toledo, and by him furniſhed with the ableſt men both for Divinity and the Tongues, that all Spain afforded. By whoſe joint diligence and ſtudy in turning over ſo many Copies of the Bibles, gathered together at his charge from all parts of the World, he publiſhed the Complutenſian Edition of the holy Scriptures in the Original Greek, Hebrew, and Vulgar Latin, with the Tranſlation of the Septuagint into Latin alſo. A work of very great charge and pains, (taking up 15 years in doing) but of greater profit; there being at the end thereof, an Hebrew Dictionary, for the underſtanding of that Language. 4 Alcoraz amongſt the Mountainous tracts of Oroſpeda, called Sierra de Alcoraz; memorable for a great diſcomfiture given unto the Moors, Anno 1094. 5 Molina, in the ſame Mountainous Tract, hence called Monte de Molina; remarkable for giving the title of Lord, to the Kings of Caſtile, who in the Regal ſtile are called Lords of Molina: the Signeury hereof accruing to that Crown, by the marriage of Sancho the third, with Mary the Daughter of Alfonſo, the laſt Lord Proprietary. The Territory large, and the Town of ſtrength; well fortified in the times foregoing, both by Art and Nature. 6 Cuenca, ſeated at the Spring-head of the River Xucar, and not far from that of Tagus alſo, amongſt the Mountains of Oroſpeda; built by the Moors on the top of thoſe craggy Hills, whom it ſerved for an impregnable Fortreſs againſt the Chriſtians, till taken by Sancho the ſecond of Caſtile, Anno 1177.

Here alſo is the Eſcurial, or Monaſtery of St. Lawrence, built by King Philip the ſecond. A place (ſaith Quade, who ſpendeth 13 pages in its deſcription) of that magnificence, that no building in times paſt, or this preſent is comparable to it. The front, toward the Weſt, is adorned with three ſtately Gates, the middlemoſt whereof leadeth into a moſt magnificent Temple, a Monaſtery in which are 150 Monks of the Order of S. Jerome, and a Colledge: that on the right hand, openeth into divers Offices, belonging to the Monaſtery: that on the left, unto Schools and out-houſes belonging unto the Colledge. At the four corners, there are four Turrets of excellent Workmanſhip; and for height, majeſtical. Towards the North, is the King's Palace, on the South parts, divers beautiful and ſumptuous Galleries; and on the Eaſt ſide, ſundry Gardens and Walks, very pleaſing and delectable. It containeth, in all, 11 ſeveral Quadrangles, every one encloyſtered; and is indeed ſo brave a ſtructure, that a Voyage into Spain were well employed, were it only to ſee it, and return. Here is alſo in this Tract, the old Town of Caſtulo, (the Caſtaon of Strabo) then the chief City of the Carpentani, and the birth-place of Himilce, the Wife of Annibal: from whence this whole Tract had the name of Saltus Caſtulonenſis, and ſo called by Cæſar; now a poor Village, known by the name of Caſtona la Vieja; in which is ſomewhat to be found of the ancient ruines. But of this more already, when we were in the Kingdom of Toledo, to which it more properly belonged.

The old Inhabitants of theſe Caſtiles, were the Vaccai, Ventones, Arevacæ, Oretani, Carpentani, Dittani, &c. From none of which, the name of Caſtile can be deduced: ſo that we muſt fetch it either from the Caſtellani, once a People of Catalogne; or from ſome ſtrong fortified Caſtles erected in the Frontiers, againſt the Moors. This laſt conjecture may ſeem probable, becauſe the Arms of this Kingdom are Gules, a Caſtle triple-towered, Or. Neither is it any way ſtrange, for Provinces, eſpecially ſmaller ones, ſuch as at firſt this was, (though now much extended both in bounds and power) to take their names from a Caſtle. For (to go no further) even with us, Richmondſhire was ſo called from the Caſtle of Richmond, there built by Alain, Earl of Bretagne; and Flint-ſhire took denomination from the Caſtle built of Flint-ſtones, by Henry the ſecond. We may ſee hereby, how much Cælius Secundus Curio was deceived, who writeth, that Alfonſo the third, having overthrown Mahomet Enaſer, King of Morocco, and put 60000 of his men to the Sword; aſſumed theſe Arms, that thus named this Kingdom, which was before called the Kingdom of the Baſtitanes; becauſe that Victory, like a ſtrong Caſtle, had confirmed his Eſtates unto him. Whereas, in caſe there were no other error in his ſuppoſition, the Baſtitanes were no Inhabitants of Caſtile, but of Valentia and Murcia, Provinces far enough off from the Old Caſtile, at the firſt taking of that name. And for the former Etymologie, it appeareth moſt evidently, in that the people are by the Latins called Caſtellani; the Country, Caſtella: the ſame name with thoſe elder Caſtellani which inhabited Catalogne. But not to ſtand upon the name, certain it is, that the Inhabitants hereof, having been conquered by the Romans, and made a part of their Empire, fell by degrees to the Alani, and from them to the Goths, as hath been ſhewed already on ſome other occaſion. From them extorted by the Moors, with the reſt of Spain: recovered, foot after foot, by the Kings of Leon; governed under them, at firſt, by Provincial Earls, Commanders of ſo many Caſtles in the Country of the Vaccæi, fortified and defended againſt the Moors. Ordogno the ſecond, harbouring ſome ſuſpicions againſt theſe Earls, cauſed them all to be cruelly murdered. The people upon this, revolted from the Crown of Leon; governed firſt by Judges, then by Earls again, as an abſolute and free Eſtate. Ferdinand Gonſales, the firſt that re-aſſumed the title of Earl of Caſtile, coming to the Court of Leon with a brave Retinue, ſold to King Sancho an Hawk, and an Horſe, of excellent kinds, for a ſum of money; conditioned, that if the money were not paid at the time agreed on, it ſhould be doubled, and redoubled, till the Debt were ſatiſ-satisfied. This money, by the negligence of the King's Officers, who looked upon the Contract as a matter of jest, became so great a sum, that the King, to satisfie Gonsales, made him the first Proprietary-Earl of Castile, Anno 939; releasing that Estate from all acknowledgment to the Kings of Leon. Nugna, or Elvira, as some call her, Sister and Heir of Garcias the fourth Earl hereof, brought this Estate by marriage to Sancho, sirnamed the Great, King of Navarre, Anno 1028; by whom it was erected into a Kingdom, and given by him to Ferdinand his second Son, Anno 1034. Kings of most note and observation in the course of their story, are 1 Ferdinand their first King, who added Leon to his Kingdom, in right of Sancha his Wife, Sister and Heir of Veramund the last King thereof, of the race of Pelagius. 2 Alfonso the first, who subdued the Kingdom of Toledo, adding it, by the name of New Castile, unto his Estate. 3 Alfonso the Fourth, who not only conquered from the Crown of Navarre, whatsoever lay on the Castilian side of the River Iberus, but also the whole Countries of Alava and Guipuscoa, all which he united to Castile: but grew so great, that he caused himself to be solemnly crowned Emperor of Spain, in the Cathedral Church of Leon, by the Arch-bishop of Toledo; and gave his Son Sancho the title of King of Castile, in his own life-time. The chief of the Confederates against Mahomet Enasar, the Miramomoline of Morocco, whom he vanquished in the famous battel of Muradal, or Sierra Moracca, Anno 1214. 4 Ferdinand the third, who incorporated Leon and Castile into one Estate, and added the Kingdoms of Murcia, Corduba, and Sevil, taken from the Moors, unto his Dominions. 5 Alfonso the fifth of Castile, and the ninth of Leon, elected Emperor of the Germans, but more famous for his eminence in Astronomy; the Author of the Alfonsine Tables: compiled by many Learned Men assembled together, by his means, in the City of Toledo, where, in the compiling of it, it is affirmed by a Spanish Writer, that he spent more than the Revenues of the Pope in ten years did amount unto. 6 Sancho the 3d, son of this Alfonso, the Author of the great breach in the Line of Castile: for having the hap to survive Ferdinand, sirnamed de la Cerde, his elder Brother; he made himself so strong a Party in his Father's Life-time, that he succeeded in the Kingdom, depriving his Brother's Children of their Right therein, though many attempts were made, in their favour, afterwards. Don Alfonso, eldest Son of which Ferdinand married into France, was Father of Lewis Earl of Clermont; who by Leonora de Gusman, a Daughter of the now house of Medina Sedonia, was Father of Lewis, John, and Isabella de la Cerde, (in which last, the Male-Issue being quite extinct) the whole Rights of that Line remained: brought by her to her Husband Bernard, a base Son of the House of Foix, created by King Henry the second, the first Earl of Medina Celi; whose Son, called Gaston, left the name of Foix, and took unto himself that of de la Cerde, continued ever since in his Posterity advanced unto the honour of Dukes of Medina Celi, in the person of Lewis the first Earl) the better to preserve in memory their descent from, and lawful title to that Crown. And for the better keeping and preserving of their claim unto it, it is affirmed to be the custom of this House, once, at the least, in the life-time of every Duke, to put up a Petition to the King then reigning, for restitution to the Throne; which the King receiving as of course, doth of course subscribe this answer to it, viz. No est lugar; that is to say, there is no room for him. 8 Pedro the Cruel, driven out of this Kingdom by Henry of Transtamare, his Brother: restored again, for a time, by the valour of Edward the Black-Prince, Son of Edward the third. 9 John, Son of Henry of Transtamare, who married his Son Henry, to Katharine Daughter of John of Gaunt, by Constance, one of the Daughters of Don Pedro the Cruel; so uniting both Titles into one. The times in which these Princes, and the rest, did reign; appeareth in these Catalogues of the Earls and Kings of Castile, which are as follow.

The Earls of Castile.

A. Chr.
910	1	Ferdinand Gonsales, the first Proprietary Earl.
932	2	Garcias, Son of Ferdinand.
980	3	Sancho, or Sanctius, Son of Garcias.
1018	4	Garcias II. Son of Sancho, slain by Treason; without issue.
1028	5	Nugna, or Elvira, the Sister of Garcias the second, married to Sancho King of Navarre, Father of Ferdinand, made by him the first King of Castile.

The Kings of Castile.

A. Chr.
1036	1	Ferdinand, King of Castile by the gift of his Father, and of Leon, in right of his Wife. 33
1067	2	Sancho, Son of Ferdinand, King of Castile only; his younger Brother Alfonso succeeding in Leon. 6.
1073	3	Alfonso, the Brother of Sancho, King of Leon, and afterwards of Castile also. Urraca, Queen of Castile and Leon.
1108	4	Alfonso, II. King of Navarre and Aragon. 15.
1122	5	Alfonso III. King of Castile & Leon, the Son of Urraca, by Raymond of Burgundy, her former Husband.
1157	6	Sancho II. the elder Son of Alfonso the third; his younger Brother Ferdinand succeeding in Leon. 2.
1159	7	Alfonso IV. sirnamed the Noble, Son of Sancho the 2d. 55.
1214	8	Henry, Son of Alfonso the fourth. 3.
1217	9	Ferdinand II. Son of Alfonso the ninth of Leon, and of Berenguela the Sister of Henry, succeeded his Father in Leon also, An. 1230; the Kingdoms never since disjoyned, though the title of Leon in short time became discontinued.
1252	10	Alfonso V. sirnamed the Wise, Son of Ferdinand the second, King of Castile and Leon, and Emperor Elect. 32.
1283	11	Sancho III. the second Son of Alfonso the fifth; the children of Ferdinand de la Cerde, his elder Brother, being set beside. 12.
1195	12	Ferdinand III. of Castile, and IV. of Leon, Son of Sancho the third. 18.
1312	13	Alfonso, VI. Son of Ferdinand. 38.
1350	14	Pedro, the Son of Alfonso, for his infinite Tyrannies, sirnamed the Cruel. 18.
1368	15	Henry II. the Bastard-son of Alfonso the 6th, Earl of Transtumare. 11.
1379	16	John, the Son of Henry the second. 11.
1390	17	Henry III. Son of John, and Husband of Katharine, the Daughter of John of Gaunt, and the Lady Constance, one of the Daughters of King Pedro. 17.
1406	18	John II Son of Henry and Katherine, 48.
1454	19	Henry IV. Son of John the second. 21.
1478	20	Isabel, Sister of Henry the Fourth, married to Ferdinand V. Son of John King of Aragon.

Of whose Acts, and Issue, we will make more ample mention when we ſhall come to ſpeak of the Monarchy of Spain, which began in them, and hath been ſince continued in their poſterity.

The chief Orders of Knighthood within theſe Kingdoms of Caſtile and Leon, long ſince united into one, were Three in all; partly Religious, partly Military; and one Order of Religious perſons, not known in any Country but Spain alone.

This of the laſt ſort, is called the Order of Mercy, or de la mercede; firſt inſtituted by King James of Aragon, in the chief Church of Barcelone, Anno 1218. Admitted afterwards into the Kingdoms of Caſtile, whereof moſt eſteem; but ſo, that in remembrance of their firſt foundation, they ſtill retain their ancient Arms, which are thoſe of Aragon, viz. a Croſs Argent, and four Bends Gules, in a field Or. Their habit white; The Rule of their Order, that of St. Auguſtine: the practice and profeſſion of it, to gather Alms amongſt the People wherewith to redeem ſuch Chriſtian Captives, as either by Piracy, the chance of War, or by ſome other means are enthralled to the Turks and Moors: ſending their Agents yearly to Algiers and Feſſe, to inform them of the eſtate, age, and quality, of each ſeveral Captive, and after, on inſtruction from the Brethren of this Society, to deal in the redemption of them. A buſineſs which they manage with great care and Faithfulneſs, and are accordingly truſted with great ſums of money, given and collected to that end: few men here dying, who give not ſome Legacy or other to this pious uſe. Nor are the Kings behind-hand in ſo good a work, promoting it with a liberal purſe, and giving as much ordinarily out of his Eſtate, as the Brethren have collected in all Spain beſides. And to ſay truth, it doth concern him more than others, becauſe they are his Subjects chiefly, for whoſe redemption the whole ſum is given and gathered: Religious perſons are ranſomed firſt, and then the Laity; the young and ſerviceable men, before old and impotent: if after the Redemption of the Spaniſh Captives, they have any ſtock left, they keep it not till another year, but therewith ranſom Captives of ſome other Nations. So that this ſeemeth to ſucceed in the place of the now antiquated and uſeleſs Orders of Knighthood, which were heretofore of great authority and power: that is to ſay,

1 Of Calatrava, a Town of the Kingdom of Toledo, abandoned by the Templers, (to whom the defence thereof belonged) on the approach of the Moors, made good by Raymond the Abbot of Piſuria, and the Monks of Ciſteaux, Anno 1157. For the future preſervation and defence whereof, they ordained this Order; which in proceſs of time grew to ſuch eſtate, that beſides eight fair Priories, they enjoyed in Spain no leſs than 61 Towns and Caſtles. The Knights hereof do wear for their habit, a White Robe, with a Red Croſs upon their breaſts; confirmed by Pope Alexander the third, An. 1164, under the Diſcipline of Ciſteaux. Their reſidence is at the Caſtle Covo; bound, by their Order, to ſerve in the Wars againſt the Infidels: upon which ſervices, they have been ſometimes in the field with three hundred great Horſe.

2 Of St. Jago, inſtituted by the Canons of Eloy, and certain Gentlemen of Caſtile, in imitation of the Order of Calatrava; for the ſecurity and entertainment of Chriſtian Pilgrims, travelling to the Shrine of St. Jago; confirmed by the ſaid Pope Alexander the third, Anno 1175, under the Rule of St. Auguſtine. Their Habit is a White Robe, with a Red Croſs like a Sword: the companions of it, according to the firſt Founders, being part Eccleſiaſtical, and part Secular: whereof theſe laſt are only tied unto the vow of conjugal Chaſtity. They grew in little time unto ſuch eſteem, that beſides two Colledges or Seminaries in Salamanca, and a Colledg in Sevil; they had four Hermitages in the Mountains, and five Hoſpitals well endowed for the entertainment of Strangers; together with 90 Towns and Caſtles in ſeveral parts of the Kingdom. The whole number of Gentlemen, beſides Friers ſerving in their Cures, and other Miniſters, are above 600. Their firſt reſidence, at the Hoſpital of St. Mark, in the Suburbs of Leon, on a diſlike with Ferdinand the ſecond King of Leon, removed to Ucles in Caſtile, beſtowed upon them by Alfonſo the 4th. Upon this occaſion being divided, they have ſince two Maſters, or Commendadors, the one called the Commendador of Leon, who reſides at St. Marks; the other the Commendador of Caſtile, who reſides at Ucles.

3 Of Alcantara, a Town of Extremadura, defended by Ferdinand of Leon, againſt the Moors; where he framed this Order, confirmed by Pope Lucio, A. 1183. Others aſcribe it to Alfonſo, the Succeſſor of that Ferdinand, An. 1217; by whom endowed with all the Lands of the Calatravians, in the Realm of Leon: but acknowledging the ſuperiority thereof, and under the ſame Rule of Ciſteaux. Their device at firſt was a Pear-tree Vert, in a field Or, to which hanged a pair of Shackles, as a ſign of their ſubjection to them of Calatrava: changed, Anno 1411, to a White Robe, and a Green Croſs on their breaſts.

I omit here the Order of the Dove and Reaſon, inſtituted by King John of Caſtile, becauſe of ſmall eſteem, and but ſhort continuance: nor ſhall I now ſpeak any thing of the Arms of the Kingdom, which we have ſeen before on another occaſion. And ſo much for Caſtile, the firſt of thoſe Three greater Kingdoms of Spain, under which all the reſt are now reduced; containing in this Continent all the Provinces and Eſtates before deſcribed; amounting to two third parts of the whole: and many large Eſtates elſewhere, as ſhall be ſhewed hereafter in its proper place. Paſs we on, next, to Portugal; the ſecond, in repute, of the ſaid three Kingdoms; not ſo much for the largeneſs of the Territories which it had on the Continent, as for its great Appendixes in all other parts of the World.

11. The Kingdom of Portugal.

THE Kingdom of PORTUGAL containeth, 1 Portugal it ſelf: 2 Algarve, or Regnum Algarbiorum: and 3 the Tercera's, or Iſles of Azores: theſe laſt not reckoned parts of Spain, by any of our Writers, either old or new; but made by us a part hereof, becauſe ſituate over againſt Portugal, one of the firſt additions which was made unto it on the Ocean: and finally, becauſe I know not under what Head to reduce them better.

And firſt, for PORTUGAL it ſelf, it is bounded on the North, with the Rivers Minio and Avia, which part it from Gallicia; on the South, with Algarve; on the Weſt, with the Atlantick Ocean: and on the Eaſt, with the two Caſtiles, and Extremadura, from which divided by a Line drawn from Ribadania, ſtanding on the Avia, to Badaios, on the Anas, or Guadiana. Extended on the Sea-coaſt from North to South, 400 miles: the breadth of it, in the broadeſt place (not taking in the Iſlands into the accompt) 100 miles; in the narroweſt, 80: the whole circumference, 879 miles: and in that compaſs, 1460 Pariſhes.

It was firſt called Luſitania, from the Luſitani, the chief Inhabitants thereof; and took the name of Portugal either either from the Haven or Port of Cale, now called Caia, ſometimes a very rich and flouriſhing Emporie; or rather from the Haven-Town of Porto, at the mouth of Duerus; where the Gauls (or the French rather) uſed to land their Merchandiſe: which was therefore called Portus Gallorum; and which Town was given in Dower with Tereſa, the Daughter of Alfonſo the ſixth, to Henry of Lorreign, with the title of Earl of Portugal. Whoſe Succeſſors coming to be Kings, extended this name to all thoſe Countries which they got from the Moors, as it continueth at this day.

The Air is very healthy, the Country for the moſt part hilly, and bare of Corn; ſupplied from France, and other parts of the North; that which they have, being as good as any in Europe, if not better. The ſoil, and people, in all places, not rich alike. For where the ſoil is richeſt, (as in the parts lying on the North of Duero) there the people are pooreſt; in regard of the great diſtance thereof from Lisbon; and ſo not benefitted by the Trading of that wealthy City. And where the ſoil is pooreſt, there the people be richeſt, helping themſelves by trade and manufactures; eſpecially by making of Silks and Salt, ſufficient for themſelves, and for other Countries. But where there is a defect of Corn, that defect is otherwiſe ſufficiently recompenſed with abundance of Honey, Wine, Oyl, Allom, Fruits, Fiſh, Salt, white Marble, and ſome Mines of Silver, &c.

The people of a more plain and ſimple behaviour, than the reſt of Spain; and (if we believe the old Proverb) none of the wiſeſt. For, whereas the Spaniards are ſaid to ſeem wiſe, and yet to be Fools, the French to ſeem Fools, and yet to be wiſe; the Italians both to ſeem wiſe, and to be ſo: the Portugals are affirmed to be neither wiſe indeed, nor ſo much as to ſeem ſo. But little different from which, is the Spaniſh By-word, which telleth us of the Portugals, that they are Pocos y Locos; few, and fooliſh: which others vary with the addition of another part of their Character; ſaying, they are Pocos, Sotos, y Devotos, Few and Fooliſh, but withal Devout. They have great animoſities (if it be not grown to an Antipathie) againſt the Caſtilians, for bereaving them of their Kingdom and Liberty, though both, of late, recovered by them: but, when moſt Fools, were counted for good Seafaring-men, and happy in the diſcovery of Foreign Nations.

Rivers it hath of all ſorts, both great and ſmall, almoſt 200. Thoſe of moſt note, 1 Minius, full of Red-Lead (from hence called Minium by the Latins), navigable with ſmall Veſſels 100 miles.. 2 Lethes, now Lavada. 3 Muliadas, now Mondego. 4 Tagus. 5 Duerus, and 6 Anas: theſe three laſt common alſo to the reſt of Spain; Anas, or Guadiana, paſſing by Portugal but for 7 Leagues only; Tagus for 18, and Duero for 80. None of them navigable for any long ſpace, by Ships of burden; the Rivers of all Spain being generally ſwift of courſe, reſtrained within narrow Chanels, banked on both ſides with very ſteep Rocks, which make them incommodious for Navigation: inſomuch that it is reckoned for a great Prerogative of Tagus, and the Realm of Portugal, that this River is there navigable with great Ships, fifteen or twenty miles within the Continent. But here that want is ſomewhat tolerably ſupplied with three excellent Havens: 1 That of Lisbon upon Tagus: and 2 Porto, on Duero, to the North of Lisbon; of which, more anon: 3 of Setaval, South of Lisbon, ſituate on a Golf of 20 miles in length, and 3 in breadth: a place of principal importance to thoſe parts of the Realm. Rivers, however, of great fame, according to whoſe courſe, the whole Country was divided, by the Romans, into Ulteriorem, lying beyond Duero, Northwards. 2 Citeriorem, on the South of Tagus: and 3 Interamnem, betwixt both.

Principal Cities of this part, 1 Lisbon, ſeated upon Tagus, a famous City for Traffick; the Portugals in all their Navigations ſetting ſail from hence. By the Latins called Olyſippo, and Ulyſippo; becauſe, as ſome ſay, Ulyſſes built it, coming hither in the courſe of his ten years travel: a thing meerly fabulous, it being no where found that Ulyſſes did ever ſee this Ocean, but like enough it is, that this Town being ſeated conveniently for Navigation, and inhabited by Seafaring-men, might at the firſt be conſecrated to the memory of ſo great a Traveller: as Athens, being a place of Learning, was dedicated to Minerva, whom the Greeks call Athene. It is in compaſs 7 miles, and containeth upwards of 30 Pariſhes, and in them 20000 houſes: all of neat and elegant building. Turrets and Towers it numbreth upon the Walls, about 76; Gates toward the Sea-ſhore, 22. And towards the Continent, ſituate upon five ſmall Hills, betwixt which is a Valley which runs down to the River: on the higheſt Hill, an ancient Caſtle, not ſtrong, but by reaſon of the ſituation, ſerving now only for a Priſon for men of quality: the entry of the River being defended by the Caſtle of Caſcais; and nearer to the City, by the Fort of St. Julians, and the Rock of Belem; munitioned with 20 pieces of Ordnance. This City heretofore was honoured with the Seat of the Kings, ſince of the Vice-Roys, an Archbiſhops-See, the Staple of Commodities for all the Kingdom, and thought to be more worth than the whole Realm beſide, ſaid, by ſome French Writers, to be the beſt peopled City in Chriſtendom, next unto Paris; and by Botero an Italian, made to be the fourth Mart-Town of Europe; the other three being Conſtantinople, Paris, Moſco. In which they do great wrong to London, as populous, and well-traded, as the beſt of them all. 2 Santaren, on the Tagus, ſo called from S. Irene, a Nun of Tomar, (a Monaſtery, in which the old Kings of Portugal did uſe to be crowned) here martyred by the Moors; by Ptolemy called Scabaliſcus then a Roman Colony. 3 Sintra, upon the main Atlantick, at the end of huge Mountains, called Montes Lunæ; whither by reaſon of the cool refreſhings from the Sea, and pleaſure of the Woods adjoining, the Kings of Portugal uſed to retire in the heats of Summer. 4 Conimbre, on both ſides the River Mondego, pleaſantly ſeated amongſt Vineyards, and Woods of Olives, a Biſhops-See, and an Univerſity; the Maſters whereof made the Commentary on moſt part of Ariſtotle, called from hence, Schola Conimbricenſis. Then on the North of the River Duero, betwixt that and Minio, are 5 Braga, by Ptolemy called Bracaria Auguſta, reckoned by Antonine for one of the four chief Cities in Spain, the Royal Seat, when time was, of the Suevian Kings, and now the See of an Archbiſhop, contending for the Primacy with him of Toledo. 6 Porto, the Haven of the Gauls, on the mouth of Duero. 7 Miranda, a Biſhops-See on the ſame River. 8 Bragance, the Duke whereof is ſo great a Prince, that it is thought a third part of the people of Portugal are his Vaſſals, and live on his Lands: originally deſcended from Alfonſo, natural Son to John the firſt; created by his Father, Earl of Borcellos, after Duke of Bragance; the later Dukes, ſince the time of King Emanuel, being withal of the right Royal Blood; two ſteps of main advantage to the Regal Throne, lately aſcended and obtained by John Duke of Bragance, now called John the 4th. And finally, on the South of Tagus, betwixt that and the Kingdom of Algarve, there is 9 Ebora, in the midſt of a large and ſpacious Plain, an Archbiſhops See, and an Univerſity; this laſt of the Foundation of King Henry the Cardinal. 10 Portelegre, a Biſhops-See. 11 Olivenca on the Guadiana. 12 Beia, by Pliny called Pax Julia, now Mean, and not very well inhabited; but anciently a Roman Colony, and one of the three Juridical Reſorts of Luſitania.

2. The Kingdom of ALGARVE lyeth on the South of Portugal, from which divided by a line drawn from Aſcorin, on the Weſtern Sea, to Odechore, a Caſtle on the Guadiana: on the Eaſt, bounded by Andaluſia; on the Weſt and South, by the main Atlantick. This is the moſt wild and deſert-part of all this Kingdom, barren and dry: peopled with few Towns, nor thoſe very populous: hilly and mountainous withal; but yielding, by the benefit of the Sea, a great Trade of Fiſhing; of Tunny eſpecially, whereof more caught upon this Coaſt, than in all the Kingdom.

The name is took from the Weſtern ſituation of it, for ſo the word Algarve ſignifieth in the Arabick, Tongue. The utmoſt end of it, called anciently, Promontorium Sacrum; now, the Cape of S. Vincent; becauſe the bones of S. Vincent, religiouſly preſerved by the Chriſtians, were here burnt and ſcattered about by the Moors. Places of moſt importance in it, 1 Niebla, the Seat of Aben Mefad, once a King of this Country. 2 Silvis, an Epiſcopal-See, ſeated in the In-land parts. 3 Villa nova, ſituate beyond the Cape. 4 Tavila, the Balſa; and 5 Faro, the Oſſonoba of Ptolemy; both noted Ports on the Atlantick. 6 Lagos, another Haven-Town alſo.

This Country, conquered by the Moors, with the reſt of Spain, in the diſtractions of their Power, was for a time under the Soveraignty and Command of the Kings of Sevil. Recovered from the Moors of Sevil, by the Kings of Morocco, it became ſubject unto them till they left this Country; and, after their retreat, was parcelled among many Princes. One of which, called Aben Mefad, reigning in Niebla, and the parts adjoyning, being diſpoſſeſſed of his Eſtate by Alfonſo the Wiſe, moſt of the other Towns and Princes ſubmitted to him, and became his Vaſſals, Anno 1257. More abſolutely ſubdued and made ſubject to the Crown of Portugal, by Alfonſo the third, Anno 1260; to whom the ſaid Alfonſo, the tenth of that name in Leon, and the fifth in Caſtile, had given the ſame in Dowry with Beatrix his Daughter. From which Marriage iſſued Dionyſius, or Denys, King of Portugal, the firſt that ever uſed the title of Rex Algarbiorum, Anno 1279.

3. The AZORES are certain Iſlands lying in the Atlantick Ocean, oppoſite to the City of Lisbon, from which diſtant but 250 Leagues. Situate betwixt the 38 and 40 degrees of Northern Latitude; and one of them in the firſt Longitude; which is commonly reckoned from theſe Iſlands, as being the moſt Weſtern part of the World, before the diſcovery of America.

They were thus called from the multitude of Goſhawks which were found there in the beginning; (the word Azor, in the Spaniſh Tongue, ſignifying a Goſhawk) though at this time there be none of them to be found. Called alſo, the Flemiſh Iſlands, becauſe firſt diſcovered by the Flemings; and the great numbers of them in the Iſle of Faial, (one of the chief of all the pack) where there are yet ſome Families which reſemble the Flemings both in their complexion and habit: and not far from the place of their abode, a Torrent, which the Spaniards call Riberados Flamengos, or the River of Flemings. They are alſo called the Tercera's, from Tercera the chief Iſle among them.

The Air of thoſe Iſlands is generally good, and ſubject unto few Diſeaſes, except that which the Portugals call the Blood; being an impoſthumation of the blood, breaking out at the eyes, or other parts of the body. Some other inconveniences they are ſubject to, proceeding from the humility of the place; the great winds and ſtorms, of ſuch a violent and ſtrange kind of working, that Bars of Iron as big as a man's arm, have in ſix years been worn as little as a Straw. All of them well ſtored with Fleſh, Fiſh, and other things neceſſary, except Salt and Oyl, with which they are furniſhed out of Portugal. Wines they have alſo for their own uſe, but not to be tranſported far, becauſe of their weakneſs: for which cauſe alſo, the richer men provide themſelves of Canary Wines, or thoſe of the Iſland of Madera. Of like nature is their Wheat, & other Fruits, which hold not good above a year. All of them ſubject unto Earthquakes, and ſome to breathings out of fire, which continually ſendeth forth ſuming-vapours. The chief Commodities which they tranſport unto other Countries, are Canary-Birds for Ladies, Oad for the Diers, Joyners-work, which they ſell to the Spaniards, and Beeves for the victualling of ſuch ſhips as come there to be victualled.

The Inhabitants are generally laborious, excellent Husbands on their grounds; inſomuch as they make Vines to grow out of Rocks: much given to Joynery; by which they make many pretty fancies, much eſteemed by the Spaniards, but not ſo expert at it, as thoſe of Nuremberg. They take great pains to teach their Cattel underſtanding; the Oxen being taught to know when their Maſter calleth them. In other things they conform to the Portugals, both in their Cuſtoms and Apparel; but with ſome ſmattring of the Fleming, which Nation they affect above any other.

The Iſlands, nine in number; and diſtinguiſhed by the ſeveral names of, 1 Tercera, 2 S. Michael, 3 Faial, 4 Gratioſa, 5 S. George, 6 Pico, 7 Corvo, 8 Flores, and 9 S. Maries; of which, S. Michael, and S. Maries, lye next to Spain; Tercera, on the North-weſt of thoſe, (by conſequence, the third in Order, whence it had the name) S. Georges, Gratioſa, Pico, Faial, on the Weſt of that; and finally, thoſe of Corvo, and Flores, neareſt to America.

1 TERCERA, the chief of all the reſt, 18 miles in compaſs; well ſtored with Peaches, Apples, Limons, Oranges: and for the Kitchin, with Turneps, Cabages, plenty of Pot-herbs, and as good Batato-roots, (which are the beſt food the people have) as any be in the world; but more eſteemed in Portugal, than they be in this Iſland, by reaſon of their great abundance. Here is alſo great quantity of the beſt kind of Woad, (which from hence is called Iland Woad) and a Plant about the height of a man, which bears no fruit; but hath a Root as profitable as thoſe that do, out of which the people draw a thin and tender film, wherewith they fill their Mattreſſes, inſtead of Feathers. Fowl enough for the uſe of man, and yet none of prey. No Port of any ſafety in it, but that of Angra; and that made ſafe by Art, and not by Nature: the whole begirt with Rocks, which ſtick out like a pointed Diamond, able to pierce the feet of any who ſhould venture over them. Places of moſt importance in it, 1 Praye, on the Sea-ſide, well walled, but not very well peopled. 2 S. Barbara, 3 S. Sebaſtians, 4 Gualne, and 5 Villa Nova, Burroughs of good note. 6 Angra, the chief, not of this Iſland only, but of all the nine: the Reſidence of the Governour, and an Archbiſhops-See, who hath in it his Cathedral-Church: ſeated on a convenient Bay, made in the form of a Creſcent, with two Promontories on each ſide, (like the two Horns of a half-Moon) bearing into the Sea; each Fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle for defence of the Haven: the Town it ſelf alſo well walled about, and environed with ſharp Rocks on all ſides. Both Town and Caſtle well garriſoned, and no leſs diligently guarded. This, in regard of its great ſtrength, and commdious Haven, is eſteemed the principal of theſe Iſlands, and communicates its name unto all the reſt; though neither neareſt unto Spain, nor the greateſt in compaſs.

2. S. MARIES, so called from the Saint (as S. Georges and S. Michaels are) unto which it is dedicated; is the most Southern of these Isles, and the next to Spain: twelve miles in circuit, inhabited by Spaniards only, and those much given unto the making of Earthen Vessels. So naturally fenced with Rocks, that it is, and may be easily kept by the Inhabitants, without the charge of a Garrison. The chief Town of it hath the name of S. Maries also, which it either giveth unto the Island, or borroweth from it.

3. S. MICHAELS, directly North of S. Maries, from which, little distant; the biggest in the whole pack, as being 20 miles in length, though the breadth not answerable: much subject unto Earth quakes and fiery vapours of most note amongst our modern Geographers, who have removed hither the first Meridian (by which they divide the World into East and West) from the Canaries, or Fortunate Islands; where it was fixed in the time of Ptolemy, and others of the Ancient Writers.

And this remove seems countenanced even by Nature it self; it being observed, that the Compass when it cometh under the Meridian, drawn through this Isle, hath little or no variation at all, but pointeth almost directly towards the North: whereas in all other places, or less Meridians, East and West, it pointeth not so directly North, but more or less to the North east, or the North-west, which the Mariners call the Variation, or the North-easting, and the North westing, of the Compass. And yet it's observed of late, that there is some more sensible variation of it in this Isle of S. Michael, than in that of Corvo; which therefore is conceived more fit for the first Meridian.

The chief Town hereof, besides many Burroughs and lesser Hamlets, Punta del Gada, seated upon a dangerous Sea, and without any Port; yet more frequented by Strangers, than the Port of Angra, because here they may go in and out as they please; but not so in the other.

4 FAYAL, 17 or 18 miles in length; plentifully provided with all things necessary for the life of man, and well furnished with Woad, for which Commodity, much frequented by the Merchants of England. The chief Town of it, Dorta; defended with a Castle, and that guarded by Spaniards: both Town and Island taken by Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1597. This Action was called the Island-Voyage; undertaken as well to divert the War which the Spaniards threatned to bring to our own doors; as, by seizing some of those Islands, to intercept the Spanish Fleets in their return, and to hinder them in their setting out: by which means, wanting their Indian Gold, they might be brought to better terms with their Neighbour-Nations. And though the English were not able to hold it long, yet it was said, that the Booty got in this Expedition, amounted to 400000 Crowns; besides the honour of beating the Spaniard upon his own ground. It took this name from its abundance of Beeches.

5 GRATIOSA, not above five or six Leagues in compass; but so well furnished with Fruits, that they send much yearly to Tercera; inhabited by Portugals only, but so poor, that they are not able to bear the charge of a Garrison. The chief Town of it called La Plaia.

6 S. GEORGES, twelve miles long, about three in breadth; mountainous, and full of Forests: but those Forests so well stored with Cedars, that they use them many times for Shipping, and sometimes for Fewel. The chief Town of it, called S. Georges, as the Island is.

7 PICO, lyeth on the South of the Isle of S. George, and took this name from an high Hill, in the form of a Pyramid, which the Portugals generally call a Pike, or Pico. Replenished with Fruits, some Cedars, and a tree called Teixo, of great bulk, and as much beauty; the wood thereof, exceeding hard, red within, and waved; so admirably beautiful, that it is allowed only to the King's Officers, the other Subjects being interdicted the use of it, (but on special license) by a publick Edict. In bigness, it is second only unto that of S. Michael, if not equal to it; hardly so much in length, but of greater breadth. The chief Towns of it, 1 S. Sebastians, 2 Calota ne Nossaia, both upon the Sea, and in the East parts of the Island.

8 FLORES, directly East from Fayal, so called from its abundance of Flowers, (as Gratiosa from the like flourishing Verdure of it) is in compass not above 8 miles; but plentifully furnished with Cattel, and good grounds to feed them. The chief Town of it, Santa Crux. The Isle (though small, yet) twice as big as the Isle of 9 CORVO, so called from its abundance of Crows, situate on the North hereof, and but little distant: both very unsafe, and both most miserable poor, by reason of the many Pirates which lye betwixt them, to intercept such ships as trade towards America. But this, though much smaller than the others, may in time be of more esteem than any of them, in regard it is conceived to be the most natural place for the first Meridian, as before was noted: the Needle here pointing directly to the North, without Variation. which whether it proceed from some secret inclination of the Load-stone to that part of the World, more in this place than any other; or that being situate between the two great Continents of Europe and America, it is drawn equally towards both, but the magnetical vertue of the Earth it self, I leave to be disputed by more able Judgments.

These Islands were first discovered and subdued by the Portugals, under the conduct, or by the direction of Prince Henry, Son of John the first; who first made the Portugals in love with the Seas. And they were also the last Members of the Crown of Portugal, which held out for Don Antonio the Bastard, against Philip the second of Castile: against whom the Island of Tercera was for a while gallantly defended by Emanuel de Silva, with the help of the French; but taken at the last by the Marques of Santa Cruz, and the French, after promise of life, cruelly murdered in cold blood. After which, garrisoned at the first by none but Portugals. But upon some commotion hapning in that Kingdom, it was thought fit, on some reason of State, to make sure of the best Islands, by Spanish Garrisons; which accordingly were put into the Castle of Angra, in Tercera; the Towns of Punta del Gada, in S. Michaels; and Dorta in Fayal. And to say truth, the Spaniards had good reason to be careful of them; these Islands being of such importance, as without them the Navigation of the Indies, Æthiopia, Brasil, and New Spain, could not be continued: because the Fleets which come from those Countries to Lisbon, or Sevil, must, in a manner, of necessity touch upon some of them; as well in following their course, if they come from the West, as in recovering such Winds as are useful to them, if they came from the East.

But to return again to the main Land of Portugal, know, that the ancient Inhabitants of it, were the Lusitania dwelling betwixt Tagus and Duerus, the old Lusitani, being bounded within those Rivers; the Celtici, and Turditani, who took up also some part of Bætica, dwelling on the South of Tagus: and the Gallaici Bracarii, (so called to difference them from the Gallaici Lucenses, who possessed Gallicia) on the North of Duerus. Subjected first unto the Romans; by whom accounted one of the three parts of Spain. In the declining of their Empire conquered by the Alani; and from them taken by the Sucvians; who, for a time, made the City of Braga the Royal Seat of their Kings. The Suevians loſt it to the Goths; and the Goths, to the Moors, as hath been ſhewn already in their ſeveral ſtories. Recovered, in part, by the Kings of Leon; to whom that part continued ſubject, till given by Alfonſo the ſixth of Leon, in Dowry with his baſe Daughter Teraſa, to Henry of Lorrein, (whoſe vertue and good ſervice, merited no leſs reward) Anno 1099. Who having fortunately governed it by the title of an Earl, for the ſpace of 12 years, left his Son, Alfonſo, Heir both to his Fortunes and Vertues; honoured with the title of King of Portugal, by the Soveraigns of Leon, for his moſt gallant demeanor ſhewn in the Battel of Obrique, Anno 1139. He had, before the Aſſumption of the Regal Stile, ruled 27 years with a great deal of honour; and he reigned here with no leſs, 45 years after that Aſſumption; reverenced by his friends, and feared by his enemies. So that the whole time of his ſitting in the Chair of State, was 72 years: a longer enjoying of Soveraignty, than any Prince ſince the firſt beginning of the Roman Monarchy. His Succeſſors we ſhall have in order in the following Catalogue. But we muſt firſt tell you, as in other places of this Work, that the Princes of moſt note in the whole Succeſſion, are, 1 Henry of Lorrein, (whom ſome make a Burgundian, of the City of Beſancon) who coming into Spain to the Holy Wars, and deſerving nobly in the ſame, was honoured by Alfonſo the ſixth, with his Daughter Teraſa, and the Town of Porto for her Dower; given to him with the title of the Earl of Portugal. He extended his Eſtate as far as Conimbre, on the South of the River Duero; that River being before that time, the utmoſt bound of it that way. 2 Alfonſo the firſt King, who took Lisbon from the Moors, Anno 1247. and made it the Seat of his Kingdom; which he extended Southward, as far as Algarve. 3 Alfonſo the 3d, who partly by Conqueſt, and partly by Marriage, added Algarve to his Eſtate, getting it by the Sword, and confirming it to him by the Bed. He alſo did prevail ſo far with Alfonſo the Wiſe, (never the wiſer for ſo doing) as to get his Realm diſcharged of the Homage which formerly had been done to the Kings of Leon, An. 1270. 4 Alfonſo the 4th, confederate with the fifth of the ſame name in Caſtile, againſt Albozcen the Miramomolin of Africk, at the fight near the River Salado, not far from Tariff; where they diſcomfited the vaſt Army of Moors, conſiſting of 470000 Horſe and Foot. 5 John the firſt, the baſe ſon of Pedro the firſt; ſetting aſide the Lady Beatrix, Queen of Caſtile, the Daughter of Ferdinand the firſt, and the Lawful Children of his Father, being many in number; by force and colour of Election, obtained the Kingdom. Fortified it by his marriage with the Lady Philip, Daughter of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaſter; a ſtrong Competitor, at that time, for the Crown of Caſtile: on which relation, this King, the four Kings next ſucceeding, and two of this Kings younger Sons, were made Knights of the Garter. 6 Edward the ſon and ſucceſſor of John the firſt; of whom there goes a ſtory, that on the day of his Coronation, he was adviſed by a Jew, (one of his Phyſicians) learned in Aſtrology, to defer the Ceremony until noon, in regard he found by his Art, that if they did proceed unto it in that conjuncture, his reign would be very ſhort, and full of trouble. But the King, either out of magnanimity, or contempt of that Art, going on with the Ceremony, the Jew's Prediction was found true; for he reigned not fully five years, and with ill ſucceſs in his attempts againſt the Moors. 7 Henry Duke of Viſco, (Viſcontinus the Latins call it) the ſecond ſon of John the firſt, created Knight of the Garter, by King Henry the ſixth, An. 1444. By whoſe encouragement and example, the Portugueze began to be affected to Foreign Voyages: diſcovering in his time, (and, for the moſt part, under his conduct alſo) the Iſlands of Azores, Madera, Holy-Port, thoſe of Capo Verde, and a great part of the coaſt of Africk, as far as Guinea. He dyed Anno 1465. 8 Alfonſo the fifth, who warring on the Moors in Africk, took from them the ſtrong Towns of Tangier, Alcaſer, and Azilla. 9 John the ſecond, under whoſe reign the Portugals fully ſetled themſelves in Guinea, and the Realms of Congo; diſcovering all the Coaſts and Iſles of Africk, (not before diſcovered) as far as to the Cape of good hope, Anno 1487: planting and fortifying as they paſſed; the whole Diſcovery of Africk, the Eaſt-Indies, and Brazil, being perfected in the Reign of King 10 Emanuel; under whom alſo they diſcomfited great Armies of the Turks and Sultans of Egypt; bringing by Sea the riches of the Eaſt, into the Weſt. 11 Sebaſtian, the Grandchild of King John, ſon of Emanuel, embarking himſelf unadviſedly in the Wars of Africk, loſt his life (as it is generally ſuppoſed) at the battel of Alcaſar, in which three Kings fell in one day. But many of the Portugals are of opinion, that he was not killed, but that for ſhame and ſorrow he returned not home; wandring from one place to another, and at laſt was found and avowed at Venice: thence carried to Naples, where he was kept three days in a dark Dungeon, without any ſuſtenance but a Knife and a Halter: brought into Spain by the King's Command, where at laſt he dyed. A man in whom ſo many circumſtances met, to make up a truth, that the very Spaniards uſed to ſay, that either he was the true Sebaſtian, or elſe the Devil in his likeneſs. But whether true or not, it is not now material; Death having put an end to that diſputation; though the controverſie which enſued upon his death, for the Crown of Portugal, be not yet decided. For, though King Philip the ſecond of Spain, ſucceeded in it next after Henry the Cardinal-King (who only came upon the ſtage, that the Competitors might have time to declare their titles); and claimed the Crown as eldeſt Heir-male, and neareſt Kinſman to King Henry: yet all the World was not well ſatisfied in the Juſtice and Equity of his Demands. In the carrying on of which Affair, he ſeemed to deal very candidly to the eyes of men, not biaſſed by their proper Intereſs: offering to ſubmit his Title to a Diſputation; profeſſing, that the Laws of Portugal were more favourable to him, than the Law of Caſtile; and openly acknowledging; that if he ſhould chance to dye before the ſaid Henry, his eldeſt Son, as being a degree further off, would come behind ſome others of the Pretendants to it, of whom himſelf had the precedence. But finding nothing done by Henry, and meaning to make ſure work after his deceaſe, (Antonio the Baſtard having got poſſeſſion of Lisbon, and taking on himſelf as King, by a popular and tumultuous Election) he raiſed an Army under the command of Ferdinand de Toledo, Duke of Alva, and ſubdued all that ſtood againſt him; Katharine the Dutcheſs of Bragance, Daughter of Prince Edward, ſurrendring alſo all her intereſs and pretenſions to him; ſo entring by a mixt title of Deſcent and Arms, Anno 1580. Threeſcore years it was peaceably enjoyed by the Kings of Spain, when ſuddenly diſpoſſeſſed by a potent Faction, appearing for John Duke of Bragance, deſcended from the youngeſt ſon of King Emanuel: which wrought ſo cunningly and ſucceſsfully in his behalf, (by the great wit and under hand practices of Cardinal Richelieu, and others, Miniſters of the French) that the King of Spain was ſooner diſſeized of Portugal, than he heard of any plot or practice ſet on foot againſt him, An. 1639. In which it is to be obſerved, that as King Philip the ſecond, for the better obtaining of this Crown, had embroyled the French, engaging that King in a bloody War againſt the Proteſtants of that Kingdom; to make him ſure enough from troubling him in his preſent Enterpriſe: ſo the French Miniſters had cauſed a revolt in Catalogne; to the end, that when the King of Spain was buſied in reducing that Province, the Portugals might have opportunity to redeem themſelves from the power of the Spaniards; whom the Antipathy betwixt the Nations made leſs pleaſing to them. Nor was it a partial defection only, or the loſs of Portugal, and no more: but a general falling off of the whole Eſtate in Africk, Aſia, America, in the Iſles and Continents: the Acceſſories (excepting only the Town of Ceuta in Barbary, and ſome of the Tercera's) going the ſame way as the Principal did. And here methinks that grave and deliberate Nation of the Spaniards may be juſtly taxed for committing a greater Solœciſm in point of State, than ever people did before them; in that, having got the full and peaceable poſſeſſion of the Crown of Portugal, and all the out-parts and Members of it; they continued all the Garriſons and ſtrong Holds of the whole Eſtate, in the hands of the Natives. By means whereof, when Portugal it ſelf fell off from the King of Spain, the Provinces and Plantations did the like, without any hæſitancie, which, had ſome of the chief Pieces in every Province, Factory, and Plantation, been brought by little and little (if not all at once) into the power of the Caſtilians, might have been eaſily prevented. Nor hath the Spaniard hitherto attempted any thing material, for the recovery of that Kingdom: having been ever ſince ſo over-laid by the French in Catalogne, Navarre, Biſcay, Flanders, Artoys, and Italy; that he hath not had much leiſure to attend that buſineſs. But leaving him and them to their own affairs, it is time to repreſent you with a Catalogue of

as

The Kings of Portugal.

1367	9	Ferdinand, the Son of Pedro, the laſt King of the lawful Iſſue of Henry of Lorrein. 18.
1385	10	John the baſe Son of Pedro, of whom ſufficiently before. 48.
1433	11	Edward, the Son of John, and of the Lady Philip of Lancaſter. 5.
1438	12	Alfonſo V. the Son of Edward. 43.
1481	13	John II. the Son of Alphonſo the 5th. 14.
1495	14	Emanuel, the Nephew of Edward, by his Son Ferdinand, Duke of Viſeo. 26.
1521	15	John III. Son of Emanuel. 38.
1557	16	Sebaſtian, the Nephew of John the 3d, by his Son Don John; unfortunately ſlain in the Fields of Africk. 21.
1578	17	Henry the Cardinal, Son of King Emanuel, the laſt of the Male-Iſſue of Henry of Lorrein. 2.
1580	18	Philip the ſecond of Spain, Son of Charles K. of Caſtile, and Emperor, and of the Lady Mary his Wife, daughter of Emanuel. 18.
1598	19	Philip II. of Portugal, and III. of Spain.
1621	20	Philip III. of Portugal, and IV. of Spain. During his Reign, the Portugueze weary of the Spaniſh Government, choſe for their King
1636	21	John D. of Bragance, the IV. of that Name: a Prince of great Poſſeſſions, and of Royal Race, who hitherto hath peaceably enjoyed it.

Now that we may the better ſee by what title both the Kings of Spain, and the Dukes of Bragance, claim the Crown of Portugal; and what other pretenders there were to it, on the death of Sebaſtian; and what right as well Antonio the Baſtard, (but alledging a ſentence of Legitimation) as the Princes of the houſe of Savoy, did pretend unto it: we will lay down their Genealogies from King Emanuel, in this following Scheme.

Emanuel had theſe Children;

1 John, King of Portugal --- John, Prince of Portugal --- Sebaſtian K. of Portugal.
2 Lewis --- Don Antonio, a Baſtard --- Chriſtopher, and others.
3 Henry the Cardinal, King of Portugal.
4 Edward:
1 Marry, wedded to Alexander Duke of Parma --- Rainuccio Farneſis.
2 Kath. married to John D. of Bragance.
5 Mary, married to Charles the nſth, King of Caſtile --- Philip the II. K. of Spain.
6 Beatrix, married to Charles Duke of Savoy.

By this it may appear how the Claims are grounded; but whether Title will prevail, cannot now be told. Suffice it, that as the Royal Line of Portugal did begin in an Henry, ſo it ended in an Henry alſo; the Male-Line failing in the Perſon of the Cardinal-King, and the Crown falling (on whomſoever it ſhall faſten) on the Heirs of the Females.

The principal Orders of Knighthood in this Kingdom, are 1 Of Avis, ſo called from a Town of that name in Portugal, the Seat thereof: Founded by Sanctius or Sancho the firſt, in imitation of the Order of Alcantara, whoſe Green Croſs they wear; but equal to it neither in Power nor Riches.

2 Of CHRIST; inſtituted by Denys King of Portugal, who conferred on them all the Lands and Poſſeſſions of the exautorated Templers: confirmed by Pope John the twenty ſecond, Anno 1231. Their Robe is a Black Caſſock, under a White Surcoat; over which, a Red Croſs, ſtroaked in the midſt with a white Line: their Duty, to expel the Moors out of Betica, the next Neighbour to Portugal. To which Crown, they have added many gallant Countries in Aſia, Africk, and Braſil; and ſo improved their own Eſtates, that all the Iſles in the Atlantick do belong to them: beſides, the Rents of the Mine of St. George, in Guinea, amounting to 100000 Ducats of yearly income.

The Arms are Argent, on five Eſcocheons Azure, as many Bezants in Saltier of the firſt, pointed Sable, within a Border of Gules, charged with ſeven Towers, Or. Which five Eſcocheons were born in memory of five Kings, whom Alfonſo, the firſt King, ſlew at the battel of Obrique, Anno 1139; the Border, with the Towers or Caſtles, being added by Alfonſo the third, on his Inveſtiture into the Kingdom of Algarve, by Alfonſo the fifth of Caſtile, Anno 1257. whoſe Daughter Beatrix he then married, and ſo conceived himſelf to have ſome relation to the Arms of that Kingdom. And ſo proceed we on to thoſe Provinces which are under the Government of Aragon: the third great Body of this State.

and

12 VALENTIA.

VALENTIA hath on the Eaſt, the Mediterranean; on the Weſt, part of Caſtile, and Aragon; on the North, Catalogne; and Murcia upon the South. It is watered with the Rivers, 1 Xucar, called of old Sucron, and Surus. 2 Guadalonder, ſignifying a River of pure water: and 3 Millar.

This Country ſtandeth in the moſt temperate and pleaſing Air of all Spain, full of Gardens and places of wonderful delight, where groweth abundance of Rice, Sugar, Corn, and Fruit: garniſhed all the year long with ſweat ſmelling Flowers, and miraculouſly fruittul of Pomgranats, Limons, and other delicacies. It hath alſo Mines of Silver, at Buriol; of Gold, at Lodor; of Iron, at Finiſtrat; of Alabaſter, at Piacent; and of Allom, Lime, and Plaiſter, in many places. From thence alſo come the beſt Silks in the World, Cotton of Murcia, Crimſon, Scarlet, and other precious Colours, and rich Perfumes. Finally, all the Senſes of man may be delighted and refreſhed with that which comes from this happy Region; in quality, and ſweetneſs, much like that of Naples. The delicacy and great pleaſures whereof, have made the Inhabitants of it to be thought leſs Warlike than the other Spaniards. The Sheep of this Country alſo, bear the fineſt Fleeces of any in Spain: firſt ſtocked with Cotſwold Sheep from England, at the requeſt of John King of Aragon, Anno 1465, by the imprudent courteſie of King Edward the fourth.

Places of moſt note in it, are, 1 Alicante, a noted Port on the Mediterranean, whence come our true Alicant-Wines, made of their Juice of Mulberries; by Ptolemy called Illici is; by Mela, Ilice: from whence the Bay adjoyning is called Sinus Ilicitanus, now the Bay of Alicante. 2 Orivela, a Biſhops-See, on the River Segura, which divides the Province from Murcia. 3 Segorve, a Biſhops-See; by Ptolemy named Segobriga, the chief City, in old times, of the Celtiberi. 4 Xelva, ſuppoſed to be the Incibilis of Livy, where Scipio defeated Hanno and his Carthaginians. 5 Valentia, a fair, pleaſant, and well-traded City, the See of an Arch-biſhop, and giveth name to the whole Province: in its firſt glory, one of the chief Roman Colonies in theſe parts of Spain: in its laſt, the Royal Seat of the Mooriſh Kings of this Country. Situate three miles from the Mediterranean, not far from the mouth of the River Durcal, now a called Guadalander: and is by ſome ſaid to have been heretofore named Roma, which ſignifieth ſtrength. But when the Romans maſtered it, to diſtinguiſh it from their Rome, it was called Valentia; which in the Latin Tongue, is of the ſame ſignification with the Greek ἡ Ῥώμη. Here is an Univerſity in which Saint Dominick, the Father of the Dominicans, ſtudied. 6 Laurigi, now a ſmall Village: once a Town of great ſtrength, called Lauron: which Sertorius beſieged, took, and burned, even then when Pompey, whoſe Confederates the Lauronites were, ſtood with his whole Army nigh enough unto the Flame, to warm his hands; and yet durſt not ſuccour it. It was formerly named Sucron, after the name of the River: and is famous in Plutarch, for the victory which Sertorius here got of Pompey; Pompey's Army being not only overthrown, but himſelf, with life, hardly eſcaping. 8 Morvedre, ſituate in or near the place of the old Saguntum: the People whereof, when beſieged by Annibal, continued ſo obſtinate in the expectation of aid from Rome, that they choſe rather to burn themſelves, than yield up the Town: the occaſion of the ſecond War between Rome and Carthage. Firſt founded by the Zacynthians, and after this deſtruction of it, repaired, or re-edified, by the Romans, (they could not poſſibly do leſs) by whom made a Colony. 9 Gandia, which gives the title of a Duke to the Houſe of Borgia, and was the ſtyle of Franciſco Borgia, the eldeſt ſon of Pope Alexander the ſixth, (of this noble Family) called commonly in Guicciardine) by the name of the Duke of Gandy. 10 Denia, ſeated on the brink of the Mediterranean, over which it hath a goodly proſpect; the Marquiſate of the Duke of Lerma: firſt founded by the Maſſilians, by whom called Dianium. Not far from which, is the Promontory of Ferraria, of old called Promontorium Dianium; the Refuge of Sertorius in his Wars againſt Pompey, and Metellus, both of great renown: the one aged, and of much experience, the other young, and of high reſolutions. And yet Sertorius found himſelf more troubled with the old man's Gravity, than the young man's Gallantry: inſomuch as he was uſed to ſay, That had it not been for the old Woman Metellus, he would have whipped the Boy Pompey home with Rods. For he had twice overcome this Great Pompey, before Metellus was joined in the Action with him: the firſt time dangerouſly wounding, and the ſecond time driving him out of the Field. But fighting againſt both, he was overmatched; and yet ſeemed rather to retire, than flye before them; the Spaniards behaving themſelves very valiantly, in the time of theſe Wars, under him: to which Florus alludeth, ſaying, Nec unquam magis apparuit Hiſpani militis Vigor, quâm Romano duce. At the laſt, when he had a long time upheld the Marian Faction, he was traiterouſly murthered by Perpinna, one of his Aſſociates: for which, Metellus and Pompey had a Triumph at Rome. So high an eſtimate did they ſet upon the caſual death of this Proſcript.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof, were the Baſtetani, the Edetani, the Conteſtani, and ſome part of the Celtiberi; originally of the Province of Tarraconenſis; afterwards (in the ſub-dividing of that Province by Conſtantine) of Carthaginenſis. In the declining of the Empire, firſt ſubdued by the Alani, who were ſcarce warm in their new dwellings, when diſſeized by the Goths. From the Goths taken by the Moors, of whoſe Kingdom reckoned as a Province; till the fatal overthrow given to Mahomet Enaſer, at the battel of Sierra Morena; and the departure of the Moors of Morocco, to their own Country; which followed preſently upon it. By Zeit Abeu-Zeit, the Brother of this Mahomet, made a diſtinct Kingdom of it ſelf, Anno 1214: but taken from him by one Zaen, a Prince of the Moors of Spain, under colour that he had a purpoſe of turning Chriſtian, and making his Kingdom ſubject to the Crown of Aragon, (as indeed he did) Anno 1228. Conquered from Zaen the new King, before he could enjoy the ſweets of a new raiſed Kingdom, by James King of Aragon, Anno 1238. Since reckoned a Member of that Kingdom, never diſmembred from the body of it, ſince the firſt uniting. But ſtill ſo overgrown with Moors, (not to be blamed for loving ſuch an excellent ſeat) that at the final expulſion of that people by King Philip the third, there were reckoned no fewer than 22000 Families of them in this little Country.

The Arms hereof were Gules, a Tower embatteled Argent purfled (or pennon'd) Sable.

13. CATALONIA.

CATALONIA is bounded on the North-east, with the Land of Rousillon, and the Pyrenees; on the East, with the Mediterranean, on the South, with Valentia; on the North, and North-west, with Aragon. The Country somewhat mountainous; and full of Woods, and not very well cultivated: beholding more, in that respect, for Corn, Fruits, and other necessary Provisions, unto the courtesie of the Sea, which serves them out of other Countries, than to the Goodness of the Land. And it is as well watered, as most parts of Spain; having in it, besides the Ebro, or Iberus, common to many other Provinces; and Civia, which runneth betwixt it and Valentia; the Rivers of, 1. Tardera, 2. Lobregat, 3. Segre, 4. Francolino, 5. Besons, and 6. Onbar.

The name of Catalonia, some derive from the Castellani, who formerly inhabited some part hereof: others will have it called Catalonia, corruptly, for Gothalania, from the mixture of the Goths and Alani, successively the Masters of it: and some, more improbably, from one Carthalot, a Noble-man of this Country, who lived here they know not when. More like it is, that it took this name from the Catalauni, an old French people of Languedoc, the adjoyning Province, from whom the fields called Campi Catalaunici, near unto Tholouse, took denomination. But from what root soever they came, certain it is, that they are generally a stout and couragious people, as may be seen by their exploits in most parts of Greece, which they miserably spoiled and pillaged many years together, in the time of Andronicus the second; to whose aid called in. But then withal, they are a very perverse and obstinate people, little observant of the pleasure or profit of their natural Princes: but on the other side, so zealous in defence of their own Priviledges, that they have created more trouble to their Kings, under that pretence, than all the rest of the Subjects of Spain. Of which we need no other instance, than their late revolt unto the French Anno 1638, which drew after it the loss of the Realm of Portugal, and many Towns of great importance in Flanders, and the rest of the Netherlands.

Principal places in it, are, 1. Barcelone, situate on the Mediterranean, near the River Lobregat; accommodated with a large and commodious Port, where commonly the Spanish Souldiers do embark, which are bound for Italy. The Town adorned with large streets, handsom buildings, strong walls, and a very pleasant situation. Called Barsino by the ancient Writers, in whose time it was a Roman Colony, now honoured with a Bishops-See, and the Seat of the Vice-Roy. 2. Tarragon, seated also on the Mediterranean, East of the River Francolino: built, fortified, and peopled by the two Scipio's, the Father and Uncle of Africanus, for a Counter-Fort to Carthagena (or New Carthage) not long before founded by the Carthaginians. Afterwards made the Metropolis of Tarraconensis, hence denominated: but stript of that honour by Toledo, and is now but two miles in compass, and containing not above seven hundred Families. Yet still it holdeth the reputation of an Arch-bishops-See, contending with Toledo, for the Primacy of all Spain (as Braga also doth in the Kingdom of Portugal): the controversie being undecided to this very day. 3. Ampurias, on the same Sea also; once of great esteem, founded by the Massilians, a Roman Colony, and a well-traded Town, as the name doth signifie: this being the Emporia, spoken of by Strabo and Ptolemy; now not observable for any thing, but a safe Road for Ships. 4. Blamos, 5. Palamos, and 6. Rosat, all ports on the same Sea, but subject unto divers Winds, and not very spatious, this last by Ptolemy called Rhoda, first founded by the Rhodians, or people of the Isle of Rhodes, and by them so named. More in the Land, are 7. Girone, a small, but handsomly built, and a well-traded Town; a Bishops-See, and the title of the eldest Son of Aragon, called Prince of Girone. Which title was first given to John, the eldest Son to King Pedro the fourth, immediately upon his birth, Anno 1351; and hath since continued. 8. Tortosa, on the River Ebro, in the most rich and pleasant part of all the Country; recovered from the Moors, by Raymond the fifth, Earl of Barcelone, and prince of Aragon, about the year 1146. The principal Agent in that work, William Raymond of Moncada, Seneschal of Catalogne; rewarded for his good sevice in it, with a third part of the City. A goodly Town, and of good importance; garrisoned by the French since the late revolt of Catalonia from the King of Spain; and like to draw a great part of this Province after it, whilest it continueth in their power, or in the possession of their party. 9. Urgel, an Earl's Honour, and a Bishops-See, situate at the foot of the Pyrenees. 10. Momblanc, which heretofore gave the title of Duke to the second Sons of the Kings of Aragon. 11. Moncada, once a Town of strength; but of more note for giving denomination to the Noble Family de Moncada, Hereditary Seneschals of Catalogne, and Lords of Bearn. Here is also on the East part, where it joyneth with the Land of Rousillon, the Promontory called of old, Templum Veneris, now Cabo de Ceux. And not far from Barcelone, the Mountain called Montserrato, on the sides full of Hermitagees and Anchorets Cells; and having towards the summit of it, a Chappel dedicated to the Virgin Mary: much famed and resorted to by Pilgrims from all parts of the World, for her miraculous Image, which is there enshrined.

The old Inhabitants of this Province, were the Castellani, Auxitani, Indigites, Cositani, with part of the Ilercones, and Iacetani; all of them part of Tarraconensis. In the declining of the Empire, seized on by the Alani; and they soon after vanquished, if not dispossessed, by the power of the Goths. Lost to the Moors, in the general ruin of the whole: from them recovered by the puissance of Charles the Great; who having taken the City of Barcelone, Anno 801, gave it to one Bernard a French-man, with the title of Earl, who governed the Country for that Emperor; as Wisredus, or Godfredus, his Successor, did for Lewis the Godly. Godfredus, Son to this Godfrede, by the gift of Charles the Gross, was the first Proprietary; united unto Aragon by the marriage of Earl Raymond, with the Heir of that Kingdom. First held in Vassalage of the French, but that acknowledgment related to King James the first, An. 1260, by the King St. Lewis; the King of Aragon releasing, at the same time, his pretensions and rights of Soveraignty to Carcasson, Beziers, Albi Nismes, and some other pieces in France, of old belonging to that Crown. But before that, the Catellans had neglected the acknowledgment of their subjection to that Crown; it being ordered by Alfonso the second King of Aragon, about the year 1180, That the year of the reigns of the Kings of France, should no more be used in any Instrument or Writings which concerned that People; but the year only of the Incarnation of our Lord and Saviour: which, in effect, was to disclaim the Soveraignty of the Crown of France.

The Earls of Barcelone.

An. Chr.
884	1	Godfredus, ſirnamed the Hairy, Son of Wifrede, the Provincial Governour for the Emperor Ludovicus Pius.
914	2	Miron, Son of Godfredus.
933	3	Godfredus II. Son of Miron, by ſome called Seniofrid.
971	4	Borellus, Brother of Miron, and Unkle of Godfredus the ſecond.
993	5	Raymond Son of Borellus.
1017	6	Berengarius, ſirnamed Borellus, Son of Raymond.
1035	7	Raymond II. Son of Berengarius Borellus,
1076	8	Raymond III. Son of Raymond the ſecond.
1082	9	Raymond IV. Son of Raymond the third, Earl of Provence alſo in right of Doulce his Wife.
1131	10	Raymond V. Son of Raymond the fourth, and Doulce Counteſs of Provence, married Petronilla, Daughter of Raymir, or Raymond, the ſecond, King of Aragon; whom he ſucceeded, in that Kingdom, Anno 1134. Uniting theſe Eſtates together, never ſince diſjoyned: the chief procurer of this Match, being William Raymond, of Moncada, ſpoken of before.

The Arms hereof, were four Pallets Gules, in a field Or: now the Arms of Aragon. Which Arms were given to Geoffry, ſirnamed the Hairy, the firſt Earl hereof, by Lewis the Stammering, Emperor and King of France, to whoſe aid he came againſt the Normans with a Troop of Horſe: and being bloody in the fight, deſired of the Emperor to give him ſome Coat of Arms, which he and his Poſterity might from thenceforth uſe. Who dipping his four fingers in the blood of the Earl, drew them thwart his Shield, (which was only of Plain Gold, without any Deviſe) ſaying, This ſhall be your Arms hereafter.

14. The Kingdom of Majorca.

THE Kingdom of MAJORCA, contained the Iſlands of Majorca, Minorca, Ebuiſa, and Frumentaria, in the Mediterranean; the Land of Rouſillon, Sardaigne, or Cerdagne, in the Continent of Spain; and the Earldom of Montpelier in France.

The Land of ROUSILLON, which is the firſt Member of this Kingdom, is ſituate betwixt two Branches of the Pyrenees; bounded on the South, with the Mediterranean; on the Weſt, with Catalogne; on the North, with the ſaid Pyrenees; on the Eaſt, with Languedoc in France. Places of moſt importance in it, are, 1. Helna, a Biſhops-See on the River Techo. 2. Collibre, now a poor and ignoble Village, of note only for a ſafe and commodious Harbour; but formerly, the great and famous City of Illiberis, ſo often mentioned in the Wars betwixt Rome and Carthage. 3. Perpignan, (in Latin, Perpinianum) built in the year 1068, by Guinard, Earl of Rouſillon, in a pleaſant Plain on the River Thelis: now a rich Town, well traded, and as ſtrongly fortified againſt the French; to whoſe fury, in the time of War, it is ſtill expoſed. Beſieged by Henry, Son to King Francis the firſt, with a puiſſant Army, An. 1542; partly to be revenged upon Charles the fifth, who had before attempted Marſeilles in Provence; and partly, to get into his hands the chief door of Spain, by which he might at all times enter into that Kingdom. But he found here ſuch ſtrong reſiſtance, that he was fain to raiſe his ſiege, with as little honour as Charles had gotten by his Expedition which he made into Provence. 4. Salſus, (the Salſulæ of Sextus) a ſtrong place on the Frontier of Languedoc; fortified according to the Rules of modern Fortification, and one of the chief Bulwarks againſt the French. 5. Rouſillon, a Caſtle of more honour and antiquity, than ſtrength or beauty; by Pliny, and other Ancients, called Ruſcino; the Country, Comitatus Ruſcianenſis, now Rouſillon and the Land of Rouſillon; accounted heretofore a part of Gaul of Narbonenſis; and added unto Spain in the time of the Goths. On the death of Gerrard, the laſt Proprietary-Earl, it was added to the Crown of Aragon, by Alfonſo the ſecond: by James the firſt, laid to the Kingdom of Majorca; united to the Crown again by King Pedro the fourth. After that, ſold (or rather pawned) by King John the ſecond, to Lewis the 11. of France, for the ſum of 300000 Crowns, Anno 1462, and freely returned back again to Ferdinand the ſecond, (after called the Catholick) by King Charles the 8. Anno 1493; conditioned that he ſhould not hinder him in the Conqueſt of Naples. Joyning hereto, as part of the Kingdom of Majorca, was the Country of Sardaigne, or Cerdagne; the habitation of the Ceretani in former times, and afterwards accounted of as a part of Aragon. The chief Town of thoſe Ceretani, called Julia Lybica; the principal now being, hath the name of Cardona (or Sardona, as the Spaniards, commonly pronounce) retaining ſome reſemblance to the name of the Nation. The Country lying in the Vallies of the Pyrenees, and conſequently in a corner ſome what out of the way, was thought fit to be added to the Land of Rouſillon, (for the better endowment of this Kingdom:) the Fortunes of which, it hath ſince followed, as appendent on it: pawned when that was, unto the French; and with that reſtored.

2. The Earldom of MONTPELIER, is ſituate in the Province of Languedoc, adjoyning to the Land of Rouſillon: ſo called from Montpelier, the chief City: for the deſcription whereof, we muſt ſend the Reader back to France, having ſpoken of it there already. All I ſhall here repeat, is this, That Mary, the Daughter of William the laſt Earl thereof, brought it by marriage, to her Husband, Peter the ſecond King of Aragon: and that it was ſold to Philip de Valoys, the French King, by James King of Majorca, of that name the third. Nothing elſe memorable in the ſtory and affairs of this little Earldom, but the fortunes of the two laſt Counteſſes of it. Of which, the firſt being Daughter of Emanuel Comnenus, Emperor of Conſtantinople, and affianced to Alfonſo the 2. King of Aragon, was brought as far as Montpelier, in her way towards Spain, and there lodged, with her whole retinue, in the houſe of William, then Earl thereof Anno 1174 But hearing that Alfonſo, contrary to his word and promiſe, was in treaty of another marriage with the Princeſs Sancha of Caſtile (which he celebrated very ſhortly after) and aſhamed to return to the Court of her Father, after ſuch an injury; ſhe hearkned to the counſel of her Lords and followers, who perſwaded her to marry with Earl William, then a luſty Batchelor: which was done accordingly. To him ſhe brought a daughter, named Mary, (their only child) afterwards married to Don Pedro the 2. Son of Alfonſo, and ſucceſſor to him in that Kingdom: ſo that, although the Mother could not have the happineſs to be Queen of Aragon; yet the Daughter had. But being of no great beauty, the King her Husband grew weary of her, and would have been divorced, had the Pope consented: whose consent not being to be had, he forsook her Bed, and betook himself to other Women. Which the Queen not being otherwise able to remedy, prevailed with one of the Grooms of his Chamber, called Pedro Flavian, to bring her one night unto his Bed, (when some other Mistress was expected) and by him did conceive that night, as it after proved: the King perceiving the deceit on the morrow morning, was neither well pleased, nor much offended, at the honest fraud they had put upon him. Of this conjunction was born a Son at Montpelier, whom they named James; Successor to his Father in the Kingdom of Aragon; and to his Mother, (the last Countess of it) in the Earldom of Montpelier; united, in his person, into one Estate; and by him finally parted from it, in the erection of the new Kingdom of Majorca, as before was said.

3. The Island of MAJORCA is situate in the Mediterranean, just over-against Valentia; from which distant about 60 miles: about 300 miles in circuit, the length above an hundred, the breadth somewhat under; the number of Inhabitants reckoned at 30000. The Land, on all sides, towards the Sea, is somewhat mountainous, and barren withal: the Inlands more Champian and Fruitful yielding sufficient quantity of Oyl, Corn, Wines, and Fruits, for the use of its people. The whole Island is devided into 30 parts, (as so many Wapentakes) in every one of which, are reckoned from 300 to 600 Families. No hurtful Creatures are here bred, except Conies only; and those not hurtful, but by accident: of which more anon.

Places of chief note, in the former times, were 1. Palma, and 2. Pallentia, which had the rights of Roman Citizens. 3. Cinium, and 4. Cunici, which enjoyed the rights of the Latins: and 5. Bochri, (or Bochorum) which was in the condition of a Town confederate; besides divers others not so priviledged. Of these none left, at this day, but Palma only, vulgarly called Majorca, by the name of the Island: a Bishops-See, the Seat of the Vice-Roy for these Isles, and an University: the birth place of Raymundus Lullius, a man of great Wit, and profound Judgment; the Author of some Books in the Art of Chymistry: whose Works are read and studied in that University, as Aristotle's are in others. This is the greater of the two Islands called Baleares, whence it hath the name. Adjoyning hereunto, two others of inferior note, called Dragonera, and Cabrera; of which nothing memorable.

4. MINORCA, so called, because it is the lesser of the Baleares; is situate Eastward of Majorca, from which distant near 100 miles: of about 60 miles in length, and 150 in circuit. More fruitful than the other, though less in quantity: of a rich soyl, which breedeth them great Herds of Cattel, and Mules of the largest size of any in Spain: accommodated also with two convenient Havens, the one called Maon, the other Farnessus. Other considerable places, are, 1. Minorca, now so called by the name of the Island; but anciently known by the name of Mago: situate in the East part thereof, first founded by the Carthaginians, as the name imports. And so was also 2. Jamno, seated in the West, (Duo parva Oppida, quibus à Pœnis indita nomina, saith Sevetus Bishop of these Isles, Anno 420, or thereabouts.) It is now called Citadella, or the little City. Here was was also in the mid-land, a third Town, called Sanisera by Pliny; of which I find now no track remaining.

5. EBUSA, now called YVICA, lyeth between the main Land, and the Baleares, opposite to the Promontory of Ferraria, in the Realm of Valentia; from which distant about 50 miles, and near an hundred miles in compass. The Country plentiful of Corn, and all manner of Fruits, breeding no hurtful Creature, except Conies only which many times destroy their Harvest. The chief Town here, Yvica, (of old called Ebusus) the Inhabitants of which make yearly great store of Salt; wherewith they do not only furnish Spain, but some parts of Italy.

6. FRUMENTARIA, so called from the plenty of Corn, is distant ten miles from Yvica, and about 60 miles from that main Land of Spain: in circuit about 70 miles. Not well inhabited, by reason of the multitude of Serpents; from which called by the Græcians, Ophiusa; and Colubraria, by the Latins. Both Islands anciently known by the name of Pytusæ, and Pityodes, from the abundance of Pines there growing

About these Islands are six others of little worth, called 1. Veda, 2. Conirello, and 3. Dragonago, 4. another called Moncolibre, betwixt Majorca, and the influx of the River Iberus. 5. Alfaques, lying in the very mouth of that River: and 6. Scombraria, (anciently called the Island of Hercules) over-against Carthagena; so named from a kind of Tunny, in Latin named Scombri, of which great shoals use to lye about it. All these, together with the Baleares, make up the Province of the Islands, the seventh Province of Spain.

But the chief glory of these Islands, were the BALEARES, so called (as the general conceit is) from the Greek word βάλλειν, which signifieth to throw; because the pople were so expert in throwing their Slings or Darts: but, as Bochartus will needs have it, (to the same effect) from Baal-iare, a Punick, or Phœnician word, signifying a master in the Art of slinging. An Art so natural and innative to them, that Parents used to give no meat unto their Children, after some fit age, but what they could hit down with their Slings from the top of a Beam. Of their dexterity at this weapon, there is much mention made in the ancient Writers, as well Historians as Poets. And from this Exercise they had the name also of Insulæ Gymnasiæ; or else because the people of it used to go naked to the Wars, (and possible enough, in those first Ages of the world, as at other times also) from the Greek word γυμνὸς, the same with Nudus in the Latin. Nor were they good at slinging only, but at swimming too; an exercise not ordinarily performed, but by naked people: at which the very women are at this day expert, Biddulph reporting, in the relation of his travels, That being becalmed about these Islands, there came a woman swimming from one of them with a Basket of Fruit to sell. But that which made them most talked of in former times, was their harm done them by their Conies; which here, and in the neighbouring Continent, encreased so wonderfully, that Varro telleth us of a Town in Spain, undermined by them: and Strabo, that they did not only destroy their Plants, but rooted up many of their Trees. Insomuch that the Inhabitants did request the Romans to give them some new seats to inhabit in; ἐκβάλλεσθαι γὰρ ὑπὸ τῶν ζώων τούτων, being ejected by those Creatures out of their Possessions, whose multitudes they were not able to resist. And when that could not be obtained; they moved Augustus Cæsar (as Pliny telleth us) for some aid against them; who, instead of Souldiers, sent them Ferrets, by which their numbers where diminished in a little time.

These Islands were first planted by the Tyrians, or Phœnicians, the founders of many of their Cities: one of which, in the Isle of Ebusus, had the name of Phœnissa: From them also they derived the Art of Slinging. Made subject to the Carthaginians, under the conduct of Hanno and Himilco, Anno M. 3500, or thereabouts, at what time the Decemviri governed Rome. Under that State they remained subject, till the end of the second Punick War: when Carthage was no longer able to protect them, made a State of themselves, till conquered by Metellus, the Brother of him who subdued Creet. The people were much given to Piracy: and seeing the Roman Navy sayling by their Coasts, supposed them to be Merchant-men; assaulted them, and at first prevailed. But the Romans getting betwixt them and the shore, discovered from whence they came, and forced them to an unwilling submission: for which Metellus was rewarded with the honour of a Triumph. Being once made a Province of Spain, they always, after that, followed the Fortunes thereof. In the destraction of the Empire of the Moors, in Spain, they were united into one Kingdom, by the name of the Kingdom of Majorca: won from the Moors, by Raymond Earl of Barcelone, with the help of the Genoese, Anno 1102. By the Genoese delivered to the Moors again; and from them reconquered by James King of Aragon, descended from that Raymond, Anno 1228.

Of these Estates consisted the Kingdom of Majorca, erected by James the first, immediately (almost) on his recovery of these Islands, from the hands of the Moors; and by him given unto James his second Son; who, fearing the displeasure of his Brother, King Peter the third, submitted his new Kingdom to the Vassalage of the Crown of Aragon. Yet could not this so satisfie the ambition or jealousies of those mightier Kings, as to preserve his Successors in possession of it. By Pedro the 4. extorted from King James, the fourth and last King thereof, under colour of denying his accustomed Homage. So ended

The Kings of Majorca, of the House of Aragon.

An. Chr.

1276 1 James the first, Son to James the first, King of Aragon.

1412 2 Sancho, Son of James the first.

3 James the II. Son of Ferdinand, the Brother of James 2d.

4 James III. Son of Ferdinand, overcome and slain in Battel by Pedro the 4. King of Aragon. Majorca, and other members of this little Kingdom, remaining ever since united unto that Crown; except Montpelier, sold by this James unto the French, in hope that by their aid, he might be enabled to recover his Kingdom. But being aided by them, and attempting the recovery of it, he was discomfited and slain in the Isle of Majorca, An. 1341, as before is said.

The Forces of this little Kingdom may be best estimated by the Army which the Moors brought into the field against James the first, for defence of the Island of Majorca, consisting of 50000 Horse: but better, by the Army of James the last King hereof, in defence of his Estates against Pedro the 4: (for the Moors might possibly be aided by the rest of their Nation) consisting of 3000 Horse, and 15000 Foot, of his natural Subjects.

15. ARAGON.

ARAGON, hath on the East, the Land of Rousillon, and the Pyrenees; on the West, the two Castiles; on the the North, Navarre; on the South and South-east, Catalonia, and some part of Valentia. So called from the River Aragon, by which it is divided from the Realm of Navarre; where the first Princes of this House, having won certain Towns from the hands of the Infidels, commanded as Lords Marchers, under the Kings of that Realm: and called themselves, for that reason, the Earls of Aragon: spreading the name, as they enlaged their bounds, by ensuing Conquests: as, in like manner, the great Earldom of Moselle, founded by the disherited Sons of Cloidon, second King of the French, was named from that River; upon the course whereof, and the parts adjoyning, it was first erected.

The Country lyeth on both sides of the River Iberus, and hath also several Riverets, as Gallego, Senga, Xalon, and Cagedo, running like so many Veins through the body of it; yet is generally so destitute of waters, and so ill-inhabited, especially towards the Mountains of the Pyrenees; that one may travel many days, and find neither Town, nor House, nor People. But where the Rivers have their course, the case is different, the Valleys yielding plenty both of Corn and Fruits, especially about Calataiub, where the air is good, and the soil fruitful.

The ancient Inhabitants were the Celtiberi, who took up a great part of Tarraconensis: divided into lesser Tribes, not here considerable. These sprung originally from the Celtæ, (as before is said) the greatest and most potent Nation of all Gallia: who being too populous for their Country, or willing to employ themselves upon new Adventures, passed the Pyrenees, and mingled themselves with the Iberi. From thence the name of the Celtiberi, and Celtiberia, according unto this of Lucan:

——Profugique à gente vetustâ
Gallorum, Celtæ miscentes nomen Iberi.

Who being chas'd from Gaul, their home, did frame,
Of Celtæ and Iberi mixt, one name.

Others of less consideration, were the Jaccetani, and Lucetani, with part of the Edetani, and Illergetes.

Places of most importance in it, are, 1. Jacca, the chief City heretofore of the Jaccetani, seated amongst the Pyrenees; and for that cause chosen for the chief seat and residence of the first Kings of Aragon: continued there till the taking of Saragossa, by Alfonso the first. 2. Calataiub, seated on Xalon, in the best Country of Aragon: so called from Aiub, a Moorish Prince, the first Founder of it. Not far from which, upon an Hill, stood the old Town Bibilis, a Municipium of the Romans, and the birth-place of Martial. 3. Venasque amongst the Pyrenees. 4. Balbastro, on the Senga, formerly called Burtina; now a Bishops-See. 5. Lerida, on the River Segre, as some say; but others place it on the Senga: which rising in the Pyrenees, divideth Catalonia from Aragon, and so passeth into Iberus. Now an University; called formerly Ilerda, and famous for the encounter hapning nigh unto it, betwixt Herculeius, Treasurer or Quæstor to Sertorius; and Manilius, Proconsul of Gallia: wherein Manilius was so discomfited, and his Army, consisting of three Legions of Foot, and 1500 Horse, so routed, that he, almost alone, was scarce able to recover this City, few of his Souldiers surviving the overthrow. 6. Mason, famous for entertaining the King of Spain every third year: at which time the people of Aragon, Valence, and Catalogne, present the King with 600000 Crowns, viz. 300000 for Catalogne, 200000 for Aragon, and 100000 for Valentia. And well may they thus do, for at other times they sit Rent-Free, as it were: only they acknowledge the King of Spain to be the Head of their Commonwealth. This revenue is proportionably, 200000 Crowns a year; all which, if not more, the King again expends, in maintaining his Vice-Roys in their several Provinces. 7. Huesca, (called of old Hosca) somewhat South of Iacca, an Universlity; a place long since dedicated to Learning. For hither Sertorius caused all the Noble-mens Sons of Spain to be brought, and provided them of School-Masters for the Greek and Latin Tongues, bearing their Parents in hand, that he did it not only to make them fit to undergo charge in the Commonwealth; but indeed, to have them as Hostages for their Fathers Faith and Loyalty towards him. 8. Saragossa, on the River Iberus; called, at first, Salduba, by reason of the Salt-pits there: but being afterwards re-edified by Cæsar Augustus, it had the name of Cæsarea Augusta, (whence that of Saragossa had its origination) by whom first made a Colony of the Romans, and afterwards a Municipium or Free-Burrough, suffered to live according to the Laws of the Country. Under the Romans, it was one of the seven Juridical Resorts of Tarraconensis: under the Moors, a peculiar Kingdom of it self: and now a Bishops-See, and an Universlity. Amongst the Kings of it, when it was a Kingdom, two are chiefly famous, viz. 1. Marsilius, who joyned with the confederate Moors and Christians, against Charles the Great, in the Battel of Roncevaux. 2. Aigoland, of whom there goeth a tale, in Arch-bishop Turpine. That being by the said Charls perswaded to become a Christian, he came unto the Emperor's Court very well accompanied, according to the time appointed. Where finding many Lazars, and poor people before the Gates, attending for their usual Alms from the Emperor's Table: he asked what and who they were; and was answered, that they were the poor servants of God. Upon which words he speedily returned again, protesting, That he would never serve that God, who could keep his Servants no better. Took from the Moors, by Alfonso King of Aragon and Navarre, An. 1118, it was made the Seat-Royal of the Kings of Aragon; removed hither from Iacca: and, of late times hath been the Seat of the Vice-Roy for the Kings of Spain. Which, together with being an Arch-bishops-See, and an Universlity, hath so enriched it, that it is one of the fairest Cities in all Spain, for handsomness of streets, and sumptuousness of Palaces, and publick Buildings; containing seventeen Parish-Churches, and fourteen Monasteries; besides divers Chappels erected in most parts of it to the Virgin Mary.

Who were the old Inhabitants of this Tract, hath been shewn heretofore; tossed from the Carthaginians, unto the Romans; from them, to the Goths; and finally, unto the Moors. Recovered from the Moors, about the first beginning of the Kingdoms of Leon and Sobrarbe. At which time, one Aznar, a man of great puissance and action, possessed himself of some Lands on the banks of the River Aragon, to be holden by him and his Successors, of the Kings of Sobrarbe, or Navarre, An. 775, the Title of Earl being given unto him, and them, for their better honour. The sixth of which, from Aznar, was Fortunio Ximines, whose Daughter Urraca being married to Don Garcia Inigo, King of Navarre, Anno 867, conveyed this Earldom to that Crown: of which it continued a Member, till Sancho the Great, King of Navarre and Earl of Aragon, erected it into a Kingdom, and gave it unto Raymir his natural Son, Anno 1034. The whole Succession I shall borrow from the Spanish Histories; first taking (as in other places) some short notes of the Princes which have been most observable in the course of the Story. Of which the principal were, 1. Aznarius the first Earl, his Estate then containing some few Towns on the River of Aragon: not much enlarged, when made a Kingdom, by Sancho King of Navarre, surnamed the Great, descended from Fortunio the second of Navarre, and Urraca the Sister and Heir of Fortunius Ximines, the last Earl of Aragon. 2. Raymir the first King base Son to Sancho the Great, advanced to this honour to the prejudice of Garcia, eldest Son of Sancho, for standing so generally in defence of Donna Elvira, the Wife of his Father, wrongfully and unnaturally accused of Adultery, by the said Garcia her own Son; against whom he undertook to maintain her Honour in a Single-Combat. 3. Raymond, Earl of Barcelonia, who by marriage with Petronilla, the Heir of Aragon, united Catalonia unto that Kingdom. 4. Peter the second, who on a superstitious zeal, first made his Kingdom tributary to the See of Rome, Anno 1214. But presently repenting of it, he sided against the Pope, with the Albigenses: slain, in their Cause, by Simon de Montfort, and the rest of his Associates, in that War. 5. James the first, who conquered the Kingdoms of Valentia and Majorca; and was the first that enlarged his Dominions upon the Seas: being shut up from making any further impression on the Moors, by the interjection of Castile betwixt him and them. 6. Peter the third, pretending a Title unto Sicil, in right of Constantia his Wife, the Daughter of Manfred, King thereof; and by the last Will of Corradine, rightful King both of that, and Naples; extorted that Island from the French, massacred by him at the fatal Sicilian Vespers. 7. James the second, by whom the Isle of Sardinia was added to the Crown of Aragon. 8. Martin, the last of the Masculine Race of the House of Barcelone: to whom succeeded, 9. Ferdinand of Castile, Son of John King of Castile, and Leonora, the Daughter of Peter the fourth of Aragon. 10. Alfonso, Son of Ferdinand, adopted by Queen Joan the second, got the Kingdom of Naples. Of Ferdinand the second, surnamed the Catholick, we shall speak more anon, in the close of all.

1478	20	Ferdinand II. of that name, of Aragon, Son of John the ſecond, King of Aragon and Navarre, by a ſecond Wife: and the fifth of that name, of Caſtile and Leon; which Kingdoms he obtained by the marriage of Iſabel, or Elizabeth, Siſter and Heir of Henry the Fourth; uniting thereby, the great Eſtates of Caſtile and Aragon, and all Appendixes of either. In which regard, he may well challenge the firſt place in the Catalogue of the Monarchs of Spain, to be preſented in due ſeaſon.

In the mean time, to draw to a concluſion of the Affairs and Eſtate of Aragon, we are to underſtand, that of all the Kingdoms which belong to the Spaniards, it is the moſt priviledged, and free from the abſolute Command of the Kings of Spain: having in it ſuch a temper or mixture of Government, as makes the Kings hereof to be well nigh Titular: of little more authority than a Duke of Venice. For at the firſt erecting of this Eſtate, the better to encourage the people to defend themſelves againſt the Moors, they had many Priviledges indulged them; and, amongſt others, the creating of a Juſticiar, or Popular Magiſtrate; which, like the Ephori or Sparta, had, in ſome caſes, ſuperiority over their Kings, reverſing their Judgments, cancelling their Grants, and ſometimes cenſuring their Proceedings. And though King Philip the ſecond, in the buſineſs of Antonio de Perez, had made a Conqueſt of that Kingdom, and annulled all their Priviledges, yet after, of his own meer goodneſs, he reſtored them (in part) again, as they continue at this day.

Chief Orders of Knighthood (beſides that of Mercede, ſpoken of before) in this Kingdom, are, 1 Of S. Saviour, inſtituted by Alfonſo the firſt, Anno 1118, to animate the Members of it againſt the Moors. Of the habit and cuſtoms of this Order, I have met with nothing.

2 Of Monteſa, inſtituted by James the firſt, King of Aragon, Anno 1270, or thereabouts, Endowed with all the Lands of the Templers (before diſſolved) lying in Valentia; together with the Town and Caſtle of Monteſa, made the Seat of their Order, whence it took the name. Subject, at firſt, unto the Maſter of the Order of Calatrava, out of which extracted; and under the ſame Rule of Ciſteaux. But after, by the leave of pope Benedict the 13th, they quitted themſelves of that ſubjection; and, in ſign thereof, changed the Habit of Calatrava, which before they uſed, to a Red Croſs upon their Breaſts; now the Badge of the Order.

The Arms of Aragon, ſince poſſeſſed by the Earls of Barcelone, are Or, four Pallets Gules: before which, they were, Azure, a Croſs Argent.

The Monarchy of SPAIN.

THus having ſpoke of Spain, and the Eſtate thereof, when broken and divided into many Kingdoms; let us next look upon it as united into one main body; effected, for the moſt part, by Ferdinand the laſt King of Aragon before-mentioned. Before which time, Spain, being parcelled into many Kingdoms, was little Famous, and leſs Feared; the Kings thereof, as the Author of the Politick Diſpute, &c. hath well obſerved, being only Kings of Figs and Oranges. Their whole puiſſance was then turned againſt one another, and ſmall atchievements had they out of that Continent, except thoſe of the Houſe of Aragon, upon Sicily, Naples, Sardinia, and the Baleares. Thuanus, a diligent Writer of the Hiſtory of his own times, (if in ſome things he favour not more of the Party, than the Hiſtorian) telleth us, that before this King's Reign, the name and glory of the Spaniard, was, like their Countrey, hemmed in by the Seas on ſome ſides, and the Hills on the other: Potiuſque patuiſſe exteris invadentibus, quàm quicquam memorabile extra ſuos finis geſſiſſe. 'Tis true, that Sancho the Great, King of Navarre, aſſumed unto himſelf the title of King of Spain, and that Alfonſo the fourth of Caſtile, and the ninth of Leon, cauſed himſelf to be crowned Emperor of Spain, in the Cathedral-Church of Leon: Titles ambitiouſly affected upon no good ground, and ſuch as ended with their Perſons. But this Prince, worthily named, The Great, ſeized on the Kingdom of Navarre, conquered Granada from the Moors, ſubdued the Kingdom of Naples, united Aragon to Caſtile, baniſhed 124000 Families of the Jews, began, by the conduct of Columbus, the diſcovery of the Weſtern Indies; and finally, by marrying his Daughter Joan, to Philip, Son of the Emperor Maximilian, Duke of Burgundy, and Lord of the greateſt part of the Netherlands, laid the Foundation of the preſent Auſtrian Greatneſs. Continued ſince by ſo many inter-marriages betwixt the Spaniſh and Imperial Branches of that potent Family, that Philip the ſecond might have called the Arch-Duke Albertus, Brother, Couſin, Nephew, and Son. A ſtrange Medley of Relations. Thus by the puiſſance of this Prince, the Spaniards became firſt conſiderable in the eye of the World, and grew to be a terror to the Neighbouring-Nations. Nomen Hiſpanicum obſcurum antea & Vicinis pene incognitum, (ſaith the ſame Thuanus) tum primùm emerſit, tractuq; temporis in tantam magnitudinem excrevit, ut formidoloſum ex eo, & terribile toti terrarum Orbi eſſe cœperit. And he ſaith true, with reference to the French and Italian Nations; to whom the Spaniards have adminiſtred no ſmall matter of fear and terror; though, unto others, they appear no ſuch dreadful Bug-bears. But ſure it is, and we may warrantably ſpeak it without any ſuch impreſſions of fear and terror, that this Kingdom, ſince that time, is is wonderfully both enlarged and strengthned: strongly compacted in it self, with all the Ligaments both of Power and State, and infinitely extended over all parts of the World; his Dominions beholding (as it were) both the rising and the setting of the Sun; which, before the Spaniard, no monarch could ever say. A greater change, than any man can possibly imagine to have been effected in so short a time, as was between the first year of Ferdinand the Catholick, and the last year of Charles the fifth.

Concerning the title of the most Catholick King, reattributed to this Ferdinand, I find, that Alfonso the first of Oviedo, was so named for his sanctity: with whom it dyed; and was revived in Alfonso the Great, the twelfth King of Leon and Oviedo, by the Grant of Pope John the 8th. After, it lay dead till the days of this Prince, who re obtained this title from Pope Alexander the sixth: either because he compelled the Moors to be baptized, banished the Jews, and in part converted the Americans unto Christianity; or because, having united Castile to his Dominions, surprized the Kingdom of Navarre, and subdued that of Granada; he was, in a manner, the Catholick or general King of all Spain. The last reason seemeth to sway most in the restauration of this attribute, in that when it was granted and confirmed on Ferdinand, by Pope Alexander the sixth, the King of Portugal exceedingly stomached at it: Quando Ferdinandus imperio universam Hispaniam, (saith Mariana) non obtineret, ejus tum non exigua parte penes Reges alios. It seems Emanuel could not think himself a King of Portugal, if the title of the Catholick King did belong to Ferdinand. Wherein he was of the same mind, as was Gregory the Great; who when John of Constantinople had assumed to himself the title of the Oecumenical or Catholick Bishop, advised all Bishops of the world to oppose that arrogancy; and that upon the self-same reason Nam si ille est Catholicus, vos non estis Episcopi: for, if John were the Catholick Bishop, they were none at all. But upon what consideration soever it was first re-granted, it hath been ever since assumed by his Posterity: to whose Crown as hereditary and in common use, as the most Christian King to France, the Defender of the Faith to England.

And yet there was some further reason, why the Spaniard might affect the title of Catholick King, his Empire being Catholick in regard of extent, (though not of Orthodoxy of Doctrines) as reaching not over all Spain only, but over a very great part of the World besides. For, in right of the Crown of Castile, he possesseth the Towns of Melilla and Oran, the Haven of Masalquivir, the Rock of Velez, and the Canary-Islands in Africk; the Continent and Islands of all America, except Brasil, and some Plantations in the North, and in the Cannibal Islands, of the English, Hollanders, and a few poor French. In the right of the Kingdom of Aragon, he enjoyeth the Realms of Naples, Sicil, and Sardinia, with many Islands interspersed in the Mediterranean; and in the right of the House of Burgundy, the Counties of Burgundy, and Charolois, the greatest part of Belgium, with a title unto all the rest: besides the great Dukedom of Millain, the Havens of Telamon, and Plumbino, and many other pieces of importance in Italy, held by investiture from the Empire. To which if those Estates be added which accrewed to Philip the second, by the Crown of Portugal, we have the Towns of Ceuta, Tangier, and Maragon in Barbary, the Fortress of Aquin, and S. George, in Guinea; the Isles of Azores, Madera, Cape Verd, S. Thomas, Del Principe, on this side of the Cape, and of Mesambique on the other: in Asia, all the Sea-coast almost from the Gulf of Persia, unto China, and many strong-holds in the Moluccoes, Bantan, Zeilan, and other Islands; and finally, in America, the large Country of Brasil, extending in length 1500 miles. An Empire of extent enough, to appropriate to these Monarchs the stile of Catholick.

The Monarchs of Spain.

A. Chr.
1478	1	Ferdinand, King of Aragon, Sicily, Sardinia, Majorca, Valentia, Earl of Catalogne; surprized Navarre, and conquered the Realm of Naples.
		Isabel, Queen of Castile, Leon, Gallicia, Toledo, Murcia, Lady of Biscay, conquered Granada, and discovered America.
1504	2	Joan, Princess of Castile, Granada, Leon, &c. and of Aragon, Navarre, Sicily, &c.
		Philip, Arch Duke of Austria, L. of Belgium.
1516	3	Charles King of Castile, Aragon, Naples, &c. Arch-duke of Austria, Duke of Millain, Burgundy, Brabant, &c. Earl of Catalogne, Flanders, Holland, &c. Lord of Biscay, Friesland, Utrecht, &c. and Emperor of the Germans. He added the Realms of Mexico and Peru, the Dukedoms of Gelderland and Millain, the Earldom of Zuitphen, and the Signeuries of Utrecht, Over-Yssel, and Grayning, unto his Estates. A Prince of that magnanimity and puissance, that had not Francis the first in time opposed him, he had even swallowed all Europe. He was also, for a time, of great strength and reputation, in Tunis, and other parts of Africa, disposing Kingdoms at his pleasure: but the Turk broke his power there; and being hunted also out of Germany, he resigned all his Kingdoms, and dyed private. 42.
1558	4	Philip II. of more ambition, but less prosperity than his Father; fortunate only in his attempt on the Kingdom of Portugal; but that sufficiently ballanced by his ill successes in the Netherlands, and against the English. For the Hollanders, and their Confederates, drove him out of eight of his Belgick Provinces: the English overthrew his Invincible Armada, intercepted his Plate-Fleets, and, by awing the Ocean, had almost impoverisht him: and though he held for a time an hard hand upon France, in hope to have gotten that Crown by the help of the Leaguers: yet, upon casting up his Accompts, he found that himself was the greater loser by that undertaking. So zealous in the cause of the Romish Church, that it was thought that his eldest Son Charles was put to death, with his consent, in the Inquisition-house, for seeming favourably enclined to the Low-Country-Hereticks, as the Spaniards called them. These four great Kings were all of the Order of the Garter; but neither of the two that followed.
1598	5	Philip III. Finding his Estate almost destroyed by his Father's long and chargeable Wars, first made Peace with England, and then concluded a Truce for 12 years with the States of the Netherlands: which done, he totally baniſhed all the Moors out of Spain, and was a great stickler in the Wars of Germany.
1621	6	Philip IV. Son of Philip the third, got into his power all the Lower Palatinate; but lost the whole Realm of Portugal, and the Province of Catalonia, with many of his best Towns in Flanders, Artois, and Brabant; and some Ports in Italy: not yet recovered to that Crown, from the power of the French.

This Empire, consisting of so many several Kingdoms united into one Body, may seem to be invincible. Yet had Qu. Elizabeth followed the counsel of her Men of War, she might have broken it in pieces. With 4000 men she might have taken away his Indies from him; without whose whose Gold, the Low-Country-Army, (which is the very best) could not be paid, and by consequence must needs have been dissolved. Nay, Sir Walter Rawleigh in the Epilogue of his most excellent History of the World, plainly affirmeth, that with the charge of 200000 l. continued but for two years, or three at the most, the Spaniards might not only have been perswaded to live at peace; but all their swelling and overflowing-streams, might be brought back to their natural Chanels, and old Banks. Their own Proverb saith, The Lion is not so fierce as he is painted; yet the Americans tremble at his name: it's true; and it is well observed by that great Politician Machiavel, that things which seem to be, and are not, are more feared far off, than near at hand. Nor is this judgment built upon weak conjectures, but such as shew the Power of Spain not to be so formidable, as it's commonly supposed: which I find marshalled to my hand in this manner following. 1 The disjointedness of his Realms and other Estates, severed by infinite intlances both of Sea and Land, which makes one part unable to relieve or defend the other. 2 The slowness of his Preparations in offensive or defensive Wars; his Forces, of necessity, being long a gathering in places so remote from the Royal Seat, and being gathered, no less subject to the dangers both of Sea and Land, before united into a body, and made fit for action. 3 The danger and uncertainty which the most part of his Forinsique Revenues are subject to; many times intercepted by Pirates and open Enemies; sometimes so long delayed by cross Winds and Seas, that they come too late to serve the turn. 4 The different tempers and affections of a great part of his Subjects, not easily concurring in the same ends, or travelling the same way unto them. 5 The discontendedness of the Aragonians, Portuguezes, and Italian Provinces, not well affected, for their private and particular reasons, unto the Castilians; apt to be wrought on by the Ministers of neighbouring-Princes, whom jealousies of State keep watchful upon all advantages, for the depressing of his power. 6 And last of all, the want of people of his own natural Subjects, whom he may best rely on for the encrease and grandure of his Estates, exhausted and diminished by those ways and means which have been touched upon; without any politick or provident course, to remedy that defect for the time to come. And this I look on as the greatest and most sensible Error in the Spanish Government: therein directly contrary to the ancient Romans; who finding that nothing was more necessary for great and important enterprizes, than Multitudes of Men, employed all their studies to encrease their numbers, by Marriages, Colonies, and such helps; making their conquered Enemies free Denizens of their Commonwealth: by which means the number of the Roman Citizens became so great (all being equally interested in the preservation of it) that Rome could not be ruined (in Annibal's judgment) by any forces but her own. But, on the other side, the Spaniards, employ none in their Plantations, but their own native Subjects; and so many of them also in all their enterprizes both by Sea and Land, that so many thousands going forth every year, in the flower of their age, not one of ten returning home; and those few which return, either lame or old: the Country is not only deprived of the Men themselves, but also of the Children which might be born. An evidence whereof may be, that John the first of Portugal, who reigned before the several Voyages and Plantations of that people, was able to raise 40000 Men for the War of Africk: whereas Emanuel, who lived after those Undertakings, had much ado to raise 20000 Foot, and 3000 Horse, on the same occasion: and Sebastian, after that, found as great a difficulty to raise an Army of 12000.

As for the Forces which the King of Spain is able to make out of all his Estates, they may be best seen by his preparations for the Conquest of England, France, and Flanders. In his design for England, An. 1588, he had a Fleet consisting of 150 sail of Ships, whereof 66 were great Galleons, 4 Galeasses of Naples, 4 Gallies, the rest smaller Vessels: fraughted with 20000 Souldiers for land-service, 9000 Saylers, 800 Gunners, 4000 Pioneers, 2650 pieces of Ordinance: not reckoning into this accompt the Commanders, and Voluntaries; of which last, there were very great numbers who went upon that service for Spoil, Merit, or Honour. In the design of Charles the Fifth, for the Conquest of Provence, he had no less than 50000 in the field, and in that of Philip the second, for the reducing of Flanders, the Duke of Alva had an Army, at his first setting forward out of Italy, consisting of 8800 Spanish Foot; and 1200 Horse; all of them old experienced Souldiers, drawn out of Naples, Sicil, and the Dutchy of Millain; 3600 German Foot, 300 Lances, and 100 Haquebusiers on Horse back, of the County of Burgundy; all old Souldiers also: besides many Voluntiers of great rank and quality, very well attended, and his old standing Army in the Belgick Provinces: a Strength sufficient to have conquered a far greater Country.

Of standing-Forces in this Country, he maintaineth in these Realms of Spain, but three thousand Horse; and in his Forts and Garrisons, no more than 8000 Foot: his Garrisons being very few, and those upon the Frontiers only, and in Maritime Towns: his Gallies served with slaves out of Turkie and Barbary. And yet he is able, on occasion, to raise very great Forces; partly, because the ordinary Subjects are so well affected to their Prince, whom they never mention without reverence: and partly in regard there is so great a number of Feudataries and Noble-men, who are by Tenure, to serve personally at their own charges, for defence of the Realm. And certainly, it must be a considerable Force which the Noblemen of Spain are able to raise, considering the greatness of their Revenue, and the number of Vassals which live under them: it being supposed, that the Dukes of Spain (of which there were 23 when my Author lived) were able, one with another, to dispend yearly from 50000 Ducats, to 100000; some going very much above that proportion; and that of 36 Marquesses, and 50 Earls, the poorest had 10000 Ducats of yearly Rent; and so ascending unto 50 and 60000. The Arch-bishops, Bishops, and others of the greater Clergy, being all endowed with fairer Temporal Estates, than in most places in Europe, are also bound to serve (though not personally) on the like occasions. And to these services the Noblemen are for two reasons more forwards than the other Feudataries: 1 Because their Honours descend not de jure from the Father to the Son, unless confirmed to the Son by the Kings acknowledgment and compellation, which makes them more observant of him, than in France or England, where it is challenged as a Birth-right, 2 Because out of the gross body of these Noblemen, the King doth use to honour some with the title of Grandees, priviledged to stand covered before the King, and to treat with him as their Brother: which being the highest Honour which that State can yield, keeps those great persons in a readiness to obey his pleasure, in hope to come to an Honour of so high esteem.

For the Revenues of this King, which ordinarily arise out of his Estates (taking Portugal into the accompt) they are computed at Eleven millions of Crowns yearly; that is to say, four from his Dominions in Italy, two from Portugal and the Appertinents thereof, three from the West-Indies, and the other two remaining, from his Kingdom

Kingdoms in Spain. Besides this, he receiveth yearly the Revenues of the Masterships of all the great Orders in his Kingdom, incorporated to the Crown by Ferdinand the Catholick, not without good Policy and reason of State: The Masters (or Commendadors, as they call them) of those several Orders drawing after them such Troops of the Nobility, Gentry, and other dependants; that their power began to be suspected by the Kings themselves. By which addition there accrueth to the Crown (besides the opportunity of preferring Servants of the greatest merit) above 150000 l. of yearly Rents. As for his Casualties and extraordinary ways of raising money, they are very great: reckoned by the Author of the General History of Spain to amount (according to divers Opinions) to 14, 18, and 23 millions of Crowns. For making up of which sum, he puts in the First Fruits, and some part of the Tenths of Rectories; and other Church Preferments, amounting to three millions yearly. And the Author of the Politique Dispute, &c. affirmeth the Pardons sent to the Indies, given him by the Pope, to be worth half a million of pounds yearly. Add hereunto the sale and disposal of all Offices, which make up a good round sum; and the free Gifts & Contributions of his Subjects, which amount unto a good Revenue. For the Kingdom of Naples presents him every third year with a million and 20000 Crowns; and Castile only at one time granted a Contribution of four millions, to be paid in four years: his Subjects generally being so well affected unto the Crown, that he can demand nothing in reason of them which they are not ready to grant; the King of Spain being called in that regard by the Emperour Maximilian, the King of Men. And yet this great King is not counted to be rich in Treasure, his expences being very great. First, in keeping Forts and Garrisons in many parts of his Estates against the Revolt of the Natives. Secondly, maintaining so many Frontier places against Foreign Invasions: Thirdly, in the continual pay of an Armada for conducting his Plate-Fleets from America. And last of all, the many and unprofitable Wars of King Philip the Second, so plunged the Crown in the Gulfs of Bankers and Money-Changers, that much of the Revenues of it stand engaged for payment to this very day.

Of the OCEAN and ISLES OF BRITAIN.

BEfore we can arrive in Britain, the last Western Dioceſe, we must cross the OCEAN, that ingens, and infinitum pelagus, as Mela calls it; in comparison of which, the Seas before-mentioned are but as Ponds or Gullets: a Sea in former times known more by fame than tryal, and rather wondred at on the shore side, than any more remote place of it. The Romans ventured not on it with their Vessels, unless in the passage from France to Britain: And much famed is Alexander for his hazardous Voyage on this unruly Sea, he having sailed in all but 400 Furlongs from the shore. The Name and Pedegree take here both from the Poets and Etymologists. The Poets make Oceanus to be the Son of Cœlum and Vesta, or of Heaven and Earth. They termed him the Father of all things, as, Oceanumq; Patrem rerum, in Virgil, because moisture was necessarily required to the constitution of all bodies: and usually painted him with a Bulls head on his shoulders, (whence Euripides called him Ὠκεανὸς Ταυρόκερως, Oceanus Tauriceps) from the bellowing and fury of the Winds; which from it come to the shore, and to which it is subject. As for the Children attributed unto him, they are doubtless nothing but the clouds and vapours hence arising. The name of Ὠκεανὸς, Oceanus, some derive from ὠκὺς, celer, because of its swiftness; some from χέω, fundo, divido, because it cleaveth and interlaceth the Earth: And others make it ὠκεανὸς, quasi ὠκεανὸς παρὰ τὸ ὦκυ ῥέειν, à celeriter fluendo, which agreeth in meaning with the first. Particular names it hath divers, according to the name of the shore, by which it passeth, as Cantabricus, Gallicus, Britannicus, &c. The chief Isles of it appertaining to Europe, besides those called the Azores or Isles of Tercera, which we have spoken of when we were in Portugal; those of the Aquitain Ocean, described in our History of France; those of the Netherlands, and the Northern Seas, which are to be described hereafter in their proper places, are the British Illands: by many of the most ancient and approved Writers called simply BRITAIN, because united all in that common notion; though afterwards distinguished into the particular appellations of Great Britain, Ireland, and the rest. Of which, as lying in my way betwixt Spain and Germany; or rather as the next Dioceſe of the Empire to France and Spain, under the Prætorian Præfectus of Gaul, I am next to speak.

Of BRITAIN.

BRITAIN, according to the largeſt latitude of that name and notion, comprehendeth all thoſe Iſlands both great and leſs, which lie in compaſs about Albion, or Britain properly ſo called: by Ptolomy called Britanniæ, in the plural number. For ſpeaking of France he thus ſubjoineth, Ex adverſo hujus Britannia Inſula, Albion ipſi nomen fuit, cum Britanniæ omnes vocarentur, i. e. Oppoſite hereunto lieth the Iſland of Britain, which formerly by a more proper name was called Albion, the name of Britain comprehending all the Iſles adjoining. And in this latitude and extent we now take the word; the whole dominion of theſe Iſlands, diſtinguiſhed into ſeveral names, being united in the perſon and under the command of the King of Great Britain: that name including all the reſt, as appendants of it; with reference to this called the Iſles of Britain, or the Britiſh Iſlands. Thus Ariſtotle in his Book De Mundo (if the Book be his) Quo in mari duæ Inſulæ Britannicæ ſitæ ſunt, quarum maximæ Albion & Ierna; i. e. In which Sea there are ſituate two Britiſh Iſlands of great note and compaſs, Albion (or Britain properly ſo called) and Ireland. Ptolomy goeth to work more punctually, and he ſtates it thus; Complectitur prima hæc Europæ tabula duas Britannicas inſulas, quas Dionyſius Bretanides vocat, Hiberniam nempe & Albionem, cum minoribus aliquot adjacentibus inſulis, ut ſunt Orcades, Ebudæ, Thyle, Mona, & reliquæ ſuis nominibus expreſſæ: that is to ſay, This firſt Table of Europe, comprehendeth the two Iſlands of Britain, which Dionyſius calls the Britannides, namely Ireland and Albion, with ſome leſſer Iſlands joining to it, as the Orcades, the Hebrides, Thule, Angleſey, (or Man) and others called by diſtinct names. By which we ſee, firſt, that the general name of Britain or the Britiſh Iſlands comprehendeth all thoſe which are ſituate in the Britiſh Ocean: and ſecondly, that the greateſt and moſt famous of them, more ſpecially called Britain by the following Writers, was anciently called Albion by its proper name. And it was called Albion, as my Authors tell me, either from Albion the Brother of Bergion, the Son of Neptune, mentioned by Aeſchylus, Dionyſius, Strabo, Mela, Solinus, Pliny, and others; it being not improper, that the greateſt Iſland of the Ocean, ſhould be denominated from a Son of the greateſt Sea-god: or from the old word Ἀλφὸν, ſignifying White amongſt the Greeks, (from whence the Latines had their Album,) by reaſon of the white chalky Cliffs, ſeen by the Mariners afar off as they ſailed thoſe Seas.

But to return again to Britain in the general notion, and to the ſeveral Iſlands which that name includeth, we may diſtinguiſh them into the Greater and the Leſſer; the Greater ſubdivided into 1. Great Britain, or Britain ſpecially ſo called, and 2. Ireland; the Leſſer, 1. the Orcades, 2. the Hebrides, 3. Man, 4. Angleſey, 5. the Iſlands of the Severn Sea, 6. the Sorlinges, or Iſles of Scilly, 7. Wight, 8. Thanet, 9. Sunderland, and 10. Holy Iſland.

GREAT BRITAIN.

TO ſpeak much of GREAT BRITAIN, or BRITAIN ſpecially and properly ſo called, I hold ſomewhat ſuperfluous, it being our home, and we therefore no ſtrangers to it. Yet as Mela once ſaid of Italy, De Italia, magis quia ordo exiget, quam quia monſtrari debeat, pauca dicemus; nota ſunt omnia; ſo ſay I of Britain. It is ſo obvious to the eye of every Reader, that he needs not the ſpectacles of Letters. Yet ſomething muſt be ſaid, though for methods ſake, rather than neceſſity. Firſt then, we will begin with laying out the bounds thereof (as in other places;) which are, on the Eaſt, the German Ocean, dividing it from Belgium, Germany, and Danemark; on the Weſt, S. Georges Chanel, which divides it from Ireland; and to the North of that, with the main Vergivian or Weſtern Ocean, of which the Ancients knew no ſhore; on the North, with the Hyperborian or Deucaledonian Ocean, as Ptolomy calls it, extending out to Iſeland, Freezeland, and the ends of the then known World; and on the South, the Engliſh Chanel, which divides it from France.

The length hereof from North to South, is reckoned at 620 Italian miles; the greateſt breadth from Eaſt to Weſt, meaſured in a right line, no more than 250 of the ſame miles, but by the crooks and bendings of the Sea-Coaſt, comes to 320 miles: the whole circumference accompted 1836 miles. The greateſt Iſland in the World, except Java, Borneo, Sumatra, and Madagaſcar; and therefore by Solinus & ſome other Ancients (to whom thoſe Iſlands were not known) called the other world: by others of late times, the Lady and Miſtreſs of the Seas. Situate under the 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th Climes: ſo that the longeſt day at the Lizard point in Cornwall, (being the moſt Southerly part hereof) containeth 16 hours and a quarter; at Barwick, which is the Border of England and Scotland, 17 hours 3 quarters, and one hour more at Straithby head, in the North of Scotland; where ſome obſerve that there is ſcarce any night at all in the Summer Solſtice, but a darker Twilight. To which alludes the Poet, ſaying, Et minima contentos nocte Britannos: and the Panegyriſt in the time of Conſtantine, amongſt other commendations which he gives to Britain, ſaith, that therein is neither extreme cold in Winter, nor any ſcorching heats in Summer, and that which is moſt comfortable, long days, and very lightſome nights. Nor doth the Panegyriſt tell us only of the temperateneſs of the Air or the length of the days; but of the fruitfulneſs of the ſoil: "affirming Britain to be bleſſed with all the commodities "of Heaven and Earth; ſuch an abundant plenty of "Corn, as might ſuffice both for Bread and Wine; the "Woods thereof without wild Beaſts, the Fields without "noiſom Serpents, infinite number of milch Beaſts, and "Sheep weighed down with their own Fleeces. Whereto add that of Alfred of Beverly, a Poet of the middle times, ſaying thus of Britain.

Et cujus totus indiget orbis ope.
Inſula prædives, cujus miretur & optet
Delicias SOLOMON, Octavianus opes.

A wealthy Iſland, which no help deſires,
Yet all the world ſupply from her requires;

Able

Able to glut King SOLOMON with pleasures,
And surfeit great Augustus with her treasures.

Proceed we next to the name of Britain, of which I find many Etymologies, some forced, some fabulous and foolish, and but few of weight. That which hath passed for currant in former times, (when almost all Nations did pretend to be of Trojan race) was that it took this name from Brutus, affirmed to be the Son of Silvius, who was the Grandchild of Æneas, and the third King of the Latines of the Trojan blood. Which Brutus having unfortunately killed his Father, and thereupon abandoning Italy with his Friends and Followers; after a long voyage and many wandrings, is said to have fallen upon this Island, to have conquered here a race of Giants; and having given unto it the name of Britain, to leave the Soveraignty thereof unto his posterity, who quietly enjoyed the same, till subdued by the Romans. This is the sum of the Tradition concerning Brute: Which though received in the darker times of ignorance, and too much credulity; in these more learned days hath been laid aside, as false and fabulous. And it is proved that there was no such man as Brutus, 1. from the newness of his Birth, Geofry of Monmouth, who lived in the reign of King Henry the second, being the first Author which makes mention of him: for which immediately questioned by Newbrigensis, another Writer of that Age. 2. By the silence of all the Roman Historians, in whom it had been an unpardonable negligence to have omitted an Accident so remarkable, as the killing of a Father by his own Son (especially when they wanted matter to fill up the times) and the erecting of a new Trojan Empire in so great an Iland. 3. By the Arguments which Cæsar useth to prove the Britains to be derived from the Galls; as Speech, Laws, Customs, Dispositions, Making, and the like. 4. And lest it might be said, that though the Britains in Cæsars time were of Gallick race, yet there had been a more ancient people, who had their Original from the Trojans, Tacitus putteth off that dispute with an Ignoramus: Qui mortales initio coluerint, parum compertum est, saith that knowing Writer. And 5. By the Testimony of all Roman Histories, who tell us that Cæsar found the Britains under many Kings, & never under the command of one sole Prince, but in times of danger. Summa Belli administrandi communi consensu commissa est Cassivellauno, as it is in Cæsar: Dum singuli pugnabant, universi vincebantur, as we read in Tacitus. To omit therefore that of Brutus, and other Etymons as unlikely, but of less authority: the name of Britain is most probably derived from Brit, which in the Ancient British signifieth Painted; and the word Tain, signifieth a Nation: agreeable unto the custom of the ancient Britains, who used to discolour and paint their bodies, that they might seem more terrible in the eyes of their enemies. Britain is then a Nation of painted men; such as the Romans called Picts in the times ensuing. Which I prefer before the Etymologie of Bochartus, a right Learned man, but one that wresteth all originations to the Punick or Phœnician language: by whom this Island is called Britain or Britanica, from Barat-anac, signifying in that Language a Land of Tynne, wherewith the Western parts of it do indeed abound. Other particulars concerning the Isle of Britain, shall be observed in the description of those parts into which it now doth stand divided; that is to say, 1. England, 2. Wales, and 3. Scotland.

ENGLAND.

ENGLAND is bounded on the East with the German; on the West with the Irish; on the South with the British Oceans; and on the North, with the Rivers of Tweed and Solway; by which parted from Scotland: Environed with turbulent Seas, guarded by inaccessible Rocks: and where those want, preserved against all foreign Invasions by strong Forts and a puissant Navy.

In former time the Northern limits did extend as far as Edenburgh Fryth on the East, and the Fryth of Dunbriton on the West, (for so far not only the Roman Empire, but the Kingdom of Northumberland did once extend:) the intervenient space being shut up with a Wall of Turfs by Lollius Urbicus, in the time of Antonius Pius. But afterwards, the Romans being beaten back by the Barbarous people, the Province was contracted within narrow bounds; and fortified with a Wall by the Emperour Severus, extending from Carlisle to the River Tine, the track whereof may easily be discerned to this very day. A Wall so made, that at every miles end there is said to have been a Castle, between every Castle many Watch-Towers; and betwixt every Watch-Tower a Pipe of Brass, conveying the least noise unto one another without interruption: so that news of any approaching enemy was quickly over all the Borders, and resistance accordingly provided. In following times the strong Towns of Barwick, and Carlile, have been the chief Bars, by which we kept the back door shut: and as for other Forts, we had scarce any on the Frontiers, or Sea-Coasts of the Kingdom; though in the midland parts too many. Which being in the hands of potent and factious Subjects, occasioned many to rebel; and did create great trouble to the Norman Kings, till in the later end of the Reign of King Stephen, 1100 of them were levelled to the very ground, and those few which remained dismantled, and made unserviceable. The Maritime parts were thought sufficiently assured by those Rocks and Cliffs, which compass the Island in most parts: and hardly any Castle all along the shore, except that of Dover; which was therefore counted by the French, as the Key of England. But in the year 1538. King Henry the Eighth, considering how he had offended the Emperour Charles the Fifth, by his Divorce from Queen Katherine; and incurred the displeasure of the Pope, by his falling off from that See; as also that the French King had not only married his Son to a Neece of the Pope, but a daughter of the King of Scots, thought fit to provide for his own safety, by building in all places where the shore was most plain and open, Castles, Platforms, and Block-Houses; many of which in the long time of Peace ensuing were much neglected and in part ruined.

His Daughter Queen Elizabeth of happy memory, provided yet better for the Kingdom. For she not only fortified Portsmouth, and placed in it a strong Garrison; but walled the Kingdom round with a most stately, royal, and invincible Navy: with which she always commanded the Seas, and vanquished the mightiest Monarch of Europe: whereas her Predecessors in their Sea service, for the most part, hired their Men of War, from the Hansmen, and Genoese. Yet did neither of these erect any Castles in the inward part of the Realm: herein imitating Nature, who fortifieth the head and the feet only, not the middle of Beasts; or some Captain of a Fort, who plants all his Ordnance on the Walls, Bulwarks, and Out-works; leaving the rest by these sufficiently guarded.

The whole Island was first called Albion, as before is said, either from the Giant Albion, or ab albis rupibus, the white Rocks towards France. Afterwards it was called Britain, which name being first found in Athenæus, amongst the Græcians; and in Lucretius and Cæsar, amongst the Latines; followed herein by Strabo, Pliny, and all other ancient Writers, except Ptolomy only, by whom called Albion as at first; continued till the time of Egbert the first Saxon Monarch, who called the Southern parts of the Island by the name of England, from the Angles, who with the Jutes and Saxons conquered it.

It is in length 320 miles, enjoying a soil equally participating of ground fit for tillage and pasture: yet to pasture more than to tillage are our people addicted, as a course of life not requiring so many helpers, which must be all fed and paid; and yet yielding more certain profits. Hence in former times Husbandry began to be neglected, Villages depopulated, and Hinds for want of entertainment to turn way-beaters: whereof Sir Thomas Moor in his Utopia complaineth; saying, that our Flocks of Sheep had devoured not only men, but whole houses and Towns. Oves (saith he) quæ tam mites esse, tamq; exiguo solent ali; nunc tam edaces, & indomitæ esse cœperant, ut homines devorent ipsos, agros, domos, oppida vastent, ac depopulentur. To prevent this mischief; there was a Statute made in the Fourth year of Henry the Seventh, against the converting of Arable Land into Pasture ground; by which course Husbandry was again revived, and the soil made so abounding in Corn, that a dear year is seldom heard of. Our Vines are nipped with the cold, and seldom come to maturity, and are more used for the pleasantness of the shade, than for the hopes of Wine. Most of her other plenties and Ornaments, are expressed in this old Verse following.

Anglia, 1. Mons, 2. Pons, 3. Fons,
4. Ecclesia, 5. Fœmina, 6. Lana.

That is to say,

For 1. Mountains, 2. Bridges, 3. Rivers, 4. Churches fair,
5. Women, and 6. Wooll, England is past compare.

1. For the Mountains lifting up here and there their lofty heads, and giving a gallant prospect to the lower Grounds; the principal are those of Mendip in Somerset, Malvern Hills in Worcestershire, the Chiltern of Buckinghamshire, Cotswold in Gloucestershire, the Peak of Derbyshire, York Wolds, &c. All of them either bowelled with Mines, or clothed with Sheep, or adorned with Woods. The exact description of which, would require more time than I can spend upon that subject. Proceed we therefore to

2. The Bridges, which are in number 875. The chief of which are, the Bridge of Rochester over Medway, the Bridge of Bristol over Avon, and the Bridge of London over Thames. This last standing upon 19 Arches of wonderful strength and largeness, supporteth continual ranges of Buildings, seeming rather a Street than a Bridge; and is not to be parallel'd with any Bridge of Europe; though of late by some defacement made by fire, Anno 1632. the Buildings are not so contiguous, as they were before.

3. The Rivers of this Country are in number 325. The chief is Thamisis, compounded of the two Rivers, Thame and Isis; whereof the former rising somewhat beyond Thame in Buckinghamshire, and the later beyond Cyrencester in Gloucestershire, meet together about Dorcester in Oxfordshire: the issue of which happy conjunction is the Thamisis or Thames. Hence it flyeth betwixt Berks, Buckinghamshire, Middlesex, Surrey, Kent, and Essex; and so weddeth himself to the Kentish Medway, in the very jaws of the Ocean. This glorious River feeleth the violence of the Sea more than any River in Europe, ebbing and flowing twice a day, more than 60 miles; about whose Banks are so many fair Towns, and Princely Palaces, that a German Poet thus truly spoke,

Artifici exultos dextra, tot vidimus arces;
Ut nunc Ausonio Thamisis cum Tibride certet.

We saw so many Woods and Princely Bowers,
Sweet Fields, brave Palaces and stately Towers:
So many Gardens, dress'd with curious care,
That Thames with Royal Tiber may compare.

The second River of note, is Sabrina or Severn. It hath its beginning in Plinlimmon Hill in Montgomeryshire, and his end about seven miles from Bristol: washing in the mean space, the Walls of Shrewsbury, Worcester, and Gloucester. 3. Trent, so called, for that 30 kind of Fishes are found in it, or that it receiveth 30 lesser Rivers; who having his Fountain in Staffordshire, and gliding through the Countries of Nottingham, Lincolne, Leicester, and York, augmenteth the turbulent current of Humber, the most violent stream of all the Isle. Yet Humber is not, to say truth, a distinct River, having a spring-head of his own; but rather the mouth or Æstuarium of divers Rivers here confluent and meeting together, namely, Youre, Darewent, and especially Ouse and Trent. And as the Danow, having received into its Chanel the Rivers Dravus, Savus, Tibiscus, and divers others, changeth his name into Ister: So also the Trent, receiving and meeting the waters above named, changeth his name into this of Humber; Abus, the old Geographers call it. 4. Medway, a Kentish River, famous for harbouring the Royal Navy. 5. Tweede, the North-East bound of England, on whose Northern bank is seated the strong & impregnable Town of Barwick. 6. Tine, famous for New-Castle, and her inexhaustible Coal-pits. These and the rest of Principal note are thus comprehended in one of Mr. Draytons Sonnets:

Our Flood Queen Thames for Ships and Swans is crown'd,
And stately Severn for her shore is prais'd,
The Chrystal Trent for Fords and Fish renown'd,
The Avons fame to Albions Cliffs is rais'd.
Cor legion Chester vaunts her holy Dee,
York many Wonders of her Ouse can tell,
The Peak her Dove, whose Banks so fertile be,
And Kent will say her Medway doth excel.
Cotswoll commends her Isis to the Thame,
Our Northern Borders boast of Tweeds fair flood;
Our Western parts extol their Willies Fame,
And the old Lea brags of the Danish blood.

4. The Churches, before the general suppression of Abbies, and spoiling the Church Ornaments, were most exquisite; the chief remaining, are 1. the Church of St. Paul founded by Ethelbert King of Kent, in the place where once was a Temple consecrated to Diana: A Fabrick brick of the largeſt dimenſions of that kind, of any in the Chriſtian World. For whereas the ſo much celebrated Temple of S. Sophia in Conſtantinople hath but 260 foot in length, and 75 in breadth: this of S. Paul is 690 foot long, and 130 foot broad, the main body being 102 foot high, over which the Steeple of the Church was mounted 482 foot more. Which Steeple being made with Timber, and covered with Lead, was by the careleſneſs of the Sexton, in the fifth year of the Reign of Q. Elizabeth, conſumed with fire, which happening in a thundring and tempeſtuous day, was by him confidently affirmed to be done by Lightning, and was ſo generally believed till the hour of his death: but not many years ſince to diſabuſe the world, he confeſt the truth of it; on which diſcovery, the burning of St. Paul's Steeple by Lightning, was left out of our Common Almanacks, where formerly it ſtood amongſt the ordinary Epochæ, or accounts of time. A Church of ſuch a gallant Proſpect, and ſo large dimenſions, that had not the late reparation of it been diſcontinued, it would have been the ſtatelieſt and moſt majeſtical Fabrick in the Chriſtian World. 2. The Collegiate Church of S. Peter in Weſtminſter, (wherein I have the honour to be a Prebendary) famous for the Inauguration and the Sepulture of the Kings of England, the Tombs whereof are the moſt ſumptuous, and the Chappel the moſt accurate piece of Building in Europe. 3. The Cathedral Church at Lincoln. 4. For a private Church, that of Radcliffe in Briſtol. 5 For a private Chappel, that of Kings Colledge in Cambridge. 6. For the Curious Workmanſhip of the Glaſs, that of Chriſt Church in Canterbury. 7. For the exquiſite beauty of the Fronts, thoſe of Wells and Peterborough. 8. For a pleaſant lightſom Church, the Abbey Church at Bath. 9. For an ancient and reverend Fabrick, the Minſter of York. And 10. to comprehend the reſt in one, our Lady-Church in Salisbury, of which take theſe Verſes:

Mira canam; ſoles quot continet annus, in una
Tam numeroſa, ferunt, æde feneſtra micat.
Marmoreaſq; tenet fuſas tot ab arte columnas,
Comprenſas horas quot vagus annus habet.
Totq; patent portæ, quot menſibus annus abundat:
Res mira, at vera res celebrata fide.

How many days in one whole year there be,
So many Windows in one Church we ſee.
So many marble Pillars there appear,
As there are hours throughout the fleeting year.
So many Gates as Moons one year do view;
Strange tale to tell, yet not ſo ſtrange as true.

5. The Women generally are more handſom than in other places, ſufficiently endowed with natural beauties, without the addition of adulterate Sophiſtications. In an abſolute Woman, ſay the Italians, are required the parts of a Dutch Woman, from the girdle downwards; of a French-Woman, from the girdle to the ſhoulders; over which muſt be placed an Engliſh face. As their beauties, ſo alſo are their Prerogatives the greateſt of any Nation; neither ſo ſervilely ſubmiſſive as the French, nor ſo jealouſly guarded as the Italian: but keeping ſo true a decorum, that as England is termed the Purgatory of Servants, and the Hell of Horſes; ſo it is acknowledged the Paradiſe of Women. And it is a common by-word among the Italians, that if there were a Bridge built over the Narrow Seas, all the Women of Europe would run into England. For here they have the upper hand in the ſtreets, the upper place at the Table, the thirds of their Husbands eſtates, and their equal ſhare in all Lands, yea even ſuch as are holden in Knights-ſervice: priviledges wherewith other Women are not acquainted. Of high eſteem in former times amongſt foreign Nations, for the modeſty and gravity of their converſation, but of late times ſo much addicted to the light garb of the French, that they have loſt much of their ancient honour and reputation amongſt the knowing and more ſober men of foreign Countries, who before admired them.

6. The Wooll of England, is of exceeding fineneſs, eſpecially that of Cotſwold in Gloceſterſhire; that of Lemſter in Herefordſhire; and of the Iſle of Wight. Of this Wooll are made excellent Broad-cloaths, diſperſed all over the World, eſpecially High-Germany, Muſcovy, Turkie, and Perſia, to the great benefit of the Realm: as well in return of ſo much money which is made of them, as in ſetting to work ſo many poor people, who from it receive ſuſtenance. Before the time of King Edward the third, Engliſh men had not the art, or neglected the uſe of making Cloth: till whoſe time our Wooll was tranſported unwrought. And as his Succeſſors have laid impoſitions on every Cloth ſold out of the Realm; ſo his Predeceſſors had, as their occaſions required, ſome certain Cuſtoms granted on every ſack of Wooll. In the beginning of this Edwards Wars with France, the Cities and Towns of Flanders being then even to admiration rich, combined with him, and aided him in his Wars againſt that King. And he for his part by the compoſition then made, was to give them 140000 l. ready money to aid them by Sea and Land, if need required, and to make Bruges, then one of the great Mart-Towns of Chriſtendom, the Staple for his Woolls. Here the Staple continued 15 years, at which time the Flemmings having broke off from the King; and he having by experience ſeen what the benefit of thoſe Staples were, removed them from Bruges into England. And for the eaſe as well of his Subjects in bringing their Wools unto the Ports, as of ſuch Foreign Merchants that came to buy; he placed his Staples at Exceſter, Briſtol, Wincheſter, Weſtminſter, Chicheſter, Canterbury, Norwich, Lincoln, York, and Newcaſtle, for England; at Caermarden for Wales; and at Dublin, Waterford, Cork, and Tredagh, for Ireland. He further enacted, that no Engliſh, Iriſh, or Welch-men ſhould tranſport this Stapled commodity, no not by Licenſe (if any ſuch ſhould be granted) on pain of Confiſcation, and Impriſonment during the Kings pleaſure. Laſtly, he allured over hither divers Flemmings, which taught our men the making of Clothes, who are now grown the beſt Cloth-workers in the World;) and to encourage them in that Art, it was by a Statute of the 27th of Edward the third, Enacted to be Felony, to carry any Woolls unwrought. When England had ſome ſhort time enjoyed the benefit of theſe Staples, the King removed them to Calice, which he had conquered, and deſired to make wealthy. From hence they were at ſeveral times and occaſions tranſlated, now to one, now to another Town in Belgium: and happy was that Town, in what Country ſoever, where the Engliſh kept a houſe for this Traffick; the confluence of all people thither to buy, infinitely enriching it. Antwerp in Brabant long enjoyed the Engliſh Merchants, till upon ſome diſcontents between King Henry the Seventh, and Maximilian Arch-Duke and Lord of Belgium, they removed: but at their return again, were received by the Antwerpians, with ſolemn Proceſſion, Princely Triumph, ſumptuous Feaſts, rare Banquetings, and other expreſſions of much Love, but more Joy. And giving of ſome Cotſwold Sheep by Edward the Fourth, to Henry of Caſtile, and John of Aragon, An. 1465. is counted one of the greateſt prejudices, that ever happened to this Kingdom.

The Wooll tranſported bringeth into the Kingdom no leſs than 1500000 l. and the Lead half the ſum, ſo that,

Lewis

Lewis Guicciardine reporteth, That before the Wars of the Low Countries, the Flemmings and the Engliſh bartered Wares yearly to the value of 12 Millions of Crowns.

The next commodity to the Woull, though not mentioned in the verſe foregoing, are the rich and inexhauſtible Mines of Cole, Lead, and Tin: to ſay nothing of the Mines of Iron, as bringing more damage to the publick by the ſpoil of Woods, than profit to particular perſons in the encreaſe of their eſtates. The Mines of Cole chiefly enrich Newcaſtle in Northumberland, and by that the great City of London, and many other good Towns beſides: which could not poſſibly ſubſiſt in this general decay of Woods, and neglect of planting, but by this Commodity. The Mines of Lead are moſt conſiderable in the Peak of Derbyſhire; thoſe of Tin in Cornwall, where they dig Tin not much inferiour to Silver in fineneſs: A Commodity which brought great wealth to England in former times, the art of making it not being elſewhere known in Europe; till one of the Tin-workers, flying out of England for a Murder, paſſed into Germany, An. 1240. and there diſcovered ſome Tin-Mines in Miſnia, not known before, and ſet on foot that Trade amongſt them, to the great prejudice (ſaith my Author) of the Earls of Cornwall, who had before the ſole Monopoly of that uſeful metal.

To theſe particulars being matters of profit and neceſſity, if I would add ſuch things as are for delight and pleaſure; I might ſubjoin the Bells and Parks; for which this Kingdom is as eminent among Foreign Nations, as for any of thoſe mentioned in the ſaid old Verſe. The Bells ſo many, tunable, and of ſuch excellent Melody to a Muſical ear (brought more to the command of the skilful ringer than in former times) that it is thought there are more good Rings of Bells in this part of the Iland than in half Chriſtendom beſides. Parks more in England than in all Europe. The firſt of which kind for the incloſing of Veniſon, being that of Woodſtock, made by King Henry the firſt: whoſe example being followed by his Succeſſors, and the Lords and great men of the Realm; the number ſo encreaſed in a little time, that at the laſt, beſide 55 Foreſts, and 300 Chaſes, there were reckoned 745 Parks in England; all well repleniſhed either with Red or Fallow Deer.

And that the Deer might graze with pleaſure, and the Sheep with ſafety, great care was taken by our Progenitors for the deſtruction of Wolves. I know it hath been a tradition of old Writers, That England never had any Wolves at all, and that they would not live here brought from other places; but it is not ſo: here being ſtore of them, till Edgar King of England commuted the 20 l. of Gold, 300 l. of Silver, and 300 head of Cattel impoſed as a yearly tribute by King Athelſtane upon Idwallo Prince of Wales, for the like yearly tribute of 300 Wolves: by which means they were quite rooted out in time, the Welch proteſting at the laſt they could find no more.

The Air of this Country is very temperate, neither ſo hot as France and Spain in the Summer, becauſe of its Northernly ſituation; nor ſo cold in the Winter; becauſe the air of this Kingdom being groſs, cannot ſo ſoon penetrate as the thin air of thoſe Countries. For to ſay truth, the air in the Winter time is thick and foggy, cloudy, and much diſpoſed to miſts; eſpecially near the Sea, and the greater Rivers: inſomuch that many times, the Sun is not ſeen to ſhine out clearly for ſome weeks together. And thereupon there goeth a tale, that the great Conſtable of Caſtile being Ambaſſadour to King James in the firſt Winter of his reign, and tarrying here about a month; is ſaid not to have ſeen the Sun all the time of his ſtay: which occaſioned him at his going on ſhip-board, to deſire ſuch Lords and Gentlemen as attended him thither, to preſent his humble ſervice to the King their Maſter, and to the bleſſed Sun of Heaven when they chanced to ſee him. And ſomething alſo touching the temperature of the Air, may be aſcribed unto the Winds, which participating of the Seas, over which they paſs unto us, do carry with them a temperate warmth.

But if warmth were all the benefit we received from the Seas, it might indeed be ſaid, that we were come from Gods bleſſing into the warm Sun: but it is not ſo. For there are no Seas in Europe that yield more plenty of Fiſh than ours. Our Oyſters were famous in the times of the old Romans, and our Herrings are now very beneficial unto the Netherlands; to whom, the Engliſh-men, reſerving to themſelves a kind of Royalty, (for the Dutch by Cuſtom demand liberty to fiſh off Scarborough Caſtle in Yorkſhire) have yielded up the commodity; by which thoſe States are exceedingly enriched, and our Nation much impoveriſhed and condemned for lazineſs and ſloth. Beſides the loſs of employment for many men, who uſing this trade might be a ſeminary of good and able Mariners, as well for the Wars, as for further Navigations and diſcoveries, cannot but be very prejudicial to the ſtrength and flouriſhing of the Common-wealth and Empire of England.

But to make this appear more fully in all particulars, I ſhall extract ſome paſſages out of M. S. diſcourſe of the late Learned Knight Sir John Burroughs, principal King of Arms by the name of Garter, entituled, The Soveraignty of the Britiſh Seas. By which it doth appear, that there is fiſhing in thoſe Seas for Herrings, Pilchards, Cod, Ling, or other Fiſh, at all times of the year: and that too in ſo plentiful a manner, that not long ſince near Minnegal on the Coaſts of Devonſhire, 500 Ton of Fiſh were taken in one day, and 3000 pounds-worth in another, near S. Ives in Cornwall; the Hollanders taking at one draught 20 Laſts of Herrings.

Secondly, That almoſt all Nations hereabouts, as French, Spaniards, Netherlands, and thoſe of the Hanſe, do mightily improve themſelves both in power & wealth, by the benefit of the Engliſh Fiſhing; inſomuch as 10000 Sail of Foreign Veſſels (of which 1400 from the Town of Emden in Eaſt-Friſeland only) are thought to be maintained by this Trade alone.

Thirdly, That the Hollanders in particular employ yearly 8000 Veſſels of all ſorts for this Trade of Fiſhing on our Coaſts, whereby they have a Seminary of 150000 Sailers and Mariners, ready for any publick ſervice: all which maintain treble that number of Men, Women, and Children, of ſeveral Trades upon the Land.

Fourthly, That for the holding up of this Trade, the ſaid Hollanders, inhabiting a Tract of Land not ſo big as many of our Shires, do build 1000 Sail of Ships yearly; and thereby furniſhing all the parts of the world (even as far as Braſil) with our Commodities; returning home thoſe of other Countries in exchange thereof, which they ſell to us many times at their own prices.

Fifthly, That the ſaid Hollanders (as appeared upon computation) made in one year of the Herrings only, caught upon theſe Coaſts, the ſum of 5 Millions of our pounds, (the Cuſtoms and tenth Fiſh advancing to the publick Treaſury no leſs than 800000 l. Sterling): it being thought, that the Herrings caught by thoſe of the Hanſe Towns, and other Nations, amount to as great a ſum as that.

Sixthly, and finally, That by erecting only 250 Buſſes, (Veſſels of great Bulk and Stowage, but not ſwift of ſail) for the Herring Fiſhing, (which is not a ſixth part of thoſe which are employed yearly by the Hollanders) either at the publick charge of the State of England, or private Adven-

Adventurers thereto authorized and regulated, there would be found employment yearly for 1000 ships, and at least 20000 Mariners and Fishers at Sea, and consequently for as many Tradesmen and Labourers at Land; by means whereof, besides the vindication of our credit now at such a loss, there would arise in Customs, Tonnage, Poundage, and other Imposts, no less than 300000 l. per Annum to the publick Treasury. The prosecution of which Project (if not in greater proportion than that before) as it was once designed by Mr. Atturney Noy, my much honoured Friend: so do I heartily commend it to the Care of the State, and to his Successors in that Office, as the fittest remembrancers to advance it: there being no readier way than this to make the people wealthy, and the Nation formidable.

For notwithstanding these advantages of Fish, the Diet of England is, for the most part Flesh; in London only there are no fewer than 67500 Beefs, and 675000 Sheep slain, and uttered in a year, besides Calves, Lambs, Hogsflesh, and Poulterers ware. To prove this, suppose there be in London 60 Butchers Free of the City, whereof every one, and one with another, killeth an Oxe a day, as at least they do. Then reckon (as the London Butchers do affirm) that the Foreigners in the Suburbs and Villages sell four for their one. Lastly, count for every Oxe ten Sheep, (for this is also certainly known) to be killed and sold, and you have both the numbers above-mentioned. The Earl of Gondomar, once the Spanish Lieger here, having in some several Market days seen the several Shambles of this great City, said to them who made the discovery with him, That there was more flesh eaten in a month in that Town, than in all Spain in a year. Now had I his skill who by the length of Hercules Foot, found out the proportion of his whole body, I might by this provision of flesh consumed in the head, guess at the quantity of that which is spent in the body of the Realm. But this I leave to be determined by an abler hand. The usual and natural drink of the Country is Beer, so called from the French word Boire, (for Wines they have none of their own growing, as before is said) which, without controversie, is a most wholsom and nourishing Beverage: and being transported into France, Belgium, and Germany, by the working of the Sea is so purg'd, that it is amongst them in highest estimation; celebrated by the name of la bonne Beere d'Angle Terre. And as for the old drink of England, Ale, which cometh from the Danish word Ocla, it is questionless in it self, (and without that commixture which some are accused to use with it) a very wholsom drink; howsoever it pleased a Poet in the time of Henry the Third, thus to descant on it:

Nescio quid monstrum Stygiæ conforme paludi,
Cervisiam plerique vocant; nil spissius illa
Dum bibitur, nil clarius est dum mingitur; ergo
Constat quod multas fæces in ventre relinquit.

In English thus;

Of this strange drink so like the Stygian Lake,
Men call it Ale, I know not what to make.
Folk drink it thick, and pils it very thin;
Therefore much Dregs must needs remain within.

Now to conclude this general discourse concerning England, there goes a tale, that Henry the seventh (whose breeding had been low and private) being once pressed by some of his Council, to pursue his title unto France, returned this Answer: That France indeed was a flourishing and gallant Kingdom; but England in his mind was a fine Seat for a Country Gentleman, as any could be found in Europe.

Having staid thus long in taking a Survey of the Country it self, together with the chief commodities and pleasures of it; and amongst them of the Women also, (as the method of the old Verse led me on:) it is now time that we should look upon the men. And they are commonly of a comely feature, gracious countenance, for the most part gray-ey'd, pleasant, beautiful, bountiful, courteous, and much resembling the Italians in habit and pronunciation. In matters of war, (as we are ready to prove) they are both able to endure and resolute to undertake the hardest enterprises: in peace quiet, and not quarrelsom; in advice or counsel, sound and speedy. Finally, they are active, hearty, and chearful. And yet I have met with some Gentlemen, who upon the strength of a little travel in France, have grown so un-Englished (and so affected or besotted rather on the French Nation) that they affirm the English in respect of the French, to be an heavy, dull, and Phlegmatick people; of no dispatch, no mettle, no conceit, no audacity, and I know not what not. A vanity, meriting rather my pity, than my anger. Perhaps in vilifying their Nation, they had consulted with Julius Scaliger, who in the 16. Chap. of his 3d Book De re Poetica, giveth of the two most noble Nations, English and Scotish, this base and unmanly Character, Gothi belluæ, Scoti non minus; Angli perfidi, inflati, feri, contemptores, stolidi, amentes, inertes, inhospitales, immanes. His bolt (you see) is soon shot, and so you may happily guess at the quality of the Archer. A man indeed of an able learning, but of his own worth so highly conceited, that if his too much learning made him not mad, yet it made him to be too peremptory and arrogant. To revenge a National disgrace on a Personal, is an ignoble victory. Besides, Socrates resolution in the like kind in my opinion was very judicious, εἰ δὲ μὲ ὄνος ἐκάλεσε, ἀλλὰ ὁ ὄνος ἐμὲ οὐκ ἐλοιδόρησεν; if an Ass kick us, we must not put him in the Court. To confute his censure in every point, would be to him too great an honour, and for me too great a trouble; it being a task, which of it self would require a Volume. The best is, many shoulders make the burden light; and other Nations are as deeply engaged in this quarrel against that proud Man, as ours: for so maliciously hath he there taxed all other people, that that Chapter might more properly have been placed among his Hypercriticks.

How the English and Germans, which of all Nations are thought most given to their bellies, do agree and differ in this point; the same Scaliger hath thus shewed in one of his Epigrams.

Tres sunt Convivæ, Germanus, Flander, & Anglus; Die quis edat melius; quis melinsve bibat.
Non comedis Germane, bibis; tu non bibis Angle,
Sed comedis; comedis Flandre, bibisq; bene.

Dutch, Flemmings, English, are your only guests;
Say which of all doth eat, or drink it best.
Th' English love most to eat, the Dutch to swill,
Only the Flemming eats and drinks his fill.

Thus was it in his time with the English Nation; though since, I fear, we have borrowed too much of the Dutch, and learnt a great deal more than needs of the Flemmings also.

The Nobility of this Country is not of so much unlimited Power, as they are (to the prejudice of the State) in other Countries; the name of Dukes, Earls, and Marquesses, being meerly titular: whereas in other places they have some absolute, some mixt Government; so that upon any little distast, they will stand on their own guard, and slight the power of their Soveraign. And on the other side, the Commonalty enjoy a multitude of Priviledges above all other Nations; being most free from Taxes, and burdenous Impositions, but what they take upon themselves by their own consent. They have twice in a year (a laudable custom no where else to be seen) Justice administred even at their own doors, by the Itinerary Judges of the Kingdom: an Order first instituted by King Henry the second. They dwell together with the Gentlemen, in Villages, and Towns, which makes them savour of civility and good manners: and live in far greater reputation, than the Yeomen in Italy, Spain, France, or Germany; being able to entertain a stranger honestly, diet him plentifully, and lodge him neatly.

The Clergie was once of very great riches, as appeareth by that Bill preferred to King Henry the fifth, against the temporal Revenues of the Church; in which it was suggested, that they were able to maintain 15 Earls, 1500 Knights, 6000 men of Arms, more than 1000 Almshouses, and yet the King might clearly put up 20000 l. per Annum into his Exchequer. How true this was, I cannot say. But after this, King Henry the eighth took his Opportunities, to pare away the excrescencies of it; demolishing the Monasteries, and Religious houses, and paring off the superfluities of Bishoprieks and Cathedral Churches: in which he found not a few followers amongst the Ministers and great Officers of State, and Court, in the time of King Edward the sixth, and Queen Elizabeth. Yet left they not the Clergy so poor and naked, or destitute of the encouragements and rewards of learning, but that they have been still the objects of a covetous envy, (that which the former Harpies left them, being thought too much): though for abilities of Learning (I dare boldly say it) not to be paralleled in the World. For besides 5439 Parochial Benefices, being no Impropriations; and besides the Vicarages, most of which exceed the competency beyond the Seas; there were left in England at the time of the Reformation under Queen Elizabeth, 26 Bishopricks, (taking those of Wales into the reckoning) 26 Deaneries, 60 Archdeaconries, and 544 Dignities and Prebends; most of which, places of fair Revenue. And as for the maintenance of Priests, Monks, and Friers, before the Reformation, there were reckoned 90 Colledges, besides those in the Universities, 100 Hospitals, 3374 Chanteries and Free Chappels, and 645 Abbies and Monasteries: more than half of which had above the yearly income of 200 l. in old Rents, many above 2000, and some 4000 almost. So studious were our Ancestors both in those times of blindness, and these of a clearer sight, to encourage men to Learning, and then reward it.

The Souldiery of England is either for the Land or for the Sea. Our Victories by Land are most apparent over the Irish, Scots, Cypriots, Turks, and especially French, whose Kingdom hath been sore shaken by the English many times, especially twice by King Edward the Third, and Henry the fifth: this later making so absolute a conquest, that Charles the Seventh, like a poor Roy d' Ividot, confined himself to Bourges, where (having cashier'd his retinue) he was found in a little Chamber at Supper, with a Napkin only laid before him, a rump of Mutton and two Chickens. And so redoubted even after our expulsion from France, (our civil dissentions rather causing that expulsion, than the Frenchmens valour) was the English name in that Country: that in the Wars between King Charles the Eighth, and the Duke of Bretagne, the Duke, to strike a terror into his enemies apparelled 1500 of his own Subjects, in the Arms and Crots of England. But as the Ass, when he had on the Lions Skin, was for all that but an Ass and no Lion: so these Britons, by the weak resistance they made against their Enemies, shew'd that they were indeed Britons, and no Englishmen. Spain also tasted the valour of our Land-Souldiers, when John of Gaunt pursuing his Title to Spain, was sent home with 8 Waggons laden with Gold, and an Annual Pension of 10000 marks; as also when the Black Prince re-established King Peter in his Throne. And then also did they acknowledge, though they felt not the puissance of the English, when Ferdinand the Catholick surprized the Kingdom of Navarre. For there were then in Fontarabia, a Town of Guipuscoa, 6000 English Foot, who lay there to join with this Ferdinand in an Expedition against France. Concerning which, Guicciardine giveth this Item, That the Kingdom of Navarre was yielded rather for the fear and reputation of the English Forces that were at hand, than by any puissance of the King of Aragon. Since those times the Spaniard much esteemed us, as appeareth by this Speech of theirs to our Souldiers at the Siege of Amiens; You are tall Souldiers, and therefore when you come down to the Trenches, we double our guards, and look for blows; but as for those base and cowardly French, when they come, we make account we have nothing to do, but play, or sleep on our Ramparts. The like the Netherlanders can testifie; only this is the grief of it, The English are like Pyrrhus King of Epirus, fortunate to conquer Kingdoms, but unfortunate to keep them. Not to say any thing of the late, but great experience, which the English Souldiery hath gotten by the Civil Broils among themselves; at which my heart so aketh, and my hand so trembleth, that I shall only add in the words of Lucan,

Heu! quantum potuit cœli pelagiq; parari,
Hoc quem Civiles finderunt sanguine dextræ!

That is to say,

How much both Sea and Land might have been gain'd
By their dear blood, which Civil wars have drain'd!

As for their power and valour at Sea, it may evidently be perceived in the Battel of Sclusa, wherein King Edward the 3d, with 200 Ships, overcame the French Fleet consisting of 500 Sail; of which he sunk 200, and slew 30000 Souldiers. Secondly, at the Battel in 88, wherein a few of the Queens Ships vanquished the invincible Armado of the King of Spain, consisting of 134 great Galleons, and Ships of extraordinary bigness. Sir Francis Drake with 4 Ships took from the Spaniard one million and 189200 Ducats in one Voyage, An. 1587. And again with 25 Ships he awed the Ocean, sacked S. Jago, S. Dominico, and Cartagena; carrying away with him, besides Treasure, 240 Pieces of Ordnance. I omit the Circumnavigation of the whole World, by this Drake and Candish, and the voyage to Cales: as also how one of the Queens Ships named the Revenge, in which Sir Richard Greenvile was Captain, with 180 Souldiers (whereof 90 were sick on the balast) maintained a sea fight for 24 hours against above 50 of the Spanish Galleons. And though at last after her Powder was spent to the last barrel, she yielded upon honourable terms; yet she was never brought into Spain: having killed in that fight more than 10000 of their Souldiers, and sunk four of their greatest Vessels. I omit also the discovery of the Northern passages, by Hugh Willoughby, Davis, and Frobisher; concluding with that of Kekerman, Hoc certum est, omnibus hodie gentibus navigandi industria & peritia superiores esse Anglos: & post Anglos, Hollandos: Though now I know not by what neglect, and discontinuance of those honourable employments the Hollanders begin to bereave us of our ancient Glories, and would fain account themselves Lords of the Seas, and probably had been so indeed, had not his Majesty by the timely re-inforcing of his Naval val Power, An. 1636. recovered again the Dominion of it.

The Engliſh Language is a De-compound of Dutch, French and Latine; which I conceive rather to adde to its perfection, than to detract any thing from the worth thereof; ſince out of every Language we have culled the moſt ſignificant words, and equally participate of that which is excellent in them; their imperfections being rejected. For it is neither ſo boyſterous as the Dutch, nor ſo effeminate as the French; yet as ſignificant as the Latine, and in the happy conjunction of two words into one little inferiour to the Greek.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt here planted as ſome ſay, by S. Peter and Paul; more probably (as others ſay) by Joſeph of Arimathea, whoſe body they find to have been interred in the Iſle of Avalonia where the Abby of Glaſtonbury after ſtood. But that of his plantation being almoſt rooted out by long Perſecutions, and no ſupply of Preachers ſent from other places; Lucius a King of Britain (and the firſt Chriſtian King of Europe,) An. 180. or thereabouts, ſent his Ambaſſadors to Elentherius the then Pope of Rome to be furniſhed with a new ſupply of Paſtors, if not to plant, yet at the leaſt to water, and confirm the Goſpel planted here before; but almoſt rooted out again by prevailing Gentiliſm. At which time Lucius did not only receive the Faith himſelf, but by the piety of his example, and the diligence of the firſt Preachers ſent from Rome (being both of them natural Britains) it ſpread by little and little over all his Dominions; and in ſome tract of time over all the Iſland. Which being thus recovered to the Faith of Chriſt, was forthwith furniſhed with Biſhops and Metropolitans, according to the number of the Provinces and principal Cities (twenty eight in all) continuing here as long as Chriſtianity it ſelf. For not to truſt herein to the authority of the Britiſh Hiſtory, we find three Biſhops of this Iſle ſubſcribing to the Council of Arles, An. 314. viz. Eborius Biſhop of York, Reſtitutus Biſhop of London, and Adelfius Biſhop of Colcheſter, there called Colonia Londinenſium; and ſome of them alſo preſent in the Council of Sardica, An. 358. concurring with the reſt in voting to the condemnation of the Arian Hereſies; and the ſame or others the next year in the Synod of Arimin. And when the Britains were expulſed their native Country, or ſhut up in the mountainous parts of the Ordovices, and Silures, which we now call Wales; they carried Chriſtianity and Biſhops along with them: Auguſtine the Monk, finding no fewer then ſeven Biſhops in the Britiſh Church, when he was ſent by Gregory the Great to convert the Engliſh. And yet it is no fabulous vanity, (as ſome men ſuppoſe) to ſay that Auguſtine the Monk firſt Preached the Goſpel in England: becauſe it muſt be underſtood, not with Relation to the Britains, but the Engliſh Saxons: from whom theſe parts of the Iſle had the name of England, and from whom both the Britains, and the Faith it ſelf were driven into the Mountains of Wales & Cornwal, and Heatheniſm introduced again over all the Kingdom. Long after which it pleaſed God, that Gregory the Great, (but at that time a Deacon only in the Church of Rome) ſeeing ſome handſom youths to be ſold in open Market, demanded what and whence they were: to whom it was anſwered they were Angli: and well may they be ſo called (ſaith he) for they ſeem as Angels. Asking again of what Province they were amongſt the Angli; and anſwer being made of the Province of Deira (part of the Kingdom of the Northumbrians) therefore (ſaid he) De ira Dei ſunt liberandi. And laſtly underſtanding that the King of their Nation was named Alle; how fitly (ſaid he) may he ſing Allelujahs to the moſt High God? After which time he ſeriouſly endeavoured the Converſion of the Engliſh Nation; which being Pope he happily effected, by the travel and diligence of Auguſtine the Monk, the firſt Archbiſhop of Canterbury. And ſo well did the work proſper after this beginning, that not only all the Saxons did receive the Goſpel, but communicated the Light of it to other Nations: the Heſſians, Franconians and Turingians, being converted by Winfred; the Friſons or Hollanders by Wittikind the firſt Biſhop of Utrecht; the Saxons of Weſtphalen, by Weldrode, the firſt Biſhop of Breme; all of them being Engliſh Saxons, as we find in Beda and ſome others.

Now as theſe parts of Britain were the firſt which generally entertained the Goſpel, ſo were they the firſt alſo in theſe later times, which univerſally ſubmitted to the Reformation of ſuch corruptions, as had been brought upon them by the power and tyranny of the Church of Rome. Endeavoured firſt in France, by the Albigenſes, and Waldenſes, as was ſaid before. Who being ſuppreſſed and ruinated by the Sword of the Kings of France, ſheltred themſelves in the mountainous parts of Gaſcoigne and Cuienne, then in poſſeſſion of the Engliſh; who by that means became acquainted with their Tenets: maintained here publickly by Wiclef, and ſpreading under-hand amongſt the people of this Kingdom, till the times of Luther and the Reformation by him aimed at. Which being in moſt other Countries received tumultuouſly, by the power of the people; was here admitted upon mature deliberation, by the authority and conſent of the Prince and Prelates: the Architects in this great work, without reſpect unto the Dictates of Luther or Calvin, looking only on Gods Word and the Primitive Patterns, aboliſhing ſuch things as were repugnant unto either, but ſtill retaining ſuch Ceremonies in Gods publick worſhip, as were agreeable to both, and had been countenanced by the practice of the Primitive times. A point wherein they did obſerve a greater meaſure of Chriſtian prudence and moderation, than their neighbour Churches; which in a meer deteſtation of the See of Rome, allowed of nothing which had formerly been in uſe amongſt them, becauſe defiled with Popiſh Errors and abuſes: and thereby utterly averting thoſe of the Papal party from joining with them in the work, or coming over to them when the work was done. Whereas had they continued an allowable correſpondency in theſe extrinſecals of Religion, with the Church of Rome; their party in the world had been far greater, and not ſo much ſtomached as it is. And ſo it was conceived by the Marqueſs de Rhoſne, after Duke of Sully, and Lord High-Treaſurer of France, and one of the chief men of that party there: when being ſent Ambaſſadour to King James, from King Henry the fourth, he had obſerved the Majeſty and Decency of Gods publick Service, in ſome Cathedrals of this Kingdom; Religion would be ſoon defaced and trod under foot if not preſerved and fenced about with the hedge of Ceremonies.

As for the Government of the Church ſince the laſt Converſion, as by the piety and example of Lucius there were founded three Archbiſhopricks, and 25 Biſhopricks, according to the number of the Archi-Flamins, and Flamines (whoſe great Revenues were converted to more ſacred uſes in the times of Idolatry: So by the like pious care of Pope Gregory the Great, by whoſe means this laſt Converſion happened; Archbiſhopricks, and Biſhopricks were deſigned to convenient places. The number 26 in all; to each Province twelve, beſides the two Archbiſhops and Metropolitans: wherein he had the happineſs to have his deſires fulfilled, though the number was not made compleat till theſe later days, nor with ſuch equal diſtribution, as he did intend. For in the Province of York laid waſte and deſolate by the Danes, and not ſo ſoon converted as the other was; the number of the Suffragan Biſhops came not up to his purpoſe, but did as much exceed in the Province of Canterbury: eſpecially when K. Henry the 8th had incorporated Wales with England and founded five Epiſcopal Sees out of the ruins and Revenues of ſome principal Monaſteries: of which none but the Biſhoprick of Cheſter (and that of the Iſle of Man, which maketh up the 27th,) were laid unto the Province of York. And ſo it ſtood, notwithſtanding the alterations of Religion, without any diſpute, till Calvin having hammered out his new Presbitery, and recommended it to the uſe of all Chriſtian Churches (the Hiſtory whereof we had ſuccinctly in the Alpine Provinces) found many apt Scholars in moſt places to decry this Order, though conſonant to the word of God: and moſt pure Antiquity.

But the truth is, it was not ſo much the Authority of Calvin, or the malignant zeal of Beza, or the impetuous clamors of their Diſciples, which cauſed the Epiſcopal Order to grow out of credit; as the Avarice of ſome great perſons in Court and State, who greedily gaped after the poor remnant of their Poſſeſſions. It had been elſe a miracle that Calvins Plat-form made only for the uſe of a private City, and not proportioned, no nor intended at the firſt, to the ſtate of other Churches, eſpecially where the Biſhops had been inſtrumental in the Reformation: ſhould be ſo headily received in ſome Kingdoms, and ſo importunately and clamorouſly deſired in others.

The moſt valorous Souldiers of this Country, when poſſeſſed by the Britains; were 1 Caſſibelane, who twice repulſed the Roman Legions, though conducted by Cæſar; and had not a party here at home been formed againſt him, he had for ever done the like. 2 Pratuſagus, King of the Iceni. 3 Conſtantine the Great. 4 Arthur, one of the Worlds nine Worthies. In the times of the Saxons. 5 Guy Earl of Warwick. 6 King Edmund Ironſide; and 7 Canutus the Dane. Under the Normans, of moſt note have been 1 William ſirnamed the Conqueror, 2 Richard, and 3 Edward, both the firſt of thoſe names, ſo renowned in the Wars of the Holy-Land, 4 Edward the 3d, and 5 Edward the Black Prince, his Son Duo fulmina belli, as famous in the Wars of France; 6 Henry the 5th, and 7 John Duke of Bedford his Brother, of equal gallantry with the other. 8 Montacute Earl of Salisbury. 9 Sir John Falſtolf, and 10 Sir John Hawkwood, of great eſteem for valour in France and Italy: not to deſcend to later times. And for Sea Captains, thoſe of moſt note, have been Hawkins, Willoughby, Burroughs, Jenkinſon, Drake, Frobiſher, Cavendiſh and Greenvile, of ſome of which we have ſpoke already, and of the reſt we may have an opportunity to ſpeak more hereafter.

Scholars of moſt renown amongſt us, 1 Alcuinus, one of the Founders of the Univerſity of Paris. Beda, who for his Piety and Learning obtained the Attribute or Adjunct of Venerabilis. Concerning which, the Legends tell us, that being blind, his Boy had knaviſhly conducted him to preach to an heap of ſtones; and that when he had ended his Sermon with the Gloria Patri, the very ſtones concluded, ſaying, Amen, Amen, Venerabilis Beda. But other of the Monkiſh Writers do aſſign this reaſon and both true alike; that at his death ſome unlearned Prieſt intending to honour him with an Epitaph, had thus far blundered on a verſe, viz. Hic ſunt in foſſa Bedæ oſſa: but becauſe the Verſe was yet imperfect, he went to bed to conſider of it, leaving a ſpace betwixt the two laſt words thereof; which in the mourning he found filled up in a ſtrange Character, with the word Venerabilis; and ſo he made his Verſe, and Beda (pardon his diverſion) obtained that Attribute. 3 Anſelm, and 4 Bradwardin, Archbiſhops of Canterbury, Men Famous for the times they lived in. 5 Alexander of Hales, Tutor to Thomas Aquinas, and Bonaventure. 6 Thomas of Walden, the profeſſed Enemy of Wiclef, againſt whom he writ. 7 John Wiclef Parſon of Lutterworth in the County of Leiceſter, who ſo valiantly oppoſed the Power and Errours of the Church of Rome; though he vented many of his own. Then ſince the time of the Reformation, 1 John Jewel Biſhop of Salisbury, to whoſe Learned and Induſtrious Labours, in defence of the Religion here by Law eſtabliſhed, we are ſtill beholding. Dr. John Reynolds, and 3 Mr. Richard Hooker, both of Corpus Chriſti Colledg in Oxon; the firſt, a man of infinite reading, the ſecond of as ſtrong a judgment. 4 Dr. Whitakers of Cambridge, the Antagoniſt of the famous Bellarmine. 5 Dr. Thomas Bilſon, and 6 Dr. Lancelot Andrews, both Biſhops of Wincheſter, the Ornaments of their ſeveral times. 7 Biſhop Mountague of Norwich, a great Philologer and Divine. 8 Dr. John Whitgift, and 9 Dr. William Laud, Archbiſhops of Canterbury. Of which laſt, and his diſcourſe againſt Fiſher the Jeſuite, Sir Edward Dearing his profeſſed Enemy, hath given this Character, that in that Book of his he had muzled the Jeſuits, and ſhould ſtrike the Papiſts under the fifth rib, when he was dead and gone: and that being dead, whereſoever his grave ſhould be, PAULS (whoſe reparation he endeavoured, and had almoſt finiſhed) would be his perpetual Monument, and his Book his laſting Epitaph. And as for thoſe who have ſtood up in maintenance of the Church of Rome, thoſe of moſt note were Dr. Harding, the Antagoniſt of Biſhop Jewel. 2 Nic. Sanders, and 3 Dr. Thomas Stapleton, to whoſe Writings the great Cardinal Bellarmine doth ſtand much indebted. 4 Campian, and 5 Parſons, both Jeſuites: and 6 William Reynolds, a Seminary Prieſt, and the Brother of Dr. John Reynolds ſpoken of before. Of which two Brothers (by the way) it is very obſervable, That William was at firſt a Proteſtant of the Church of England, and John trained up in Popery beyond the Seas, William out of an honeſt zeal to reduce his Brother to his Church, made a journey to him: where in a Conference betwixt them it ſo fell out, that John being overcome by his Brothers Arguments, returned into England, where he became one of the more ſtrict or rigid ſort of the Engliſh Proteſtants, and William being convinced by the Reaſons of his Brother John, ſtayed beyond the Seas, where he proved a very violent and virulent Papiſt. Of which ſtrange accident, Dr. Alabaſter, who had made trial of both Religions, and amongſt many notable Whimſeys, had ſome fine Abilities, made this following Epigram; which for the Excellency thereof, and the Rareneſs of the Argument, I ſhall here ſubjoin,

Bella inter geminos pluſquam Civilia Fratres, Traxerat ambiguus Religionis apex.
Ille Reformatæ Fidei pro partibus inſtat;
Iſte Reformandam denegat eſſe fidem.
Propoſitis cauſæ rationibus, alter-utrinque;
Concurrere pares, & cecidere pares.
Quod fuit in votis, Fratrem capit alter-uterque;
Quod fuit in ſatis, perdit uterque fidem.
Captivi gemini ſine captivante fuerunt,
Et victor victi tranſfuga caſtra petit.
Quod genus hoc pugnæ eſt, ubi victus gaudet uterque;
Et tamen alter-uter ſe ſuperaſſe dolet?

Which excellent Epigram, though not without great diſadvantage to the Latine Original, I have thus tranſlated:

In points of Faith ſome undermin'd jars,
Betwixt two Brothers kindled Civil Wars.
One for the Churches Reformation ſtood;
The other thought no Reformation good.

The

The points propos'd, they traverſed the field
With equal skill, and both together yield.
As they deſir'd, his Brother each ſubdues;
Yet ſuch their Fate, that each his Faith did looſe.
Both Captives, none the priſoners thence do guide;
The Victor flying to the Vanquiſht ſide.
Both joy'd in being Conquer'd, (ſtrange to ſay)
And yet both mourn'd becauſe both won the day.

And then for men of other Studies, 1 Lindwood the Canoniſt, 2 Coſins, and 3 Cowel, eminent in the ſtudies of the Civil Laws. 4 Bracton, and 5 Briton of old times; 6 Dier, and 7 Coke of late days, as eminent for their knowledge in the Laws of England. 8 Johannes de Sacro Boſco, the Author of the Book of the Sphere; and 9 Roger Bacon, a noted Mathematician in the darker times. 10 Sir Francis Bacon the Learned Viſcount of S. Albans, of whom more hereafter. 11 Sir Thomas More, Lord Chancellour, one of the Reſtorers of Learning to the Ile of Great Britain. 12 Sir Henry Savile of Eaton, the reviver of Chryſoſtom. 13 Sir Henry Spelman, a right Learned Antiquary, and a Religious aſſertor of the Churches Rights. 14 Camden, Clarenciaux, the Pauſanias of the Britiſh Iſlands. 15 Matthew Paris, 16 Roger Hovedon, 17 Henry of Huntingdon, 18 William of Malmesbury, 19 Matthew of Weſtminſter, and 20 Thomas of Walſingham; all known Hiſtorians. And finally for Poetry, 1 Gower, 2 Lidgate, a Monk of Bury; 3 the Famous Geofry Chawcer, Brother in Law to John of Gaunt the great Duke of Lancaſter; of which laſt Sir Philip Sidney uſed to ſay, that he marvelled how in thoſe miſty times he could ſee ſo clearly, and others in ſo clear times go ſo blindly after him. 4 Sir Philip Sidney himſelf, of whom and his Arcadia, more when we come to Greece. 5 The renowned Spencer, of whom and his Fairy Queen, in another place. 6 Sam. Daniel, the Lucan, 7 with Michael Draiton, the Ovid of the Engliſh Nation. 8 Beamount, and 9 Fletcher, not inferiour unto Terence and Plautus; with 10 My friend Ben. Johnſon, equal to any of the Antients for the exactneſs of his Pen, and the decorum which he kept in the Dramatick Poems, never before obſerved on the Engliſh Theatre. Others there are as eminent both for Arts and Arms, as thoſe here ſpecified, of whom, as being ſtill alive, I forbear to ſpeak; according to that caution of the Hiſtorian, ſaying, Vivorum ut magna admiratio, ita Cenſura eſt difficilis.

But from the Men to return again unto the Country, we find it to be ſubject (according to the ſeveral reſpects of Church and State) to a treble diviſion; viz. 1 into 6 Circuits deſtinated to the Itinerary Judges: Secondly, into 22 Epiſcopal Dioceſſes. Thirdly, into 40 Shires. The Realm was firſt divided into Circuits by King Henry the Second, who appointed twice in the year, two of the moſt Grave and Learned Judges of the Land, ſhould in each Circuit adminiſter Juſtice in the chief or head Towns of every County. Of theſe Judges, one ſitteth on matters Criminal, concerning the life and death of Malefactors: the other in Actions Perſonal, concerning Title of Land, Debts, or the like, between party and party. The firſt Circuit (for we will begin at the Weſt) comprehendeth the Counties of Wilts, Somerſet, Devon, Cornwal, Dorſet, and Southampton. The ſecond containeth the Counties of Oxford, Berks, Glouceſter, Monmouth, Hereford, Worceſter, Salop, and Stafford. The third hath in it the Counties of Surrey, Suſſex, Kent, Eſſex, and Hartford. The Fourth conſiſteth of the Shires of Buckingham, Bedford, Huntingdon, Cambridge, Norfolk, and Suffolk. The fifth of the Shires of Northampton, Rutland, Lincoln, Nottingham, Darby, Leiceſter, and Warwick. And the ſixth and laſt, of the Shires of York, Durham, Northumberland, Cumberland, Weſtmerland, and Lancaſter. So that in theſe ſix Circuits are numbred 38 Shires. The two remaining are Middleſex, and Cheſhire: whereof the firſt is exempted, becauſe of its vicinity to London; and the ſecond as being a County Palatine, and having peculiar Judges and Counſellours to it ſelf.

The ſecond Diviſion, but more antient far in point of time, is that of Dioceſſes, 22 in all, proportioned according to the number of Epiſcopal Sees: each Dioceſs having in it one or more Arch-Deaconries, for diſpatch of Eccleſiaſtical buſineſs; and every Arch-Deaconry ſubdivided into Rural Deanries, fewer or more, according to the bigneſs and extent thereof. Of theſe there are but four in the Province of York, that is to ſay, the Dioceſſes of York, Cheſter, Durham, and Carlile: the other 18 (together with the 4 of Wales) being reckoned into that of Canterbury. In reſpect of which great authority and juriſdiction, the Archbiſhops of Canterbury had anciently the titles of Primates and Metropolitans of all England; & for ſome Ages before the Reformation, uſed to take place in all General Councils, at the Popes right Foot. Which Cuſtom took beginning at the Council of Laterane, when Urban the ſecond called Anſelm the Archbiſhop of Canterbury from amongſt the other Prelates then aſſembled, and placed him at his right foot, ſaying, Includamus hunc in Orbe noſtro tanquam alterius Orbis Papam. This happened An. 1099. They were anciently alſo Legati nati; which honourable Title was firſt given to Archbiſhop Theobald, by Innocent the Second, and continued unto his Succeſſors. And both to honour their calling in the courſe of their Government, and to have the benefit of their Counſel, being men of Learning, both the Archbiſhops and the Biſhops, were anciently priviledged to have their place and ſuffrage in the High Court of Parliament (ever ſince any Parliaments were firſt held in England) as Peers of the Realm; and that too in a double reſpect: firſt in relation had to their ſacred Office, and ſecondly to thoſe temporal Eſtates and Baronies, which they held of the King. Yet did they not enjoy in the times of their greateſt power and flouriſhing, all the Prerogatives and Priviledges of the temporal Barons: as neither being tryed by their Peers in Criminal cauſes, but left to an Ordinary Jury; nor ſuffered in examinations to make a Proteſtation upon their honour, to the truth of the Fact, but put unto their Oaths like others of the lower Clergy. As for their Eccleſiaſtical Courts, it was antiently ordered alſo, that beſides ſuch as appertained to the Archbiſhops themſelves; beſides thoſe holden by the Chancellors and Arch-Deacons of every Biſhop, in their ſeveral Dioceſſes, and ſome in many private Pariſhes which they call Peculiars: and finally, beſides the Courts of Viſitation, held every two years by the Arch-Deacons or their Officials, & every third year by the Biſhop himſelf in perſon, or his lawful Deputy: there ſhould be alſo Synods or Convocations, which are the Parliaments of the Clergy, aſſembled primarily for the Reforming of the Church in Doctrine and Diſcipline: and ſecondarily, for granting Tenths and Subſidies to the King: Which Synods, whether they be National, or Provincial only, do naturally conſiſt of all the Right Reverend Fathers, the Arch-biſhops, Biſhops, the Deans, Arch-Deacons, and one Prebend out of each Cathedral, and a certain number of the Clergy, (two for every Dioceſs) elected by the reſt to ſerve for them in that great Aſſembly: the Clergy not being bound antiently by any Act, to which they had not given conſent by thoſe their Proxies: Of which ſo called and met together, the Biſhops ſitting by themſelves make the Upper Houſe; the Deans, Arch-deacons, and the reſt, do conſtitute the Lower Houſe of Convocation.

The third and laſt Diviſion, though the ſecond in courſe of time, is that of Shires made by King Alfride, both for the eaſier Adminiſtration of juſtice; and to prevent ſuch Outrages and Robberies, as (after the example of the Danes) the natural Inhabitants of the Realm began in all places to commit. For over every one of theſe Shires or Counties, he appointed an High Sheriff and divers Officers, to ſee into the behaviour of private men, and to puniſh ſuch as were delinquent: and in times of war either already begun, or intended, he inſtituted a Perfect or Lieutenant; to whom he gave authority to ſee their muſters, their proviſion of arms, and if occaſion ſerved, to puniſh ſuch as rebelled or mutined. This wiſe King ordained alſo, that his Subjects ſhould be divided into tens or tithings, every of which ſeverally ſhould give bond for the good abearing of each other; and he who was of that diſſolute behaviour, that he could not be admitted to theſe tithings, was forthwith conveyed to the houſe of correction. By this courſe every man was not only careful of his own actions, but had an eye to all the nine for whom he ſtood bound; as the nine had over him: inſomuch that a poor girl might travel ſafely with a bag of gold in her hand, and none durſt meddle with her. The antienteſt of theſe 10 men were called κατ' ἐξοχὴν, the Tithing men, 10 of the higheſt and neighbouring tithings, made the leſſer Diviſion which we call hundreds: which name cannot be derived from the like number of Villages, for none of our hundreds are ſo large: and one of them there is in Berkſhire, which containeth five hamlets only. We have then a diviſion of the Realm into 40 Shires; of the Shires into divers hundreds; and of the hundreds into ten tithings. And this diviſion made by Alfride ſtill remains in force: as alſo doth the High Sheriff, and the reſt of the ſubordinate Officers of the High Sheriff conſiſting eſpecially at this time, in executing Arreſts, aſſiſting the Itinerary Judges, gathering the Kings Fines and Amerciaments, and raiſing the Poſſe-Comitatus if occaſion be. But for the Civil part of government in the ſeveral Counties, it is moſt in the hands of ſuch as we call Juſtices of the Peace, authorized by Commiſſion under the great Seal of England: appointed firſt by that prudent Prince King Edward the firſt, by the name of Cuſtodes Pacis, Guardians of the Peace, and firſt, called Juſtices of the Peace in the 36 of King Edward the 3d. Cap. 11. A form of Government ſo much conducing to the propriety of the Country, and the ſecurity of the People; that King James the firſt Monarch of Great Britain, eſtabliſhed it by law in the Kingdom of Scotland. Then for the Courts which are ſtill kept in every ſhire, they are either the County Court holden every month, wherein the Sheriff or his ſufficient deputy commonly preſideth; or the Aſſizes and court of Goal-delivery held twice a year by the Judges Itinerant aſſiſted by the Juſtices of the Peace and others in Commiſſion with them. There are alſo two Offices in every hundred choſen out of the Yeomanry, whom we call the Conſtables of the hundred: who receiving the Precepts or Warrants of the Sheriff, or Juſtices, diſpatcheth them to the Tithingman or Petit Conſtable of each Town, and Village, in their ſeveral Diviſions. And in each hundred, a Court kept once in three Weeks, by the Steward of the hundred, or his Deputy, capable of Pleas or Actions under the value of 40 s. though in ſome few of theſe Courts alſo (as in that of Slaughter hundred in Glocester-ſhire): the value of the Action, by ſome ſpecial Charter, be left unlimited. The like Court alſo hidden in ſome antient Burroughs. And beſides theſe, in every Village are two ſeveral Courts, and theſe two holden twice a year if occaſion be, held by the Steward of the Manor: in the one of which called the Court Leet, there is Enquiry made into Treaſons, Felonies, Murders, and other Caſes, falling between the King and the Subject, and in the other, which we call by the name of Court-Baron, ſuch only as concern the Lord and Tenants, and theſe laſt for the moſt part ſummoned at the will of the Lord: So that Comines had (we ſee) good reaſon for this Affirmation, that of all the Signiories in the World that ever he knew, the Realm of England was the Country in which the Common-wealth was beſt governed.

To return again unto the Shires, ſome of them take their names from the old Inhabitants, as Cumberland from the Cymbri or ancient Britains, Eſſex and Suſſex from the Eaſt and South Saxons: ſome from the ſituation of them, as Northumberland, Norfolk, Southfolk, Devonſhire; this laſt ſo called from Devinam, a Welch or Britiſh word, ſignifying Low Vallies, of which it very much conſiſteth: Some from the form or figure of them, as Cornwal, from the reſemblance which it hath to an horn; and Kent, (in Latine, Cantium) becauſe it lyeth in a Canton or Corner of the Iſland. Some from ſome Accidents therein, as Berkſhire, or Berockſhire, from the abundance of Boxe, which the Saxons call by the name of Beroc: the moſt part from the principal Town of all the County, as Glouceſter, Oxford, and the like. Of theſe Shires the biggeſt beyond all compare, is the County of York, out of which 70000 men may be raiſed for preſent ſervice, if need ſo require. And in them all are comprehended 8709 Pariſhes (beſides thoſe of Wales) not reckoning in ſuch Chappels as we call Chappels of Eaſe, in greatneſs not inferiour to many Pariſhes; 22 Cities, 585 Market Towns which are no Cities; and in the Towns and Villages to the number of 145 Caſtles, or ruines of Caſtles; few of them places of importance, and ſuch as are belonging generally to the Kings, who ſuffer not any of their Subjects to neſt themſelves in Strong Holds and Caſtles.

Cities of moſt obſervation in it, 1 London, ſeated on the Thames, by which divided into two parts, conjoyned together by a ſtately and magnificent Bridge, ſpoken of before. The River capable in this place of the greateſt Ships, by means whereof it hath been reckoned a long time for one of the moſt Famous Mart-Towns in Chriſtendom: and not long ſince, had ſo much got precedency of all the reſt, that the greateſt part of the wealth of Europe was driven up that River. A City of great Note in the time of the Roman Conqueſt; to whom it was firſt known by the name of Londinum: a Town at that time of great Trade and Riches; and by them honoured with the Title of Auguſta. Increaſed of late very much in Buildings: contiguous to ſome Towns and Villages, from which in former times diſjoined by ſome diſtant intervals So that the circuit may contain 8 miles at leaſt: in which ſpace are 122 Pariſh Churches; the Palace of the King, the Houſes of the Nobility, Colledges for the ſtudy of the Laws, I mean not the Civil Law, which is Jus Gentium, but (as we call it) the Common Law, appropriate only to this Kingdom. It is wondrous populous, containing well nigh 600000 people; which number is much augmented in the Term time. Some compare London with Paris thus: London is the richer, the more populous, and more antient; Paris the greater, more uniform, and better fortified. But for my part, as I do not think that London is the more populous, ſo neither can I grant that Paris is the greater City, except we meaſure them by the Walls. For taking in the Suburbs of both, and all that paſſeth in Accompt by the name of London: I cannot but conceive, that if London were caſt into the ſame orbicular figure, the circumference of it would be larger than that of Paris. For uniformity of Building, Paris indeed doth go beyond it; but may in that be equalled alſo in ſome tract of time, if the Deſign begun in King James his Reign, tending to the advancement of ſuch Uniformity, be not interrupted.

For

For other things, certain is that London is the antienter City, as being an Archbishops See in the time of the Britains, when the name of Paris was scarce heard of, a Bishops See at the first conversion of the Saxons: increased so much in wealth and honour from one age to another, that it is grown at last too big for the Kingdom; which whether it may be profitable for the State, or not, may be made a question. Great Towns in the body of a State, are like the Spleen or Milt in the body natural, the monstrous growth of which impoverisheth all the rest of the Members, by drawing to it all the animal and vital spirits, which should give nourishment unto them: And in the end cracked or surcharged by its own fulness, not only sends unwholsom fumes and vapours unto the head, and heavy pangs unto the heart, but draws a consumption on it self. And certainly the over-growth of great Cities is of dangerous consequence, not only in regard of Famine, such multitudes of mouths not being easie to be fed: but in respect of the irreparable danger of Insurrections, if once those multitudes, sensible of their own strength, oppressed with want, or otherwise distempered with faction or discontent, should gather to an head, and break out into action. Yet thus much may be said to the honour of London, though grown by much too big now for the Kingdom, that it is generally so well governed, and in so good peace, that those Murders, Robberies, and Outrages so frequent in great and populous Cities beyond the Seas, are here seldom heard of. 2 York, in the West Riding of that County, the second City of England, as the old Verse hath it:

Londinum caput est & Regni urbs prima Britanni, Eboracum à prima jure secunda venit.

That is to say,

In England, London is the chiefest Town;
The second place York claimeth as its own.

And so it may, being indeed the second City of the Kingdom, both for fame and greatness. A pleasant, large and stately City, well fortified and beautifully adorned, as well with private as publick Edifices; and rich, and populous withal. Seated upon the River Ouse, or Eure, which divides it in twain; both parts being joined together with a fair stone Bridge, consisting of high and mighty Arches. A City of great estimation in the time of the Romans, the Metropolis of the whole Province or Diocess of Britain; remarkable for the death & burial of the Emperour Severus, and the birth of Constantine the Great: by consequence the Seat of the Primate of the British Church, as long as Christianity did remain among them, Nor stooped it lower when the Saxons had received the Faith: and notwithstanding those mutations which befel this Kingdom, under the Saxons, Danes, and Normans, it still preserved its antient lustre, and encreased it too. Adorned with a stately and magnificent Cathedral, inferiour to few in Europe; and with a Palace of the Kings, (called the Manor-house) the dwelling in these later days, of the Lord President of the Court or Council here established by K. Henry the 8th, for the benefit of the Nothern Subjects, after the manner of a French Parliament, or Presidial Sieges. 3 Bristol, the third in rank of the Cities of England, situate on the meeting of the Frome and Avon, not far from the influx of the Severn into the Ocean: in that regard commodiously seated for Trade and traffick; the Ships with full Sail coming into the City, and the Citizens with as full purses trading into most parts of the World, with good Faith & Fortune. A Town exceeding populous, and exceeding cleanly, there being Sewers made under ground, for the conveyance of all filth and nastiness, into the Rivers. Churches it hath to the number of 18 or 20, reckoning in the Cathedral, and that of Ratcliff. The Cathedral first built by Rob. Fitz-Harding, Son to a King of Denmark, once a Burger here, and by him stored with Canons Regular, An. 1248, but made a Bishops-See by King Henry the 8th, An. 1542. The principal building next the Church, is an ancient Castle, a piece of such strength, that Maud the Empress having took King Stephen Prisoner, thought it the safest place to secure him in. 4 Norwich, the fourth City of the first rank, of which more hereafter. 5 Oxford, the first of the second rank of English Cities seated upon the Ouse, or Isis: but whether so called as Vadum Isidos, Ouseford, or the Ford of Ouse; or Voda-boum (as the Greeks had their Bosphore in former times) I determine not. An antient Town, and antiently made a Seat of Learning co-eval unto that of Paris, if not before it; the University hereof being restored rather than first founded by K. Alured, An. 886, after it had been overborn a while by the Danish Furies; but hereof as an University, more anon. This only now, that for the stateliness of the Schools and publick Library, the bravery and beauty of particular Colledges, all built of fair and polished stone; the liberal endowment of those houses, and notable encouragements of Industry and Learning in the salary of the Professors in most Arts & Sciences, it is not to be parallel'd in the Christian World. The City of it self well built, and as pleasantly seated, formed in the Figure of a Cross, two long streets thwarting one another, each of them near a mile in length; containing in that compass, 13 Parish Churches, and a See Episcopal founded here by King Henry the 8th, Anno 1541. The honourable Title of twenty of the noble Family of the Veres, now Earl of Oxon, 6 Salisbury, first seated on the Hill, where now stands old Salisbury, the Sorboidunum of the Antients. But the Cathedral being removed down into the Vale, the Town quickly followed, and grew up very suddenly into great Renown; pleasantly seated on the Avon, (a name common to many English Rivers) which watereth every street thereof; and for the populousness of the place, plenty of Provisions, number of Churches, a spacious Market-place, and a fair Town-hall, esteemed the second City of all the West. 7 Glocester, by Antonine called Glevum, by the Britains Caer Glowy, whence the present name; the Saxons adding Cester, as in other places. A fine neat City, pleasantly seated on the Severn, with a large Key or Wharf on the banks thereof, very commodious to the Merchandize and trade of the place: well built, consisting of fair large Streets, beautified with a fair Cathedral; for the magnificence of the Quire, elegancy of the Cloisters, and graciousness of the Bel-tower there scarce to be followed in the Kingdom: and situate in such a Vale, that there is nothing wanting to the use of man except only Wine, which life or luxury may require. 8 Chester, upon the River Dee, built in the manner of a quadrate, inclosed with a Wall, which takes up more than two miles in compass; containing in that compass 12 Parish Churches, and an old Cathedral dedicated antiently to S. Wereburg, Daughter of Wolfre K. of the Mercians, and the Visitrets of all the Monasteries of England. But made a Bishops See by King Henry the 8th. The buildings generally fair, the Sreets wide and open, with Galleries before every door under which a man might walk dry from one end to the other. The rest of chief note shall be specified on another occasion, with this advertisement, that the ordinary Cities of England are not to be compared with those of France, and Italy: First because the Nobles and Gentry of those Countries live for the most part in the Cities, ours in the Country-Villages; And secondly, because the Londoners so ingross all trading, that they drew thither all the

the Wealth and treasure of the Kingdom. By means whereof, that every day encreaseth in wealth and beauty; the rest (except Bristol only) do decay as sensibly: that City being like the Spleen in the body natural, the monstrous growth whereof starveth all the rest of the Members. Liene excrescente, reliquum corpus contabescit, as the Doctors have it.

There are in England but two Universities, which may equal six, nay ten of all other Countries (so that Paris be not in the number) most of them being no better than our Colledges of Westminster, Eaton, or Winchester; and none so liberally endowed, as some one of these in the Universities. Of which there are 16 in Cambridge, some of them called only by the name of Halls, but these endowed with Lands and Fellowships as the others are. In Oxford there are 18 Colledges endowed with Lands, besides six Halls, where Students live at their own charges: in both of them Professors of the Arts and Sciences, as also of Divinity, Law, Physick, and the Learned Languages, with liberal Salaries, and in each to the number of 3000 Students, so regular in their lives and conversations, as are not to be found in the World besides. The fairer and more antient, Oxford, which of long time, together with Paris in France, Bononia in Italy, and Salamanca in Spain, hath been honoured with the Title of Generale studium. For that the University of Cambridge, (though giving upper hand to her Sister of Oxford, the may take place of all the Universities in the World besides) is not of so long standing as that of Oxford, is evident by the testimony of Robertus de Remington, cited by Master Camden, viz. Regnante Edwardo primo, (it should rather be read secundo) de studio Grantbridge facta est Academia, sicut Oxonium: where the word sicut doth not import an identity of the time; but a relation to Oxford, as to the pattern. We see this truth yet clearer in the Bull of Pope John the 21, the contemporary of our Edward the Second, as I find in the work of that great Searcher of Academical Antiquities, Mr. Brian Twine. Apostolica Authoritate statuimus (saith the Bull) quod Collegium Magistrorum & Scholarium ejusdem studii (speaking of Cambridge) Universitas sit censenda, &c. But what need more than the Resolution of the Commons of the first Parliament holden under K. James? For when the Clerk of that House had put the name of Cambridge before Oxford; they taking disdainfully that Hysteron Proteron, commanded the Antiquities of both Universities to be searched, and after search made, gave the place to Oxford. But to proceed, the University of Cambridge as it was much of a later Foundation, so was it long before it grew into esteem: insomuch, that when William of Wainflete Bishop of Winchester, and Founder of Magdalen Colledge in Oxon, (whereof I was once an unworthy Member) perswaded King Henry the Sixth to erect a Colledge in Oxford, as some of the Kings his Predecessors had done before him: immo potius Cantabrigiæ (replyed the King) Ut duas si fieri possit in Anglia Academias habeam. No, said the King, in Cambridge rather, that so, if possible, I may have two Universities in my Realm of England.

As for the Story of this Country, that it was first peopled out of Gaul, is affirmed by Cæsar, and proved by many strong and concluding Arguments; as their Religion, Manners Languages, Customs, and the nearness of the one to the other. To omit therefore the Fable of Brute, and the Catalogue of 68 Kings, which are said to have reigned here successively before the coming of the Romans: Certain it is, that Cæsar found the Country cantoned into many Kingdoms (four in Kent alone) and the people to be very rude and illiterate. Such Learning as they had was locked up in the breasts of the Druides, who committed nothing unto Writing, and by that means kept the People in continual ignorance: communicating what they knew to none but those of their own Order, and therein being sought to by the Druides or Priests of Gaul; who came over into this Island to them, and did from them receive the knowledge of their sacred Mysteries. Being conquered or discovered rather by Julius Cæsar, it was not so much as looked after by the two next Emperors: Augustus and Tiberius counting it an high point of Wisdom, not to extend the Empire beyond the Ocean. Caligula had once a mind to the Adventure, but he durst not follow it. But Claudius, his Successor, undertook the Enterprize, solliciting thereunto by Bericus a noble Briton, who for sedition and some practices against the publick, was expelled the Country. Hereupon Aulus Plantius is sent over with some Roman Forces, by whom and P. Ostorius Scapula, his Successor, Codigunus and Caractacus two Kings of the Britains, were severally overcome in battel, a Roman Colony planted at Camalodunum, (now Malden in Essex) and the Southern parts thereof reduced to the form of a Province. After this time by little and little the whole was conquered, as far as to the Frythes of Dunbarton and Edenburgh. Agricola in the time of Domitian, having the happiness and good fortune to go beyond the furthest of his Predecessors; and so much moderation not to venture further, where there was nothing to be got but blows cold, and hunger.

At the first entrance of the Romans, the Island was divided into several Nations, each governed by its own Kings and particular Princes, different in their ends and counsels, and so more easily subdued by united Forces. The principal of which (for it is needless to make mention of inferiour Clans) where 1 the Danmonii, containing Devonshire, and Cornwal; whose chief Cities were Isca, now Exeter and Volcha near the Town of Falmouth in Cornwal. 2 The Duroiriges, inhabiting only in the County of Dorset; whose chief City was Durnium or Durnovaria, which we now call Dorchester. 3 The Belgæ, planted in the Counties of Somerset; Southampton, and Wilts, whose chief Cities were Aquæ Calidæ, now Bath: Venta Belgarum, now Winchester; and Sorbiodunum, the seat of old Salisbury. 4 The Attrebatii, confined within Barkshire only, the chief City of whom was Gualena, where now is Wallingford. 5 The Regni, possessed of Sussex and Surrey, whose chief Cities were Vindelis, now Winchelsey; and Neomagus, situate some ten miles from London. 6 The Kantiani, or the Kentish, having Durovernum, now Canterbury; Dubris, now Dover; and Rhutupiæ, now called Richborough, for their principal Cities. 7 The Trinobantes of Middlesex, and Essex, where London called afterwards Augusta Trinobantum; and Camalodunum the first Roman Colony, now called Maldon, the Seat-Royal of Cunobelinus, King of the Trinobantes in the time of the Romans. 8 The Catieuchlani, dwelling in the Counties of Buckingham, Bedford, and Hartford, whose Towns of most importance were Magivintum, now called Dunstable; and Verulamium, (near S. Albans) the strongest Hold the Britains had in their Wars with Cæsar. 9 The Iceni, living in the Counties of Suffolk, Norfolk, Huntington, and Cambridge; their principal Cities being Villa Faustini, now S. Edmundsbury; Sito-magus, now Thetford; Durolis, now Godmanchester; and Camboritum, or Cambridge. 10 Coritani, who took up the whole Counties of Lincoln, Leicester, Rutland, Nottingham, Northampton, and Darby; principal Towns of which were Lindum, now Lincoln; Rhage, where now is Leicester, Guasennæ not far from Stamford, now called Bridge-Casterton; Agelocis, now Littleborough, a small Village near Newark upon Trent; Tripontum, now Torcester, not far from Northampton. 11 The Brigantes, the greatest Nation of the Island, filling all York-shire, the Bishoprick of Durham, Durham, Cumberland, Weſtmerland, and the County Palatine of Lancaſter, in a word all the North of England, (except Northumberland, the dwelling of the (12) Ottadini, whoſe chief Town was Bremenium, thought now to be Ribcheſter in Riddeſdale.) Principal places of which large and potent Nation, were Iſaurium, now Aldborow in in the North Riding; Eboracum or York, in the Weſt Riding and Petuaria, thought to be Beverley, in the Eaſt Riding of Yorkſhire; Vinovium, where now is Binchester, in the Biſhoprick; Epiacum, now Pap-Caſtle, in Cumberland; Calatum, now Wheallop-Caſtle in Weſtmerland; and Rhigodunum, now Rible-Cheſter in the County Palatine of Lancaſter. 13 The Cornavii, ſeated in the Counties of Cheſter, Salop, Worceſter, Stafford, and Warwick, whoſe Principal Towns were, Deuvania, or Legio viceſima Victrix, now Weſt-Cheſter: Uriconium, now Wroxeter, an ignoble Village: Pennocrucium, now Penkridge, not far from Stafford: Brannogenium, now Worceſter: Manduеſſedum, now Manchester, on the River Ankor. 14 And laſt of all, the Dobuni of Oxford, and Glouceſterſhires: Principal places of the which were Dorcinia, now Dorcheſter, ſeven miles from Oxford, and Corinium, or Cyrenceſter, near the head of the Thames. Such names as are comprehended under the name of Wales, and Scotland, ſhall be remembred when we come to ſpeak of thoſe Countries.

Theſe, and the reſt of Wales and Scotland (as far as the Romans did proceed, being once ſubdued, Britain became a Member of the Roman Empire; yet ſo that many of the Tribes had their own Kings, and were ſuffered to govern by their own Laws: it being a known Cuſtom amongſt the Romans, as we find in Tacitus, habere ſervitutis inſtrumenta & Reges, to permit Kings ſometimes in the conquered Countries, making them inſtrumental to the peoples bondage. And it is ſaid of Lucius Verus the Roman Emperour, that having put an end to the Parthian War, Regna Regibus, Provincias Comitibus ſuis regendas dediſſe: he gave thoſe Kingdoms he had conquered to be ruled by Kings; the Provinces to be governed by Provincial Earls. Kings of which kind were Codigunus and Praſutagus, ſpoken of by Tacitus: Lucius, before-mentioned, the firſt Chriſtian King, and Coilus the Father of Helena, Mother of Conſtantine the Great. But as afterward in the Heptarchie of the Saxons, that King who overruled the reſt, and was of moſt power and eſtimation, was called the Monarch of the Engliſh: ſo probable enough it is, that amongſt the Britiſh Kings, who was in moſt credit with the Romans, or of moſt power amongſt his neighbours, might be permitted to aſſume the Title of King of Britain. The Catalogue of whom from Caſſibelane to Conſtantine, I have here ſubjoyned, according to the tenor of the Britiſh Hiſtory.

The Kings of Britain after the coming in of the Romans.

A. Ch.

Caſſibelane, King of the Trinobantes, Commander of the Britains in the War againſt Julius Cæſar.

2 Theomantius.

3 Cymbeline.

4 Guiderius.

45 5 Arviragus, by Hector Boetius, called Pratuſagus, in whoſe time Britain was ſubdued by Aulus Plantius, ſent hither from the Emperour Claudius.

73 6 Marius.

125 7 Coilus, the ſuppoſed Founder of Colcheſter.

180 8 LUCIUS the firſt Chriſtian King of Britain, and of all the World; who dying without Iſſue, left the Roman Emperour his Heir.

207 9 Severus, Emperour of Rome, and King of Britain.

211 10 Baſſianus Caracalla, Son of Severus, Emperour of Rome after his Father; who loſt the Kingdom of Britain to 218 11 Carauſius, a Native of the Iſland, who rebelling againſt Caracalla, obtained the Kingdom for himſelf.

225 12 Alectus.

232 13 Æſculepiodorus.

260 14 Coilus II. the Father of Helena.

289 15 Conſtantius, Emperour of Rome, in right of Helena his Wife, ſucceeded on the death of Coilus the 2d.

16 Conſtantine the Great, the Son of Helena and Conſtantius, who added his Eſtates in Britain to the Roman Monarchy.

But to proceed, Britain being thus made a Member of the Roman Empire, it was at firſt divided into three Provinces only, that is to ſay, Britannia prima, (ſo called becauſe firſt ſubdued) containing all the Countries on the South ſide of the Thames, and thoſe inhabited by the Trinobantes, Iceni, and Cattieuclani, whoſe Metropolis or chief City was London. 2 Britannia ſecunda, comprising all the Nations on the further ſide of the Severn, whoſe chief City was Caer Leon upon Uſk, in the County of Munmouth; and 3 Maxima Cæſarienſis, including all the reſt of the Northern border, whereof the Metropolis was York: each Province having ſeveral Cities, 28 in all. Accordingly, the Church conforming to the Platform of the Civil State, there were appointed for the Government hereof eight and twenty Biſhops, reſiding in thoſe ſeveral Cities: three of the which reſiding in the principal Cities, where honoured with the Title of Metropolitans, and a ſuperiority over all the Biſhops of their ſeveral and reſpective Provinces. And in this ſtate it ſtood till the time of Conſtantine, who in his new moulding of the Empire, altered the bounds, and enlarged the number of the Provinces; adding two more unto and out of the former, viz. Valentia, containing all the Country from the Frith of Solway, and the Picts wall on the South, to the Friths of Edenburg and Dunbritton North, and Flavia Cæſarienſis, comprehending all between Thames and Humber, the reſt betwixt the Humber and the bounds of Valentia, continuing under the old name of Maxima Cæſarienſis, though now made leſs than any of the other four. The number of the Provinces being thus enlarged, he made the whole a full and compleat Dioceſs of the Roman Empire (whereas Spain had Tingitana added to it, as before was ſhewn) ſubordinate, as Spain was alſo to the Præfectus Prætorio Galliarum, and governed by his Vicarius or Lieutenant General. Of which diviſion, or rather ſubdiviſion of the Roman Provinces, there was no other alteration made in the Eccleſiaſtical government, but that the Britiſh Church became more abſolute and independent than it was before; and had a Primate of its own (as each Dioceſs had) reſiding in the ſame City with the Vicar or Lieutenant General (which was then at York) of as great power and juriſdiction in the Iſle of Britain, as any Patriarch of Alexandria, Rome, or Antioch, in their ſeveral Patriarchates. The Metropolitans were no more than before they were: It being ordered by a Canon of the Council of Chalcedon, that their number ſhould not be augmented by any alteration made of the Roman Provinces. As for the Forces which the Romans kept here in continual pay, as well to keep their Coaſts and Fron-

Frontiers against the Enemy, as for retaining of the Natives in their due obedience; they came in all (if Pancirol be not mistaken in his reckoning) to 23000 Foot, & 2000 Horse: three Legions keeping here their constant and continual Residence, that is to say, the sixth Legion, sirnamed Victrix, at York; the 20th Legion, sirnamed also Victrix, at West-Chester; and the second Legion sometimes at Isca Dannoniorum, which we now call Exeter, sometimes at Isca Silurum, which is now Caer-Leon upon Usk. Which Legions with their Aids and Cohorts, may well make up the number spoken of before. Of so high estimation was this Island in the State of Rome.

Yet could not all these Forces so preserve the Country from foreign Enemies, but that in the declining of the Roman Empire, the Saxons made great spoils on the coasts thereof; as did the Scots and Picts on the Northern borders: against all which the Romans held out well enough, and made good their ground; till the recalling of the Legions out of Britain for defence of Italy it self, then wasted and destroyed by the barbarous Nations. Which hapned in or about the year of Christ 407, and some 470 years from the first invasion; Honorius being at that time the Roman Emperor, and Victorinus the last Governor for the Empire, in the Ile of Britain. For though the noble Ætius, on the Petition and complaint of the slaughtered people, unmercifully butchered by the Scots and Picts, sent some small Forces to assist them against those Enemies: yet were they presently called back for defence of Gaul, against the Hunnes breaking in upon it. And then the wretched Britains hopeless of all help from Rome, and being unable, by their own strength to repel the Enemy, by reason of their long ease and disuse of Arms, applyed themselves to Aldroenus King of Armorica in France, (called Little Britain) a Prince extracted from the same stock, for relief and succour. Whose Brother Constantine (according to the British story) passing over with a competent Army; and having valiantly repulsed the barbarous people, was crowned King of Britain, the first of a new race of Kings, which swayed the Scepter, with much trouble and continual conflicts, either against the Scots or Saxons, till they were finally subdued and shut up in Wales. Those of most observation in the course of the story, were, 1 Constantine the first King, and the restorer of the Country to Peace and quiet, traiterously murdered by a Pict. 2. Vortiger, E. of the Guyses, (now Cornwal) Protector of Constantius the Son of Constantine, taken out of a Monastery; after whose death, (wherein he was conceived to have had an hand) he got the Kingdom to himself; but being unable to defend it against the Enemy, and make his title also good against the other children of Constantine, first called in the Saxons. 3 Vortimer, eldest Son of Vortiger, who overthrew the Saxons in many battels; but in the midst of his Successes was poysoned by Rowena a Saxon Lady, second Wife of Vortiger. 4 Arthur, one of the Worlds nine Worthies, of whom the Monkish Writers, and other Legendaries, report so many idle and impossible actions. Doubtless he was a Prince of most perfect vertue, a great preserver of his Country from approaching ruine, and worthy the Pen of an able Panegyrist; by whom his brave atchievements might have come intire unto us, without the intermixture of those feats of Chivalry, affabulated to him and his Knights of the Round Table. For by the overstraining of some Monkish Writers, Geofry of Monmouth, and the rest, they have given too just occasion to posterity to suspect that vertue, which they intended to advance; and filled us with as much ignorance of the story, as admiration of the persons. But this hath not been the ill hap of King Arthur, and his Nobles only; Charlemaign, and the Twelve Peers of France, men of great vertue and renown, suffering as deeply in the same kind by the folly of the French Romances. It is affirmed of this Arthur, (but how true I know not) that he began the custom of celebrating the Nativity of our Lord and Saviour for the twelve days following, with such pastimes and sports as are (or have been used of late) by the Lords of Misrule in some Gentlemens houses: an Institution which the Scottish Writers of those times much blame. Perhaps not unjustly; it being a time more fit for our devotions than such rude disports. But to proceed, King Arthur dying, left the Crown to the 5 Constantine, the Son of Cador Duke of Cornwall, his neareſt kinsman, slain by Aurelius Conanus, his own Nephew, who succeeded after him: which fraction did so weaken the distressed Britains, that they were forced to withdraw themselves beyond the Severn: as 6 Careticus, or Caradoc, by the joint Forces of the Saxons, to change the plain Countries beyond the Severn for the safer, but more fruitless Mountains. Of the rest, till Cadwallader, there is little left of any certainty, but their names only; which are thus ranked in the second race of

The Kings of Britain after the withdrawing of the Romans.

After whose death, his Successors were no longer called Kings of Britain, but Kings or Princes of Wales. And there we shall be sure to find them.

And so the Britains leave the Stage, and the Saxons enter; a great and potent Nation amongst the Germans, but greater by the aggregation of many people, under their name and service, than in themselves: the Jutes and Angles joining with them, and passing in Accompt as the same one Nation, Their Countries different as their names until this Conjunction; but neighbouring near enough to unite together: the Angles dwelling at the first in that part of the Cimbrian Chersonese, which we now call Sleswick, where still the Town called Angolen, doth preserve their memory: the Jutes upon the North of them, where there is still a Province called by the name of Jutland; the Saxons South of both in the Dukedom of Holstein, situate in the very neck of that Chersonese where it joineth with Germany; Joining their powers, they spread themselves with good success, to the South & West; of which more hereafter. And growing Masters of the Seas, infested with continual Piracies the Coasts of Britain; occasioning herein an Officer of great trust and power, appointed to defend and scour those Seas, in the Notitia, called Comes Littoris Saxonici. Known by this means amongst the Britains, they were called in by Vortiger, to aid him against the Scots and Picts; whom they overcame in a pitched pitched field near Stanford, in the County of Lincoln: for so far had the barbarous people marched without any resistance. Rewarded for this Victory with the Isle of Thanet, and after with the whole County of Kent, they began to quarrel with their Hosts; whom by degrees they dispossessed of all the Country on this side of Severn; parcelling it into seven Kingdoms, called the Saxons Heptarchie, that is to say, 1 Of Kent, 2 Of the South-Saxons, 3 Of the West-Saxons, 4 Of the East Saxons, 5 Of the East-Angles, 6 Of the North-Humbers, and 7 of the Mercians. The beginning, period and Kings of which several Kingdoms, and the uniting of them into one Monarchy, we are next to shew.

1. The Kingdom of KENT, confined within that County only, was begun by Hengist, who with his Brother Horsus had the leading of the Saxon Forces, at their first entry into Britain, An. 455. being the sixth year after their first coming in: who restoring Paganism to this Country, when the rest of the Isle was Christian, occasioned the distinction of Kent and Christendom. The Kentish afterwards the first of the Saxons who received the Gospel, by the preaching of Augustine the Monk, the Apostle of the English Saxons. Principal Cities of this Kingdom, where 1 Canterbury, once the Regal seat of the Kings of Kent, till given by Ethelbert, on his conversion to Augustine the first Archbishop thereof and his Successors: afterwards the See of those Archbishops, who had here their Palace and Cathedral, the Kings removing to Reculver, Seated in the East part of the Country, about seven or eight miles from the Sea, a little Brook serving it thence with some commodities. A City of more Antiquity and fame, than beauty; being now ruinous and decayed, and having nothing in it worth observation, but the Cathedral Church, first founded by Ethelbert before mentioned; but afterwards new built upon his foundations, in the form it now stands by Archbishop Lankfrank, Will. Carboyle, and some other of their Successors in the said See. The Archi-episcopal Palace is a goodly building, and the ruines of S. Augustines Monastery shew what once it was. 2. Dover, antiently called Dubris, seated on the Sea-shore, where the passage is shortest into France; for that cause Fortified with a strong and (in those days accounted an) impregnable Castle; esteemed one of the keys of England and the chief of the Cinque Ports; now giving the title of an Earl to the house of Hunsdon, chief of the Family of the Caries, nearly allied to Queen Elizabeth of Famous memory. 3 Rochester, seated on the Medway, not far from Chattham (the station of the Royal Navy) an antient City, but of no greatness; in former times called Durobrivis, after that Roffa, thence the name of Roff-chester; a Bishops See, the second for Antiquity in all the Island. 4 Maidstone, upon the Medway also near the head thereof, the largest and most beautiful in all this Country, and most commodiously seated for publick business.

II. The Kingdom of SOUTH-SEX, or of the SOUTH-SAXONS, was begun by Ella, a noble Captain of that People, An. 488. It contained only the two Counties of Sussex and Surrey, which were thence denominated, the first so called quasi South-Sex, the Country of the South Saxons; the second quasi South Rey, as lying on the South-side of the River Thames, in the same sense as S. Maries Church on the other side of that River (in respect of London) is called S. Mary Over-Rey. The Christian Faith suppressed here, as in other places, was restored again in the time of King Edilwalch, by the preaching of S. Wilfride, Archbishop of York, living here in Exile. Places of most importance in it, were 1 Chichester, built by Cissa the 2d King hereof, and called Cissancester, encompassed almost round with the River Lavant, falling not far off into the Sea: the chief Town of Sussex, and a Bishops Sea, removed hither from Sealsy, a Demy-Island, in the time of the Norman Conqueror, where it was first planted by Archbishop Wilfride. 2 Hastings one of the Cinque-ports, in Sussex also; the landing place of the Normans, & Famous for the overthrow of King Harold in the fields adjoyning. 3 Guileford, upon the River Wey, the chief Town of Surrey, well built, and having in it two Parish-Churches. 4 Arundel, in a Dale or Valley on the River Arun, and from thence so named: belonging to the Crown in the time of the Saxons, when given by the Testament of King Alfride unto Anthelm, his Brothers Son. Of great note for a beautiful and capacious Castle; but more for giving the title of Earl to the noble Families of the Albeneys, the Fitz-Alans, and the Howards: this last of such a large and diffused Nobility, that in the year 1641. there were no fewer than 8 Howards, in the house of Peers. 5 Kingston upon the Thames, so called to distinguish it from Kingston upon Hull in Yorkshire; heretofore Famous for the Coronation of the Monarchs of the English Saxons, whence it had the name of Kingston, or the Kings Town. This Kingdom had only three Kings, crushed in the infancy thereof by more potent neighbours.

514	2	Cissa, the Son of Ella, who lost his life and Kingdom to Cerdic King of the West-Saxons.
590	3	Cheulin, King of West-Sex, called himself King of the South-Saxons.
	4	Edelwalch, or Ethelwolf, the first Christian King, overcome and slain in battel by Ceadwal, King of the West-Saxons, Anno 687. After whose death Berthan and Authum, two Brethren, took on themselves the Government, with the title of Dukes or Captains: and held it for a little while. But not being able to withstand the puissance of the West-Saxons, this Kingdom was subdued by Ina, the Successor of Ceadwal; by whom united to that Crown.

III. The Kingdom of WEST-SEX, or the WEST-SAXONS, the third in order, and that which did in fine prevail over all the reſt; contained the Counties of Cornwall, Devon, Somerſet, Dorſet, Wilts, Southampton, and Berks: begun by Cerdic, a noble Commander of the Saxons, arriving with new Forces out of Germany, Anno 495. who having overcome the Britains of this Weſtern Tract, conducted by Natanland their Chieftain, entituled himſelf King of the Weſt-Saxons, Anno 522. The Chriſtian Faith ſuppreſſed here, as elſewhere, was reſtored again in the time of Kingils, their firſt Chriſtian King; by the preaching of S. Birinus Biſhop of Dorcheſter near Oxford, then a great City, of no fewer than ten Pariſhes, now reduced to one.

Chief Cities of this Kingdom, were 1 Exeter, a fair and goodly City, and a Biſhops See, removed hither from Cridington or Kirton, by Leofricus, An. 1049. Seated upon the Bank of the River Ex, whence the name of Exceaſter; environed with deep ditches, and very ſtrong Walls, in compaſs about a mile and half beſides the Suburbs, in which are contained in all 15 Pariſh Churches, beſides the Miniſter, a beautiful and ſtately Fabrick. 2 Bath, ſo called from the Baths there being, the chief City of Somerſet, by the Latines called Aquæ Solis; by the Greeks Ὕδατα θερμαῖα, for the ſelf-ſame reaſon. Situate in a low Valley, environed about with Hills very ſteep and high, from whence come many Rivulets and freſh Springs, to the great Commodity of the people. A fine neat Town, and beautified with as neat a Church, heretofore a Monaſtery, partner with Wells, the Biſhop's See, in the ſtile Epiſcopal; and gives the Title of an Earl to the Noble Family of the Bourchiers. 3 Falemouth in Carnwal, ſeated upon a large and capacious Bay, ſo full of Creeks and Roads, capable of the beſt Ships, that it is ſaid, an hundred Sail of Ships may be lodged therein with ſuch convenience, that from the top of the one, the Maſt of another is not to be ſeen; the mouth or entrance of it defended for the greater ſafety with two very ſtrong Caſtles built by Henry the 8th, that of S. Maudits on the Eaſt, and that of Pendinas (commonly called Pendennis) upon the Weſt. 4 Dorcheſter, the chief Town of Dorſetſhire, which is thence denominated by Antoninus, called Durnovaria, the principal at that time of the Durotriges: an Inland Town, and conſequently of no great trading: not ſo much famous for ought elſe as giving the Title of a Marqueſs to Henry Earl of Kingſton, of the noble Family of the Pierrpoints. 5 Wilton, the head Town, in thoſe times of Wiltſhire, and a Biſhops See, honoured with the reſidence of ſeveral Biſhops. But by tranſlating of the See to Sarum or Sarisbury) as the fitter place and carrying thither therewithal the thorow fare which before was here; it fell by little and little into decay; and is now hardly worth the reputation of a Market Town. 6 Wincheſter called Venta in the times of Romans, by the Saxons, Vent-ceaſter, ſituate on the banks of a pleaſant River, the ſeat Royal of the Weſt-Saxon Kings, who had here their Palace called Wolves-eye: ſo named from the Kings of the Wolphian Family, and the ſituation of it in the circlings of the foreſaid River, which the old Saxons called an Eye: not from the Wooll-Staple here kept, as ſome; much leſs from Cardinal Wolſey, as others moſt abſurdly think. The houſe given after to the Biſhops, and made their Palace. The Town in compaſs two miles, beſides the Suburbs; commodiouſly ſeated in a low place, between very ſteep Hills, by which it is defended both from cold and wind. Afflicted very much ſince thoſe times both by War and Fire, half of the ground within the Town being Fields and Gardens; but ſtill adorned with a Magnificent Cathedral, and a gallant (but no great) Caſtle, bravely mounted upon an Hill for defence and proſpect; beſides a Colledge, and an Hoſpital added ſince thoſe days. 7 Southampton, conveniently ſeated on an Arm of the Sea, capable of Ships of burden to the very Key; which maketh it one of the richeſt Towns in thoſe parts of England. Well built, of fair large ſtreets, beautified with five Pariſh Churches, and fortified with high Walls, a double Ditch, and a right ſtrong Caſtle: but the Caſtle now decayed and ruined. 8 Reading, on the Banks of the River Kennet, where it falleth into the Thames, by which means it hath the convenience of both Rivers: A Town of great Trade for Clothing, well built, and of three Pariſh Churches; heretofore beautified with a ſtrong Caſtle, and a goodly Monaſtery, but both decayed. 9 Windſor, called Windleſhores in the old Saxon, ſituate near the Banks of the Thames on a riſing ground, which gives it a fair Proſpect over all the Country; adorned in ſucceeding times with a Palace Royal of the Kings of England, and the Seat of the Order of the Garter. 10 Wallingford, the Gualleua of the Antients, and then the chief Town of the Attrebatii, as it was afterwards (in the time of the Saxons) of the County of Berks: a mile in compaſs at that time within the Walls, fortified with an impregnable Caſtle, and adorned with twelve Pariſhes. So deſolated by a Plague, An. 1348. that there is now but one Church left, hardly Inhabitants enough to keep that in repair; and nothing of the Walls left (as not much of the Caſtle) but the track and ruines.

IV. The Kingdom of EAST-SEX, or the EAST-SAXONS, was begun about the year 527, by Erchinwin, deſcended from Woden, the common Progenitor of the Saxons; from whom we have the name of Wedneſday, or Wodenſday, as they called it formerly. It contained only the Counties of Middleſex, Eſſex, and ſo much of Hartfordſhire, as is in the Dioceſs of London. The Chriſtian Faith expulſed here as in other places, was reſtored again in the time of Sebert, the Founder of the Abby Church of S. Peter in Weſtminſter, by the Preaching of Mellitus the firſt Biſhop of London after the entrance of the Saxons ſuppreſſed again by Seward, and Sigebert, the Sons of Sebert; but ſetled ſtronger than before by Cedda, the next Biſhop. Principal Cities of this Kingdom, beſides London, ſpoken of already, were 1 Weſtminſter, ſituate in thoſe times a mile from London, now adjoyning to it. The See of the Archbiſhop of London in the time of the Britains: afterwards by the Saxons called Thorn-eye, or the Thorny Iſland; till the new Minſter built by Sebert as before is ſaid, and the Weſtern ſituation of it in regard of St. Pauls, built at the ſame time by Ethelbert the King of of Kent; gained it this new name. A City honoured with the Seat of the Kings of East-Sex, and since those times with that of the Kings of England; the names of the Old Palace of the one, and the New-Palace of the other, still remaining there; beautified upon that occasion with more stately and magnificent houses, belonging to the King, Bishops, and Nobility, than all the other in the Kingdom, having of late a new Town added to it in the Covent Garden (a place belonging formerly to the Monks of Westminster) for uniformity of building, and handsome streets, inferiour to no City of France or Italy. 2 Colchester, the chief Town of East-sex, situate near the Sea, on the River Coln; a Colony of the Londoners in former times, thence called Colonia Londinensium, and Colonia only, then a Bishops See: from which, or from the River, with the Addition of Ceaster, after the manner of the Saxons, came the name of Colchester. A fair and well built Town, and of good resort, fortified with an old Roman Wall, and having in it to the number of 14 Churches. 3. Ithancester in Dengey Hundred, were S. Ceadda the second Bishop of London, baptized the relapsed East-Saxon. 4 Hartford, the chief Town of the County so called; by Beda named Herudford, and of great note in his time for a Synod there held in the dawning of the day of Christianity amongst the Saxons; in which S. Augustine the Monk, the first Apostle of that people, had a conference or consultation with the British Bishops: More memorable in the following times, for giving the title of an Earl to the illustrious Family, sirnamed De Clare; the addition of an Honour, and a goodly Patrimony to John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster; and at this time, title of Earl, and Marques to the noble Family of the Seymours.

A.C.
527	1	Erchenwin the first King.
587	2	Sledda.
596	3	S. Sebert, the first Christian King.
	4	Seward, and Sigebert.
623	5	Sigebert II. or the Little.
	6	Sigebert III.
661	7	Swithelme.
664	8	Sighere.
664	9	S. Sebba.
694	10	Sigheard.
	11	Seofride.
701	12	Offo.
709	13	Selred.
774	14	Suthred, the last King of the East-Saxons subdued by Egbert the great and potent King of West-Sex, Anno 828. and his Kingdom made a member of that rising Monarchy.

V. The Kingdom of the EAST-ANGLES, so called from the Angli or English, which possessed these parts, and the Eastern situation of it; begun by Uffa, a great Commander of the Saxons, Anno 575. contained the Counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridgeshire, and the Isle of Ely. The Christian Faith first planted here in the Reign of Redwall the third King, by the Ministry of Felix a Burgundian, the first Bishop of the East-Angles, the See whereof was afterwards removed to Norwich. Places of most importance in it, were 1 Dunwich on the Seashore, the first Bishops See of the East-Angles, for the County of Suffolk; then a Town capable of that dignity, now ruinous, decayed, and for the greatest part worn into the Sea. 2 Ipswich in the same County of Suffolk, and the chief of the Country, a rich, populous, and well traded Empory, consisting of no fewer than twelve Parish Churches. 3 Norwich, the head City of Norfolk, situate on the River Yare, which runs thence to Yarmouth, lying out in length a mile and an half, half as much in breadth, & in that Circuit comprehending about 20 Parishes; well walled about with many a Turret, & 12 Gates for entrance; but hath within it much waste Ground, the City suffering great loss both in wealth and buildings, by Kets Rebellion, in the time of King Edward the sixth. Recovered of the first blow by the Dutch Manufactures, of the last still languishing: yet still it glorieth in the beauties of a fair Cathedral, the three Palaces of the Bishops, the Dukes of Norfolk, and the Earls of Surrey, and the ruins of an ancient Castle of the Saxons building. 4 North Elmham, the Bishops See of the East-Angles, for those parts which we now call Norfolk: both this and that at Dunwich ruinated in the Danish Wars, but this reviving at the end of 100 years and here continuing, both Sees united unto one, till removed to 5 Thetford, another Town of this County, situated on the confluence of the Thet, and the lesser Ouse: a larger Town than either of the other two, from whence at last removed to Norwich. 6 Cambridge, the chief Town of that County, by Antonine called Camboritum whence the Modern name: unless we rather fetch it from a Bridge over the River Cam or Grant (for some call it Grantbridge) as perhaps we may. A Town well built by reason of the University, said to be founded by Segebert, King of the East-Angles, of whom it is affirmed by Beda, that he founded a School for the education of Children in the ways of good Learning; but he speaketh neither of University, nor nameth Cambridge for the place. 7 Ely, situate in the Isle so named, occationed by the divided streams of Nen and Ouse, with the over-flotes of other Rivers; turning a great part of this tract into Fens and Marshes, the Inhabitants whereof were called Girvii. A place of no great beauty or reputation, as situate in a foggy and unhealthful air; but only for a fair Monastery built by S. Ethelreda, Wife of Egfride, King of the Northumbers, by her made a Nunnery; afterwards rebuilt and repleniished with Monks by Ethelwold Bishop of Winchester, Anno 970. or thereabouts, finally made a Bishops See in the time of King Henry the first, Anno 1109.

749	14	Ethelbert II. treacherously murdered by Offa, the great King of the Mercians, to whose Court he came an invited Guest, Anno 793. after whose death this Kingdom became subject to the Mercians, and then to Egbert the West-Saxon, governed by Tributary Kings of their own Nation, of whom we have no constat till the time of
870	15	S. Edmund, descended from Anna, the seventh King hereof, Martyred by the Danes for his stout and constant perseverance in the Faith of CHRIST, from whence the fair Town of

S. Edmundsbury, in the County of Suffolk, took denomination. After whose death the Kingdom was possessed by the Danes, till vanquished by King Edward the Elder, by whom it was united unto the rest of England.

VI. The Kingdom of NORTHUMBERLAND, so called from the situation on the North of Humber, contained the Counties of York, Lancaster, Durham, Westmerland, Cumberland, and Northumberland, properly so called; and all the Southern parts of Scotland, as far as to the Frythes of Edenburgh and Dunbritton, formerly reckoned of as Members of the Roman Empire. Extorted from the Britains by Ocea the son, and Ebusa the brother of Hengist, Conductors of new Forces hither, (all of the Nation of the Angli) by the leave of Vortiger; under pretence of guarding these Countries from the inroads of the Scots and Picts. By them divided into two Provinces, the one called Deira, extending from the Humber, to the River of Tees, the other called Bernicia, reaching from Tees, to the two Frythes before-mentioned: both governed a long while by Dukes, under the Soveraignty and homage of the Kings of Kent. In the year 547 Duke Ida takes unto himself the title of King of Bernicia, and An. 559. Duke Ella, doth the like in Deira. The Towns of most notice in this last (for the former is now reckoned as a part of Scotland) besides York, spoken of before, were 1 Loncaster, the chief Town of that County, situate on the River Lon, which with addition of Ceaster much used by the Saxons, made the name thereof; called for the same reason Longovicus by the Emperour Antonine. The Town not very well peopled, nor much frequented, but of sufficient fame in our English Annals for those Noble persons which have successively born the titles of Earls and Dukes of it; the greatest Princes for Revenue, of any Subjects in Christendom, 2 Kendal, or Candale, situate in a dale on the River Can, whence it had the name; the chief Town of Westmerland: built in the manner of a Cross, two long and broad streets thwarting one another. A rich, populous and well traded Town, especially for the making of fine woollen-cloth; but of more fame for giving the title of an Earl to John Duke of Bedford, Regent of France; and to John de Foix, created Earl hereof by Henry the sixth. 3 Carlile, upon the River Eden, a frontire Town betwixt the Romans and Scots, as now between the Scots and English: consumed to ashes in the time of the Danish furies; afterwards rebuilt by William Rufus, made an Episcopal See in the raign of K. Henry the first, and beautified with a Cathedral founded at the perswasion of Athelwolfus, the first Bishop hereof. 4 Monck-chester, on the Northern banks of the River Tine, which maketh there a safe and capacious Haven. Of no great note till the Norman Conquest, when from a Castle built by Robert Son of William the Conqueror, it was called New-Castle: growing from that time forwards to such wealth and trading, by the neighbourhood of the Cole-mines there, that it is now the goodliest Town in all the North; fortified with strong Walls, beautified with five fair Churches, and giving to the L. Will. Cavendish, Viscount Mansfield, the honorary titles of Earl and Marquess. 5 Hagulstade, or Hextold, by the Romans called Axelodunum, by the Normans, Hexam: a Bishops See in the first time of Christianity amongst these Northumbers, specially so called, converted to the Faith in the time of Oswald their tenth King, by the Ministry of Aiden the first Bishop of Lindisfarn: Eata the fifth Bishop, erecting here an Episcopal See, for the better propagation of the Gospel among this people; after a succession of ten Bishops ruinated and suppressed by the Danish furies. 6 Dunholm, now Durham, situate on an Hill, as the name importeth, a Bishops See, translated hither with the body of St. Cutbert, An. 990. or thereabouts, from Liudisfarn, a small Island on the Coast of Northumberland, where it was first erected by S. Aidainus, the first Bishop thereof: planted in Lindisfarn, because of the solitude of the place; translated hither to avoid the fury of the Danes, who then raged extremely in these Quarters. And being setled here, was fortified with such ample priviledges and possessions, by the Saxon Kings: that the Bishops were reputed for County Palatines, at and before the Norman Conquest. 7 Halifax, in the West Riding of York-shire, of great wealth by making of cloth. 8 Rippon, in the same, adorned with a fair Cathedral or Collegiate Church, subordined to that of York. 9 Godmanham, (by Beda called Gotmandin Gaham) famous in those days for a Temple of the Saxon-Idols, burnt down and utterly destroyed by Coife, the chief Priest thereof, converted to Christianity by Paulinus the first Archbishop of York, and the Apostle of the Northumbers in these parts. The Catalogue of the Kings of which mighty Nation, by reason of the division of it into two Kingdoms, as before is said, is very intricate and confused; the Kingdoms being sometimes united, and sometimes dis-joyned. But in regard the most prevalent King of either, was called King of Northumberland, the other of Bernicia or Deira only, I shall accordingly subjoyn them in this order following.

The Kings of Northumberland.

A. Ch.
549	1	Ida the first King.
560	2	Ella, King of Deira.
589	3	Ethelrick, Son of Ida King of Bernicia.
593	4	Ethelfride.
617	5	Edwin, Son of Ella, the first Christian King.
633	6	Osrick.
634	7	S. Oswald.
645	8	Oswy, who having subdued and slain Oswin King of Deira, was the first absolute King of all Northumberland, no more divided after that.
671	9	Egfride.
686	10	S Alfride.
705	11	Osred.
716	12	Kenred.
718	13	Osrick II.
729	14	Ceolnulph.
738	15	Ogbert.
758	16	Eswulph.
759	17	Edilwald.
765	18	Alured.
774	19	Ethelred.
778	20	Alfwald.
789	21	Osred II.
794	22	Ethelred II. After whose death, slain by his treacherous and rebellious Subjects (as many of his Predecessors had been before) the Kingdom became distracted into parts and Factions; invaded by the Danes on the one side, the Scots and Picts on the other, who during these distractions had possessed themselves of all the Countries on the other side of the Twede. At the last Anno 827. they yielded themselves to Egbert, the most Potent King of the West-Saxons, ruled by his Deputies for a while, then subdued by the Danes, and finally recovered, to the Crown of England, by Athelstan and Edred, An. 950. or thereabouts. Content since that to give the Title of an Earl to some eminent persons both of English and Norman Races: as it hath done since the first year of King Richard the second, to the Noble Family of the Percies, descended by Joseeline of Brabant, Brother of Adolize the second Wife of King Henry the first, from Charles

the Great, Emperour, and King of France, and that too in a clearer Line than the Dukes of Lorrain, who ſo much brag of it.

VII. The Kingdom of MERCIA, was begun by Cridda, or Creodda, a great Commander of the Angli, or Engliſh Nation, who ſetling in the heart of Britain, where the people were leaſt uſed to Arms, made themſelves Maſters of the Counties of Glouceſter, Worceſter, Hereford, Salop, Cheſter, Stafford, Derby, Nottingham, Leiceſter, Rutland, Lincoln, Huntingdon, Northampton, Warwick, Oxon, Buckingham, Bedford, and the reſt of Hartfordſhire; which bounded in a manner by all the reſt of the Saxon Kingdoms, had the name of Mercia, from the word Mearc, which ſignifieth a bound or limit. The Chriſtian Faith ſuppreſſed here, as in other Kingdoms of the Saxons, was reſtored again in the Reigns of Penda, Peada, and Wolfhere, by the preaching of St. Chad the firſt Biſhop of Lichfield.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1 Hereford, ſeated on the Banks of the River Wye, in the middle of moſt flouriſhing Meadows, and no leſs plentiful Corn fields; raiſed out of the Ruines of Ariconium here placed by Antonine, the tract of which name it doth ſtill retain. A Biſhops See in the time of the Britains, reſtored to that dignity by the Saxons, An. 680, the honourable title of the Bohuns, once Earls hereof; and afterwards of Henry of Bullingbrook, Duke of Hereford. 2 Worceſter, pleaſantly ſeated on the Severn, over which it hath a very fair Bridge with a Tower upon it. A Biſhops See, Anno 679, beautified with a fair Cathedral, and every way conſiderable for ſituation, number of Churches, neat Buildings, the induſtry of the Inhabitants, and giving the Title of an Earl to the Noble Family of the Somerſets, extracted by the Beauforts from John of Gaunt. 3 Lichfield, the firſt Biſhops See amongſt the Mercians, founded there Anno 646, by Oſwy King of the Northumbers, but fixed and ſetled by St. Chad in the Reign of Wolfhere King of the Mercians; endowed in the very Infancy with ſuch fair poſſeſſions, that in the year 793 Adulfus the Biſhop hereof, was made Archbiſhop of the Mercians. But it proved only a perſonal honour, and died with him. 4 Coventry, ſo called from an old Covent or Religious houſe, which gave name unto it; Scituate in Warwickſhire, and now the principal of that County, though eſteemed a County of it ſelf: beautified with a goodly Wall, two fair Pariſh Churches, large Sreets, and very handſom Houſes. A City of great Trade & Riches, though deſtitute of all advantages which a Navigable River might afford it; heretofore of great Fame for a ſtately Monaſtery, to which the See Epiſcopal was for a while removed from Lichfield, now a ruine only. 5 Leiceſter, once a Biſhops See, the Diocеſe taken out of Lichfield, An. 733, removed to Dorcheſter near Oxon, and thence to Lincoln. Beautified in thoſe days with a fair Collegiate Church, a magnificent Abbey, and a ſtrong Caſtle; all decayed and ruined by the iniquity and injury of theſe later times: the Town remaining in as good plight both for Trade and Buildings, as moſt Towns do which want a Navigable River. Of moſt fame for the Earls thereof, Algar and Edwin, noble Saxons, Simon de Montfort the Cataline and great Incendiary of this Kingdom, the Princes of the Houſe of Lancaſter, who bore this Title; with ſome others ſince. 6 Darby, upon the River Derwent, a well-traded Town, and of good reſort; adorned with five Churches, a goodly Stone Bridge, and a large Market-Place; the honorary title of the noble Family of the Stanleys, created Earls hereof by King Henry the Seventh. 7 Nottingham, ſeated on the Trent, but very high upon an Hill, which overlooks it. For Buildings, fair ſtreets, and a ſpacious Market-place, not giving way to many Cities; but of moſt fame for a Royal and magnificent Caſtle, which for ſtrength, ſtatelineſs, and proſpect, may juſtly challenge the precedency of moſt in England. 8 Lincoln, a Town in thoſe days of great ſtrength and note, one of the beſt peopled Cities in all the Heptarchy; and of great Merchandiſe and Traffick both by Sea and Land: inſomuch that Remigius, then Biſhop of Dorcheſter, thought fit to tranſlate hither the Epiſcopal See. Now much decayed, and thence the Proverb, that Lincoln was, London is, &c. The chief fame which now it hath, is for the Minſter, one of the ſtatelieſt Piles in England, and perhaps in Chriſtendom; high ſeated on a Hill, and from thence diſcerned over all the Country. 9 Huntingdon, or the Hunters Town, from the great ſport the Hunters found in the neighbouring Foreſt, commodiouſly ſeated on the Northern bank of the River Ouſe, riſing on the North with a ſoft aſcent, conſiſting of four Pariſh Churches, and ſhews the ruins of a Caſtle built by Edward the Elder, An. 917. 10 Peterburgh, ſeated in a Nook or Angle of Northamptonſhire, where formerly had been a Gulf or Whirpool of exceeding depth: but made firm ground by Wolfere King of the Mercians, when he laid the Foundations of the Monaſtery, Anno 633, dedicated to St. Peter, whence it had this name; before then called Medanſhede. A Town, but for the Church, of no great eſteem, as ſtanding out of the way for Trade, and in no plauſible place for health or pleaſure; yet ſhewing two handſom ſtreets, a large Market-place, and a fair Pariſh Church (beſides the Abbey) made an Epiſcopal See by King Henry the 8th. 11 Northampton, built on the Northern Bank of the River Antona, (now Nen) whence it had the name. A Town which for the beauty and circuit of it need not give way to many Cities; fortified heretofore with a very ſtrong Caſtle, and ſeated in ſo good an Air, that once the Students of Cambridge had a purpoſe to remove their Univerſity hither. The Noble Family of the Comptons are now Earls hereof. 12 Bedford, ſo called from Beds and Lodgings on the Ford, built on both ſides thereof for the uſe of Travellers; growing in time to ſo great bigneſs as to contain in it five Pariſh Churches: famous in former times for the great Battel fought in the adjoining Fields, Anno 572, in which Cuthwolf the Saxon vanquiſh'd the Britains, and became Maſter of the Country: But more famous for giving the title of Duke to John of Lancaſter, Regent of France for King Henry the ſixth, and Jaſper of Hatfield, Uncle to King Henry the 7th. 13 St. Alban, ſo called from a famous Monaſtery, here founded by Offa the great King of the Mercians, in honour of St. Alban, the Proto-Martyr of Britain, a Citizen of Verulamium, near adjoining to it: out of the ruins whereof, decayed by age, and deſtroyed by War; aroſe the preſent greatneſs of St. Albans, the faireſt and beſt traded Town in the County of Hartford. 12 Buckingham, the chief Town of the County ſo called, ſituate on the River Ouſe: fortified by King Edward the Elder againſt the Danes, Anno 915, otherwiſe not much obſervable, but for thoſe many noble perſonages which have had the title of Dukes hereof.

The Kings of Mercia.

582	1 Criodda, the firſt King.
593	2 Webba.
614	3 Cheorl.
626	4 Penda.
656	5 Peada, the firſt Chriſtian King.
659	6 Wulfhere.
675	7 Ethelbred.
704	8 Kenred.
709	9 Chelred.

716 10 Ethelbald, overcome by Cuthbert King of the West Saxons, at a Fight near Burford in the County of Oxon, the place ſtill called Battelage Hill.
758 11 Offa the Great.
796 12 Egfride.
797 13 Kenwolf.
819 14 Kenelm.
820 15 Cheolwolf.
821 16 Bernulf.
824 17 Ludecan.
826 18 Withlaf, overcome in fight (as were his two Predeceſſors) by Egber King of Weſt-Sex, became his tributary.
839 19 Berthulf.
852 20 Burdred, a ſubſtituted King of the Weſt-Saxons, and the laſt King of the Mercians (the ſhort Reign of his ſix Predeceſſors portending that fatal period to be near at hand.) After whoſe death, Anno 886, this Kingdom for ſome few years tyrannized over by the Danes, was united by King Alured to the Engliſh Monarchy.

Such was the Order and Succeſſion of the Saxon Kings, during the Heptarchie, or diviſion of it into ſeven Kingdoms; continuing ſeparate and diſtinct till the prevailing Fortune of the Weſt-Saxons brought them all together into one, by the name of England. But ſo, that they were ſubject for the moſt part unto one alone, who was entituled Rex Gentis Anglorum: thoſe which were ſtronger than the reſt, giving the Law unto them in their ſeveral turns, and are theſe that follow:

The Monarchs of the Engliſh Saxons in the time of the Heptarchie.

A. C.
455 1 Hengiſt, King of Kent, who firſt brought the Saxons into Britain.
481 2 Ella, the firſt King of the South-Saxons.
495 3 Cerdic, the firſt King of the Weſt-Saxons.
534 4 Kenric, King of the Weſt-Saxons.
561 5 Cheulin, or Celingus, King of the Weſt-Saxons.
562 6 Ethelbert, King of Kent, the firſt Chriſtian King of the Saxons.
616 7 Redwald, King of the Eaſt-Angles.
617 8 Edwin, King of Northumberland.
634 9 Oſwald, King of Northumberland.
643 10 Oſwy, King of Northumberland.
659 11 Wulfhere, King of Mercia.
675 12 Ethelored, King of Mercia.
704 13 Kenred, King of Mercia.
709 14 Chelred, King of Mercia.
716 15 Ethelbald, King of Mercia.
758 16 Offa the great King of the Mercians.
794 17 Egfride, King of Mercia.
796 18 Kenwolf, King of Mercia.
800 19 Egbert, the ſon of Alcmond, King of the Weſt-Saxons, who having vanquiſhed all the reſt of the Saxon Kings, and added moſt of their Eſtates unto his own; cauſed the whole united body to be called Engel-lond, or England, in a Parliament or Council held at Winchester, Anno 819, being the 19th. year of his Raign over the Weſt-Saxons; and by that name he was then crowned in the preſence of his Nobles, and the reſt of his Subjects, leaving it unto the reſt of his Succeſſors.

But before we come to the recital of their names, we are to take notice of the Danes, the next conſiderable Actors on the Stage of England, who in the time of this Egbert, firſt invaded the Country, and after exerciſed the patience of his poſterity, till in fine they got the Kingdom to themſelves. Of the Original and firſt Succeſſes of this people, we ſhall ſpeak more at large when we come to Denmark. Suffice it here to know, that having taken up the void Rooms of the Inites and Engliſh in the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe, they thought it not amiſs to follow them into Britain alſo; making a diſcovery of ſome part of the Coaſt thereof with three Ships only, An. 787, being the firſt year of Brithic (the Father of Egbert) King of the Weſt-Saxons. Which having done, and prepared themſelves for the undertaking, in the time of Egbert they invaded Northumberland, the Iſle of Shepey in Kent, and the Coaſts of Wales; not without much difficulty driven out by him. In the Raign of the three Kings ſucceeding, having vanquiſhed the Northumbrians, Eaſt-Angles, and a part of the Mercians; they erected many petit Tyrannies: by Alfrid firſt ſtopped in their Career, by Edward the Elder outed of the Eaſt-Angles, and by Athelſtan of Northumberland alſo; the Danes for ſome time after being ſubject to the Engliſh Government, mixing in marriages and alliance, and incorporated with them. By the valour and good Fortune of Swain their King, they recovered their power again in England; and in the perſon of Canutus obtained the Kingdom: who have impolitickly ſent back his Danes into their Country (as if a Kingdom got by force, could be held by favour) opened a way to their excluſion from the Crown; which happened within ſeven years after his deceaſe. Which ſaid, we come to the Succeſſions of

The Kings of England of the Saxon Race.

819 1 Egbert, the laſt King of the Weſt-Saxons, and the firſt of England. 18.
837 2 Ethelwolf, the eldeſt ſon of Egbert. 20.
857 3 Ethelbald, the eldeſt ſon of Ethelwolf. 1.
858 4 Ethelbert, the brother of Ethelbald. 5.
863 5 Ethelfred, the brother of the two former Kings, the third ſon of Ethelwolf, and as much moleſted by the Danes, as his brethren were. 10.
873 6 Alfride, the fourth ſon of Ethelwolf, who totally united the Saxon Heptarchy into one Eſtate, vanquiſhed the Danes, whom he made ſubject to his commands, though he could not expel them. He divided England into Shires, and reſtored the Univerſity of Oxon.
900 7 Edward, ſirnamed the Elder, the ſon of Alfride, who recovered the Eaſt-Angles from the power of the Danes, whom he ſhut up in Northumberland. 24.
924 8 Athelſtan, the ſon of Edward, who ſubdued the Britains of Cumberland and Cornwal, and compelled the Danes to ſubmit themſelves to the Engliſh Government. In his time lived Sir Guy of Warwick, famous for overcoming Colbrand the Daniſh Champion (the great Goliah of that people) near the Walls of Winchester. 10.
940 9 Edmund, the brother of Athelſtan, by whom the Danes of Northumberland were brought under obedience, and the Kingdom of the Britains in Cumberland utterly ſubverted.
946 10 Edred, the brother of Edmund and Athelſtan, ſo fortunate againſt the Danes, that he compelled them to be Chriſtened. 9.
955 11 Edny, the ſon of Edmund.

955 12 Edgar, the brother of Edwy, ſirnamed the Peaceable, the moſt abſolute Monarch of England, ſince the time of the Saxons; by whom the tribute of money impoſed by Athelſtan on the Welch, was exchanged into a tribute of Wolves. 16.

975 13 Edward II. ſon of Edgar, treacherouſly murdered by his Stepdame, to make way for Ethelred her ſon; hence ſirnamed the Martyr. 3.

978 14 Ethelred, the younger ſon of Edgar, and half brother of Edward, enjoyed the Crown unquietly which he got unjuſtly. Oppreſſed and broken by the Danes, he was fain to buy his peace of them at the yearly tribute of 10000 pounds; inhanced to 48000 pounds within ſhort time after; which monies were raiſed upon the Subjects, by the name of Danegelt. Weary of theſe exactions, he plotted warily with his Subjects to kill all the Danes, as they ſlept in their beds; which accordingly was put in execution on St. Brices night, November 12, Anno 1012. To revenge this outrage and diſhonour, Swaine King of Denmark, with a Fleet of 350 Ships came into England; the fear whereof compelled Ethelred, a weak and impuiſſant Prince to flye into Normandy; leaving his poor Subjects to the mercy of the Daniſh Tyrant, who miſerably plagued them till his death. To whom ſucceeded his ſon Cnute (Canutus) a more temperate Prince; who maugre Ethelred now returned, or his ſon Edmund Ironſide, a moſt valiant King, did in the end poſſeſs himſelf of the whole Kingdom.

1016 15 Edmund II. ſirnamed Ironſide, having in vain attempted to recover his Kingdom, at laſt divided it with Canutus: not long after which he was treacherouſly and baſely murdered, by Edward, ſirnamed the Out-Law, his eldeſt Son, he was Grandfather of Edgar Atheling, and of Margaret, Wife of Malcolm the third, King of the Scots.

The Daniſh Kings.

1017 1 Canutus King of Denmark and Norway, after the death of Edmund the ſecond ſole King of England. He married Emma the widow of Ethelred, and daughter of Richard Duke of Normandy. 20.

1037 2 Harald the baſe Son of Canutus, ſirnamed Harfagar. 4.

1040 3 Canutus II. commonly called Hardy Cnute, the lawful ſon of Canutus by Emma the Widow of Ethelred the ſecond, and Mother of Edward, ſirnamed the Confeſſor, the laſt King of the Danes in England. After whoſe death that people having tyrannized in England for the ſpace of 255 years, (of which they had reigned only 26) were utterly expelled the Country, or paſſed in the Accompt of Engliſh; Edward the Confeſſor, the youngeſt Son of Ethelred, being advanced unto the Throne, by the power and practices of his Mother Emma, and the abſence of the Children of Edmund Ironſide his elder Brother, Anno 1042.

Now concerning the Danes abiding here, and going hence as they did, I obſerve three cuſtoms yet in uſe amongſt us. Firſt, each Engliſh houſe maintained one Dane, who living idly like the Drone among the Bees, had the benefit of all their labour, and was by them called Lord Dane; and even now when we ſee an idle fellow, we call him a Lordane. 2 The Danes uſed when the Engliſh drank, to ſtab them or cut their throats: to avoid which villany, the party then drinking, requeſted ſome of the next unto him to be his ſurety or pledge, whilſt he paid nature her due: and hence we have our uſual cuſtom of pledging one another. 3 The old Romans at the expulſion of their Kings, annually ſolemnized the Fugalia: according to which pattern the joyful Engliſh having cleared the Country of the Danes, inſtituted the annual Sports of Hock-tide; the word in their old tongue, the Saxon, importing the time of ſcorning, or triumphing. This ſolemnity conſiſted in the merry meetings of the Neighbours in thoſe days, during which the Feſtival laſted, and was celebrated by the younger ſort of both Sexes, with all manner of exerciſes, and paſtimes in the Streets, even as Shrove-tide yet is. But now time hath ſo corrupted it, that the name excepted, there remaineth no ſign of the firſt inſtitution.

The Saxons re-enthroned.

A. C.

1042 16 Edward III. ſirnamed the Confeſſor, half Brother both to Edmund Ironſide, and Hardy-Cnute the Dane, called out of Normandy, where he lived with the Dukes his Couſins, ſucceeded in the Realm of England. This King collected out of the Daniſh, Saxon, and Mercian Laws, one univerſal and general Law; whence our Common Law is thought to have had its original: which may be true of the written Laws, not of the cuſtomary and unwritten Laws; theſe being certainly more ancient. He was in his life of that holineſs that he received power from above to cure many deſeaſes, amongſt other, the ſwelling of the Throat, called by us the Kings-Evil: a Prerogative that continueth Hereditary to his Succeſſors of England. Finally, after his death, he was Canonized for a Saint; and died, having reigned 24 years.

1066 17 Harald II. Son to Earl Godwin, was choſen King in the non-age of Edgar Atheling, Grandchild to Edmund Ironſide, the true Heir of the Kingdom: to which Harald might pretend ſome title as being born unto Earl Godwin by Thyra the baſe daughter of Canutus the firſt, Siſter by the whole blood to Harald Harfager, and of the half blood to Canutus the ſecond, the laſt Kings of the Danes in England. But William Duke of Normandy, (of which people we have ſpoke already when we were in France and ſhall ſpeak more at large when we come to Denmark, as the laſt Actors on the Theatre or Stage of England. This William (I ſay) pretending a Donation from his Couſin, King Edward the Confeſſor, invaded England, ſlew Harald, and with him 66654 of his Engliſh Souldiers, and poſſeſſed himſelf of the Kingdom; uſing ſuch Policy in his new Conqueſt, that he utterly diſheartned the Engliſh from hopes of better fortune. From him beginneth the new accompt of the Kings of England, thoſe of the former Line being no longer reckoned in the computation of the firſt, ſecond, or third, &c.

The

The Norman Kings.

A. C.

1067 1 William, firnamed the Conqueror, after the vanquiſhment and death of Harold, acknowledged and Crowned King, altered the ancient Laws of England, and eſtabliſhed thoſe of Normandy in the place thereof: governing the people abſolutely by the power of the Sword, and giving a great part of their Lands to his former Followers, and ſuch as were engaged in the Action with him; from whom moſt of our ancient Families do derive themſelves; thoſe Lands to be holden in Knights-Service, which drew along with it the Wardſhip of the Heir in Minority, as a charge laid upon the Land.

1089 2 William II. firnamed Rufus, ſecond ſon to the Conqueror, ſucceeded by the appointment of his Father, and was Crowned King; ſlain afterwards in the New Foreſt, by an Arrow levelled at a Deer.

1102 3 Henry, for his Learning firnamed Beau-clerk, the third Son of the Conqueror, in the abſence of his Brother Robert (in the Holy-Land Wars) entred on the Kingdom, and afterwards took from him alſo the Dukedom of Normandy, and put out his eyes. Deprived of all his male-iſſue, he left one only Daughter whoſe name was Maud; firſt married to the Emperour Henry the fifth, and after to Geofry Plantagenet Earl of Anjou, Tourein, and Maine. 34.

1136 4 Stephen, ſecond ſon of Stephen Earl of Champagne and Blois, and of Alice Daughter to the Conqueror, ſucceeded; who to purchaſe the peoples love, releaſed the Tribute called Danegelt: he ſpent moſt of his Reign in War againſt Maud the Empreſs. 19.

The Saxon Blood reſtored.

1155 5 Henry II. Son to Maud the Empreſs, Daughter to Henry the firſt, and to Maud Daughter to Malcolm King of Scotland, and Margaret Siſter to Edgar Atheling, reſtored the Saxon blood to the Crown of England. His Father was Geofry Earl of Anjou, Tourein, and Maine; which Provinces he added to the Engliſh Empire, as alſo the Dutchy of Aquitain, and the Earldom of Poiction, by Eleanor his Wife; and a great part of Ireland by Conqueſt. Happy in all things, the unnatural rebellions of his Sons excepted. 34.

1189 6 Richard, the Son of Henry, firnamed Cœur de Lyon, warred in the Holy Land, overcame the Turks, whom he had almoſt driven out of Syria, took the Iſle of Cyprus; and after many worthy atchievements returning homewards to defend Normandy, and Aquitain againſt the French, was by Tempeſt caſt upon Dalmatia; and travelling through the Dominions of the Duke of Auſtria, was taken Priſoner, put to a grievous ranſom, and after his return ſlain at the ſiege of Chaluz, in the Province of Limoſin. 12.

1201 7 John, Brother of Richard, an unhappy Prince, and one that could expect no better, as being an unnatural Son to his Father, and an undutiful Subject to his Brother. Diſtreſſed for a great part of his Reign by Wars with his Barons, outed of all Normandy, Aquitain, and Anjou, by the power of the French; to whom alſo he was likely to have loſt the Realm of England. Finally, after a baſe ſubmiſſion of himſelf and his Kingdom to the Popes Legate, he is ſaid to have been poyſoned at Swinſtede Abbey. 17.

1218 8 Henry III. Son of John, expelled the invading French out of England, and by a compoſition with Lewis the 9th, was reſtored unto the Dukedom of Guyenne, held by his Succeſſors till the Reign of King Henry the 6th. Exhauſted by the Pope, and oppreſſed a long time by his factious and unruly Barons, but at laſt victorious. 56.

1274 9 Edward, the Son of Henry, awed France, ſubdued Wales, brought Scotland into ſubjection, of whoſe King and Nobility he received homage. 34.

1308 10 Edward II. Son of Edward the firſt, a diſſolute Prince, hated of the Nobles, and contemned by the Vulgar, for his immeaſurable love to Pierce Gaveſton, and the Spencers, was twice ſhamefully beaten by the Scots: and being depoſed by a ſtrong faction raiſed againſt him by his Queen, and Roger, Lord Mortimer, was barbarouſly murdered in Berkley Caſtle. 19.

1327 11 Edward III. Son of Edward the ſecond, a moſt Vertuous and Valorous Prince, brought the Scots to obedience, overthrew the French in two great Battels, took the Town of Callice, and many fair poſſeſſions in that Kingdom. 50.

1377 12 Richard II. another of our unfortunate Kings, loſt many of his Peers in France, and at laſt being over-awed by his two great Uncles of Lancaſter and Glouceſter, and taken Priſoner by his Couſin the Duke of Hereford, he was forced to reſign his Crown, and afterwards was murdered at Pomfret Caſtle.

The Lancaſtrian Line.

1399 13 Henry IV. Son to John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter, the fourth Son to Edward the 3d, was by the power of the Sword, but with the conſent of the People, ſetled in the Throne; and ſpent his whole Reign in ſuppreſſing homebred Rebellions. 15.

1414 14 Henry V. the Mirrour of Magnificence, and Pattern of true Vertue, purſued the Title of France, and won it, being ordained Heir apparent to the French Crown, but lived not to poſſeſs the Kingdom. 9.

1423 15 Henry VI. a Pious, but unfortunate Prince, was crowned King of France in Paris, which he held during the life of his Uncle John of Bedford, and Humfrey of Glouceſter; after whoſe deaths, he not only loſt France to the French, but England and his life to the Yorkiſh Faction. 38.

The

The Yorkish Line.

1461 16 Edward IV. Son of Richard Duke of York, the Son of Richard Earl of Cambridge, and Grandson of Edmund of Langley Duke of York, the fifth Son of King Edward the third, challenged the Crown in right of the Lady Anne his Grandmother, Daughter of Roger Mortimer Earl of March, the Son of Edmund Mortimer Earl of March, and of Philippa his Wife, sole Daughter of Lionel Duke of Clarence, the third Son of the said King Edward, and Elder Brother of John of Gaunt. The claim first set on foot by his Father the Duke of York, who lost his life in pursuance of it in the Battel of Wakefield; with berter fortune and success, pursued by King Edward himself, who finally after nine bloody Battels fought between the Houses (specially that of Towton, in which were slain 36000 English) was quietly seated in the possession of England and Ireland. 23.

1484 17 Edward V. his Son, was before his Coronation murdered by his Uncle Richard, in the Tower of London.

1484 18 Richard III. Brother of Edward the 4. a most wicked and tyrannical Prince, to make way unto the Diadem, murdered King Henry the Sixth, and 2. Prince Edward his Son. 3. George Duke of Clarence, his Brother. 4. Hastings a faithful Servant to King Edward. 5. Rivers, Vaughan, and Gray, the Queens Kindred. 6. Edward the 5th, his Soveraign, with his Brother Richard. 7. Henry Duke of Buckingham his dear Friend, and greatest Coadjutor in these his ungodly practices; and his own Wife Anne, so to make way to an incestuous marriage with his Neece Elizabeth, the eldest Daughter of Edward the 4th; but before the solemnity, he was slain at Bosworth. 3.

The Union of the Families.

1487 19 Henry VII. Earl of Richmond, Heir to the House of Lancaster, (as Son of Margaret Daughter of John Duke of Somerset, Son of John Earl of Somerset, Son of John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster) after the overthrow of Richard, married Elizabeth, Daughter and Heir to Edward the 4. uniting by that marriage the divided Families. He was also extracted from the British and French Royal Blood, as being Son to Edmund Tudor Earl of Richmond, Son to Owen Tudor (descended from Cadwalladar, the last King of the Britains) and Katharine of France, Widow of Henry the 5. His whole Wars was against home-bred Rebels, the chief being Lambert, and the Followers and Fautors of Perken Warbeck. 23.

1509 20 Henry VIII. Heir to both Families, between which were fought for the Diadem 17 pitched Fields; in which perished 8 Kings and Princes, 40 Dukes, Marquesses, and Earls, 200000 of the common people, besides Barons and Gentlemen. This King banished the usurped Supremacy of the Popes, and began the Reformation of Religion; though formerly he had writ a Book against Luther, for which the Pope gave him the honourable Title of The Defender of the Faith, afterwards made Hereditary by Act of Parliament to his Heirs and Successors. A Prince of great vices, but of greater virtues. 38.

1547 21 Edward VI. the Son of Henry the 8th, by Jane Seymour his third Wife; out of whose Womb he is said to be cut, to come into the World, as Cæsar was: but he had neither Cæsar's Fortune nor length of life; dying very young, and his Affairs conducted by divided Councils; though otherwise of great hopes, and of a pregnancy of judgment above his years. 6.

1553 22 Mary, the Daughter of King Henry the 8th, by Katharine of Spain, the Widow of his Brother Arthur, restored the Popes Supremacy banished by her Father, with the whole mass of Popery abolished in her Brother's Reign. To which Religion so addicted, that in the short time of her Reign there was more blood shed, than in the whole 44 years of her Sister Elizabeth. In the last year of her Reign she lost Calice to the French, which proved the loss of her life also, as it was supposed. 5.

1558 23 Elizabeth, the Daughter of King Henry the 8th, by the Lady Anne Bullein his second Wife; a most gracious Heroick Princess, was by the Divine Providence of God preserved from the practices of her Enemies in her Sisters Reign, to sway the Scepter of the Kingdom. She pursued the Reformation of Religion, begun in the times of her Father and Brother; refined the corrupt Coin brought in by her Father; furnished the Royal Navy with all kind of Warlike Ammunitions; encreased the Revenue of the Universities, by the Statute of Provisions; succoured the Scots against the French; the French Protestants against the Papists, and both against the Spaniard: defended the Netherlands against the attempts of Spain; commanded the whole Ocean; entred League with the Muscovite; and was famous for her Prudence & Government amongst the Turks, Persians, and Tartars, yea her very Enemies. Finally she died in the 45. year of her Reign, and the 70. of her life, on the 24. of March, Anno 1602. according to the computation of the Church of England, which beginneth the New Year with the Feast of the Annunciation. To whom succeeded JAMES the Sixth, King of the Scots, with the joy of all men, as the next undoubted Heir of the Crown. Of whom we shall say more when we come to speak of the Monarchs of Britain: of which he was the first since the fall of the Roman Empire, and such more properly than the greatest of all those Emperours had been before; None of them having all the North parts of Britain it self, or any part of Ireland at all, nor many of the Illes adjoining, under their Dominion.

In the mean time to look on England as a State distinct, we will consider it and the Kings thereof, with reference to reputation abroad, and power at home; with the Revenues, Arms, and Military Orders of it, as in other places. And first for Reputation, when all Christendom in the Council of Constance, was divided into Nations, Anglicana Natio was one of the Principal, and not Subaltern, and had its voice of equal balance with the Nations of France or Italy, in all affairs concerning the doctrine, discipline and peace of the Church, which were there debated. And for the place due to the Kings hereof in those General Councils, and the rank they held among other Christian Princes; I find that the Emperour of Germany was accounted Major filius Ecclesiæ; the King of France, Minor Filius, and the King of England, Filius tertius & adoptivus. The King of France in General Councils, had place next the Emperour, on his right hand; the King of England on his left hand, and the King of Scotland next before Castile. Now indeed the King of Spain being so much improved, is the dearly beloved Son of the Church; and arrogateth to himself the place above all other Princes: but in time of Pope Julius, the Controversie arising between the Ambassadors of the two Princes for precedency; the Pope adjudged it to belong of right unto England. And Pope Pius the Fourth, upon the like Controversie arising between the Ambassadours of France and Spain, adjudged the Precedency to the French.

Touching the Souldiery of Engl. and their most notable atchievements, both by Sea and Land, sufficient hath been said already. What Forces the Kings hereof have been able to raise, and may command for present service, will best be seen by the action of King Henry the 8th. at Bulloign, the Armies of Queen Elizabeth in 88. and the numbers of the Trained Bands of the several Counties. First, for the Action of King Henry the 8th, he had in his Avant-guard 12000 Foot, and 500 Light Horse in blew Jackets with red Guards; in the Rere-ward a like number both of Horse and Foot; and in the main Battel 20000 Foot; and 2000 Horse, all in Red Jacquets and yellow Guards: the whole number 44000 Foot, and 3000 Horse. They drew after them 100 great Pieces, besides small ones, and for conveyance of their Ordnance, Baggage, and other necessaries, no fewer than 25000 Draught-horses, besides other carriages. In the next place for 88. the Queen dispersed in several places on the Southern Coasts of the Kingdom, to hinder the landing of the Enemy, 25000 Souldiers of both sorts; at Tilbury, for the defence of the City of London, under the Command of the Earl of Leicester, 22000 Foot, and 1000 Horse: and for the Guard of her own person, under the Lord Hunsdon, 34000 Foot, and 2000 Horse: in all the number of 84000 men: besides those goodly Troops which the Nobility and Gentry did present her with, at their own proper charges. And as for the Trained Bands, the number of both sorts disciplined and mustered to be ready upon all occasions: in the eighth year of King James, (for I have since seen no Muster-Roll of them) amounted to 296130 able men, 141315 armed men, 935 Demilances, 6777 Light-Horse, 19345 Pioneers; besides what was required of Peers and Prelates, supposed to amount to 20000 armed men, and 4000 Light Horse. And for their strength at Sea, besides the Navy Royal, consisting of about 30 gallant Ships, (besides the lesser Vessels;) the best and bravest that any Prince in Christendom can boast of, as his own propriety: there are such store of Colliar and Merchants Ships, fit for any service, that in the year 88 aforesaid, the Queen had 100 Sail of good Ships to oppose the Spaniard; and 20 more to wait upon the motions of the Duke of Parma. And in the year 1597, she set out for the Island Voyage, no fewer than 120 Sail of all sorts, of which 60 were men of War.

As for the Revenues of this Kingdom, Boterus reckoned them in the time of King Henry the 7th, to be no more than 400000 Crowns per annum; but grants, that afterward they were improved to a million more, by King Henry the 8th, the dissolution of Monasteries, and the benefit redounding from the Court of Wards, making that improvement. And to say truth, the Universal dissolution of Religious Houses of all sorts, did for the time so mightily increase his annual Income, that he was fain to erect two new Courts (the Court of Augmentation, and the Court of Surveyors) for the better managing of the same. But these Additions being wasted by his own exorbitant expences, and the several Alienations made by King Edward the sixth; those Courts of new Erection were dissolved again; and the Revenue fell so short of its former height, that in the 12. year of Queen Elizabeth, the profits of the Crown (besides the Court of Wards, and the Dutchie of Lancaster) came to no more than to 188197 l. 4 s. Of which 110612 l. 13 s. went that year out upon the Navy, the charge of Houshold, and other necessary assignments. Since which time the great increase of trading, both at home and abroad, and the great glut of money in all parts of the World, hath added very much to the Intrado. The certainty whereof as I do not know, so neither will I aim at it by uncertain Hearsay.

The Principal Orders of Knighthood are, and were, 1. of the Round Table, instituted by Arthur King of the Britains, and one of the Worlds Nine Worthies. It consisted of 150 Knights whose names are recorded in the History of King Arthur, there where Sir Ure, a wounded Knight came to be cured of his hurts: it being his fate that only the best Knight of the Order should be his Chirurgeon: The Arms of most of these, with their several Blazons (I know not on how good authority) we find in Bara, the French Herald. The principal of them were Sir Lancelot, Sir Tristam, Sir Lamorock, Sir Gawin, &c. all placed at one Round Table, to avoid quarrels about priority and place. The Round Table hanging in the great Hall at Winchester, is falsly called Arthurs Round Table, it being not of sufficient Antiquity and containing but 24 Seats. Of these Knights there are reported many fabulous Stories. They ended with their Founder, and are feigned by that Lucian of France, Rablaies, to be the Ferry-men of Hell; and that their pay is a piece of mouldy bread, and a phillop on the nose.
